

IN GOD'S IMAGE AND LIKENESS 1

CREATION, FALL, AND THE STORY OF ADAM AND EVE

JEFFREY M. BRADSHAW

This is not just a book for Mormons. Dr. Bradshaw draws on a wide range of material from many cultures and eras: Jewish, Christian and Muslim. He shows how to read and understand the stories of a prephilosophical culture, and reveals them as sophisticated insights into the human condition. He takes as his starting point the Genesis material in Mormon tradition, and then sets it in a wider context than many would have thought possible, exploring the human and spiritual state of humanity, the nature of our knowledge about the Creation, the nature of revelation itself. He has wise words on the creationism debate. This remarkable book makes an important contribution to understanding not only the material in Genesis, but also the way in which that heritage has been shared among all the Peoples of the Book.

Margaret Barker, former President of the Society for Old Testament Study; Methodist local preacher; prolific author of studies reconstructing the background of the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament

Attempting to match the cosmic scope of the vision of Moses, this wide-ranging and comprehensive commentary brings to the text of the book of Moses a stimulating collection of scholarship from many disciplines and a wealth of stunning artistic and literary images. The reader will find in this volume much thought-provoking discussion about the doctrines that are central to the Gospel: the Godhead, Creation, the Fall, the Atonement, and the role of the Temple and its teachings in bringing to pass “the immortality and eternal life of man.”

David R. Seely, Professor of Ancient Scripture, Brigham Young University; co-author of Solomon's Temple: Myth and History and Glimpses of Lehi's Jerusalem

In this book, Jeff Bradshaw analyzes LDS scriptures from the perspective of a professional scholar and scientist. The result is a uniquely modern and honest treatment with considerable material that has not appeared before. Of particular interest to me as a scientist is the book's detailed analysis of the creation scriptures in light of modern scientific knowledge. The book is lavishly illustrated with works taken from the world's treasury of religious art. It is highly recommended for anyone who wishes to understand this important aspect of modern Mormonism.

David H. Bailey, Chief Technologist, Computational Research Department, Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory; author of several articles on science and Mormonism

Dr. Bradshaw has succeeded in weaving a most interesting tapestry of comment on the book of Moses, drawing upon ancient and modern sources that form a warp and weft that invite reflection. He shines a light on both bright and dim threads of this important text that, in its own way, draped the Prophet Joseph and his contemporaries.

S. Kent Brown, Emeritus Professor of Ancient Scripture and Former Director of the Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies (FARMS), Brigham Young University; co-author of The Pearl of Great Price: A Verse-by-Verse Commentary

Jeff Bradshaw's encyclopedic exploration... digs, probes, examines, reflects, speculates, and appreciates, ...making this a resource of rich and unique value for Latter-day Saints.

E. Douglas Clark, International Policy Director for United Families International; author of The Blessings of Abraham

Bradshaw has drawn from an extensive array of sources, both LDS and non-LDS, in crafting this new and enlightening commentary on the first part of the book of Moses.

Kevin L. Barney, editor of Footnotes to the New Testament for Latter-day Saints, author of many articles on LDS scripture

A must read for any serious student of the Pearl of Great Price. I was delighted by the use of fine art in the manuscript and the extensive reference work.

Trent Stephens, Professor of Anatomy and Embryology, Idaho State University; co-author of Who are the Children of Lehi? DNA and the Book of Mormon and Evolution and Mormonism: A Quest for Understanding

Eborn Books
TempleThemes.net

Cover design by Jonathan D. Bradshaw
Cover image: First Parents by Jay Bryant Ward

IN GOD'S IMAGE AND LIKENESS 1

CREATION, FALL, AND THE STORY OF ADAM AND EVE

FRONTISPIECE. First Parents, 2005. Jay Bryant Ward, 1971-

IN GOD'S IMAGE AND LIKENESS 1

CREATION, FALL, AND THE STORY OF ADAM AND EVE

Jeffrey M. Bradshaw

TempleThemes.Net

Eborn Books
2014

© 2014 Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, <http://TempleThemes.net>

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form without written permission from the author, Jeffrey M. Bradshaw. The views expressed herein are the responsibility of the author and do not necessarily represent the position of Eborn Publishing, LLC.

This work is not an official publication of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The views that are expressed within this work are the sole responsibility of the author and do not necessarily reflect the position of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints or any other entity.

2014	13	12	11	10	5	4	3	2	1
------	----	----	----	----	---	---	---	---	---

Eborn Books
254 S. Main Street
Salt Lake City, UT 84101
EbornBooks.com

Hardbound and Leather editions printed in Hong Kong

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Bradshaw, Jeffrey M.

In God's Image and Likeness 1: Creation, Fall, and the Story of Adam and Eve / Jeffrey M. Bradshaw.—1st ed., Updated

Formerly titled “In God’s Image and Likeness: Ancient and Modern Perspectives on the Book of Moses”

For more information, see TempleThemes.net

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN-13: 978-1-890-71863-3 (Hardbound)
ISBN-13: 978-1-890-71864-0 (Leather)
ISBN-13: 978-0-9828082-0-7 (PDF)
ISBN-13: 978-1-8907189-1-6 (set of 2 vols.) (Softbound)
ISBN-13: 978-1-4952041-7-3 (vol. 1) (Softbound)
ISBN-13: 978-1-4952047-5-3 (vol. 2) (Softbound)

*To my parents,
Mark J. and Elma S. Bradshaw*

IN GOD'S IMAGE AND LIKENESS 1

CREATION, FALL, AND THE STORY OF ADAM AND EVE

Table of Contents

Acknowledgments	xiii
Figure Credits	xvii
Preface.....	xxi
About the 2014 Updated Edition.....	xxvi
Endnotes	xxvii
INTRODUCTION.....	1
The Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible	1
A Detailed Look at the JST Old Testament.....	1
JST Genesis and the Book of Moses.....	8
Official Status of the King James Version and the JST.....	9
About This Book.....	10
Arrangement of the Text and Illustrations.....	12
Sources and Citations	13
On the Use of Ancient Texts	14
Endnotes	19
MOSES 1: THE VISION OF MOSES.....	32
Overview.....	33
Historical Background: Alternations of Darkness and Light	33
The Setting and Genre of Moses 1.....	36
Moses 1: Text and Commentary.....	40
Gleanings	71
Endnotes	75
MOSES 2: THE CREATION	82
Overview.....	83
Contributions of the Books of Moses and Abraham	83
Creation as Progressive Distinction and Separation.....	85
The Order and Perfection of Creation.....	87
Moses 2: Text and Commentary.....	92
Gleanings	119
Endnotes	125
MOSES 3: THE GARDEN OF EDEN	132
Overview.....	133
Spiritual Creation.....	134
The Spiritual Creation of Mankind	136
The Spiritual Creation of Eden	139
The Garden of Eden and the Creation as Models for the Temple	146
Moses 3: Text and Commentary.....	150
Gleanings	187
Endnotes	197

MOSES 4: THE FALL	214
Overview.....	215
The Everlasting Covenant	216
The Grand Councils	220
Rebellion in Heaven	223
Transgression in Eden	227
The Nakedness and the Clothing of Adam and Eve	234
Moses 4: Text and Commentary.....	242
Gleanings	283
Endnotes	298
MOSES 5: THE TWO WAYS.....	322
Overview.....	323
The Many Roles of Adam	325
The Doctrine of the Two Ways	328
The Way of Satan	329
The Way Back	338
Moses 5: Text and Commentary.....	352
Gleanings	402
Endnotes	432
MOSES 6:1-12: ADAM THE PATRIARCH.....	454
Overview.....	455
The Patriarchal Priesthood and the Line of Seth	456
The Great Council at Adam-ondi-Ahman	457
Seth's Quest for the Oil of Mercy	460
"The Whole Meaning of the Law"	463
Moses 6:1-12: Text and Commentary.....	474
Gleanings	485
Endnotes	491
EXCURSUS.....	510
1: Speech, Writing, and Revelation.....	512
2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom.....	516
3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood	519
4: Chance and Purpose in Creation	524
5: Science and Mormonism.....	526
6: The Authority and Power of Scripture.....	531
7: Time and Eternity.....	537
8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits.....	540
9: The Premortal Organization of the Human Family	544
10: The Great Chain of Being.....	546
11: The Sacred Circle	547
12: Saint Exupéry and Genesis.....	549
13: Some Perspectives on Historicity	552
14: The Garden of Eden as a Prototype for the Temple	555
15: Description of the LDS Temple Endowment.....	557

16: The Role of Revelation in Temple Building.....	561
17: The Veil of the Temple	564
18: Kolob	565
19: “If You Could Hie to Kolob”	566
20: The Circle and the Square.....	571
21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan	575
22: The Nature of Satan’s Premortal Proposal	577
23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael.....	582
24: The Watchers.....	585
25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God	591
26: Justification and Sanctification	596
27: Diligence, Obedience, and Friendship.....	597
28: Ritual Aprons in Ancient Times.....	600
29: The Development of Extracanoncal Literature on Adam and Eve	601
30: Adam-God Theory and the Heavenly and Earthly Adam	603
31: The Hospitality of Abraham.....	606
32: Freedman’s Analysis of the Primary History	607
33: The Restoration of Sacrifice.....	609
34: The Law of Consecration.....	611
35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”	612
36: The Legend of the True Cross	614
37: Traditions About the Role of Abel.....	617
38: The Meaning of “Adam-ondi-Ahman”	622
39: The Location of Adam-ondi-Ahman	623
40: Dating Joseph Smith’s Vision of Adam-ondi-Ahman.....	625
41: William Blake’s “Jerusalem”: A Vision of the Kingdom	627
42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall”	632
43: Adam and Eve in Mozart’s “Magic Flute”	634
44: Shakespeare Creates a World: “The Tempest”	635
45: Impact of the “Black Death” on Art and Literature	640
46: The Origin and Meaning of the Term “Atonement”	642
47: Islamic Perspectives Relating to Redemption.....	645
48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants	649
49: The People of the Book	651
50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua.....	654
51: The Five Lost Things of the Temple	658
52: Washing, Anointing, and Clothing Among Early Christians.....	661
53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries.....	663
The Mysteries of Aaron, Moses, and Melchizedek	663
The Cave of Treasures	669
The Eleusinian Mysteries	675
Jewish and Christian Analogues to the Cista Mystica?	679
Dexiosis	681
Jewish Mysticism in the Cycle of Ezekiel at Dura Europos	687

54: Table of Parallels with the Apocalypse of Abraham	694
55: Mesoamerican Stories of Creation and Original Transgression	697
Endnotes	702
APPENDIX: THE ORIGIN OF MAN	785
BYU Evolution Packet, 1992	786
The Origin of Man , 1909	786
Words in Season from the First Presidency , 1910	791
“Mormon” View of Evolution, 1925.....	791
Evolution (1991).....	792
Background of the BYU Evolution Packet	794
William E. Evenson: Evolution Packet Defined , 1992	794
Context for Statements in the BYU Evolution Packet	795
Additional Material Relating to the Origin of Man	798
Improvement Era Editorial: Creation of Adam and Eve , 1910.....	798
President Joseph F. Smith: Philosophy and Church Schools , 1915.....	798
President David O. McKay: Design Permeating All Creation , 1952.....	799
President David O. McKay: Convictions Can Be Expressed , 1956....	800
President Spencer W. Kimball: Creation of Adam and Eve , 1976	800
John L. Sorenson: Origin of Man , 1991.....	801
President Gordon B. Hinckley: Organic Evolution , 1997	802
President Gordon B. Hinckley: The Origin of Man , 2002	802
Endnotes	803
BIBLIOGRAPHY	805
Introduction	805
Annotated Bibliography of Ancient Texts	805
Ancient Near Eastern Texts	806
Early Old Testament Manuscripts and Translations	813
The Old Testament Apocrypha	815
The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha	817
The Dead Sea Scrolls and Other Related Texts	822
Jewish Texts	830
Christian Texts	838
Nag Hammadi Codices and Various Gnostic Texts	849
Zoroastrian Texts	856
Mandaean Texts	863
Manichaeian Texts	883
Islamic Texts	896
Endnotes	903
REFERENCES.....	911
COLOR PLATES	1010
INDEXES.....	1041
Thumbnail Index to Figures	1042
Scripture Index.....	1051
Index of Latter-day Prophets.....	1069
Topical Index	1071

Acknowledgments

I am grateful to Bret and Cindy Eborn for enabling this book to come to publication on a very challenging schedule. Their persistence and personal support are warmly appreciated and, I hope, will also be adequately rewarded. Joanne Bolton of Bolton Associates, introduced to us by Kathy Low and John Skinner of Press Check, Inc., was a literal answer to our prayers in helping us find a printer who could satisfy our difficult requirements. Joanne and her associates at Regal Printing attended to every detail with superb professionalism. I appreciate the kindness of the following individuals, who provided helpful comments, conversations, encouragement, and tangible support at various points along the way: Millie Anderson, David H. Bailey, Richard Barker, Kevin L. Barney, Michael H. Bourne, Matthew B. Brown, S. Kent Brown, Thomas Butler, James Carroll, Delton W. and Cherrie Clark, E. Douglas Clark, James E. Faulconer, Brant Gardner, Scott Gordon, Bill Hamblin, David K. Hart, Bryce Haymond, Daryl R. and Annie Hague, Ronan James Head, Matthew K. Heiss, Rich and Laura Hoffman, Richard J. Ingebreetsen, Nicoletta Isar, Kent P. Jackson, Stephane and Agnès Janda, Robin S. Jensen, Bruno and Magali Kahne, David J. Larsen, Jeff Needle, Andrei Orlov, Virgil and Jackie Parker, Donald W. Parry, Daniel C. Peterson, Assaf Pinkus, George Potter, Glenn H. Robinson, Serge Ruzer, David R. Seely, Rudi and Sylvie Sordes, Trent D. Stephens, John Tvedtnes, John W. Welch, Kent White, and Diane E. Wirth.

Margaret Barker deserves a special thanks: first, for her courageous, careful, and broad-minded scholarship that paved the way for many aspects of my own study; second, for numerous insightful comments on the manuscript; and third, for her exceptionally generous and encouraging manner—in itself, paramount evidence of her sincere Christian devotion.¹

Chris Miasnik, a cherished friend since the days we were companions in the Belgium-Brussels mission, meticulously read through several drafts of the manuscript and offered many corrections, suggestions, and questions that greatly improved the finished result. Without the generous help of Chris and his wife Angie on many fronts, this book could not have appeared. A close friend and colleague at IHMC, Paul Feltovich, likewise reviewed the entire book and spent many hours with me in delightful conversations about it. Marcel Kahne, a pioneer of the Church in Belgium whose devotion and scholarship I have long admired, also spent many hours in correction of the manuscript.

Steve Whitlock generously allowed me to incorporate the results of his previous research into the annotated bibliography, and spent many hours in helping me to expand it, as well as in sharing his views, materials, and photographs. Steve also kindly accompanied me to Oxford in order to take high-quality photographs of the Codex Sylvester. Kerry Shirts kindly made the impossible-to-find 1995 edition of Eugene Seach's Ancient Texts and Mormonism available to me,² and Todd Compton likewise graciously responded to a request for a copy of his 1985 Epoché article on mystery symbolism in Greek recognition drama.³ Richard Livingston granted permission for me to excerpt from a recording on Truman G. Madsen's Claremont Mormon Studies Student Association inaugural lecture on Mormonism and Philosophy. Anne Feltovich identified and provided helpful background information on the loutrophoros of Plangon, and graciously shared her expertise as we spent many happy hours together in and around Athens. Edward L. Kimball graciously commented on the question of authenticity for an anecdote about his father, Spencer W. Kimball.

1 For those not familiar with Barker's voluminous work, a helpful introduction may be found in two of her briefer volumes: Temple Theology and The Hidden Tradition of the Kingdom of God. Kevin Christensen has provided an overview of some of the many points of contact of Barker's writings with LDS doctrine and scripture (Paradigms; Temple). Barker herself has directly discussed the plausibility of the preexilic setting of 1 Nephi (Joseph Smith and themes relating to Melchizedek in LDS scripture) and sources relating to Melchizedek and the priesthood named for him (Who was Melchizedek).

2 J. E. Seach, Ancient Texts 1995.

I owe thanks to Edward J. Brandt, who introduced me to the spare eloquence of biblical Hebrew during a beginners course at the University of Utah Institute of Religion many years ago.

Like so many LDS students of scripture, I am deeply indebted to the pioneering work of Hugh Nibley in Pearl of Great Price and temple studies.⁴ It seemed that each time I began an examination of what I thought was a remote and unexplored corner of the research terrain, I soon discovered that Nibley—like Kilroy—had already been there first. This book would be significantly slimmer had not Hugh Nibley and Associates generously permitted the liberal use of quotations from his works throughout this book.

Among the many favorite works of art appearing in this book, I am honored to have received permission to include works from several contemporary LDS painters, illustrators, and photographers who deserve thanks by name: Wulf E. Barsch, Val Brinkerhoff, Jerry Harston, Brian Kershisnik, David Lindsley, David Linn, John M. Lundquist, Michael P. Lyon, J. Kirk Richards, Liz Lemon Swindle, Valeriano Ugolini, and Jay Bryant Ward.

Bobbie Reynolds and her colleagues at the Church Intellectual Property Office deserve a special thanks for their careful review of the manuscript and their willingness to allow me to include Church-copyrighted material. Robert O. Davis, curator of the LDS Museum of Church History and Art, promptly responded to requests for help in locating illustrations and pinpointing artists. Walter Rane also generously provided help in this regard. Dr. Bruce Barker-Benfield, Senior Assistant Librarian at the Department of Special Collections at the Bodleian Library in Oxford, and Carole Menzies and Jennifer Griffiths of the Taylor Bodleian Slavonic and Modern Greek Library were exceptionally helpful in coordinating requests for difficult-to-find sources. Pat Williams was patient and persistent in helping me obtain the permission to use the numerous quotations and illustrations that originally appeared in Deseret Book publications. Joany Pinegar, Richard Holzapfel, and Kent P. Jackson patiently worked with me to obtain permission for the use of material in the table describing the time sequence of the JST Old Testament translation. Alison Coutts and Don Brugger of the Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship at Brigham Young University were exceptionally cordial, efficient, and generous in the process of obtaining necessary permissions for the use of materials from their publications. Alison Correnti of the Copyright Clearance Center assisted in the process of obtaining permission to use Steven Monte's masterful translation of Victor Hugo's Conscience. Acknowledgments for the help and generosity of organizations, library staff, and artists who provided permission and access to the many high-quality images used in this book are given in the Figure Credits section below.

3 T. M. Compton, Token.

4 For an assessment of Nibley's scholarship, especially his own use of sources, see S. S. Ricks, Sure Foundation.

I am grateful above all for the warm support of my immediate and extended family. Sakiusa and Seru Vakalala, Sr., providentially, put us in touch with Press Check, Inc. My sister Judi Morrell and her husband John have lent their loving, patient, and wise listening ear to me since I was very small. In quiet and important ways they have helped to mold me and this book. My younger brother Scott, my first and best childhood friend, and his wife Linn have been models of devotion in their service to God and family, and in their ever-ready welcome for me and for others in need. My sister Bonnie B. Robinson, who nurtured (and patiently endured) my budding “creativity” as a child, lovingly provided tangible support and was an important guiding voice to me as a novice to publishing for LDS readers. The wholehearted consecration of her talents in service to others has blessed many lives. Jonathan D. Bradshaw, an admired and admirable example of everything an older brother should be, designed the beautiful book cover and, along with his kind and perceptive wife An, have been friends to me in the highest sense of the word. My son Samuel H. Bradshaw spent countless hours of vacation time working on the book, and was responsible for many aspects of the overall book design as well as the definition of styles and templates.⁵ Samuel and I also worked together on the layout, typesetting, and indexing of the book. The project could have not been completed without his generous, patient, and highly-skilled help. My other children and their spouses ((Robert W. and Camille James Bradshaw, M. Elizabeth and Sakiusa Vakalala, Jr., Thomas M. and Lisa Paulson Bradshaw) offered their support and encouragement, and contributed helpful perspectives and feedback. Robert, Thomas, and Samuel also worked together to produce a Web site relating to the book. My wife Kathleen lovingly accommodated the many inconveniences of the writing process and was, as always, honest and insightful in her comments and unfailing in her support.

This book is lovingly dedicated to my parents, Mark John and Elma Singleton Bradshaw, students of scripture and disciples of Christ.

5 Typesetting was performed on an Apple Macintosh with Adobe InDesign CS4. Set in Adobe Minion Pro.

Figure Credits

Cover and Frontispiece: Jay Bryant Ward, <http://www.jbwstudios.com/>. Originally commissioned for the cover of the January 2006 Ensign magazine. P-1. Liz Lemon Swindle, with the assistance of Karalyn Fugal of Repartee Gallery and Pat Williams of Deseret Book. In L. L. Swindle et al., Joseph Smith, p. 44; P-2. From D. Macaulay, Moments, plate xxvi. Copyright © 1978 by David Macaulay. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Harcourt Publishing Company. All rights reserved.

0-1. Community of Christ, with the assistance of Robert Lewis. See S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, Plate 2, p. 406b; 0-2. Brigham Young University Religious Studies Center, with the assistance of Joany Pinegar, Richard Holzapfel, and Kent P. Jackson. Adapted from S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 57-59. See also R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 96; 0-3. Liz Lemon Swindle; 0-4, 0-5. Tate Gallery Picture Library, with the assistance of Cressida Kocienski; 0-6. Jay Bryant Ward, <http://www.jbwstudios.com/>.

1-1. © Original at the chapel of the Frederiksborg Castle, Denmark. Used by permission of the Frederiksborgmuseum, with the assistance of Erik Westengaard. Thanks also to the LDS Church Visual Resources Library, and the assistance of Carrie Snow, Nancy Sargent, and Bruce Pearson; 1-2. The British Museum Picture Library, with the assistance of Clive Coward and Axelle Russo; 1-3. David Linn. In All Things, p. 57; 1-4. Brian Kershnik, <http://www.kershnik.com/>, with the assistance of Lori Andersen. In L. Norris et al., Kershnik, p. 87; 1-5. The M. C. Escher Company BV, with the assistance of Margareth Verbakel; 1-6. Figure © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; 1-7. Photograph IMG2175, 26 April 2009, Stephen T. Whitlock, with special thanks to Carole Menzies and Jennifer Griffiths of the Taylor Bodleian Slavonic and Modern Greek Library. From P. P. Novitskij (Novitskii), Otkrovenie Avraama; 1-8. Bibliothèque Nationale de France.

2-1. EMB-Service for Publishers, Adligenswil, Switzerland, with the assistance of Franz Gisler. Detail from the Sistine Chapel fresco; 2-2. The M. C. Escher Company BV, with the assistance of Margareth Verbakel; 2-3. EMB-Service for Publishers, Adligenswil, Switzerland, with the assistance of Franz Gisler. Detail from the Sistine Chapel fresco; 2-4, 2-5, 2-6. The M. C. Escher Company BV, with the assistance of Margareth Verbakel; 2-7, 2-8. EMB-Service for Publishers, Adligenswil, Switzerland, with the assistance of Franz Gisler. Detail from the Sistine Chapel fresco.

3-1. Picture Library, The Royal Collection, with the assistance of Karen Lawson © 2007 Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II; 3-2. Rome, Galleria nazionale d'arte moderna e contemporanea. With the permission of the Ministero per i Beni e le Attività Culturali, and assistance from Chiara Mutti; thanks also to Studio Fotografico, with the assistance of Giuseppe Schiavinotto; 3-3. Tate Gallery Picture Library, with the assistance of Cressida Kocienski; 3-4. Public Domain, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Great_Chain_of_Being_2.png. From D. Valades, Rhetorica; 3-5. Public Domain, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Eins_of.png; 3-6. © David Lindsley, <http://www.davidlindsley.com>; 3-7. Public Domain, from A-F. Prévost, Voyages, vol. 8. See <http://www.columbiauniversity.org/itc/mealac/pritchett/00generallinks/prevost/southasia/zadamspeakceylon.jpg>; 3-8. Duncan Baird Publishers, with the assistance of Louise Glasson. From J. R. Porter, Guide, p. 28; 3-9. The Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, Brigham Young University, with the assistance of Alison Coutts and Don Brugger. From D. W. Parry, Garden, pp. 134-135; 3-10. John M. Lundquist. From J. M. Lundquist, Meeting Place, p. 45; 3-11. Mary Evans Picture Library, from J. B. Villalpando, Ezechielem.

4-1. Photograph © 2007 Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, with the assistance of Erin Schleigh. The Art Object: Thomas Cole, American (born in England), 1801-1848, Expulsion from the Garden of Eden, 1828, Oil on canvas, 100.96 x 138.43 cm (39 ¾ x 54 ½ in.), Gift of Martha C. Karolik for the M. and M. Karolik Collection of American Paintings, 1815-1865, 47.1188; 4-2. The William Blake Archive, with the assistance of William Shaw. Original in The British Museum; 4-3. Museo Nacional del Prado, with the assistance of Concha Ocampos; 4-4. Public Domain, <http://iraq.iraq.ir/cpg/displayimage.php?album=5&pos=11>; 4-5. Photography and Rights Department, The Pierpont Morgan Library and Museum, RA 2001.76. Appreciation to Wayne Schrimsher for the digital scan; 4-6. Tate Gallery Picture Library, with the assistance of Cressida Kocienski; 4-7. Rachel Milstein. From R. Milstein et al., Stories. Original in Topkapi Saray Museum Library, H. 1227: Ms. T-7, Istanbul, Turkey; 4-8. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Jennifer Belt. Original at San Niccolo al Carmine, Siena (aka Santa Maria del Carmine), Pian de' Mantellini, Siena, Italy; 4-9. Photographic Service, Royal Museum of Fine Arts of Belgium, Brussels, with the assistance of Nadia Ben Hamou; 4-10. Bibliothèque Nationale de France, Add. 144.a. Fol., with the assistance of Mme Zerkane and Ingrid Appert, as well as the help of Elizabeth Witchell of the Warburg Institute. From R. Green et al., Hortus, Vol. 1, Original fol. HD 17r. (Figure 21); see also Vol. 2, p. 31, Figures 17-18, from the Bastard Calques plate 12, tracings of the original made ca. 1840; 4-11. British Museum Images, with the assistance of Valentina Talian; 4-12. David Wilder, The Jewish Community of Hebron, <http://www.hebron.com>; 4-13. Alain Guilleux, alain.guilleux@free.fr; 4-14. Photograph DSC00996, 28 June 2006, © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; 4-15. Department of Visual Services, National Gallery of Art, Washington, DC, 2000.3.1 (PA). Appreciation to Wayne Schrimsher for the digital scan; 4-16. EMB-Service for Publishers, Adligenswil, Switzerland, with the assistance of Franz Gisler. Detail from the Sistine Chapel fresco; 4-17. Kirk Richards, <http://www.jkirkrichards.com>; 4-18. The British Library, with the assistance of Sandra Powlette; 4-19. Figure © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw. Compare G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 80; 4-20. Public Domain per <http://www.archive.org/details/christianantiqui02smituoft>. From W. Smith et al., Dictionary, 2:1307. See also M. B. Brown, Girded, p. 137; 4-21. The Fitzwilliam Museum, University of Cambridge, PD 29-1949. Appreciation to Wayne Schrimsher for the digital scan.

5-1. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Tricia Smith. Original in the Cathedral of St. Bavon at Ghent, Belgium; 5-2. XIR24940 Credit: St. Michael Overwhelming the Demon, 1518 (oil on canvas) by Raphael (Raffaello Sanzio of Urbino) (1483-1520) ©Louvre, Paris, France/Giraudon/The Bridgeman Art Library, with the assistance of David Savage. Nationality/copyright status: Italian/out of copyright. Original in the Musée du Louvre, Paris, France; 5-3. Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, Vienna, Bildarchiv, E 1546-C, with the assistance of Crista Müller and Silke Pirolt; 5-4. Public Domain, from P. Henry, Moldavie, 2:246, with the assistance of Imaging Services, The British Library; 5-5. Jerry Harston, with the assistance of Pat Williams of Deseret Book. From B. K. Packer, Mediator 1978, p. 9; 5-6. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Tricia Smith. Original in the Basilica di Santa Maria della Salute, Venice, Italy; 5-7. Scala Archives, with the assistance of Michael Slade. Original in the Galleria Nazionale d'Arte Antica, Rome, Italy; 5-8. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Tricia Smith. Permission also granted from the Musée d'Orsay, Paris, France; 5-9. Public Domain, <http://catholic-resources.org/Dore/Images/OT-012.jpg>. From J. J. Bourasse et al., Vulgate; 5-10. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Tricia Smith. In L. Ouspensky et al., Icons, p. 198. Original in the Tretyakov Gallery, Moscow, Russia; 5-11. Figure © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; 5-12. Public Domain, per http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Daniel_Webster_and_the_Devil_argue_in_court.jpg. From S. V. Benét, Devil, p. 12; 5-13. The Warburg Institute, with assistance of Elizabeth Witchell. From R. Green et al., Hortus, Vol. 2, p. 352, Orig. Fol. HD 215v. (Plate 124). Photograph of C. M. Engelhardt, Hortus, Plate IX, located in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City, New York, with the assistance of Eileen Sullivan.

6-1. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Tricia Smith. Original in the Church of San Francesco, Arezzo, Italy; 6-2. Adapted from D. H. Ludlow, Encyclopedia of Mormonism, 2:923, with the permission of the Brigham Young University Copyright Licensing Office and with the assistance of Nick Coakley and Carl Johnson; 6-3. Assaf Pinkus. In A. Pinkus, Impact, p. 167 and A. Pinkus, Workshops, Illustration 63. Original located at the Heiligkreuz minster in Schwäbisch Gmünd, Germany, south-east portal; 6-4. Basilica di S. Giovanni Battista in Monza, Italy; 6-5. Photograph DSC00183, 14 September 2009, © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; 6-6. <http://www.frankwesleyart.com>, with the assistance of Athalie Wesley, Ralph Willis, and Naomi Wray. In N. Wray, Wesley, p. 45; 6-7. Kunsthistorisches Museum, Vienna, with the assistance of Florian Kugler and Christa Hummel; 6-8. The British Library, C. 188.a.17. In W. Tyndale, New Testament 1526; 6-9. Wulf E. Barsch, <http://webpac.lib.utah.edu/fa/UtahArtists/artists/barsch/index.html>; 6-10, 6-11. Courtesy of The Neal A. Maxwell Institute for Religious Scholarship, Brigham Young University, with the assistance of Alison Coutts and Don Brugger. In H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 452; 6-12. Art Resource, Inc., with the assistance of Tricia Smith. Original in Cappella Spagnuolo, Basilica di Santa Maria Novella, Florence, Italy; 6-13. Photograph DSC03665, 23 September 2008, © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; 6-14. Bayerisches Nationalmuseum. In H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 456.

E1-1. The British Museum, with the assistance of Clive Coward and Axelle Russo; E2-1. National Galleries of Scotland Picture Library, with the assistance of Rachel Travers; E8-1. Assaf Pinkus. Original at the Heilig-Kreuz-Münster (Holy Cross Minster) in Schwäbisch Gmünd, Germany, south portal of the choir; E12-1. Les Éditions Gallimard, with the assistance of Geneviève Fumeron. From Antoine de Saint Exupéry, Dessins, p. 461; E12-2. Laurent de Galember. Figure translated from L. de Galember, Grandeur 2001, p. 52.; E19-1. Public Domain, <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:WWPhelps.gif>; E19-2. Lebrecht Music and Arts Photo Library, with the assistance of Katharine Ryall. Additional thanks to David Betts and Stephen Connock of the RVW Society, and to Hugh Cobbe; E19-3. Valeriano Ugolini, <http://www.ugolinifineart.com/>; E20-1, E20-2. Val Brinkerhoff, <http://cfac.byu.edu/valbrinkerhoff/signs-2/>; E20-3. Public Domain, from A. F. Kendrick, Textiles 1, Frontispiece; E24-1. Tate Gallery Picture Library, with the assistance of Cressida Kocienski; E25-1. Figure © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; E25-2. Photographic Services and Permissions, New York Public Library, Spencer, Pers. Ms. 46. In R. Milstein, et al, Stories, Plate 13; E36-1. Copyright Clearance Center (www.copyright.com). From L. Ouspensky et al., Icons, p. 148. E36-2. Photograph IMG_2770, 24 May 2008, Laura E. Hoffman; E37-1. Herzogin Anna Amalia Bibliothek in Weimar, Germany, with the assistance of Julia Glesner; E41-1. The Huntington Library, with the assistance of Donna Stromberg. For a facsimile of the entire Preface, see W. Blake, Illuminated Blake, p. 216; W. Blake, Illuminated, p. 295; W. Blake, Milton, p. 94; E42-1. Tate Gallery Picture Library, with the assistance of Cressida Kocienski; E43-1. Public Domain, http://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/Image:Wolfgang-amadeus-mozart_1.jpg; E44-1. Public Domain, http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/2/2d/Miranda_-_The_Tempest_JWW.jpg; E50-1. Imaging Services, The British Library, with the assistance of Graham Hutt; E53-1. Figure © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; E53-2. Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana. From a 12th century illuminated version of the Homilies of James of Kokkinobaphos from Byzantium (Vat. gr. 1162, fol. 35v.). See A. Eastmond, Narratives, plate 14; E53-3. Public Domain, <http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/3/32/AshburnPenatuchtFolio076rMosesReceivingLaw.jpg>. Bibliothèque Nationale, nouv. acq. lat., no. 2334, folio 76 recto; E53-4. Copyright Clearance Center (www.copyright.com). From L. Ouspensky et al., Icons, p. 166. E53-5. Val Brinkerhoff, <http://cfac.byu.edu/valbrinkerhoff/signs-2/>; E53-6. Photograph DSC03079, 24 May 2008, © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; E53-7. Photograph Untitled-e1-2884x2471, 1977, Stephen T. Whitlock. Scanned from Kodachrome slide; E53-8. The Morgan Pierpont Library, from the Crusaders Bible, MS M.638, f. 40r. See <http://www.themorgan.org/collections/swf/exhibOnline.asp?id=278> and G. R. Murphy, Gemstone, p. 34. E53-9. G. Ronald Murphy. Thanks also to Walter Milutzki, Director of the Diözesanmuseum Bamberg, Bamberg, Germany. From G. R. Murphy, Gemstone (excerpt), p. 10. E53-10. Photograph DSC02379, 8 March 2008, © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; E53-11. University of California Press, with the assistance of Kim Hogeland. From P. H. Jolly, Eve and Adam, p. 25; E53-12, E53-13. Photographs IMGP2167 and IMGP2179, 26 April 2009, Stephen T. Whitlock, with special thanks to Carole Menzies and Jennifer Griffiths of the Taylor Bodleian Slavonic and Modern Greek Library. From P. P. Novitskij (Novitskii), Otkrovenie Avraama; E53-14. Photograph DSC00198, 14 September 2009, © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; E53-15. From E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, Photograph of the Cycle of Ezekiel, Vol. 11, Plate XXI. © Princeton University Press. Reprinted by permission of Princeton University Press, with the assistance of Watson Wang. Subsequent images are from Kraeling, Carl H., C. C. Torrey, C. B. Welles, and B. Geiger. The Synagogue. The Excavations at Dura-Europos Conducted by Yale University and the French Academy of Inscriptions and Letters. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1956. Plates 69-72; E54-1. © Jeffrey M. Bradshaw; E54-2. Photograph IMGP1821 by Stephen T. Whitlock. Detail of Patriarchs Window, Holy Trinity Church, Stratford-upon-Avon, England, 24 April 2009; E55-1. By permission of The University of Oklahoma Press, from M. Graulich, Myths, p. 55; E55-2. Dr. Sandra Noble and FAMSI, the Foundation for the Advancement of Mesoamerican Studies, Inc. Detail of image at http://www.famsi.org/research/loubat/Telleriano-Remensis/page_19r.jpg. See also E. Q. Keber, Telleriano-Remensis, Folio 19r (misnumbered as 13r); E55-3. Dover Books, from restored rendering in G. Díaz et al., Codex Borgia, Plate 66; E55-4. John E. Clark, on behalf of the New World Archaeological Foundation. From V. G. Norman, Izapa Part 2, p. 202 Figure 4.13, b; E55-5. John E. Clark, on behalf of the New World Archaeological Foundation. From V. G. Norman, Izapa Part 2, p. 202 Figure 4.13, c.

B-1. Public Domain, see <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Image:Mandean.jpg>. From the frontispiece of E. S. Drower, Water. Thanks to Nick Wetton, representing the publisher John Murray.

FIGURE P-1. Go with Me to Cumorah, 1997. Liz Lemon Swindle, 1953-

PREFACE

Preface	xxi
Endnotes	xxvii

I took my stand halfway between awe and love;
 a yearning for Paradise invited me to explore it, but awe at its majesty restrained me from my search...
 I revered what lay hidden and meditated on what was revealed...

Joyfully did I embark on the tale of Paradise—
 a tale that is short to read but rich to explore.
 My tongue read the story's outward narrative, while my intellect took wing and soared upward in awe as it perceived the splendor of Paradise—not indeed as it really is, but insofar as humanity is granted to comprehend it.¹

This book was made possible by the unexpected blessing of a yearlong “sabbatical” in France. Though the book of Genesis has long been a favorite of mine, the project became possible only because our family’s move to a new time zone afforded extra early morning study time before the day’s e-mail messages began to arrive from across the Atlantic.

My original thought had been to focus on the poignant Jacob-Joseph story cycle, which has long attracted me. However, as I began the project in earnest, my thoughts were continually—and at first, I admit, reluctantly—led back to the book of Moses, a revelatory expansion of the first chapters of Genesis. My reluctance stemmed from a cognizance of my ignorance. Though the sobering demeanor of this marvelous book had become beautiful to me through long acquaintance,² I felt I had neither the time nor the expertise required to assimilate—let alone credibly contribute to—the mountain of prophetic writings and scholarship that had already addressed the many enigmas woven deeply into the fabric of this foundational work of scripture. In short, it seemed a story far too old for a green author.³

Despite my early misgivings, I found tangible reassurance and ongoing direction in the intimate dialogue of prayer, and friendly encouragement in the splendid scaffolding previously assembled by the patient labors of prior exegetes, to whom I acknowledge my deep indebtedness.⁴ Looking back, I acknowledge with grateful surprise that the major ideas came together much more quickly than I had thought possible. A few months after our return from France, I had a reasonably complete draft of the commentary in hand. The bibliography and excursus sections followed.

1 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 1:2-3, p. 78.

2 See Endnote P-1, p. xxvii.

3 W. Shakespeare, Venus, 806, p. 1714. See Endnote P-2, p. xxvii.

While fellow Latter-day Saints will have little problem comprehending my still-growing attachment to Joseph Smith's translation of the early narratives of Genesis, many of my friends and colleagues will find it mystifying that I have devoted so much time and attention to a study of what may understandably seem to be no more than a fanciful collection of worn-out fables—one more shard among the dusty discards of the almost bygone religious passage of Western culture. In that regard, it must also be admitted that the central historical claims of Mormonism—and Christianity⁵ itself, for that matter—hardly appear any less fantastic to the modern mind than the stories of Adam and Eve.⁶ Even in the nineteenth century, Charles Dickens⁷ approved as Hannay charged the Mormons with “the absurdity of seeing visions in the age of railways”—simultaneously commending our “immense practical industry” while decrying our “pitiable superstitious delusion.” His conclusion at that time is one that would be met with understanding nods by many perplexed observers of Mormonism in our day: “What the Mormons do, seems to be excellent; what they say is mostly nonsense.”⁸

In contrast to the predominantly polemical bent of apologetic and scholarly literature that appeared during the first century of Mormonism, recent decades have happily witnessed hundreds of broad studies of the founding stories and scriptures of the Latter-day Saints that can be appreciated by both members and non-members of the Church alike.⁹ It is regrettable that serious studies of the Joseph Smith Translation (JST) of the Bible have been relatively late in coming, explorations of its textual foundations having begun in earnest only in the last forty years with the pioneering work of Richard P. Howard and Robert J. Matthews.¹⁰

Now, at last, as the book of Moses—and the related book of Abraham—are beginning to receive their due in the spotlight of scholarly scrutiny, they may well prove to be among the strongest witnesses of the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith.¹¹ For example, noted Yale critic of secular and sacred literature Harold Bloom, who classes these two books among the “more surprising” and “neglected” works of LDS scripture,¹² is intrigued by the fact that many of their themes are “strikingly akin to ancient suggestions”¹³ that essentially restate “the archaic or original Jewish religion, a Judaism that preceded even the Yahwist.” While expressing “no judgment, one way or the other, upon the authenticity” of LDS scripture, he finds “enormous validity” in the way these writings “recapture... crucial elements in the archaic Jewish religion.... that had ceased to be available either to normative Judaism or to

4 See Endnote P-3, p. xxvii.

5 See Endnote P-4, p. xxvii.

6 See Endnote P-5, p. xxvii.

7 See Endnote P-6, p. xxviii.

8 J. Hannay, Smith, p. 385, cited in R. J. Dunn, Dickens, p. 4. A non-LDS observer similarly wrote of the Mormons in 2009: “What would do you do if you met people you admired greatly, who reminded you of the best examples of your fellow believers, yet whose faith rested on what you saw as patent absurdities” (W. Lobdell, Losing, pp. 121–122). He goes on to concede, however: “Yet what’s so strange about Mormonism compared to traditional Christianity... The details of Mormonism are fresher, but not much more strange and mythical” (ibid., pp. 126, 127). See Endnote P-7, p. xxix.

9 For broad perspectives from LDS and non-LDS scholars on the wide influence of Joseph Smith's life and work, see J. W. Welch, Worlds and R. L. Neilson et al., Reappraisals.

10 R. P. Howard, Restoration 1969; R. J. Matthews, Plainer.

11 See Endnote P-8, p. xxx.

12 H. Bloom, Names Divine, p. 25.

13 See Endnote 2-28, p. 130.

Christianity, and that survived only in esoteric traditions unlikely to have touched [Joseph] Smith directly.”¹⁴

Having spent more than three years in focused study of the book of Moses, I have also been astonished with the extent to which its words reverberate with the echoes of antiquity—and, no less significantly, with the deepest truths of my personal experience. Indeed, I would not merely assert that the book of Moses holds up well under close examination, but rather that, like a fractal whose self-similar patterns become more wondrous upon ever closer inspection, the brilliance of its inspiration shines most impressively under bright light and high magnification: there is glory in the details.¹⁵

I owe my awakening to the literary beauty of scripture to a Brigham Young University (BYU) “Reading the Scriptures” course taught by Professor Arthur Henry King, or “Brother King” as he preferred to be called in class.¹⁶ Converted to Mormonism in Britain during his later years, Brother King was a Shakespearian scholar and professional “stylistician”—in other words, an expert in how the nuances of linguistic expression reveal to their readers, both intentionally and unintentionally, not only the literary characters but also the authors themselves. Indeed, Brother King often mentioned how it was the very style of the First Vision account that convinced him that Joseph Smith was telling the truth.¹⁷

Brother King believed strongly in the virtues of reading the scriptures aloud.¹⁸ He taught the members of our class how to experiment with different approaches to reading the same verse, how to listen to the wisdom of the spoken voice, and how the varying of emphasis and pauses for breath could highlight different shades of meaning in the text. Under his direction, we sang the scriptures as if they were music.

The Prophet Joseph Smith said that scripture should be “understood precisely as it reads.”¹⁹ Likewise, Brother King taught us to read slowly, and to persist in reading until the plain sense of the words became clear to us.²⁰ This approach differs from the facile skimming for rapid information ingestion that is the stuff of our daily business—the great Jewish scholar Martin Buber went so far as to term the application to scripture study of the modern unreflective method “the leprosy of fluency.”²¹

Once having gained confidence in our grasp of the plain sense of the words of scripture, we must still decode its pervasive imagery. Our problem in that respect is that we live on the near side of a great divide that separates us from the religious, cultural, and philosophical perspectives of the ancients.²² The Prophet Joseph Smith was far closer to this lost world than we are—not only because of his personal involvement with the recovery and revelatory expansion of ancient religion, but also because in his time many archaic traditions were still embedded in the language and daily experience of the surrounding culture.²³ Barker describes the challenges this situation presents to contemporary students of scripture:

14 H. Bloom, American Religion, pp. 98, 99, 101. See Endnote P-9, p. xxx.

15 See Endnote P-10, p. xxx.

16 See Endnote P-11, p. xxxi.

17 A. H. King, Account, pp. 42-43, 45; A. H. King, Joseph. See Endnote P-12, p. xxxi.

18 A. H. King, Afterword, pp. 233-236; A. H. King, Rhetoric, pp. 201-204; A. H. King, Child, pp. 101-102; A. H. King, Education, pp. 240-242; cf. D. Packard et al., Feasting, pp. 18-20, 199-203, 209-213.

19 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 29 January 1843, p. 161. See Endnote P-13, p. xxxi.

20 A. H. King, Afterword, pp. 233-234; D. Packard et al., Feasting, pp. 8-10.

21 See Endnote P-14, p. xxxi.

22 C. S. Lewis, Descriptione; G. d. Santillana et al., Hamlet's Mill, p. 10. See Endnote P-21, p. xxxv.

23 A. H. King, Joseph, pp. 287-288.

FIGURE P-2. Inflatable Cathedral, 1978
David Macaulay, 1946-

*The things of God are of deep import; and time, and experience, and careful and ponderous and solemn thoughts can only find them out.*¹ In vivid contrast to Joseph Smith's statement, David Macaulay's tongue-in-cheek simulation is "intended to create a distinguished setting at a moment's notice."² While the concept was just a gleam in Macaulay's eye when he created this drawing, inflatable churches are now available for rent or purchase. A Web site proudly proclaims: "The attention to detail is heavenly, complete with plastic 'stained glass' windows and airbrush artwork which replicates the traditional church. Inside it has an inflatable organ, altar, pulpit, pews, candles and a gold cross. Even the doors are flanked by air-filled angels. The church can be built in two hours and disassembled in less than one... It can be set up anywhere, from your garden to Malibu Beach, it's up to you. No problem with 'high heels.'"³

1 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 25 March 1839, p. 137.

2 D. Macaulay, Moments, caption for plate xxvi.

3 Inflatable Church.

Like the first Christians, we still pray "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven,"²⁴ but many of the complex system of symbols and stories that describe the Kingdom are not longer recognized for what they are.²⁵

It used to be thought that putting the code into modern English would overcome the problem, and make everything clear to people who had no roots in a Christian community. This attempt has proved misguided, since so much of the code simply will not translate into modern English... The task, then, has had to alter. The need now is not just for modern English, or modern thought forms, but for an explanation of the images and pictures in which the ideas of the Bible are expressed.²⁶ These are specific to one culture, that of Israel and Judaism, and until they are fully understood in their original setting, little of what is done with the writings and ideas that came from that particular setting can be understood. Once we lose touch with the meaning of biblical imagery, we lose any way into the real meaning of the Bible. This has already begun to happen and a diluted "instant" Christianity has been offered as junk food for the mass market. The resultant malnutrition, even in churches, is all too obvious.²⁷

24 Matthew 6:10.

25 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 128.

26 See Endnote P-15, p. xxxii.

27 M. Barker, Earth, pp. 1-2.

Consistent with Barker's observations, many observers have documented a worldwide trend toward a religious mind-set that prizes emotion²⁸ and entertainment²⁹ as major staples of worship. Even when undertaken with evident sincerity, religious gatherings of this sort scarcely rise above the level of a "weekly social rite, a boost to our morale,"³⁰ with perhaps a few exhortations on ethics thrown in. When the Bible is consulted at all, it is too often "solely for its piety or its inspiring adventures"³¹ or its admittedly "memorable illustrations and contrasts" rather than its "deep memories" of spiritual understanding.³² All this has resulted not only in a regrettable "secularization of religious symbolic language,"³³ but also in what Prothero calls a widespread "religious amnesia" that has dangerously weakened the foundations of faith.³⁴ Bloom concludes that since the current "American Jesus can be described without any recourse to theology" we have become, on the whole, a post-Christian nation.³⁵ Similarly, Herberg characterized our national "faith in faith" as a "strange brew of devotion to religion and insouciance as to its content."³⁶ Little wonder that the teaching of the central doctrines of the Gospel has been a significant focus of LDS Church leadership in recent years.³⁷ In this connection, Elder Neal A. Maxwell once remarked: "God is giving away the spiritual secrets of the universe," and then asked: "but are we listening?"³⁸

I am fully conscious of the fact that an understanding of "the doctrine of the kingdom"³⁹ does not come by mere "study" alone, but "also by faith"⁴⁰ as we are asked to give loving and whole-hearted expression in our lives of what we feel and believe. I concur with Elder Marion G. Romney that: "One cannot fully learn the gospel without living it."⁴¹ Indeed, as Elder Dallin H. Oaks has said about the most common way that we receive spiritual understanding: "revelation comes most often when we are on the move."⁴² Such learning "by faith" is the supreme test—and among the sweetest rewards—of discipleship during this mortal "season of unanswered questions."⁴³ Thus, for each of us who love to study the scriptures, there is both encouragement and a warning in the wise words of the Danish Christian philosopher, Søren Kierkegaard:

When you read God's word eruditely—we do not disparage erudition, far from it—but remember that when you read God's word eruditely, with a dictionary, etc., you are not reading God's Word... If you are a learned man, then take care lest with all your erudite reading (which is not reading God's Word) you forget perchance to read God's Word. If you are not learned—ah, envy the other man not, rejoice that you can at once get to the point of reading God's Word! And if there is a desire, a commandment, an order [that you read],... then be off at 28 B. C. Hafen, Anchored, p. 3.

29 On the origins of today's "praise and worship" services, "patterned after the rock concert of secular culture," see F. Viola et al., Pagan Christianity, pp. 164-166.

30 P. Tillich, cited in R. Coles, Secular Mind, p. 5. See also ibid., p. 18.

31 J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, p. vii.

32 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 34.

33 J. H. Charlesworth, Protestant View, p. 84.

34 S. Prothero, Literacy, pp. 105-112.

35 H. Bloom, Names Divine, p. 104. See Endnote P-16, p. xxxiii.

36 Cited in S. Prothero, Literacy, p. 113. See Endnote P-20, p. xxxv.

37 See, e.g., H. B. Eyring, Jr., Power; S. D. Nadauld, Principles, pp. 88-89; B. K. Packer, Plan of Happiness; B. K. Packer, Children, p. 17; B. K. Packer, Do Not Fear, p. 79; B. K. Packer, Errand, pp. 307-312; M. K. Jensen, Anchors. LDS writers have often noted the fact that "God gave unto [men] commandments, after having made known unto them the plan of redemption" (Alma 12:32, emphasis mine). See Endnote P-17, p. xxxiii.

38 N. A. Maxwell, Cosmos, p. 2.

39 D&C 88:77.

40 D&C 88:118; cf. D. A. Bednar, Seek.

41 M. G. Romney, Oath, p. 19; M. K. Jensen, Anchors, p. 59. See Endnote P-18, p. xxxiv.

42 D. H. Oaks, Sharing, p. 7. See also B. C. Hafen, Anchored, pp. 3-5.

43 L. B. Wickman, But If Not, p. 30.

once to do accordingly. “But,” you perhaps would say, “there are so many obscure passages in the Holy Scriptures, whole books which are almost riddles.” To this I would reply, “I see no need of considering this objection unless it comes from one whose life gives expression to the fact that he has punctually complied with all the passages which are easy to understand.” Is this the case with you? [Thus a godly man must act:] if there were obscure passages, but also clearly expressed desires, he would say, “I must at once comply with the desire, then I will see what can be made of the obscure passages. Oh, but how could I sit down to puzzle over the obscure passages and leave the desire unfulfilled, the desire which I clearly understood?” That is to say: When you read God’s Word, it is not the obscure passages which impose a duty upon you, but that which you understand and with that you must instantly comply. If there were only a single passage you did understand in Holy Scripture—well, the first thing is to do that; but you do not first have to sit down and puzzle over the obscure passages. God’s Word is given in order that you shall act in accordance with it, not in order that you shall practice the art of interpreting obscure passages.⁴⁴

About the 2014 Updated Edition

Thanks to the readers who noted errors in the hardback volume, a first corrected edition of this book was published in softcover and in PDF format soon after the supply of the hardback was exhausted in early 2010. Though print-on-demand services for the softcover edition allowed the book to remain in print, vendor constraints regrettably required the book to be broken up into four volumes (with each volume to be numbered starting at page 1, wreaking havoc with the page numbers of internal cross-references) and to be reduced to a smaller page format. This edition allows the book to return to its original 8 1/2 x 11 page size in two volumes. Unfortunately, printing the book in color in a print-on-demand arrangement currently remains unaffordable. However, in the PDF version of this book, black-and-white versions of images have been updated to color throughout the interior when available.

When I wrote this book, I did not anticipate that there would be additional books of commentary forthcoming in this series. As a result of the 2014 publication of a second book written with the assistance of David J. Larsen (In God’s Image and Likeness 2: Enoch, Noah, and the Tower of Babel), I have had to change the title of the present volume to avoid confusion. Many topics treated in volume 2 are updates and expansions of topics treated here in volume 1.

In some cases my study of Enoch, Noah, and the Tower of Babel has led to new perspectives, making corrections and updates to volume 1 desirable. Here and there throughout this new edition, I have made changes accordingly. For example, I’ve updated the discussion of the “drunkenness” of Noah on pp. 592, 731 to reflect a recollection of Joseph Smith’s view (corresponding to the opinions of some ancient and modern exegetes) that Noah “was not drunk, but in a vision.”⁴⁵ Where new sources have been consulted, I have added them to the References section. It is important to understand, however, that my updates to this volume have been selective—a comprehensive reworking of the content of this book must await a true second edition, if that ever becomes possible.

I have made minor stylistic, formatting, and layout changes throughout the book. Although in a few cases a line or a paragraph may have shifted to a new page, page numbers for sections and headings remain identical to the 2010 edition. In order to maintain consistency with previous editions, no new sections of the Excursus have been added and the numbering of previously existing Endnotes and Footnotes remains unchanged. Further suggestions and corrections from readers for future editions will be warmly welcomed.

44 Cited in S. Kierkegaard, Parables, p. 80; cf. S. Kierkegaard, Self-Examination, 12:318, pp. 28-29. See also J. E. Faulconer, Dorrien, pp. 433-435.

45 Joseph Smith, Jr., as reported by William Allen to Charles Lowell Walker (C. L. Walker, Diary, 12 May 1881, 2:554).

Endnotes

- P-1 Said the Prophet Joseph Smith: “[H]e who reads [the sacred volume] oftenest will like it best, and he who is acquainted with it, will know the hand wherever he can see it.”⁴⁶
- P-2 Coogan sums up the situation with respect to biblical studies as follows:
 The Bible is probably civilization’s most over-studied book. Since academics have to publish to get jobs and keep them, and since there are fewer and fewer original things to say about the primary texts, biblical studies have often moved, understandably, to the fringes. Enormous amounts of time and energy are spent performing minute analyses of texts, themes and artifacts that more sensible historians regard as insignificant, or on studying studies of the Bible.⁴⁷
- P-3 Nibley reassuringly quipped that “It is better to be ignorant and interested than ignorant and not interested, and there’s no third alternative here. We’re ignorant in any case, so you might as well be ignorant and interested in these things.”⁴⁸ Donald Knuth, a well-known computer scientist, wrote in the preface to his book of Bible commentary: “I can’t say that my scientific background makes me a better Bible student, but I don’t think it’s a handicap either.”⁴⁹ C. S. Lewis, in fact, observed that the perspective of an amateur may sometimes be helpful to other beginners: “The fellow-pupil can help more than the master because he knows less. The difficulty we want him to explain is one he has recently met.” Thus, explained Lewis about his own venture into unfamiliar scholarly territory: “I write for the unlearned about things in which I am unlearned myself... I write as one amateur to another, talking about difficulties I have met, or lights I have gained... with the hope that this might at any rate interest, and sometimes even help, other inexpert readers. I am ‘comparing notes’, not presuming to instruct... The thoughts [this book] contains are those to which I found myself driven in reading the [scriptures], sometimes by my enjoyment of them, sometimes by meeting with what at first I could not enjoy.”⁵⁰
- P-4 Thus Malcolm Muggeridge’s poignant question, “Would something like the miracle of Bethlehem even be allowed to happen in our day?”
 In humanistic times like ours, a contemporary virgin... would regard a message from the Angel Gabriel that she might expect to give birth to a son to be called the Son of the Highest as ill-tidings of great sorrow... It is, in point of fact, extremely improbable, under existing conditions, that Jesus would have been permitted to be born at all. Mary’s pregnancy, in poor circumstances, and with the father unknown, would have been an obvious case for an abortion; and her talk of having conceived as a result of the intervention of the Holy Ghost would have pointed to the need for psychiatric treatment, and made the case for terminating her pregnancy even stronger. Thus our generation, needing a Savior more, perhaps, than any that has ever existed, would be too humane to allow one to be born; too enlightened to permit the Light of the World to shine in a darkness that grows ever more oppressive.⁵¹
- P-5 Already in 1905, Chesterton could write: “Atheism itself is too theological for us today.”⁵² Likewise, Taylor provides an eloquent discussion of the process and consequences of the loss of “immediate certainty” of the moral/spiritual in Western culture.⁵³ This point is illustrated by Peterson in his discussion of an essay by Jacob Weisberg that views “reliance upon religious faith in general, not merely Mormonism, ‘as an alternative to rational understanding of complex issues’... Weisberg regards all religious doctrines as ‘dogmatic, irrational, and absurd. By holding them, someone indicates a basic failure to think for himself or see the world as it is.’”⁵⁴ More commonly held creeds have simply been granted an unmerited patina of respectability by the sheer passage of time. ‘Perhaps Christianity and Judaism are merely more venerable and poetic versions of the same. But a few eons makes a big difference’”⁵⁵ Peterson also cites a critical review of Bushman’s biography of Joseph Smith which implied that Bushman was overreaching himself in crafting a book that tries to make a place for “both inspiration and rational discourse.” Peterson notes the “apparent assumption that rational discourse and inspiration are radically incompatible” and cites the

46 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, p. 56.

47 M. D. Coogan, Gulf.

48 H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 266.

49 D. E. Knuth, 3:16, p. 2.

50 C. S. Lewis, Psalms, pp. 1-2.

51 M. Muggeridge, Jesus, p. 19.

52 G. K. Chesterton, Heretics, p. 40.

53 C. Taylor, Secular Age—see, e.g., pp. 11ff. See also T. Asad, Construction, pp. 47-52.

54 See Asad for a view that “the reasons for a person’s attachment to a given way of life, or conversion to another, cannot be reduced to an idealized model of scientific theory building” (T. Asad, Criticism, p. 235).

55 D. C. Peterson, Reflections, pp. xxiii-xxiv. See J. Weisberg, Romney’s Religion.

reviewer's declaration "that, in order to earn a secular historian's acceptance, 'Smith's revelations would need to be explained materially as a product of his cultural or physical environment.'"⁵⁶

Nonmember historian Jan Shipps' experiences in responding to media questions about Mormonism illustrate the kinds of issues that arise for believers of all faiths in our day:

I remember very well how the voice of one reporter coming across the telephone wire expressed both exasperation and astonishment. "How," he wailed, "can perfectly sane people believe all this crazy stuff?" Because I had spent the first half of the 1980s writing a book designed to answer that very question, I had a ready reply... It usually began with my pointing out that the idea that Joseph Smith found golden plates and had revelations was not any more absurd than the idea that Moses and the Hebrews walked across the Red Sea without getting wet or that Jesus, who was dead, is now alive.⁵⁷

That debates about the reality of Jesus' resurrection are not a new phenomenon of the age of science is emphasized by Wright, who reminds us: "We didn't need Galileo and Einstein to tell us that dead people don't come back to life."⁵⁸

Getting to the nub of the problem, Neusner concludes that "among our colleagues are some who do not really like religion in its living forms, but find terribly interesting religion in its dead ones. That is why an old Christian text, one from the first century for example, is deemed a worthy subject of scholarship. But a fresh Christian expression (I think in this connection of the Book of Mormon) is available principally for ridicule, but never for study. Religious experience in the third century is fascinating. Religious experience in the twentieth century is frightening or absurd."⁵⁹

While not accepting the historicity of the Book of Mormon, non-Mormon scholar O'Dea is one who at least took the book seriously "as a legitimate work of religious literature" and acknowledged that most of the theories of its origin advanced by its critics were unconvincing.⁶⁰ He observed with irony that "the Book of Mormon has not been universally considered by its critics as one of those books that must be read in order to have an opinion of it."⁶¹

P-6 Dickens later spoke admiringly of an uneducated but orderly group of Mormon emigrants he observed in Liverpool, concluding to his own surprise that if he hadn't have known who they were: "I should have said they were in their degree, the pick and flower of England."⁶² "Dickens related his experience to Richard Monckton Milnes, Lord Houghton, who said that he had himself written on the topic of the Latter-day Saints in the Edinburgh Review in January 1862. In his article Milnes refers to a House of Commons inquiry in 1854...: 'The Select Committee of the House of Commons on emigrant ships for 1854 summoned the Mormon agent and passenger-broker before it, and came to the conclusion that no ships under the provisions of the 'Passengers Act' could be depended upon for comfort and security in the same degree as those under his administration.... [T]he Mormon ship is a Family under a strong and accepted discipline, with every provision for comfort, decorum and internal peace."⁶³

Dickens' contemporaries John Stuart Mill and Thomas Carlyle also wrote sympathetically about the Mormons. In his 1859 essay On Liberty, Mill decried "the language of downright persecution which breaks out from the press of this country, whenever it feels called on to notice the remarkable phenomenon of Mormonism." While characterizing the religion as "the product of palpable imposture," all the more incredible because of its appearance "in the age of newspapers, railways, and the electric telegraph," Mill was not at all partial to the teachings of the Church. However, it deeply concerned him that "its prophet and founder was, for his teaching, put to death by a mob; that others of its adherents lost their lives by the same lawless violence; that they were forcibly expelled, in a body, from the country in which they first grew up; while, now that they have been chased into a solitary recess in the midst of a desert, many in this country openly declare that it would be right (only that it is not convenient) to send an expedition against them, and compel them by force to conform to the opinions of other people." That legitimate means of persuasion could be used to counter its teachings seemed acceptable. "But when the dissentients have conceded to the hostile sentiments of others, far more than could justly be demanded; when they have left the countries to which their doctrines were unacceptable, and established themselves in a remote corner of the earth, which they have been the first to render habitable to human beings; it is difficult to see on

56 D. C. Peterson, Reflections, p. xxx. See L. F. Maffly-Kipp, Who's That, p. 11.

57 J. Shipps, Sojourner, pp. 282-283; cf. R. L. Bushman, Mormonism, pp. 113-114.

58 N. T. Wright, Surprised, p. 294.

59 J. Neusner, Vocation, p. 117.

60 A. L. Mauss, Near-Nation, p. 307.

61 T. F. O'Dea, Mormons, p. 26.

62 C. Dickens, Traveler, 22, 4 July 1863, p. 262.

63 P. E. Kerry, Carlyle, pp. 266-267.

what principles but those of tyranny they can be prevented from living there under what laws they please, provided they commit no aggression on other nations, and allow perfect freedom of departure to those who are dissatisfied with their ways.”⁶⁴

In his 1854 draft of Essay on the Mormons, Carlyle described Mormonism as “a gross physical form of Calvinism... but in this one point incommensurably (transcendently) superior to all other forms of religion now extant. That it is believed, that it is practically acted upon from day to day and from hour to hour; taken as a very fact, the neglect or contradiction of which will vitiate and ruin all other facts of the day and of the hour. That is its immeasurable superiority.”⁶⁵

- P-7 Elder Neal A. Maxwell expressed his “special appreciation for my friends who, though resolutely irreligious themselves, were not scoffers. Instead, though doubtless puzzled by me and their other religious friends, they were nevertheless respectful. I admire the day-to-day decency of such men and women. Though detached from theology, their decency is commendable.”⁶⁶

Among the many religious non-Mormon friends is historian Jan Shipps. She put her finger on part of the problem that people encounter in understanding LDS beliefs when she observed that “Mormonism is a really complex theological system... All its parts fit together beautifully. But if you just know a little bit about one of them, or part of them, it seems weird.”⁶⁷ The well-known Vatican astronomer, Guy Consolmagno, found that two religions were universally dismissed by the subjectively-selected sample of scientists and engineers he interviewed as “obviously wrong”: Scientology and Mormonism. However, he also notes a difference between the two: “... no scientist of my acquaintance has ever had something good to say about Scientology—rather ironic, given its name. But as it happens, I know a number of techies who are Mormons, including my thesis advisor at MIT.”⁶⁸ As one who has experienced both the perplexity and the generosity of spirit of his non-LDS colleagues, prominent Mormon historian Richard L. Bushman shared the following:

I have lived an academic life ever since I graduated from Harvard College in 1955 and then later received a Ph.D. in the history of American civilization from that same institution. Since then I have taught at Brigham Young University, Boston University, and the University of Delaware, been visiting professor at Brown and Harvard universities, and now am Gouverneur Morris Professor of History at Columbia University. In these many years as an academic, I have never been belittled for my religious beliefs or felt excluded. I have published books, contributed to conferences, entered into scholarly controversies, and had my share of honors without once feeling that my well-known faith raised a barrier.

Only now and then have I caught a glimpse of the wonder my colleagues must feel that a rational, modern man believes the stories and doctrines of the Latter-day Saints. Soon after I was hired as professor of history and chair of the department at the University of Delaware, a member of the search committee invited me to lunch. While we were driving along, I mentioned my work on a biography of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Latter-day Saint Church. My colleague, doubtless to reassure me, turned quickly and said, “Dick, we took all that into account and decided it didn’t matter.” Apparently he was thinking of the peculiar tic in my intellectual makeup that allowed me to hold these strange beliefs. A similar reaction greeted me on coming to Columbia in 1989. Introduced to a member of the faculty, he said jovially, “Oh, you’re the Mormon,” an entirely amiable remark meant to make me feel at home. But one can imagine the repercussions if a new faculty member at Brigham Young University was greeted with “Oh, you’re the Jew,” or “Oh, you’re the Catholic.”

The extravagant nature of the Latter-day Saint religion probably accounts for the perplexity of my colleagues. Christian and Jewish doctrines, weathered by time, no longer strike people as bizarre or unusual. One can hold to one of the moderate versions of these ancient religions without startling one’s friends. But Joseph Smith saw the angel Moroni less than two hundred years ago and then brought home gold plates and translated the Book of Mormon. These miraculous events, happening so close to home, strain one’s credulity. How can anyone in this day of science and skepticism believe that God sends angels to speak to humans and requires such unlikely acts as the translation of an ancient history with the aid of a Urim and Thummim? My sophomore tutor, the distinguished historian of science, 64 J. S. Mill, Liberty, pp. 163-166.

65 Cited in P. E. Kerry, Carlyle, p. 270.

66 N. A. Maxwell, Inexhaustible, p. 216.

67 M. Luo, Test. For an insightful essay charting the historical evolution of charges that Mormonism is not Christian, see J. Shipps, Sojourner, pp. 335-357. For general overviews of changes in public perceptions of the Mormons in America, see T. L. Givens, Viper; J. Shipps, Sojourner, pp. 51-123.

68 G. Consolmagno, God’s Mechanics, p. 98. Consolmagno’s masters thesis advisor was John S. Lewis, who joined the Church in Boston while teaching at MIT, and is currently an internationally-respected professor of planetary science at the University of Arizona.

I. B. Cohen, once coyly mentioned to me that many people thought LDS beliefs were pure garbage. He doubtless was trying gently to bring me to my senses after my sheltered upbringing as a member of the Church.⁶⁹

While Mormons regard many of the doctrinal elaborations that occurred during the early centuries of Christianity as unwarranted intrusions of Greek philosophy into the straightforward historical truths of the Gospel, some non-Mormons see LDS theology merely as simplistic and naïve. For example Cahill writes that Mormonism resembles Manichaeism in its philosophical impoverishment, being “full of assertions, but [yielding] no intellectual system to nourish a great intellect.”⁷⁰ While a strong rebuttal of Cahill’s claim could be buttressed with arguments from a long line of scholars, both Mormon and non-Mormon, who have recognized the unique riches of the LDS tradition,⁷¹ such an argument would distract attention from a more central point: Like all religious traditions with which I am personally acquainted, the primary interest of Mormonism is in developing a universal community of saints not an elite cadre of scholars.⁷² In his essay on the Difference between a Genius and an Apostle, Kierkegaard eloquently captures this distinction between what he calls a “genius” and an “apostle”:

The genius, an aristocrat of the spirit, has had gifts lavished upon him by nature that distinguish him from his fellows. The apostle may be a commoner, a fisherman, a one-talent man by nature, or he may have ten talents—yet all that he has is dedicated to the service of the Eternal and as such is lifted up. The genius speaks with brilliance and charm. The apostle speaks with authority. The way of the genius is a way closed to all but a few. The way of the apostle is a way open to all as individuals—even to the genius himself if he can forsake the absorbing satisfactions of a brilliant self-sufficiency and be ready to will one thing.⁷³

- P-8 Several serious LDS studies of the book of Abraham are now available.⁷⁴
- P-9 Significantly, non-Mormon scholars W. D. Davies and Krister Stendahl separately noted their common view that “there is no other Christian community or community out of the Judeo-Christian tradition which has as positive and non-anti-Semitic ways of speaking about the Jews as have the Mormons.”⁷⁵
- P-10 The way in which my “intellectual conversion” to the book of Moses was added to my spiritual witness recalled for me Elder B. H. Roberts’ description of the greater appreciation he experienced of the Atonement as he finished the writing of a manual on that subject for the Seventy:

[W]hile religion must appeal to and satisfy the emotional nature, it must also appeal to and satisfy the intellect... [T]his late inquiry into that subject has had a wonderful effect upon my own thought and state of mind... It has been a matter of faith with me and knowledge, by the testimony of the Spirit of God to my soul; but upon close inquiry, by deeper delving into the subject, my intellect also gives its full and complete assent... I account it for myself a new conversion, an intellectual conversion, ... and I have been rejoicing in it of late exceedingly.⁷⁶

I could also relate to the experience of Catherine Thomas, who found that needed episodes of spiritual illumination came “in context” through her work of teaching, and following an order and timing which only later became fully apparent:

It was a time of germination. I had always been aware that thoughts came to me that illuminated life and the Gospel. Now I had an outlet for them. My writing began as I felt the need to explain some gospel principle or other to my students... I was always coming at a particular understanding in a way that needed context.⁷⁷

69 R. L. Bushman, R. L. Bushman, pp. 79-80.

70 T. Cahill, Irish, p. 49.

71 See, e.g., C. L. Blomberg et al., Divide; H. Bloom, American Religion; R. Jospe et al., Covenant; T. G. Madsen, Reflections; T. G. Madsen et al., Human Nature; T. G. Madsen, Eternal Man; S. M. McMurrin, Theological; R. L. Millet, Different; R. L. Millet, Vision; R. L. Millet et al., Bridging; R. L. Millet et al., Claiming; D. W. Musser et al., Dialogue; H. W. Nibley, Temple and Cosmos; B. T. Ostler, Attributes; B. T. Ostler, Theism; B. T. Ostler, God; S. J. Palmer, Mormons and Muslims; D. L. Paulsen, Embodiment; D. L. Paulsen, Are Christians Mormon; J. W. Welch, Worlds.

72 J. E. Faulconer, Tracy; J. Siebach, Response.

73 S. Kierkegaard, Purity, from Translator’s Introduction, p. 21. For a similar point of view, see H. W. Nibley, Prophets. See also J. S. Tanner, Men and Mantles, pp. 159-160 and J. L. Kugel, How to Read, pp. 679-689.

74 See, e.g., E. D. Clark, Blessings; J. Gee et al., Astronomy; H. W. Nibley, Drama; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005; H. W. Nibley, Abraham 2000; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP; M. D. Rhodes, Hor; J. A. Tvedtnes et al., Traditions.

75 K. Stendahl, Third Nephi, p. 151.

76 B. H. Roberts, 8 April 1911, p. 59. Also quoted in T. G. Madsen, Nine Reasons, pp. 110-112.

77 M. C. Thomas, Light, p. 347.

The way in which the glory of God's work is ultimately revealed in the simple details of texts, events, and godly persons is brilliantly described by Chesterton:⁷⁸

The wise man will follow a star, low and large and fierce in the heavens; but the nearer he comes to it the smaller and smaller it will grow, till he finds it the humble lantern over some little inn or stable. Not till we know the high things shall we know how lowly they are. Meanwhile, the modern superior transcendentalist will find the facts of eternity incredible because they are so solid; he will not recognize heaven because it is so like the earth.

P-11 See Birch⁷⁹ for a vivid description of King's approach to scholarship and classroom style.

P-12 Wrote King:

When I was first brought to read Joseph Smith's story, I was deeply impressed. I wasn't inclined to be impressed. As a stylistician, I have spent my life being disinclined to be impressed. So when I read his story, I thought to myself, this is an extraordinary thing. This is an astonishingly matter-of-fact and cool account. This man is not trying to persuade me of anything. He doesn't feel the need to. He is stating what happened to him, and he is stating it, not enthusiastically, but in quite a matter-of-fact way. He is not trying to make me cry or feel ecstatic. That struck me, and that began to build my testimony, for I could see that this man was telling the truth.⁸⁰

P-13 By this, I do not think that the Prophet meant that a given passage of scripture can be understood in isolation, apart from the context in which it stands. Rather, for example, when he interpreted a parable, his "key" to "ascertain its meaning" was to "dig up the root," i.e., to "enquire [as to] the question which drew out the answer."⁸¹ He was democratic in his desire to have the scriptures unfolded to all, decrying those who supposed that their plain truths were "mystery... and, therefore, are not to be understood." He declared that all the Saints could come to an understanding of such things "if [they] will but open [their] eyes, and read with candor."⁸²

P-14 Buber described this as:

... a disease of the spirit that can lead us to imagine that we already know what we are reading, causing us to blithely and triumphantly read past the text... The spiritual task of interpretation... is to affect or alter the pace of reading so that one's eye and ear can be addressed by the text's words and sounds—and thus reveal an expanded or new sense of life and its dynamics. The pace of technology and the patterns of modernity pervert this vital task. The rhythm of reading must, therefore, be restored to the rhythm of breathing, to the cadence of the cantillation marks of the sacred text. Only then will the individual absorb the texts with his or her life breath and begin to read liturgically, as a rite of passage to a different level of meaning. And only then may the contemporary idolization of technique and information be transformed, and the sacred text restored as a living teaching and instruction, for the constant renewal of the self.⁸³

In an account of a personal incident from his university days, Faulconer describes his introduction to such an approach to reading scripture:

Before studying [Genesis] with Professor Goldman, I memorized doctrines and scanned scriptures for evidence that would support the doctrines I believed. After studying with him I realized that although that kind of scripture study is essential, our learning is vastly improved if it is done against the background of close reading I learned from Professor Goldman...

The heart of [this approach] is asking questions—asking questions of the scriptures and letting them answer, asking questions about details rather than about abstractions and generalities. What does "dominion" mean? Why does Adam say what he does in the way that he does? What does the form of his answer to God suggest? Why is the story told in this order rather than another? Often Professor Goldman's questions had no single, correct answer. Even when he had a plausible answer to one of his questions, he never assumed that he knew everything he needed to know. He might ask the same questions today that he asked a year ago and criticize his previous answers. He focused on questioning in a productive way rather than on merely answering, but asking those questions naturally led to ideas I had never considered. It surprised me how often such questions about details led to insights into my life.

78 G. K. Chesterton, William Blake, p. 210.

79 A. J. Birch, King.

80 A. H. King, Joseph, p. 288.

81 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 29 January 1843, pp. 276-277.

82 Ibid., December 1835, p. 96.

83 Cited in M. Fishbane, Spirituality, p. 12.

As I imitated Professor Goldman, I began to wonder if my understanding of the Gospel was adequate. That too became a source for questions. To see whether the scriptures would refine my understanding. I began to ask questions like, I have always heard that such and such is true and I have always believed that this passage of scripture teaches that doctrine. Does it? Such questioning often showed me that my knowledge of the scriptures was shallow, that the verses I had used as supports for doctrines I believed not only supported those doctrines but also had a great deal to teach me.⁸⁴

As a result of his experiences, Faulconer gives the following guidance to scripture readers:

Assume that the scriptures mean exactly what they say and, more important, assume that we do not already know what they say. If we assume that we already know what the scriptures say, then they cannot continue to teach us. If we assume that they mean something other than what they say, then we run the risk of substituting our own thoughts for what we read rather than learning what they have to teach us... [A]ssume that each aspect of whatever passage we are looking at is significant and ask about that significance. To assume that some things are significant and others are not is to assume, from the beginning, that we already know what scripture means. Some things may turn out to be irrelevant, but we cannot know that until we are done.⁸⁵

Similarly, Wright comments that if you read in this way:

... the Bible will not let you down. You will be paying attention to it; you won't be sitting in judgment over it. But you won't come with a preconceived notion of what this or that passage has to mean if it is to be true. You will discover that God is speaking new truth through it. I take it as a method in my biblical studies that if I turn a corner and find myself saying, "Well, in that case, that verse is wrong" that I must have turned a wrong corner somewhere. But that does not mean that I impose what I think is right on to that bit of the Bible. It means, instead, that I am forced to live with that text uncomfortably, sometimes literally for years (this is sober autobiography), until suddenly I come round a different corner and that verse makes a lot of sense; sense that I wouldn't have got if I had insisted on imposing my initial view on it from day one.⁸⁶

By way of contrast, Kugel notes the "subtle shift in tone" that has come with "the emphasis on reading the Bible [solely] in human terms and in its historical context" without the counterbalance provided by traditional forms of scripture reading:

As modern biblical scholarship gained momentum, studying the Bible itself was joined with, and eventually overshadowed by, studying the historical reality behind the text (including how the text itself came to be). In the process, learning from the Bible gradually turned into learning about it. Such a shift might seem slight at first, but ultimately it changed a great deal. The person who seeks to learn from the Bible is smaller than the text; he crouches at its feet, waiting for its instruction or insights. Learning about the text generates the opposite posture. The text moves from subject to object; it no longer speaks but is spoken about, analyzed, and acted upon. The insights are now all the reader's, not the text's, and anyone can see the results. This difference in tone, as much as any specific insight or theory, is what has created the great gap between the Bible of ancient interpreters and that of modern scholars.⁸⁷

P-15 About the abandonment of ancient modes of biblical interpretation, Kugel observes:

What [modern exegetes] generally share (although there are, of course, exceptions) is a profound discomfort with the actual interpretations that the ancients came up with—these have little or no place in the way Scripture is to be expounded today. Midrash, allegory, typology—what for? But the style of interpretation thus being rejected is precisely the one that characterizes the numerous interpretations of Old Testament texts by Jesus, Paul, and others in the New Testament, as well as by the succeeding generations of the founders of Christianity....

Ancient interpretive methods may sometimes appear artificial, but this hardly means that abandoning them guarantees unbiased interpretation... At times, [modern] interpretations are scarcely less forced than those of ancient midrashists (and usually far less clever).⁸⁸

84 J. E. Faulconer, Study, pp. 6-7.

85 Ibid., pp. 11-12.

86 N. T. Wright, Authoritative. See Berlin's seven principles of biblical hermeneutics for a detailed description of such an approach to scriptural understanding (A. Berlin, Search).

87 J. L. Kugel, How to Read, p. 666.

88 Ibid., pp. 674, 676; cf. M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 29-30.

- P-16 Since at least the time of Norman Vincent Peale's The Power of Positive Thinking (1952), a parade of quasi-religious books have, in the words of Prothero:

... preached therapy more than theology, happiness rather than salvation. Then, as today, debating (or even discussing) religious doctrines was considered ill-mannered, a violation of the cherished civic ideal of tolerance, so it was difficult for children to learn or for adults to articulate what set their religious traditions apart from others.⁸⁹

Current interest in contemplative practice has caused "spiritual but not religious" folks to rediscover such neglected resources inside Christianity and Judaism as centering prayer and Kabbalah. But it has also led them to Buddhism, Hinduism, Taoism, and other Asian religions in search of various forms of meditation, yoga, and tai chi... Here too, however, the trend is toward religion stripped down to its "essentials"—essentials that in this case are confined almost entirely to the experiential or moral dimensions. This development is well advanced in the American Buddhist community, where some have argued that Buddhism can get along just fine without such staples as karma and reincarnation. "Buddhism Without Beliefs," as this movement has been called, aims to distill the Buddhist life down to nothing more than one's favorite sitting or chanting practice, and then to put that practice at the service of such American preoccupations as happiness.

The tendency to shirk from doctrine is particularly pronounced in the "multi-religious America" camp. Here even the minimal monotheism of the Judeo-Christian-Islamic model must be sacrificed since many Buddhists don't believe in God and many Hindus believe in more than one. The only common ground here seems to be tolerance itself. When pluralists gather for interreligious dialogue, their discussions always seem to circle back to ethics... [without] a whisper of theology.⁹⁰

- P-17 Also of relevance is the significant effort currently being devoted to The BYU New Testament Commentary:

Approved by the BYU administration and its Board of Trustees..., the project foresees the production of fifteen volumes of commentary on individual books of the New Testament.

The public announcement reads as follows:

The Board of Trustees of Brigham Young University has recently approved the publication of a multi-volume commentary on the New Testament. A broad-based team of Latter-day Saint scholars have joined forces to produce the set. Planned to take about ten years to complete, this fifteen-volume series will combine the best ancient linguistic and historical evidence with Mormon interests and doctrinal perspectives.... This commentary will be the first to combine scholarly expertise and Mormon scripture. Each book in the New Testament will be examined word by word. In addition, relationships between the New Testament and the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants will be carefully examined.

The commentary will be not just another scholarly commentary, but particularly a Latter-day Saint Commentary. It will focus on passages of particular interest to Latter-day Saints; it will draw from all the LDS standard works; and we strive for it to be written with inspiration... [Part] of our purposes is to demonstrate the proper treatment of text transmission and translation—that is, to make use of what seems to be correct and offer alternate meaning for what seems to be incorrect. Each volume will contain substantial introductory and contextual material where questions of provenance, setting, authorship, intent and purpose will be addressed. Discussion of manuscript tradition and transcription will also be considered, as well as thematic or topical questions contained in the text being examined. The actual commentary will address the text as found in the King James Version. Pericopes, that is sections of the text divided into similarly-themed verses, generally no more than a dozen at a time, sometimes fewer, will be treated verse by verse, and word by word. Analytical commentary will be offered in terms of linguistic analysis, including alternative translation possibilities based on literal Greek meanings of words, historical background, and theological significance. Where issues of textual transmission arise, consultation will be made of Greek texts unavailable to the King James translators, some newly discovered and of early date, others the synthetic product of 400 years of additional research, textual comparison, and new discovery. Sources for linguistic considerations will include not only well known recent translations of the New Testament, but importantly the Joseph Smith Translation in what places

89 S. Prothero, Literacy, p. 113; cf. C. Lasch, Revolt, pp. 216ff.

90 S. Prothero, Literacy, p. 117

New Testament passages are addressed. Standard scholarly commentaries such as the Anchor Bible Commentary or Sacra Pagina, as well as many scholarly monographs and articles, will also be consulted. When Greek is cited it will be transliterated into the Roman alphabet used in English so as to be accessible to our readers. In this vein, both Greek and Latin references will be given in the original language and in a translated English form. For purposes of interpretation and comment, consideration will be given to writings spanning two thousand years from Apostolic Fathers and pre-Nicene Christian authors to the important truths revealed in latter-day scripture and the teachings of leaders of the Restoration from the time of Joseph Smith to the present day. Historical background, as it pertains to particular New Testament passages, will provide detailed discussion of the world at the time of Christ from cultural, political, and legal perspectives.

A Board of five editors, all senior and experienced BYU professors, directs the project.⁹¹

P-18 Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote that:

... gaining knowledge and becoming more Christlike “are two aspects of a single process.”⁹² This process is part of being “valiant” in our testimony of Jesus. Thus, while we are saved no faster than we gain a certain type of knowledge,⁹³ it is also the case, as Richard Bushman has observed,⁹⁴ that we will gain knowledge no faster than we are saved... [B]ehaving and knowing are inseparably linked.⁹⁵

P-19 Similarly, C. S. Lewis writes:

Most of us [should be] less urgently concerned with the Pauline question [of why it is theoretically impossible for us to perfectly obey the moral law] than with [the practical implications of] William Law’s simple statement: “if you will here stop and ask yourselves why you are not as pious as the primitive Christians were, your own heart will tell you that it is neither through ignorance nor inability, but purely because you never thoroughly intended it.”⁹⁶

Kugel echoes the same spirit from a Jewish perspective:

In Judaism, Scripture is ultimately valued not as history, nor as theology, nor even as the great, self-sufficient corpus of divine utterances—all that God had ever wished to say to man. Judaism is not fundamentalism, nor even Protestantism. What Scripture is, and always has been, in Judaism is the beginning of a manual entitled To Serve God, a manual whose trajectory has always led from the prophet to the interpreter and from the divine to the merely human. To put the matter in, I admit, rather shocking terms: since in Judaism it is not the words of Scripture themselves that are ultimately supreme, but the service of God (the “standing up close”) that they enjoin, then to suggest that everything hangs on Scripture might well be described as a form of fetishism or idolatry, that is, a mistaking of the message for its Sender and the turning of its words into idols of wood or stone... For Judaism, the crucial element has always been the imperative that Scripture’s very existence embodies... the basic divine commandment reflected in Deuteronomy’s exhortation “to serve the Lord your God with all your heart and all your soul”⁹⁷ and similar pronouncements. To flesh out this commandment was the purpose of all of Scripture and all later interpretation. With such a purpose foremost, the Bible’s original component texts easily lent themselves to flexible reinterpretation.... The Bible, it seems to me, remains the most accessible... basic program for the service of God in daily life....

We have seen that, since ancient times, the trajectory of being God’s servants inevitably led from words of God to merely human words, and that the latter have had a great deal to do with the essence of the Bible, turning all of it into a manual of “what to do.” So, while I could not be involved

91 J. F. Hall, Translated Correctly.

92 C. T. Warner, Truth, p. 1490.

93 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 10 April 1842, p. 217; cf. Alma 12:30.

94 R. L. Bushman, Faithful History, p. 18.

95 N. A. Maxwell, Inexhaustible, pp. 212–213. See also A. S. Miller, Atonement and Testimony.

96 C. S. Lewis, Pain, p. 59. See W. Law, Serious Call, 2, p. 57. On the other hand, one might also admire those who, in an artless and unconscious manner, simply do good out of their very nature—or even out of a spontaneous burst of repentance, as in the delightful French Christmas story La Pastorale des Santons de Provence. There it was said of the miserly Roustido, following an sudden and uncharacteristic act of kindness inspired by the presence of the Christ child and His Mother: “Il venait de gagner le paradis sans le faire exprès” (= “He had just won a spot for himself in Paradise without knowing it.”) (Y. Audouard, Pastorale, p. 76).

97 Deuteronomy 10:12.

in a religion that was entirely a human artifact, it would, in theory at least, be enough for me if God said what He is reported to have said in Exodus and Deuteronomy: "Do you want to come close to Me? Then do My bidding, become My employees." The fleshing out of that primal commandment takes place in Scripture and outside of Scripture, and it is all one sacred precinct; indeed, the divine presence suffuses every part of it.⁹⁸

The idea of the primacy of service must, of course, be tempered by the knowledge that God's call to action "always comes through the filter of human understanding, and God asks for a creative, loving response on our part, not mere compliance." McLachlan compares it to the call one might see in the face of a loved one. "Whether and how I will respond" to such an encounter "is up to me."⁹⁹

Augustine phrased his approach to this issue in terms of a balance:

No man has a right to lead such a life of contemplation as to forget in his own case the service due to his neighbor; nor has any man a right to be so immersed in active life as to neglect the contemplation of God.¹⁰⁰

However, I resonate more strongly with the view of Elder Bruce C. Hafen who argues that "a 'balanced' approach simply won't be enough when we encounter the most demanding experiences of our spiritual growth. When we find ourselves stretched to our extremities, we need a new level from which to draw more deeply on our Hebrew roots than our Greek roots."¹⁰¹ To adopt such a perspective is not to devalue the life of the mind in religion, but rather, with C. S. Lewis, to reject the idea:

... which lingers in the mind of some modern people that cultural activities are in their own right spiritual and meritorious—as though scholars and poets were intrinsically more pleasing to God than scavengers and bootblacks... The work of a Beethoven and the work of a charwoman become spiritual on precisely the same condition, that of being offered to God, of being done humbly "as to the Lord."¹⁰²

P-20 As an example, Prothero cites a statement by Eisenhower to a Soviet official in a December 1952 meeting that "our form of government has no sense unless it is founded in a deeply felt religious faith, and I don't care what it is."¹⁰³ The same fierce loyalty to an abstract "idea" of God divorced from any particulars is expressed more prosaically in an off-the-street comment made to a sociologist by a high-school student in the Middle West, "Yeah, we smoke dope all over, in our cars, walking around before class, anytime, but that doesn't mean we don't believe in God or that we'll let anybody put God down."¹⁰⁴

P-21 Efforts have been made to bridge this gap through books that explain the meaning of specific symbols used in scripture and temple worship. However, most of us not only struggle with the meaning of individual concepts and symbols, but also—and perhaps more crucially—in understanding how these concepts and symbols fit together as a whole. Scriptural and temple symbols and concepts are best understood, not in isolation, but within the full context of teachings to which they belong.

In this respect, Chesterton has compared our position to that of a "sailor who awakens from a deep sleep and discovers treasure strewn about, relics from a civilization he can barely remember. One by one he picks up the relics—gold coins, a compass, fine clothing—and tries to discern their meaning."¹⁰⁵ But the essential meaning is to be found not so much in the individual relics as in a grasp of the milieu that produced them.

98 J. L. Kugel, How to Read, pp. 685, 687, 689. The primacy of good deeds vs. Torah study was a matter of debate among the Jewish Sages. For example, according to one among them, the first question that will be addressed to man on Judgment Day is "Have you dealt honestly in the conduct of your business?" and the second question will be "Did you set fixed times for the study of Torah?" Another sage, however, stated: "Man's trial will begin with an examination of his study of Torah" (A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, p. 206).

99 J. McLachlan, Reply, p. 209.

100 Augustine, City, 19:19, p. 413; cf. Pirke Avot: "Anyone whose wisdom exceeds his good deeds... [is like] a tree whose branches are numerous but whose roots are few; then the wind comes and uproots it and turns it upside down" (M. Lieber, Pirkei Avos, 3:22, p. 201).

101 B. C. Hafen, Reason, pp. 27-28. See S. Kierkegaard, Fear, pp. 20, 79-100, 189-192: "the teleological suspension of the ethical"; cf. discussion in R. Coles, Secular Mind, pp. 15-20.

102 C. S. Lewis, Learning, pp. 55-56.

103 S. Prothero, Literacy, p. 113.

104 P. Fussell, Class, p. 150.

105 P. Yancey, introduction to G. K. Chesterton, Orthodoxy, p. xiii.

A Revelation given to Joseph the Revelator June 1830
The words of God which he spake unto Moses at a time when Moses was caught up into an exceeding high Mountain & he saw God face to face & he talked with him & the glory of God was upon Moses therefore Moses could endure his presence & God spake unto Moses saying Behold I am the Lord God Almighty & endless is my name for I am without beginning of days or end of years & it shall not endless & behold thou art now Son of Man for I have seen thee & thou art manhood of mine hands but not all for my works are without end & also more to do for they will cease wherefore no man can behold all my works except he be made like unto me & no man can behold all my glory & after words remain in my Moses & I had a work for thee Moses my Son & thou art in similitude to me only begotten & mine only begotten which he for he is full of grace & truth but thou art in similitude to me & all things are present with me for I know them all & now behold this one thing I show unto thee Moses my Son for thou art in the world & now I show it thee And it came to pass that Moses looked & beheld the world upon which he was created & Moses beheld the world & the ends thereof & all the children of men which was & which was created of the same he greatly marvelled & wondered & he saw the Lord God with him from Moses that his glory was not upon Moses & Moses was left unto himself & as he was left unto himself he fell unto the Earth & it came to pass that at that time for the space of many hours before Moses did again receive his natural strength & raised up & he said unto himself one Son for this once I know that I am nothing which thing I never had supposed but now mine eyes were opened but not mine eyes for mine eyes could not have beheld for I should have withered & died in his presence but his glory was upon me & I would his full Son I was transfigured before him and now it came to pass that when Moses had said these words he beheld Satan came & tempted him saying Moses Son of man worship me And it came to pass that Moses looked upon Satan & said What art thou Son he beheld I am a Son of God in the similitude of his only begotten & where is thy glory that I should worship thee Son he beheld I could not look upon God except his glory should come upon me & I was transfigured before him but I was made upon thee in the natural man if not so surely blessed be the name of my God for his Spirit hath not ~~been~~ altogether withdrawn from me for thou art where is thy glory for it is blasphemy unto me & I can judge he tempted thee & God for God said unto me Worship God for his only child thou art one At that time Satan declined me not for God said unto thou art after the similitude of mine only begotten & he also gave me his commandment when he called unto me out of the burning bush saying
Call upon God in the name of mine only begotten & worship me And again Moses said I will not cease to call upon God I have other things to inquire of him for his glory has been upon me & it is glory unto me & I can judge he tempted him & thou depart hence Satan And now when Moses said these words Satan could with a loud voice depart upon the Earth

FIGURE 0-1. Old Testament Manuscript 1, Page 1, 1830

A revelation given to Joseph the Revelator, June 1830. This page, in Oliver Cowdery's handwriting, records the text of Moses 1:1-19. The account of this marvelous vision seems to have been dictated by the Prophet "without the slightest contemplation, hesitation, or uncertainty" (K. P. Jackson, New Discoveries, p. 154).

INTRODUCTION

The Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible.....	1
A Detailed Look at the JST Old Testament	3
JST Genesis and the Book of Moses.....	8
Official Status of the King James Version and the JST.....	9
About This Book	10
Arrangement of the Text and Illustrations	12
Sources and Citations.....	13
On the Use of Ancient Texts.....	14
Endnotes	19

The Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible

MANY new editions of the Bible appeared in America between 1777 and 1830. However, the Joseph Smith Translation (JST) was unique in that both the commission to translate and the means of performing the translation were the result of revelation from God.¹ Kent P. Jackson briefly relates the history as follows:

Not long after the Church was organized in the spring of 1830, Joseph Smith began a careful reading of the Bible to revise and make corrections in accordance with the inspiration he would receive. From that labor came the revelation of much truth and the restoration of many of the “precious things” that Nephi had foretold would be taken from the Bible.² In June 1830, the first revealed addition to the Bible was set to writing. Over the next three years, the Prophet made inspired changes, additions, and corrections while he filled his calling to provide a more correct translation for the Church. Collectively, these are called the “Joseph Smith Translation.”

The first revelation of the Joseph Smith Translation is what we now have as Moses 1 in the Pearl of Great Price—the preface to the book of Genesis. Beginning with Genesis 1:1, the Prophet apparently had the Bible before him and read aloud from it until he felt impressed to dictate a change in the wording. If no change were required, he read the text as it stood. Thus dictating the text to his scribes, he progressed to Genesis 24, at which point he set aside the Old Testament as he was instructed in a revelation on March 7, 1831.³ The following day, he began revising the New Testament.⁴ When he completed John 5 in February 1832, he ceased dictating the text in full to his scribes and began using an abbreviated notation system. From that time on, it appears that he read the verses from the Bible, marked in it the words or passages that needed to be corrected, and dictated only the changes to his scribes, who recorded them on the manuscript.

Following the completion of the New Testament in February 1833, Joseph Smith returned to his work on the Old Testament. He soon shifted to the abbreviated notation system for that manuscript also... [During this last phase of Old Testament translation] he dictated only the replacement words, as he had done earlier with the New Testament. At the end of the Old Testament manuscript, after the book of Malachi, the scribe wrote the following words:

1 P. L. Barlow, Bible, pp. 46-47.

2 1 Nephi 13:23-29.

3 See D&C 45:60-62. See Endnote 0-1, p. 19.

4 See Endnote 0-2, p. 19.

“Finished on the 2nd day of July 1833.” That same day the Prophet and his counselors—Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, both of whom had served as scribes for the new translation—wrote to Church members in Missouri and told them, “We this day finished the translating of the Scriptures, for which we returned gratitude to our Heavenly Father”⁵

Joseph and his scribes had been carrying many other responsibilities during this period of rapid Church expansion from New York to Ohio and Missouri. Therefore, one can easily imagine what relief they must have felt as they completed this phase of the work. Unfortunately, though the JST had progressed to the point where the Prophet was planning its publication, continual lack of time and means prevented it from appearing in its entirety during his lifetime.⁶

In August 1832, the first extract from JST Genesis, Moses 7, was published in the Church’s newspaper, The Evening and Morning Star. Publication continued with additional extracts from the new translation⁷ in March and April 1833.⁸ Two years later, several verses from Moses 2-5 were used in the publication of the Lectures on Faith in the 1835 Doctrine and Covenants.⁹ Finally, Moses 1 appeared in the January 16, 1843 edition of the Times and Seasons. Drawing on the earlier newspaper publications, Elder Franklin D. Richards included portions of Moses 1-8 in the first edition of the Pearl of Great Price, printed in England in 1851. However, subsequent editions of the Pearl of Great Price relied on the version of Moses 1-8 that had been published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (RLDS, now officially named the Community of Christ).

The Prophet’s wife, Emma, kept the original JST manuscripts until 1866, when they were given to the RLDS Church. Based on a review of original manuscripts by an RLDS publication committee, the “Inspired Version” (I.V.) of the Bible first appeared in 1867. In 1944, the RLDS Church brought out a carefully prepared “new corrected edition.” However, because LDS scholars had not yet had an opportunity to compare the I.V. to the original manuscripts, its initial acceptance by Church members was limited.¹⁰ An exhaustive study by Brigham Young University (BYU) religion professor Robert J. Matthews was published in 1975.¹¹ He established that the 1944 and subsequent editions of the “Inspired Version,” notwithstanding their shortcomings, constituted a faithful rendering of the work of the Prophet Joseph Smith and his scribes—insofar as the manuscripts were then understood.¹²

With painstaking effort over a period of eight years, and with the generous cooperation of the Community of Christ, a facsimile transcription of all the original manuscripts of the JST was at last published in 2004.¹³ A detailed study of the text of the portions of the JST relating to the book of Moses appeared in 2005.¹⁴ Taken together, these studies allow us to see the process and results of translation with greater clarity than ever before.¹⁵

5 K. P. Jackson, Cooperstown Bible, pp. 59-60. See J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 2 July 1833, 1:368.

6 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 391. See Endnote 0-3, p. 19.

7 Moses 6:43-68, 5:1-16, and 8:13-30.

8 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 14.

9 See Endnote 0-4, p. 19.

10 T. E. Sherry, Changing.

11 For additional background on Matthews’ work, see R. L. Huntington et al., Robert J. Matthews; B. M. Hauglid et al., Community of Christ.

12 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, pp. 200-201. See also K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, pp. 20-33.

13 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts. For additional background, see R. L. McConkie, Miracle.

14 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses.

15 See Endnote 0-5, p. 19.

Scripture Reference	Date	Place	Scribe	Manuscript Reference
Moses 1; Community of Christ D&C 22	June 1830	Fayette, NY or Harmony, PA	Oliver Cowdery	OT1-1, line 1 to OT1-3, line 14
Moses 2:1-5:43; I.V. Genesis 1:1-5:28; Genesis 1:1-4:18	Between June and October 21, 1830	Harmony, PA and Fayette, NY	Oliver Cowdery	OT1-3, line 15 to OT1-10, line 5
Moses 5:43-5:51; I.V. Genesis 5:29-5:37; Genesis 4:18-24	October 21, 1830	Fayette, NY	John Whitmer	OT1-10, lines 6 to 23
Moses 5:52-6:18; I.V. Genesis 5:38-6:16; Genesis 4:25-5:11	November 30, 1830	Fayette, NY	John Whitmer	OT1-10, line 24 to OT1-11, line 40
Moses 6:19-6:52; I.V. Genesis 6:17-6:53; Genesis 5:12-21	December 1, 1830	Fayette, NY	Emma Smith	OT1-11, line 41 to OT1-14, line 1
Moses 6:52-7:1; I.V. Genesis 6:53-7:1	Between December 1 and December 10, 1830	Fayette, NY	John Whitmer	OT1-14, line 1 to OT1-15, line 16
Moses 7:2-7:69; I.V. Genesis 7:2-7:78	Ca. December 10 and 31, 1830	Fayette, NY	Sidney Rigdon	OT1-15, line 16 to OT1-19, line 34
Moses 8:1-8:30; I.V. Genesis 7:78-24:42; Genesis 5:22-24:41	Probably between February 1 and March 7, 1831	Probably in Kirtland, OH	Sidney Rigdon	OT1-19, line 35, OT1-61, line 5
I.V. Genesis 24:42-Nehemiah 10:30; Genesis 24:41-Nehemiah 10:30	July 20-31, 1832 to July 2, 1833	Hiram and Kirtland, OH	Frederick G. Williams	OT2-59, line 1 to OT2-81, line 20
Nehemiah 11-Psalms 10	Between late July 1832 and July 2, 1833	Kirtland, OH	Joseph Smith	OT2-81, line 21 to OT2-83, line 32
Psalms 11-Malachi	Between late July 1832 and July 2, 1833	Kirtland, OH	Frederick G. Williams	OT2-83, line 33 to OT2-119, line 5

FIGURE 0-2. Time Sequence of the Joseph Smith Translation of the Old Testament¹⁶

A Detailed Look at the JST Old Testament

A chart describing the circumstances of the JST additions and revisions to various portions of the Old Testament is shown above. It shows only the time of original translation. Subsequent Old Testament revisions were extensive but generally minor in substance.

Overall, 3,410 verses in the printed editions of JST differ in textual construction from the King James Version (KJV), using the numbering of the I.V. as the basis for comparison.¹⁷ Of the total of 1,289 verses changed in the Old Testament, 25 correspond to the additions of Moses 1, and 662 occur in Genesis.¹⁸ Hence, more than half of the changed verses in the JST Old Testament and 20% of those in the entire JST Bible are contained in Moses 1 and Genesis, with the most extensive modifications occurring in Genesis 1-24. As a proportion of page count, changes in Genesis occur four times more frequently than in the New Testament, and twenty-one times more frequently than in the rest of the Old Testament. The changes in Genesis are not only more numerous, but also more significant in the degree of doctrinal and historical expansion.

¹⁶ Excerpted from S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 57-59; R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 96. From 8 March 1831 to sometime between 20-31 July 1832, the translation of the New Testament took place.

¹⁷ See Endnote 0-6, p. 19.

¹⁸ R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 424.

Certainly the importance of the early Genesis chapters justifies the proportionately greater time and attention they received. However, the JST translation schedule may also provide a clue to the reason why the first half of Genesis contained the overwhelming share of the Prophet's modifications. The original version of the translation of JST Genesis through chapter 24 was performed over the course of five to nine months.¹⁹ These chapters contained very detailed revisions and rich prophetic additions to the original Genesis text. Work on the Old Testament was interrupted by first phase of New Testament translation, which began on 8 March 1831. By the time the Old Testament translation was resumed sixteen months later, the Prophet had stopped the practice of writing out the verses in full and instead adopted an abbreviated notation system he had developed for the New Testament. As Howard notes, this naturally led to fewer and briefer revisions.²⁰ Thus, it is no surprise that the first manuscript of the remainder of Genesis through the end of Malachi was completed at a much faster pace than the first half of Genesis.

None of this, however, ultimately changes the general conclusion that Genesis 1-24 was a priority in the overall translation process. Though we cannot know how much of Joseph Smith's daily schedule the translation occupied during each of its phases, it seems clear that Genesis 1-24—the first 1% of the Bible, corresponding to 24% of the overall three-year translation period—received a significantly more generous share of the Prophet's time and attention than did the remaining 99%.

What important things could Joseph Smith have learned from translating Genesis 1-24? To begin with, the story of Enoch and his righteous city would have had pressing relevance to the mission of the Church, as the Prophet worked to help the Saints understand the law of consecration and to establish Zion in Missouri. Thus, it is no coincidence that this account was first published in 1832 and 1833.²¹ However, we should not allow the salience of these immediate events to overshadow the fact that the first JST Genesis chapters also relate the stories of other patriarchs, especially Adam, Noah, Melchizedek, and Abraham. In consideration of this fact, and other evidence from revelations and teachings of this period, I have been led to believe that a very significant aspect of the translation process as a whole was the early tutoring in temple-related doctrines received by Joseph Smith as he revised and expanded Genesis 1-24, in conjunction with his later translation of significant passages in the New Testament and, for example, the Old Testament stories of Moses and Elijah.²² I believe that the book of Moses throws much more light on temple worship than has been previously supposed, and that it goes far beyond the obvious passages on the Creation, the Fall, and early events in the lives of Adam and Eve.

A corollary, in making this argument, is that a detailed understanding of the covenants and sequences of blessings associated with current forms of LDS temple worship were revealed to Joseph Smith several years before he began to teach them in plainness to the Saints in Nauvoo.²³ It has been generally supposed that in Kirtland the Prophet knew only a little about temple ordinances, and taught all of what he then knew to the Saints; and that when he got to Nauvoo the rest was revealed to him, and so he taught them something more. However, I think such a conclusion is mistaken. My study of the book of Moses and others of the initial revelations and teachings of Joseph Smith has convinced me that he knew early 19 Starting somewhere between June and October 1830 and ending 7 March 1831.

20 R. P. Howard, Restoration 1969, pp. 92-93. See also R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 80. See Endnote 0-7, p. 20.

21 K. Muhlestein, Flow, pp. 52-62.

22 J. M. Bradshaw, Temple Themes.

23 Cf. Matthew 17:9.

FIGURE 0-3. Go With Me to Cumorah, 1997
Liz Lemon Swindle, 1953-

*Wherefore I give unto you that ye may now translate it, that ye may be prepared for the things to come.*¹ The process of translating the Bible laid the foundation for many of the revelations of Joseph Smith.²

1 D&C 45:61.

2 R. J. Matthews, Role of JST.

on much more about these matters than he taught publicly, contradicting the view of those who consider the temple ordinances a late invention.²⁴ Indeed, in some cases, we know that the Prophet deliberately delayed the publication of early temple-related revelations connected with his work on the JST until the later Nauvoo period. For example, in Bachman's groundbreaking studies on the origins of D&C 132, which has not only to do with celestial marriage but also the whole context of temple work, he convincingly argued that nearly all of that section was revealed to the Prophet as he worked on the JST. This was more than a decade previous to 1843, when the revelation was first recorded.²⁵ Likewise, Joseph Smith waited until 1843 to publish the first chapter of the book of Moses. In that revelation, he had been specifically commanded not to show it "unto any except them that believe until I command you."²⁶ Some of what the Prophet learned as he worked on the JST and other translation projects²⁷ may have never been put to writing.²⁸ Brigham Young is remembered 24 See, e.g., the overviews of Moses 1 (p. 37) and Moses 5 (pp. 341-350) as well as Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519. See Endnote 0-8, p. 20.

25 D. W. Bachman, New Light.

26 Moses 1:42.

27 See, e.g., Book of Abraham, Facsimile 2, explanations of figures 8-22.

28 See Endnote 0-9, p. 20.

FIGURES 0-4 AND 0-5.
Moses Indignant at the Golden Calf, ca. 1800
Rock Sculpted with Ark and Annunciation, 1827
 William Blake, 1757-1827

SEE COLOR PLATES 0-4 AND 0-5.

*And in a day when the children of men shall esteem my words as naught and take many of them from the book which thou shalt write, behold, I will raise up another like unto thee; and they shall be had again among the children of men.*¹ The illustration on the left depicts Moses with the broken tablets from God at his feet in anger at the Israelites' idolatrous worship.² Note the contrast of "the magnificent angular figure of the indignant Moses with the graceful dancers on the left, behind whom stands Aaron" and the golden calf, upper left.³

Blake saw Moses as a symbol of the iron-hard rationality and repression of the Old Testament law that required redemption through "the power of the creative imagination and the worth of continual artistic labor." Figures of Moses, like other Blake protagonists, are "seen characteristically lifting their arms apart and breaking rocks or books into two, continually dividing material objects as they themselves are divided into various faculties."⁴ In contrast, as shown in the second illustration prepared for Dante's Divine Comedy,⁵ Blake compared the Ark of the Covenant to a "Dove of Peace" and a symbol of liberation. Dante had depicted purgatory as a high mountain with a narrow path leading up to the Garden of Eden, whose climb was necessary to overcome the effects of the Fall of Adam and partake of the Tree of Life. In canto 10, white marble carvings on the wall of the cliff offered examples of the virtue of humility—in this instance, the humility of Mary, the Lord's handmaiden, at the Annunciation, and that of David, the humble Psalmist who, in humble dress, dances before the Lord around the altar of the temple in celebration of the return of the Ark.⁶

Here, these two juxtaposed images are meant to symbolize loss and recovery of 'plain and precious things'⁷ as recounted in the Joseph Smith Translation: On the one hand, JST Exodus 34:1-2 tells why the ordinances of the higher priesthood were generally withheld from the people following Israel's rebellion. On the other hand, JST Genesis affirms the lost truth that Moses and the Patriarchs took part in this holy order, and received the necessary understanding of the laws and ordinances of the Gospel that would allow them to ascend the mountain of the Lord and partake of the Tree of Life.⁸

1 Moses 1:41.

2 Exodus 32:19.

3 M. Butlin, Blake, p. 75.

4 P. Ackroyd, Blake, pp. 183. 184.

5 See Endnote 0-12, p. 21.

6 H. W. Nibley, Drama, p. 18., see D. Alighieri, Commedia.

7 1 Nephi 13:26-40.

8 See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

as stating "that the Prophet before his death [spoke] about going through the translation of the scriptures again and perfecting it upon points of doctrine which the Lord had restrained him from giving in plainness and fulness at the time."²⁹

The extensive nature of the restored prophecies concerning Joseph and his posterity in JST Genesis chapters 44 and 48 leads one to wonder what further revisions could have been made had the Prophet's schedule allowed for more time spent on the translation. For instance, consider the account in Genesis 49 of the patriarchal blessings that Jacob gave to his sons. From the perspective of the JST, this account is important both because of its doctrinal significance and also because the original texts are laden with difficulties for the translator. Yet, despite significant JST additions to the surrounding chapters 48 and 50, Genesis 49 was left disappointingly untouched.³⁰

29 Cited in G. Q. Cannon, Life, pp. 147-148. See Endnote 0-10, p. 21.

30 See Endnote 0-11, p. 21.

Philip Barlow observes that Joseph Smith made six basic types of changes in the JST:

1. The first consists of the long revealed additions that have little or no biblical parallel, such as the visions of Moses and Enoch, and the passage on Melchizedek...³¹
2. A second type, which overlaps other categories, is a “common-sense” change [e.g., Genesis 6:6 “And it repented the Lord that he had made man...” is revised in Moses 8:25 to read: “And it repented Noah, and his heart was pained that the Lord had made man”³²]... God, who is perfect, needs no repentance...
3. A third category is “interpretive additions,” often signaled by the phrase “or in other words,” which the Prophet appended to a passage he wished to clarify...³³
4. “Harmonization” represents a fourth type of change... Smith reconciled passages that seemed to conflict with other passages...³⁴
5. Many changes Smith made are not easily classified; one can observe only that frequently the meaning of a given text has been changed, often idiosyncratically...³⁵
6. The final and by far most common type of change the Prophet made in the Bible includes grammatical improvements, technical clarifications, and modernization of terms...³⁶

It should be noted that the 1828 Phinney Bible used by Joseph Smith often used more contemporary forms of King James words than other Bibles—in fact, Phinney was a more modern text than the one used in the current LDS Bible edition.³⁷ This has sometimes led to confusion in trying to sort out which changes were deliberately made by the Prophet and which simply arose from differences in the edition of the KJV he used.³⁸ Explains Jackson:

It is difficult to say whether the modernized spelling and usage of the Phinney Bible had an influence on the language of the Joseph Smith Translation. In sections of the new translation that have no counterpart in the Bible, both indefinite articles, “a” and “an,” are used before words that begin with a pronounced letter “h.” In passages on the manuscripts that are found in the King James translation, again both articles are found, despite the near-consistent use of “a” in the underlying Phinney Bible. The inconsistency in the manuscripts suggests that this particular modernization was not a high priority for Joseph Smith. But many other changes he made definitely had the effect of making the Bible more understandable for modern readers. The frequent changes to word order and modernizations in language, such as “wot” to “know”—[the manuscript at Exodus 32:1 revises “wot” to “know” with a note that “know” “should be in the place of ‘wot’ in all places”—]“saith” to “said,” “that” and “which” to “who,” and “ye” and “thee” to “you,” show that the language of the Joseph Smith Translation was a more radical break with the tradition of the King James Version than were Phinney’s limited efforts to update the spelling. Even so, those changes were applied inconsistently in the manuscripts, and the best suggestion is that even though the modernization of spelling and word usage was part of the new translation, other objectives were even more important.³⁹

31 Moses ch. 1, 7:20-67; and JST Genesis 14:25-40. See Endnote 0-13, p. 21.

32 Cf. Jeremiah 18:8.

33 E.g., JST Genesis 14:36, Luke 6:29.

34 E.g., Matthew 27:3-8 and Acts 1:18-19; John 1:18 and Exodus 33:11.

35 E.g., Proverbs 18:22; Matthew 2:13, 19; Matthew 8:10.

36 E.g., Matthew 3:4, “meat” changed to “food”; Matthew 6:4 “which: changed to “who”; 2 Corinthians 3:4 “to God-ward” changed to “toward God” (P. L. Barlow, Bible, pp. 51-53). See Endnote 0-14, p. 22.

37 K. P. Jackson, Cooperstown Bible, pp. 55-56.

38 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, pp. 174-175, 393.

39 K. P. Jackson, Cooperstown Bible, pp. 60, 62.

Regarding the completeness of the JST as we have it, Matthews has written:

...the manuscript shows that the Prophet went all the way through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. But it also shows that he did not make all the necessary corrections in one effort. This situation makes it impossible to give a statistical answer to questions about how much of the translation was completed or how much was not completed. What is evident, however, is that any part of the translation might have been further touched upon and improved by additional revelation and emendation by the Prophet.⁴⁰

By 1833, we do know that Joseph felt it was sufficiently complete that preparations for publication could begin.⁴¹

JST Genesis and the Book of Moses

The material in the book of Moses was originally divided into six parts, titled as follows:

- A Revelation given to Joseph the Revelator June 1830 [= Moses 1]⁴²
- A Revelation given to the Elders of the Church of Christ on the first book of Moses ~~given to Joseph the Seer~~ Chapter first [= Moses 2-4]⁴³
- Chapter 2—A Revelation concerning Adam after he had been driven out of the garden of Eden [= Moses 5:1-5:59]⁴⁴
- Capter [sic] third <6th>⁴⁵ the genealogy from Adam to Enoch & plan of salvation &c [= Moses 6:1-6:52]⁴⁶
- Chapter IVth <7th> Enoch prophecy &c [= Moses 7:1-8:12]⁴⁷
- Chapter V <8>th Noahs prophecy of the deluge &c [= Moses 8:13-Genesis 6:22]⁴⁸

The portions of the book of Moses published by Elder Franklin D. Richards in the first version of the Pearl of Great Price were based on excerpts from Joseph Smith's earliest draft of JST Genesis. This was contained in a manuscript now called Old Testament 1 (OT1). Richards' excerpts had been taken from their first publication in the *Evening and Morning Star*⁴⁹ and the *Times and Seasons*⁵⁰ as well as from a no-longer-extant personal handwritten copy of some additional unpublished portions of these revelations. Taken together, these represented about three-fourths of the current content of the book of Moses. The bulk of Joseph Smith's work on a second manuscript (OT2) took place between March 1831 and July 1833, though the Prophet continued to make a few revisions and to prepare the manuscript for printing until his death in 1844. OT2 contained many minor revisions in wording over the earlier draft, though relatively little in the way of substantive prophetic additions.

40 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 215.

41 See Endnote 0-15, p. 23.

42 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 83; cf. p. 591.

43 Ibid., p. 86; cf. p. 595. Muhlestein mistakenly states that this heading applied only to Moses 2-3 (K. Muhlestein, Flow, p. 43), whereas it actually encompasses Moses 4 as well.

44 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 92; cf. p. 602. Muhlestein mistakenly states that this heading appeared just above Moses 4 (K. Muhlestein, Flow, p. 43), when it actually appears just prior to the start of Moses 5.

45 See Endnote 0-16, p. 23.

46 Ibid., p. 608; cf. p. 101.

47 Ibid., p. 615; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, December 1830, 1:133.

48 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 624; cf. p. 111.

49 August 1832 to April 1833.

50 January 1843.

When Elder Orson Pratt revised the Pearl of Great Price in 1878, he completely replaced the previously-used Moses material with a version based on the 1867 RLDS publication of the I.V. Unfortunately, the RLDS publication committee had inadvertently failed to incorporate changes made in the later OT2 manuscript. At the same time, they had included modifications made in the less-reliable versions printed in Church periodicals and had made some idiosyncratic changes of their own. While many of these problems have been corrected in the most recent editions of the I.V., some have unfortunately persisted in publications of the LDS book of Moses. Several other minor changes in text were also made in 1902 by Elder James E. Talmage, under the direction of the First Presidency, and in 1981 when an updated edition of the Pearl of Great Price was published by the Church.⁵¹

Official Status of the King James Version and the JST

The King James Version is the official Bible for English-speaking members of the LDS Church.⁵² Granting that other Bible versions may be more accurate in some respects or easier to read, the KJV is preferred, if for no other reason, because of its lexical and stylistic correspondence to the Book of Mormon and modern-day revelation.⁵³

In 1979 and 1981, the Church first published new editions of the scriptures which contained, along with various study aids, extracts of many (but not all) revisions from the JST.⁵⁴ Elder Boyd K. Packer heralded this publication event as “the most important thing that [the Church has] done in recent generations.”⁵⁵ Although it is not the official Bible of the Church, the JST is seen as an invaluable aid in scripture study and a witness for the calling of the Prophet Joseph Smith.⁵⁶ The JST texts of Genesis 1-8⁵⁷ and Matthew 24⁵⁸ in particular hold a place of special importance in the LDS scriptural canon since they have been wholly incorporated within the Pearl of Great Price.

51 R. J. Matthews, What Is, pp. xxviii, 32, 33, 35, 36. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, pp. 1-52 for details.

52 First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Statement.

53 J. F. McConkie, Revelation, p. 126; D. Packard et al., Feasting, pp. ix-x. See also discussion in P. L. Barlow, Bible, pp. 176-177.

54 For more about the selection process for included excerpts and a useful collection of significant changes not contained in the LDS edition of the Bible, see T. E. Sherry et al., Precious Truths.

55 B. K. Packer, Scriptures, p. 53; cf. B. K. Packer, Errand, p. 160. See Endnote 0-17, p. 23.

56 LDS Bible Dictionary, s.v. Joseph Smith Translation.

57 I.e., Moses 1-8.

58 I. e., Joseph Smith-Matthew.

About This Book

A word of explanation is in order concerning the title of this book: In God's Image and Likeness, a phrase that has implications not only for human nature but also for the form and character of Divinity.⁵⁹ Three dimensions of resemblance between God and man stand out.

First, there is the idea of physical resemblance. While Church doctrine allows for wide differences of opinion regarding the origin of man,⁶⁰ LDS scripture is unequivocal in its teaching that Adam was created “in the image of his [God’s] own body.”⁶¹ The Prophet spoke very plainly about the meaning of these words: “If the veil were rent today and... you would see [God] in all the person, image, fashion, and very form of a man, like yourselves. For Adam was a man formed in his likeness and created in the very fashion and image of God.”⁶²

Although, in our day, such a concept is rare outside of Mormonism, it was well attested in the ancient teachings of Judaism⁶³ and early Christianity.⁶⁴ For example, in an oft-cited story found in Genesis Rabbah 8:10, “Adam’s likeness to God is so exact that Adam must be put to sleep so that the angels might worship the right person... In [Yalqut Shim’oni] 1:20 on Genesis 2:9 the angels exclaim when they notice Adam’s resemblance to God, ‘Are there two powers in heaven?’”⁶⁵ Jewish scholar Jacob Neusner finds it “stunning” that the rabbinical commentators took this idea so literally, averring that even “the angels did not know man from God.” “I cannot imagine,” he says, “a more daring affirmation of humanity.”⁶⁶

Regarding the second dimension, Joseph Smith made it clear that the concepts of “image” and “likeness” applied not only to the physical appearance of Adam and Eve, but also to their spiritual nature which was, in the beginning, “innocent, harmless, and spotless.” After the Fall, they were made to dwell in a mortal world where they could, in the process of time and through “the Atonement of Christ... and obedience in the Gospel,” become sanctified and ultimately “attain to the [full] image, glory, and character of God.”⁶⁷ This aspiration is echoed in ancient rabbinical teachings,⁶⁸ in New Testament passages,⁶⁹ in standard formulations in the Orthodox Church,⁷⁰ as well as among some in the Western tradition.⁷¹ Though admittedly differing in their detailed understanding of such statements, early Christians would have agreed with Joseph Smith in affirming a “double movement” of image and likeness, whereby humans “begin like God and, at the same time, they come to be like Him.”⁷²

59 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, pp. 16-17. See also D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 16-17, 22-25, quoted in Moses 2 Gleanings, pp. 122-124.

60 J. L. Sorenson, Origin, p. 1053.

61 Moses 6:9; cf. Targum Yerushalmi: “in the likeness of the presence of the Lord” (J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos).

62 J. Smith, Jr., 7 April 1844, in S. Larson, King Follett, p. 200. See Endnote 2-28, p. 130. Note, however: “The sense in which the Father’s body is like a human body must be qualified” (B. Ostler, Attributes, p. 352). “Latter-day Saints affirm only that the Father has a body, not that His body has Him” (C. L. Blomberg et al., Divide, p. 88). See Commentary 1:6-g, p. 48 and Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537 for a discussion of philosophical and scientific issues.

63 See, e.g., M. S. Smith, Monotheism, pp. 86-93; E. J. Hamori, Embodied God.

64 See, e.g., D. L. Paulsen, Embodiment. One group of fourth-century desert monks became so incensed at Theophilus of Alexandria’s assertions of God’s incorporeality that they rioted and threatened to kill him. In response, he wrote a letter telling them to continue believing “a literal reading of Scripture, that God had bodily parts” (K. A. Shirts, Resurrection, citing E. A. Clark, New Perspectives, p. 147).

65 P. B. Munoa, Four Powers, p. 101.

66 J. Neusner, Confronting, p. 63. See also D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 16-17. Note the “individual’s close identification with God” in the rabbinical idea that He will “stroll with the righteous in the Garden of Eden in time to come. The righteous will be frightened in His presence, and the Holy and Blessed One will say, ‘Why are you frightened of Me? I am just like you’” (Sifra Behukotai 111b, cited in A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, p. 192).

67 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 July 1843, p. 231, punctuation modernized, bracketed word added for clarification; cf. T. G. Madsen, LDS View, p. 105; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings 2007, p. 52.

68 See, e.g., A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 192-193.

69 E.g., Romans 8:14-19; 2 Peter 1:3-4.

70 See Endnote 0-18, p. 23.

71 See Endnote 0-19, p. 23. See also Figure E2-1, p. 517.

72 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 10; cf. Moses 4:28; Irenaeus, Heresies, 5:6:1, pp. 531-532. See Endnote 0-20, p. 23.

FIGURE 0-6. First Parents, 2005
Jay Bryant Ward, 1971-

SEE FIGURE P-1.

*And Adam... begat a son in his own likeness, after his own image.*¹ In deliberate parallel, this verse portrays the resemblance of a child to his mortal parents with the same words that described the relationship of Adam and Eve to God.

We are left to speculate about the identity of the child depicted in this illustration. Is it their firstborn son or daughter?² If so, what were the feelings of their heart, knowing as they did the opportunities and difficulties that would befall their posterity because of their choice in Eden? Is the baby Cain—or Abel?³ What parent fully comprehends how fragile and unpredictable may be the life of a child? At such a moment of high hopes, who could have foreseen the sad fates of these two brothers?⁴ Or perhaps the child is Seth, appointed to carry a righteous line forward, in contrast to the seemingly universal rebellion of their other children.⁵

Jay Bryant Ward is a native of Idaho Falls, Idaho. The painting was commissioned for the cover of the January 2006 Ensign magazine. Admitting that the subject was “a bit intimidating,” he focused on “trying to convey the warmth and magic of... a new child.”⁶

- 1 Moses 6:10.
- 2 Moses 5:2
- 3 Moses 5:16-17.
- 4 See Moses 5 Gleanings, p. 405.
- 5 Moses 6:1-2; cf. 5:13ff.
- 6 J. B. Ward, News.

Ancient and modern revelation describe a third dimension of resemblance between God and man: that of parenthood. Jesus repeatedly used terms “Father”⁷³ and “Abba”⁷⁴ as He taught and prayed. Paul declared that “we are the offspring of God,”⁷⁵ and other scriptures clearly affirm a likeness between the role of “human fathers” and that of God as “the Father of our spirits.”⁷⁶ The parallel between the fatherhood of man and that of God is further reinforced when Seth is described as being “in [Adam’s] own likeness, after his own image”⁷⁷ Although, admittedly, the process by which the spirits of mankind come into being has not been revealed—and moreover conceding that there is some aspect of the spirit’s existence that is without beginning⁷⁸—LDS doctrine affirms the fact that: “All men and women are in the similitude of the universal Father and Mother, and are literally the sons and daughters of Deity.”⁷⁹

“Be ye therefore perfect,” we read in Matthew, “even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.”⁸⁰ The central message of the book of Moses is not revealed in its stories of the Creation and the Fall, as essential as these accounts may be, but rather in its invitation to conform our lives to the divine pattern whereby we may come to fully reflect God’s image

73 Matthew 5:16-48; 6:1-32; 7:11-21; 10:20-33; 11:25-27; 15:13; 16:17-27; 18:10-35; 23:9; 26:29-53; Mark 11:25-26; Luke 6:36; 9:26; 10:21-22; 11:2-13; 12:30-32; 15:12-29; John 5:17-45; 6:27-65; 8:16-56; 10:15-38; 12:26-50; 14:2-31; 15:1-26; 16:3-32; 17:1-25; 20:17-21.

74 = Aramaic “father”—see Mark 14:36; cf. Romans 8:15; Galatians 4:6. Barney et al. note: “The popular notion that this was a diminutive form with the intimate connotation of ‘daddy’ in our culture is not correct” (K. L. Barney, et al., NT Footnotes, 1:250).

75 Acts 17:29.

76 Hebrews 12:9. See K. L. Barker, Zondervan, Hebrews 12:9, p. 1913; cf. F. F. Bruce, Hebrews, Hebrews 12:9, p. 341. See Endnote 0-21, p. 24.

77 Moses 6:10; cf. Genesis 5:3.

78 D&C 93:23, 29-30, 33; K. W. Godfrey, Intelligence; P. N. Hyde, Intelligences; see Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540.

79 J. F. Smith et al., Origin; see Commentary 2:27-b, p. 115. See Endnote 0-22, p. 24.

80 Matthew 5:48; cf. 3 Nephi 12:48. See Endnote 0-23, p. 24.

and likeness.⁸¹ In the early chapters of the book of Moses, as in modern LDS temples, the story of events surrounding the Creation, the Fall, and the mortal life of Adam and Eve provides the context for the eventual unfolding of a progressive series of covenants intended to save and exalt mankind.⁸² We read that, through faithfulness to each of these covenants, Enoch and his people became “of one heart and one mind,”⁸³ and were taken up to walk in the presence of God.⁸⁴ With similar intent, this wondrous work of scripture has been expressly written to “call [us] out of darkness into his marvelous light.”⁸⁵

Though I have written this book from the perspective of a believing and practicing member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints,⁸⁶ I wish to make it clear that it is not an official publication of the Church, and that the views that are expressed are solely my own. Furthermore, I recognize that the nature of the subject matter has required my delving into many topics for which I claim no special expertise. Mistaken assertions, faulty matters of judgment, typographical errors, and editorial imperfections of many kinds have doubtless made their way into these pages. Thus I gratefully welcome any corrections or suggestions, in the hope that improvements may be made in future editions. It has been my prayer that this book, despite its insufficiencies, may be in its own way a worthy addition to the “great cloud of witnesses”⁸⁷ of the truthfulness of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ, and an encouragement to deeper study and appreciation of the book of Moses.

Arrangement of the Text and Illustrations

This volume contains the complete text of Moses 1-6:12—beginning with the account of the vision of Moses and continuing to the death of Adam. Each of the six chapters of commentary is prefaced by an Overview section discussing selected themes. A Text and Commentary section then follows. In this section, the text of the book of Moses is given at the top of each page, with accompanying commentary below. Bold-formatted words in the scriptural text point the eye to phrases that are the subject of commentary. Next, a Gleanings section appears, containing extended quotations. Endnotes are included at the end of each chapter.

Following the chapters on Moses 1-6, a separate Excursus section, containing extended discussions of selected subjects, can be found. An Appendix is dedicated to the topic of The Origin of Man. The Annotated Bibliography of Ancient Texts that follows provides descriptions of non-scriptural sources relevant to the book of Moses and the entire book of Genesis, grouped by the cultural or religious tradition that produced them. Where I thought it might be helpful to the reader, I also included general background information and summaries of pertinent beliefs of the cited groups. Throughout the entire book, abbreviated bibliographic information for each work consulted appears in the footnotes at the bottom of each page,⁸⁸ with additional source details available in the References section. Footnotes also document extensive cross-references to other sections of the book, preceded by an appropriate key word (e.g., Commentary, Figure, Endnote, overview). A set of Color Plates for selected figures

81 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 8. See Endnote 0-24, p. 26.

82 See the overview of Moses 5, pp. 341-350.

83 Moses 7:18.

84 Moses 7:69.

85 1 Peter 2:9. Mercy Fielding Thompson recalls the Prophet specifically applying these words to the blessings of the endowment (M. F. Thompson, “Recollections of the Prophet Joseph Smith,” Juvenile Instructor, 1 July 1892, p. 400, cited in J. Smith, Jr., Teachings 2007, p. 414).

86 See Endnote 0-25, p. 26.

87 Hebrews 12:1.

88 Due to an unfortunate glitch, citations with two authors appear with the first author’s name, followed by “et al.,” instead of adhering to the usual convention reserving this format for sources with three or more authors.

follows. For convenience, a set of Indexes appear at the very end of the book, including a Thumbnail Index to Figures.

Significant variants within the original JST manuscripts and the current edition of the Pearl of Great Price are described in the commentary. Although important JST modifications to the KJV text are signaled explicitly in the Commentary section, readers must consult their own Bibles for an exhaustive comparison of minor differences between the book of Moses and Genesis.

British spellings have been made consistent with American conventions. Transliterations of Greek and Hebrew terms have not been standardized but, when referenced by authors, are usually rendered in the same form as they appear in their original publication.

Unlike the book of Abraham, the book of Moses did not come to us with illuminating facsimiles. In selecting suitable illustrations to accompany the scriptural commentary, I have relied solely on personal taste and preference with respect to the choice of depictions and their place in the text—sometimes, in fact, I have associated meanings and settings that are quite foreign to the context of their first appearance. While considering the appropriateness of wresting these illustrations from their original surroundings and significations, I was interested to discover that such a practice may not be without ancient precedent: Kevin Barney argues that this approach could have been followed either by Abraham or an ancient Egyptian-Jewish redactor who may have adopted or adapted existing vignettes originally drawn to serve in an Egyptian religious context for use as illustrations to the text of the book of Abraham.⁸⁹ Whether or not this actually happened during the compilation of the book of Abraham, the idea served as welcome encouragement for the approach adopted here.

The prophetic books of the brilliant and eccentric visionary William Blake⁹⁰ also provided a model for the marriage of illustration and text in this commentary. Mitchell observed that Blake “tended to minimize the literal, denotative correspondences between the two forms,”⁹¹ noting that “when Blake ‘illustrates’ a text, he expands and transforms it, and often provides a vision which can operate in complete separation from it.”⁹² In fact, Blake “often expands upon some point of only minor importance in the text, or even conveys an opposed or ironic vision.”⁹³ Among the important functions of this technique is that “the disparity between poem and illustration entices the mind of the reader to supply the missing connections.”⁹⁴ Also important for the illustration of a work of scripture featuring characters such as Adam and Eve, or Cain and Abel, in whose stories each one of us is intended to see ourselves, is the fact that Blake’s “human figures have a kind of allegorical anonymity, and are clearly designed as types, not as subtly differentiated portraits.”⁹⁵

Sources and Citations

To aid the reader’s own explorations, I have tried to provide complete documentation for the citations or ideas included in the commentary. Where references to third-party works are embedded within a given citation (e.g., ancient sources referred to by modern

89 See Endnote 0-26, p. 26.

90 See Endnote 0-27, p. 27.

91 W. J. T. Mitchell, Blake’s Art, p. 139.

92 Ibid., p. 138.

93 Ibid., p. 144.

94 Ibid., p. 141.

95 Ibid., p. 145.

authors), I have attempted where possible to check the original sources by autopsy in order to verify accuracy and appropriateness, and have silently made corrections or updates where I thought it might be necessary or useful. Sometimes, when modern authors have not supplied references to clear allusions to scripture or other important sources, or where I have otherwise felt that it might be helpful to point out additional texts or cross-references within the book that relate to their assertions, I have inserted relevant citations to supporting documents or primary sources. In many cases I have also silently modernized or corrected punctuation and capitalization in quotations. Where actual changes in wording were made or in order to compensate for gaps due to ellipsis, I have documented the location of changes, expansions, or the insertion of alternate terms by square brackets.

Frequently, I associate multiple citations with the same passage of commentary. This practice is intended to signal consensus and differences of opinion among modern commentators, or to indicate concordance and divergence among ancient sources. More rarely, a citation may include references to multiple editions of a given source. It is hoped that these extensive links to pertinent references will encourage readers to check and improve upon my conclusions through their own study.

For the convenience of the reader, I have tried to substitute citations to more recent editions for older or less accessible ones (e.g., James Charlesworth's Old Testament Pseudepigrapha in place of R. H. Charles' Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha) and English equivalents for non-English sources (e.g., Mimekor Yisrael for Die Sagen der Juden, Schaff for Migne). I have also substituted book of Moses chapter and verse numbers in the place of embedded references to the early chapters of Genesis occurring in works quoted in the text.

Unless otherwise noted, the translations of excerpts from non-English works are my own. Only rarely have I reproduced diacritical marks or vowel pointing in foreign terms that appear in the text.

Where multiple versions or editions of works containing a cited source may make it difficult for the reader to find a reference by page number alone, I have included dates (e.g., for statements of Joseph Smith) or chapter numbers (e.g., transcripts of courses taught by Hugh Nibley, pseudepigraphal or midrashic sources appearing in multiple editions) as part of the citation. In citing the words of Joseph Smith, I have generally used the readily available Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith or Documentary History of the Church in preference to more primary documents.⁹⁶ In some cases, however, I refer directly to manuscript sources when they seem to shed additional light on an interpretation.

I have not explicitly distinguished LDS from non-LDS authors, except when it concerned materials written by current or former General Authorities of the Church. In the latter case, I have prefaced the name of the author by the ecclesiastical title they held when the contribution was first made or published (e.g., “Elder,” “President”)—and frequently, in the case of Joseph Smith, the title of “Prophet.”

On the Use of Ancient Texts

Ancient texts from Jewish, Islamic, early Christian, and other sources are quoted widely throughout this book. These present a special problem because in so many cases the age and provenance of these writings are uncertain. Moreover, the motivations of the (frequently anonymous) authors, and the historical and prophetic basis of their compositions usually remain in doubt. Robinson, for one, has noted the difficulties in distinguishing between inspired literature (i.e., historical or revelatory writings akin to canonical scripture), inspired fiction (i.e., stories designed to teach doctrinal principles such as Elder Boyd K. Packer's parable *The Mediator*⁹⁷), and outright "lying for the Lord" (i.e., pseudonymous forgeries that deceitfully present themselves as authoritative in order to promulgate self-serving interpretations).⁹⁸ With regard to the last category, R. H. Charles "maintained that the device of [deliberate] pseudonymity was a pious fraud adopted in a time that no longer believed in continuing revelation by authors who nevertheless wished to effect religious changes."⁹⁹

⁹⁶ See Endnote 0-28, p. 27.

Further complicating the evaluation of extracanonical texts is the multi-layered nature of the sources from which they were typically composed.¹⁰⁰ Such writings rarely if ever constitute de novo accounts of sacred events. Rather, they tend to incorporate diverse traditions of varying value and antiquity in ways that make it difficult to tease apart the contribution that each makes to the whole.¹⁰¹ As a result, even relatively late documents rife with midrashic speculations unattested elsewhere,¹⁰² unique Islamic assertions,¹⁰³ or seemingly fantastic Christian interpolations¹⁰⁴ may sometimes preserve fragments of authentically-inspired principles, history, or doctrine,¹⁰⁵ or may otherwise bear witness of legitimate exegetically-derived¹⁰⁶ or ritually-transmitted¹⁰⁷ actualities.

Nor are such truths confined to writings from Abrahamic lands and faiths.¹⁰⁸ As the Lord pointedly told Nephi: "I shall also speak unto all nations of the earth and they shall write it."¹⁰⁹ In light of this fact, it should not be at all surprising if genuinely revealed teachings, promulgated at one time but subsequently lost or distorted,¹¹⁰ sometimes appear to have survived in heterodox strands of religious traditions the world over. Many of these teachings have served, in the words of the First Presidency, to "enlighten whole nations and to bring a higher level of understanding to individuals."¹¹¹ Nor, it seems, could the Lord's purposes have been achieved in any other way. As Elder Orson F. Whitney once said: "God is using more than one people for the accomplishment of his great and marvelous work. The Latter-day Saints cannot do it all. It is too vast, too arduous, for any one people."¹¹² Thus, in our search for truth, we must, as Charlesworth expressed, "be attuned critically to all possible sources of revelation," including "the word from God that has been heard by the great thinkers, inspired poets, and musicians."¹¹³

97 B. K. Packer, Mediator 1977; B. K. Packer, Mediator 1978; B. K. Packer, Errand, pp. 45-47.

98 S. E. Robinson, Lying, pp. 134-135.

99 Cited in ibid., p. 142. See Endnote 0-29, p. 27.

100 S. K. Brown, Nag Hammadi, p. 257. See Endnote 0-30, p. 28.

101 See Endnote 0-31, p. 28.

102 See Endnote 0-32, p. 28.

103 See Endnote 0-33, p. 28.

104 See Endnote 0-34, p. 28.

105 See Endnote 0-35, p. 29.

106 See, e.g., J. L. Kugel, Instances, p. 156. See Endnote 0-44, p. 31.

107 See, e.g., H. W. Nibley, Myths, p. 42, quoted below.

108 See Endnote 0-36, p. 29.

109 2 Nephi 29:12, emphasis mine; cf. Alma 29:8, G. E. Jones, Apocryphal, pp. 28-29; cf. B. H. Roberts, Defense, 1:512; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 February 1832, pp. 10-11; 22 January 1834, p. 61.

110 See Endnote 0-37, p. 29.

111 S. W. Kimball et al., God's Love; S. J. Palmer, Expanding, p. v.

112 O. F. Whitney, Discourse (April 1928), p. 59; see also Respect for diversity of faiths, Diversity.

113 J. H. Charlesworth, Protestant View, p. 84.

In evaluating evidence of antiquity for works of extracanonical literature, scholars must constantly maintain the careful balance articulated by Nickelsburg:

One should not simply posit what is convenient with the claim that later texts reflected earlier tradition. At the same time, thoroughgoing skepticism is inconsonant with the facts as we know them and as new discoveries continue to reveal them: extant texts represent only a fragment of the written and oral tradition that once existed. Caution, honest scholarly tentativeness, and careful methodology remain the best approach to the data.¹¹⁴

By way of contrast, the comparative approach of Frazer¹¹⁵ and others of the myth and ritual school of a century ago is largely discounted today,¹¹⁶ its results having been compromised due to:

(1) the looseness of the equations; (2) the reliance on suggestive and circumstantial detail; (3) the tendency to persuade by suggesting a large number of alternatives, all tending in the same direction, as if exhausting the possibilities, and cumulatively overdetermining the desired connection; (4) the disparate quality of the sources of evidence; and (5) the tendency to list all positive examples, but either no or few negative ones.¹¹⁷

An additional consideration complicating the evaluation of ancient sources is the fact that the line between historical and ritual aspects of some accounts is often purposely blurred for didactic reasons, as we see in the case of LDS temple texts.¹¹⁸ In such situations, though the accuracy of an ancient account as a historical record or interpretation may be questionable, it may still be of interest because of the way it resonates with authentic doctrinal concepts and revealed ordinances. On this point, Nibley observes:¹¹⁹

If we attempt to untangle the probably historical from the fanciful, we soon discover the common ground on which they meet and fuse: it is ritual. Myths arise at attempts to explain ritual doings, whose meaning has been forgotten—“What mean these stones?”¹²⁰ After much discussion back and forth, the consensus now emerges that it is the rites and ordinances that come first. This should have been clear from the outset, since myths and legends are innumerable while the rites and ordinances found throughout the world are surprisingly few and uniform, making it apparent that it is the stories that are invented—the rites are always there.¹²¹

Such indeed has always been the Latter-day Saint position. Adam first performed an ordinance and when asked to give an explanation of it replied that he knew of none “save the Lord commanded me.”¹²² Then it was that the true explanation came forth from the mouth of a heavenly instructor.

Summarizing the LDS attitude toward ancient and modern revelation of religious truths, Truman G. Madsen writes:¹²³

To say that the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fulness is restored is to say that something has been lost and regained—but it is not to say that everything has. The Mormon believes that after every 114 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Judaism, pp. 25–26.

115 J. G. Frazer, Golden Bough.

116 See Endnote 0-38, p. 30.

117 E. Csapo, Mythology, pp. 36–37. See Endnote 0-39, p. 30.

118 J. E. Faulconer, Incarnation.

119 H. W. Nibley, Myths, p. 42; cf. H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 591–593; R. Guénon, Symboles, p. 210. See Endnote 0-41, p. 31.

120 See Joshua 4:6.

121 See Endnote 0-40, p. 30.

122 Moses 5:6.

123 T. G. Madsen, Essay, pp. xvi, xvii.

outpouring of divine light there is a record of degeneration and loss, the signs of which he thinks he can see in every generation. But Mormons have resisted from the outset the sectarian impulse: the isolation of a text or principle and the insistence that they alone possess and practice it. Exultant at a new revelatory downpour, the Mormon sees the implication: unless the same truths, authorities, and powers can be found in prior times and places; unless there have been genuine prophets, apostles and holy men who were, for all their individual traits, in touch with divine outpourings; unless there have been saints of former as well as of latter days—unless these things are so, Mormonism is without foundation. In other words, Mormonism has no claim to be a viable religion in the present unless it has been a viable religion in the past. And this is not just a halfhearted concession that there has been sort of, or part of, or a shadow of the fulness of the Gospel. It is to say that some, at least, among the ancients had it all. It is to match the thesis that from the early (and supposedly crude) beginnings things have become better; just as often they have, instead, become worse. Spiritual anabolism and catabolism have been at work in the religious life from the beginning....

If the outcome of hard archaeological, historical, and comparative discoveries in the past century is an embarrassment to exclusivistic readings of religion, that, to the Mormon, is a kind of confirmation and vindication. His faith assures him not only that Jesus anticipated his great predecessors (who were really successors) but that hardly a teaching or a practice is utterly distinct or peculiar or original in his earthly ministry. Jesus was not a plagiarist, unless that is the proper name for one who repeats himself. He was the original author. The gospel of Jesus Christ came with Christ in the meridian of time only because the gospel of Jesus Christ came from Christ in prior dispensations. He did not teach merely a new twist on a syncretic-Mediterranean tradition. His earthly ministry enacted what had been planned and anticipated “from before the foundations of the world,”¹²⁴ and from Adam down.

While recognizing the labors of generations of scholars that have begun to reveal the nature and sources of the voluminous canonical and extracanonical literature bearing on the themes of this book, there is much still to be learned. In particular, while many resemblances among ancient and modern sources have been exposed, it is a more difficult work to transform these parallels into “bridges” demonstrating how related ideas from widely-scattered cultures and diverse eras could have been shared and transmitted.¹²⁵ Though the teachings and revelations of Joseph Smith demonstrate to my own satisfaction that archaic concepts and stories can be recovered in exceptional circumstances through divine revelation, the diffusion of ideas by more ordinary means is clearly the rule in history.

Not only will future research continue to shed new light on the meaning of obscure scriptural concepts, it will also no doubt demonstrate that many of my readings have been the result of an inadequate grasp of ancient sources—while, on the other hand, countless illuminating sidelights have been missed entirely.¹²⁶ In selecting arguments and sources to be cited in this book, I have usually tried to err on the side of inclusion, thus making these texts more readily available to readers for study, discussion, and comparison of perspectives.¹²⁷ This approach has inevitably resulted in a work that resembles more an unevenly sifted and sometimes contradictory scrapbook of ideas and sources than a coherent and inerrant “guide for the perplexed.” In this respect, perhaps, the sole subjective valuation of the worth of the book I am qualified to make is that it tries to be something like the kind of thing I should have liked to have had myself at the beginning of my own study—if only it had it been, in addition, written by someone with better credentials in the relevant fields

124 E.g., John 17:24; Ephesians 1:4; 1 Peter 1:20; Alma 22:13; D&C 130:20; Moses 5:57; Abraham 1:3.

125 Cf. E. R. Goodenough, Introduction to Philo, pp. ix-xi.

126 S. E. Robinson, Lying, pp. 147-148.

127 See Endnote 0-42, p. 31.

of scholarship than I can claim. Thus, it is with humble cognizance of such limitations that I proffer my mite of commentary, reflections, source translations, cross-references, footnotes, endnotes, bibliographic annotations, references, and indexes—all of which have been lovingly assembled in the hope of assisting readers with their own explorations of the book of Moses. Happily, I can be confident that future reflection and dialogue among fellow scripture lovers—augmented and confirmed by continuing revelation—will sooner or later identify those instances where limited knowledge and faulty judgment have led me to misinterpret sources or unwisely position the line of inclusion. In the meantime, as in any such endeavor, the guiding principle in determining the value of the sources and opinions in this book necessarily must be caveat lector—let the reader beware!¹²⁸

Elder Bruce R. McConkie has outlined the essential preconditions for any benefit to accrue from the use of extracanonical texts: “Obviously, to gain any real value from a study of apocryphal writings, the student must first have an extended background of gospel knowledge, a comprehensive understanding of the standard works of the Church, plus the guidance of the Spirit.”¹²⁹ However, even when these preconditions are met, LDS readers may encounter additional pitfalls in their approach to extracanonical literature. For example, Gillum warns about extreme attitudes that lead people either to completely eschew such writings or to develop an unhealthy obsession with them.¹³⁰ While recognizing the ease with which any of us can be led astray when our enthusiasm outstrips our understanding, he also argues that “even as we should be prepared and open to personal revelation, so should we be ready and eager to learn from additional truths which may confirm our fundamental beliefs. Perhaps these apocryphal discoveries are mere preparations for more divine writings to be given us later.” Revealing the principle governing his own stance, he writes that “whatever I read as apocrypha, in the very general sense, must not lead me farther afield, but back to the divine word of God.”¹³¹

128 D&C 91:4-5; S. K. Brown, Nag Hammadi, pp. 257-258, 267-268.

129 B. R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, s.v., Apocrypha, p. 42; cf. D&C 91:4-6; E. J. Brandt, Jasher, pp. 308-309.

130 G. P. Gillum, Bibliography. See Endnote 0-43, p. 31.

131 Ibid., p. 128.

Endnotes

- 0-1 Based on the results of their pioneering studies, Matthews¹³² and Howard¹³³ had concluded that there was a period of overlap between March 8 and April 7, 1831—concurrent with the earliest phase of New Testament translation—during which OT1 Genesis 19:36-24:42a was completed and OT2 1:1-24:42a was recopied in slightly modified form. However, based on his later research, Jackson has concluded: “We understand the chronology better now. There was no overlap period.”¹³⁴ For a review of other JST topics in recent research, see Jackson.¹³⁵
- 0-2 It is both striking and characteristic of the Prophet that he so quickly followed the instructions given in the revelation by abruptly changing his translation priorities. Bushman observes: “Judging by his actions, Joseph believed in the revelations more than anyone.”¹³⁶ From the beginning, he was his own best follower. Having the word of God at his back gave him enormous confidence.”¹³⁷
- 0-3 Jackson explains:
- Even though some of the... corrections [made after 1833] provide important clarifications and insights, the overwhelming majority of significant contributions of the Joseph Smith Translation were made during the original dictation... [Several] facts cast doubt on the common belief that he continued to revise the wording of the translation the rest of his life. From 2 July 1833 on, there are no references in his diaries and letters to his making additional changes. There are several statements regarding the preparation of the manuscript for publication, which probably refer not to changes in the translation but to the many insertions of punctuation, capitalization, and verse numbering. We cannot identify the handwritings or dates for these small changes, but most were probably made by clerks working under the Prophet’s direction.”¹³⁸
- In view of the many statements on record regarding the Prophet’s efforts to bring the entire JST into publication, and its appearance in part in a series of Church publications, it is inaccurate to conclude that “he made no serious effort to publish the new translation.”¹³⁹
- 0-4 Additional translation work with direct relevance to Genesis had occupied the Prophet beginning in 1835, when Egyptian mummies and papyri first came into his hands.¹⁴⁰ By March 1842, Joseph Smith had begun publishing excerpts from his translation of the book of Abraham but, as with the JST, circumstances hindered his intention to publish the work in entirety.
- Concerning the potential length of the completed translation of the book of Abraham, Oliver Cowdery stated that he could not say “how large volumes they will make; but judging from their size, and the comprehensiveness of the language, one might reasonably expect to see a sufficient [number] to develop much upon the mighty acts of the ancient men of God.”¹⁴¹ Scholars estimate that the current text of the book of Abraham constitutes perhaps about one-fourth of what was translated by Joseph Smith.¹⁴² This somewhat conservative estimate of the size of the manuscript is based on Anson Call’s recollection that a reading of the then-extant translation took two hours, compared to what would be about a half hour reading of the portions of the book of Abraham now contained in the Pearl of Great Price. Call wrote: “Joseph... said to us, ‘Sit down and we will read to you from the translations of the book of Abraham.’ Oliver Cowdery then read until he was tired when Thomas Marsh read making altogether about two hours.”¹⁴³
- 0-5 See Royal Skousen for a review of these recent studies of the original JST manuscripts.¹⁴⁴
- 0-6 Of the fact that the need for these corrections was not seen to diminish the importance of the Bible for the early Saints, Givens perceptively writes:

132 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, pp. 67, 59, 73, 79.

133 R. P. Howard, Restoration 1995, pp. 66-68.

134 K. P. Jackson, August 21 2006; July 6 2006.

135 K. P. Jackson, New Discoveries.

136 See also R. L. Bushman, Creation of the Sacred, p. 98.

137 R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, p. 173.

138 K. P. Jackson, Genesis, pp. 28-29.

139 R. L. Bushman, Mormonism, p. 68.

140 J. Gee, Guide, pp. 1-5.

141 O. Cowdery, Mummies, p. 236.

142 M. R. Ash, ABCs.

143 Anson Call, Manuscript Journal, Summer 1838, p. 9, cited in J. Gee, Tragedy, pp. 111-112.

144 R. Skousen, Earliest.

Joseph Smith's 1842 pronouncement that Latter-day Saints "believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God,"¹⁴⁵ whereas they only accord the same credence to the Bible "as far as it is translated correctly,"¹⁴⁶ accords the former some kind of preeminence. The error would be to see, as one scholar has, a definitive "demotion of the Christian Bible by virtue of his claim that it had been improperly translated."¹⁴⁷ The matter isn't quite that simple. For one thing, as Philip Barlow has pointed out:

Nothing... captures the evolving but enduring religious quintessence of Mormonism and its relationship to the balance of American religion better than a firm, comparative grasp of the Bible's place among the Latter-day Saints. This assertion applies even to Mormon theology and revelation, which... is inextricably enmeshed with and dependent on prior and often unconscious biblical perspectives.¹⁴⁸

One historian even concludes, based on the relatively few changes Joseph made in his translation, that "what the effort demonstrated was not the distance, but the close parallels the early Saints and their first converts saw between the Bible and the Book of Mormon."¹⁴⁹ Apparently, Joseph was not speaking entirely tongue in cheek when he wrote, in response to the question of "wherein you differ from other sects" that "we believe the Bible."¹⁵⁰ As mentioned previously, early converts used the Bible as the standard against which they measured the Book of Mormon's teachings. Grant Underwood has shown that in early LDS publications the Bible was quoted anywhere from 19 to 40 times as often as the Book of Mormon.¹⁵¹ Clearly this is hardly evidence of the Bible's demotion.¹⁵²

0-7 Howard observes:

One interesting insight comes to us when we see how much more extensive a revision of the ... text was made, proportionately, in that part of the manuscripts written out in full.... [T]he natural tendency for the "translators" when writing out the text in full was to make many more revisions per verse and chapter of the King James text than was the case when they later adopted the brief notation system of transcribing their revisions.¹⁵³

0-8 Of course, having an understanding of priesthood ordinances is not the same as being authorized to perform them. As Ehat et al. have written about the "ordinances whereby men were ordained kings and priests": "These ordinances were not introduced in Kirtland because Elijah had not come to confer the fulness of the priesthood upon the Prophet before he administered the Kirtland Temple ordinances."¹⁵⁴

0-9 Even as he was finishing his translation of Genesis, Joseph Smith seems to have believed that God did not intend for him to publish the JS^T in his lifetime. Writing to W. W. Phelps on 31 July 1832, he said: "I would inform you that [the Bible translation] will not go from under my hand during my natural life for correction, revisal, or printing and the will of the Lord be done" (J. Smith, Jr., Writings 2002, p. 273). Although the Prophet later reversed his position and made serious efforts to prepare the 1833 manuscript of the JS^T for publication, the statement implies that at that time he did not feel authorized to share all that he had learned during the translation process with others.

Another example of a revelation that was not published in Joseph Smith's lifetime is his revelation on war (D&C 87), received on December 25, 1832 and alluded to in D&C 130:12-13 (2 April 1843), and possibly never recorded in its completeness. Woodford¹⁵⁵ describes the extensive nature of the Prophet's visions on this subject as follows:

Joseph later recorded in his history that he had seen in visions the end of this nation¹⁵⁶ and the breaking up of the government¹⁵⁷ if it continued to disregard the rights of the citizens. Elder Grant also recorded the extent of the visions by Joseph Smith concerning these matters. He wrote:

145 Article of Faith 8.

146 Ibid.

147 J. G. Gager, Early, p. 59.

148 P. L. Barlow, Bible, p. xi.

149 T. Smith, Biblical Culture, p. 21.

150 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 8 May 1838, p. 119.

151 G. Underwood, Usage, p. 53.

152 T. L. Givens, Hand, pp. 190-191.

153 R. P. Howard, Restoration 1969, pp. 92-93; cf. R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 80.

154 A. F. Ehat et al., cited in J. Smith, Jr., Words, p. 302 n. 9.

155 R. J. Woodford, Historical Development, 2:1094.

156 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 4 March 1840, 4:89.

157 Ibid., 16 December 1843, 6:116.

The Prophet stood in his own house when he told several of us of the night the visions of heaven were opened to him, in which he saw the American continent drenched in blood, and he saw nations rising up against nation. He also saw the father shed the blood of the son, and the son the blood of the father; the mother put to death the daughter, and the daughter the mother; and natural affection forsook the hearts of the wicked; for he saw that the Spirit of God should be withdrawn from the inhabitants of the earth, in consequence of which there should be blood upon the face of the whole earth, except among the people of the Most High. The Prophet gazed upon the scene his vision presented, until his heart sickened, and he besought the Lord to close it up again.¹⁵⁸

President Brigham Young was among those that felt that it “was not wisdom to publish it to the world” until many years after it was received.¹⁵⁹

- 0-10 The accuracy of this statement, however, is questioned by Jackson: “This is a third-hand account that is hard to reconcile with known statements from Joseph Smith. It was published in 1888. I have serious doubts about it.”¹⁶⁰ Though Jackson rightly raises questions about the provenance of the remembrance, I see nothing implausible or particularly difficult to reconcile in the statement itself.
- 0-11 Jackson sees such a scenario as very unlikely: “I think that Joseph Smith knew what he was doing. We don’t have evidence of him complaining that he didn’t have the time to work on it. When he felt it was finished, he announced that it was finished, and he quit working on it.”¹⁶¹ However, as a potential example of the difficulties posed by the rapid translation of the Old Testament, Royal Skousen notes that Isaiah 50 was “slavishly copied” from the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon, “including all the errors that had entered the Book of Mormon text during its earlier transmission.”¹⁶² Skousen also sees the practice of marking entire books as correct near the end of the work on the JS-T¹⁶³ and the marking of other books as “virtually correct (with only a handful of changes)”¹⁶⁴ as evidence that “Joseph Smith definitely appear[ed] to be in a hurry to get this work done.”¹⁶⁵
- 0-12 “[J]ust like Mozart left his Requiem unfinished, so did Blake die before completing his illustrations of Dante’s Inferno—the voyage into death. The commission for Dante’s Inferno came to Blake in 1826, but his death in 1827 meant that only a handful of the watercolors were completed.”¹⁶⁶
- 0-13 Concerning the explicitly revelatory process by which Joseph Smith came to at least some of his new understandings of biblical texts, Flake writes:¹⁶⁷

Contemporaneous sources indicate that Smith made his more extensive changes to KJV Genesis by employing the same methods as when working from records purportedly written in ancient languages. Smith is quoted as saying: “After I got through translating the Book of Mormon, I took up the Bible to read with the Urim and Thummim. I read the first chapter of Genesis, and I saw the things as they were done, I turned over the next and the next, and the whole passed before me like a grand panorama; and so on chapter after chapter until I read the whole of it. I saw it all!”¹⁶⁸ A more authoritative account is provided by Smith himself in February 1832. “Upon my return from Amherst [Ohio] conference, I resumed the translation of the Scriptures.... While translating St. John’s Gospel, myself and Elder Rigdon saw the following vision” of the resurrection of the dead.¹⁶⁹ Finally, in an 1843 funeral sermon, probably alluding to the account in Matt. 27:52 of graves opening at the death of Jesus, Smith spoke of “the visions that roll like an overflowing surge, 158 J. M. Grant, 2 April 1854, 2:147.

159 R. J. Woodford, Historical Development, 2:1105-1106. See B. Young, 20 May 1860, p. 58.

160 K. P. Jackson, August 21, 2006; July 6, 2006.

161 K. P. Jackson, July 6, 2006; cf. K. P. Jackson, Genesis, p. 30.

162 R. Skousen, Earliest, p. 461.

163 Ruth, Ezra, Esther, Lamentations, Obadiah, Micah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Malachi.

164 Leviticus, Joshua, Judges, 2 Samuel, 1 Chronicles, Job.

165 R. Skousen, Earliest, p. 465.

166 P. Coppens, Paintings of Visions.

167 K. Flake, Translating Time, p. 506.

168 Lorenzo Brown in “Sayings of Joseph, by Those Who Heard Him at Different Times,” Joseph Smith Jr. Papers, Church Archives, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Salt Lake City, UT, cited in K. Flake, Translating Time, p. 506 n. 31. Flake notes: “Brown’s statement is based on his recollection in 1880 of a conversation that occurred in 1832. For questions concerning the reliability of this account, see R. J. Matthews, Plainer Translation, pp. 25-26, n. 12.”

169 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 16 February 1832, 1:245; cf. D&C 76 Section Heading. The scripture reference that inspired the vision was John 5:29.

before my mind.” More specifically, he said, “I saw the graves open & the saints as they arose took each other by the hand . . . while setting up.”¹⁷⁰ Thus, although many emendations are editorial, the more radical of Smith’s changes to the Bible were understood by him as a function of what he saw when reading it.

Once the understandings of these passages had been revealed, however, it remained to the Prophet to exercise considerable personal effort in rendering these experiences into words:¹⁷¹

At least with respect to the JST, it appears that when he read he saw events, not words. What he saw, he verbalized to a scribe. One of Smith’s Book of Mormon scribes provided, in his own failed attempt to translate, the occasion for the most direct description of Smith’s method. “You have not understood,” God told Oliver Cowdery through Smith: “you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought save it was to ask me. But . . . you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right and . . . you shall feel that it is right. But if it is not right you shall have no such feelings, but you shall have a stupor of thought that shall cause you to forget that thing which is wrong; therefore you cannot write that which is sacred save it be given you from me.”¹⁷² Cowdery appears to have thought he could engage in the “inspired translation” of the Book of Mormon by parroting God’s reading. In contrast, as implied by the above statement, Smith believed it necessary to determine independently how to represent what he read or saw. The appropriate question to God by the prophet-translator was whether his interpretation was correct, not what God’s interpretation was.

Arguably, then, “translate” expressed Smith’s experience of “study[ing] it out in [his] mind” or his sense of agency in front of the text. Smith did not think of himself as God’s stenographer. Rather, he was an interpreting reader, and God the confirming authority. He did not experience revelation “as dictated, as something whispered in someone’s ear” and, thus, provides a useful illustration of Ricoeur’s argument that revelation is not propositional but “pluralistic, polysemic, and at most analogical in form.”¹⁷³ Of equal significance, however, is the manner in which Smith’s description of revelation communicates a sense of being limited by a text. It was possible to not “be right” in one’s reading. Smith experienced revelation as an interpretive response to the text: not freely associated from, but bound by the “world of the text” in front of him, even if in an altered mental state or vision. In sum, Smith’s use of “translate,” for all its discursive weaknesses, conveyed his experience of creative agency before a text and, simultaneously, his sense of being bound by the text as an account of events or as history.

With respect to the English translation of the Book of Mormon, Royal Skousen argues that the actual choice of words chosen was given under “tight control.”¹⁷⁴ However, in another place, Skousen discusses the question of whether one should assume that every change made in the JST constitutes revealed text.¹⁷⁵ Besides arguments that can be made from the actual text of the JST, there are questions regarding the reliability of and degree of supervision given to the scribes who were involved in transcribing, copying, and preparing the text for publication.¹⁷⁶ Differences are also apparent in the nature of the translation process that took place at different stages of the work. For example, while a significant proportion of the Genesis passages that have been canonized as the book of Moses “[look] like a word-for-word revealed text,” evidence from a study of two sections in the New Testament that were translated twice indicates that the later “New Testament JST is not being revealed word-for-word, but largely depends upon Joseph Smith’s varying responses to the same difficulties in the text.”¹⁷⁷

For an excellent discussion explaining why historicity neither requires inerrancy nor completeness, see Peterson¹⁷⁸ and Tanner.¹⁷⁹

0-14 About such passages, Matthews concludes that: “Some . . . portions [of the JST] may be the result of the 170 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 16 April 1843, pp. 196, 198.

171 K. Flake, Translating Time, pp. 507-508; cf. G. Underwood, Revelation, pp. 76-81, 83-84.

172 D&C 9:7-9.

173 P. Ricoeur, Revelation, pp. 76, 75.

174 R. Skousen, Tight Control.

175 R. Skousen, Earliest, pp. 456-470.

176 Ibid., pp. 459-460. In “correcting” revelations for publication in the Book of Commandments, for example, though Joseph Smith had warned those involved not to “alter the sense” of the revelations (Joseph Smith, Jr. to W. W. Phelps, 31 July 1832, reproduced in J. Smith, Jr., Writings 2002, p. 273), Sidney Rigdon seems to have sometimes gone too far in his changes: “Whitmer often restored the original wording of many of the revelations that had been adjusted by Rigdon” (R. S. Jensen, From Manuscript, p. 36).

177 Ibid., pp. 461-462. For the original study, see K. P. Jackson et al., Two Passages.

178 D. C. Peterson, Inerrancy.

179 J. S. Tanner, World and Word.

Prophet's analysis or minor corrections of a sort, and not necessarily the result of immediate revelation on the subject. There may be several kinds of material in the New Translation."¹⁸⁰

- 0-15 In fact, in a few instances Joseph Smith specifically stated that terms that appeared later as part of the book of Abraham were better translations than the corresponding terms used in the earlier book of Moses.¹⁸¹

- 0-16 A new numbering for the chapter was inserted above the line of the text as shown here.

- 0-17 Similarly, Elder Bruce R. McConkie, who also served on the committee overseeing the new publication of the scriptures, counted this as one of three most significant developments in the Church in his lifetime—the other two being the revelation on the priesthood in 1978¹⁸² and the reestablishment of the First Quorum of the Seventy.¹⁸³

Underscoring the importance of this edition, the Church strongly recommends that English-speaking members use the LDS edition of the King James Bible, with excerpts from the Joseph Smith Translation and other extensive study helps.¹⁸⁴

- 0-18 For example, as formulated by Lossky, “God became man in order that man might become god.” He elaborates: “Fascinated by the felix culpa, we often forget that in breaking the tyranny of sin, our Savior opens to us anew the way of deification which is the final end of man.”¹⁸⁵ This teaching, he asserts was “echoed by the Fathers and theologians of every age,” citing as examples Irenaeus, Athanasius, Gregory Nazianzen, and Gregory of Nyssa.¹⁸⁶

The Orthodox Study Bible interprets this view quite conservatively, however, saying:¹⁸⁷

We do not become like God in His nature. That would not only be heresy, it would be impossible. For we are human, always have been human, and always will be human. We cannot take on the nature of God....¹⁸⁸

Historically, deification has often been illustrated by the example of a sword in the fire. A steel sword is thrust into a hot fire until the sword takes on a red glow. The energy of the fire interpenetrates the sword. The sword never becomes fire, but it picks up the properties of fire.

- 0-19 For example: “The Son of God became a man to enable men to become sons of God.”¹⁸⁹ Though it is impossible to “know what Lewis meant fully (and certainly what he understood and intended) by these statements”¹⁹⁰ his descriptions of mankind’s potential is one resonates with the beliefs of Mormonism. For example, as he wrote in another place:

The command “Be ye perfect”¹⁹¹ is not idealistic gas. Nor is it a command to do the impossible. He is going to make us into creatures that can obey that command. He said (in the Bible) that we were “gods”¹⁹² and He is going to make good His words. If we let Him—for we can prevent Him, if we choose—He will make the feeblest and filthiest of us into a god or goddess, a dazzling, radiant, immortal creature, pulsating all through with such energy and joy and wisdom and love as we cannot now imagine, a bright stainless mirror which reflects back to God perfectly (though, of course on a smaller scale) His own boundless power and delight and goodness. The process will be long and in parts very painful; but that is what we are in for. Nothing less. He meant what He said.¹⁹³

- 0-20 For example, Gregory of Nyssa wrote: “Let us make man in our image, after our likeness.”¹⁹⁴ We

180 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, pp. 252-253.

181 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 January 1841, p. 181; 17 May 1843, p. 301.

182 Official Declaration 2.

183 B. R. McConkie, Sermons, p. 236.

184 First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Statement.

185 V. Lossky, Theology, p. 134; cf. V. Lossky, Image, p. 97.

186 Irenaeus, Heresies, 5:Preface, p. 526; Athanasius, Incarnation, 54, p. 65; Gregory Nazianzen, Apollinarius 5-9, p. 81; Gregory of Nyssa, Catechism 25, p. 495. For comprehensive overviews of this topic, see N. Russell, Deification; J. Gross, Divinization. See also B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 391-426.

187 J. N. Sparks et al., Orthodox Study Bible, p. 1692.

188 Cf. Gregory of Nyssa, cited in J. Gross, Divinization, p. 180. See also pp. 257, 272.

189 C. S. Lewis, Mere, 4:5, p. 155. See also the discussion of Emerson's views in R. H. Brodhead, Prophets, pp. 22-24.

190 R. L. Millet, Transformation, p. 152.

191 Matthew 5:48.

192 John 10:34-36.

193 C. S. Lewis, Mere, 4:9, p. 176.

194 Moses 2:26.

possess the one by creation; we acquire the other by free will.”¹⁹⁵

- 0-21 Although Bruce declines “to trace the metaphysical implications in the phrase,”¹⁹⁶ Attridge has no such hesitation, explaining: “These epithets were applied primarily to God’s relationship to the angelic world, although references to God as father of human spirits are also found.”¹⁹⁷

- 0-22 The significance of the idea of God as first and foremost a “Father” is explained by Elder B. H. Roberts:

There exists, I think, a real difference between the idea of “father” and “creator,” ...[though] each idea may include the other... The term “father” carries with it the notion of generation, begetting from one’s own person, springing from one’s own nature, and partaking of one’s own physical and mental qualities and perhaps likeness, but the term “creator” does not necessarily convey that notion, since a created thing may be external to the nature of the being who created it; as, for example, when God created the heaven and the earth. In this case the heaven and the earth did not bear the image of God; nor was it made in his likeness, as the result was when God said, “Let us make man in our image, and after our likeness.”¹⁹⁸

Betz makes a similar point, though one might arguably differ with his extension of the epithet “Father” to describe God’s role with respect to the whole of the Universe, rather than restricting it to his relationship with mankind as did Roberts:

The address of God as “Father” names him as creator, sustainer, and protector of his entire creation, the universe. But the image of the father is more than a metaphor because it suggests that God has “fathered” his creation, his progeny. This terminology clearly differs from that of God as the divine “craftsman”..., “creator”..., or “master builder”... By comparison, the epithet “Father” suggests not only origin but also a permanent and personal kinship relationship between procreator and progeny. The Philonic epithet “the progenitor”... would come closest, but it does not occur in the New Testament.”¹⁹⁹

- 0-23 Commenting on the Savior’s use of the word “perfect” in this context, Welch writes:²⁰⁰

Although it is possible that the word “perfect” has only a straightforward ethical or religious meaning here,²⁰¹ reflecting perfect or “undivided obedience to God” and “unlimited love”²⁰² there is a stronger possibility that the word carries a ceremonial connotation in this particular text. It seems to me that in this verse, Jesus is expressing his desire that the disciples now advance from one level to a next level, to go on to become “perfect,” “finished,” or “completed” in their instruction and endowment.²⁰³ In addition to the ritual context of the Sermon—the context usually determining the sense in which the intended “completeness” consists²⁰⁴—several reasons support this understanding.

First, the Greek word translated into English as “perfect” in Matthew 5:48 is teleios. This important word is used in Greek religious literature to describe the person who has become fully initiated in the rituals of the religion.²⁰⁵ Teleios is “a technical term of the mystery religions, which refers to one initiated into the mystic rites, the initiate.”²⁰⁶ The word is used in Hebrews 5:14-6:1 to distinguish between the initial teachings and the full instruction, and in Hebrews 9:11 it refers to the heavenly temple. Generally in the Epistle to the Hebrews, its usage follows a “special use” from 195 Gregory of Nyssa, On the Origin of Man, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 33.

196 F. F. Bruce, Hebrews, p. 344.

197 H. W. Attridge, Hebrews, pp. 362-363.

198 B. H. Roberts, Seventy’s Fifth, p. 47. See Moses 2:26.

199 H. D. Betz et al., Sermon, p. 387.

200 J. W. Welch, Sermon, pp. 57-62; cf. J. W. Welch, Light, pp. 116-120.

201 E.g., J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, p. 232 n. 5; R. N. Holzapfel et al., From Bethlehem, pp. 337-338, 369-372; M. C. Thomas, Sermon, pp. 243-245.

202 G. Kittel et al., Dictionary, 8:73, 75, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 58.

203 Commenting on the use of teleios in Matthew 5:48, Barclay notes that: “the Greek idea of perfection is functional. A thing is perfect if it fully realizes the purpose for which it was... made.... For what purpose was man created? ...Man was created to become like God” (W. Barclay, Matthew, 1:177-178; cf. Moses 1:39). Compare Matthew 19:21, Hebrews 12:23, D&C 76:69. See also Ephesians 4:12, 14, where Paul defines the purpose of the “perfecting of the saints” as being that we might come “unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ.”

204 E. Yarnold, Teleios, p. 271, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 58. See Endnote E-258, p. 769. See also H. W. Attridge, Hebrews, pp. 83-87, 161-164.

205 See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: The Eleusinian Mysteries, p. 675.

206 W. Bauer et al., Lexicon, p. 817, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 58.

Hellenistic Judaism, where the word teleioo means “to put someone in the position in which he can come, or stand, before God.”²⁰⁷ Thus, in its ritual connotations, this word refers to preparing a person to be presented to come before God “in priestly action”²⁰⁸ or “to qualify for the cultus”²⁰⁹ Early Christians continued to use this word in this way in connection with their sacraments and ordinances²¹⁰ ...

[The] so-called Secret Gospel of Mark, according to Clement, contained things “for the use of those who were being perfected (teleiounenon). Nevertheless, he [Mark] did not divulge the things not to be uttered, nor did he write down the hierophantic [priesthood] teaching [hierophantiken didaskalian] of the Lord, but... brought in certain sayings of which he knew the interpretation would, as a mystagogue, lead the hearers into the innermost sanctuary of that truth hidden by seven [veils].”²¹¹ ... The suggestion that the words of the Sermon, explicitly inviting its followers to become “perfected,” may have stood in a similar tradition is, therefore, not without precedent in early Christianity.²¹²

Moreover, the cultic use of the Hebrew term shalom may provide a concrete link between the Nephites and this Greek and Christian use of teleios. John Durham has explored in detail the fundamental meanings of shalom, especially in Numbers 6:26 and in certain of the Psalms, and concludes that it was used as a cultic term referring to a gift or endowment to or of God that “can be received only in his Presence,”²¹³ “a blessing specifically connected to theophany or the immanent Presence of God,”²¹⁴ specifically as appearing in the Temple of Solomon and represented “within the Israelite cult” and liturgy.²¹⁵ Baruch Levine similarly analyzes the function of the shelamim sacrifices as producing “complete,” or perfect, “harmony with the deity, ... characteristic of the covenant relationship as well as the ritual experience of communion.”²¹⁶

Durham, along with several others, sees this Israelite concept in the word teleios in Matthew 5:48.²¹⁷ “Matthew does not use teleios in the Greek sense of the perfect ethical personality, but in the Old Testament sense of the wholeness of consecration to God.”²¹⁸ It tends toward the meaning of “living up to an agreement without fault: as the Father keeps the covenants he makes with us... Teleioi is a locus technicus from the Mysteries: the completely initiated who has both qualified for initiation and completed it is teleios, literally ‘gone all the way,’ fulfilling all requirements, every last provision of God’s command. The hardest rules are what will decide the teletios, the final test—the Law of Consecration.”²¹⁹ Thus, although we do not know what word Jesus used when he spoke to the Nephites that has been translated “perfect” in 3 Nephi 12:48, there is reason to believe that they would have known from their Israelite heritage a word like shalom, similar in cultic content to the Greek word teleios.

Accordingly, in commanding the people to “be perfect even as I, or your Father who is in heaven is perfect,”²²⁰ it seems that Jesus had several things in mind besides “perfection” as we usually think of it. Whatever he meant, it involved the idea of becoming like God (“even as I or your Father who is in heaven”), which occurs by seeing God²²¹ and knowing God.²²² These ultimate realities can be represented [ceremonially] in this world, for as Joseph Smith taught, it is through his ordinances that we are “instructed more perfectly.”²²³

207 G. Kittel et al., Dictionary, 8:82, citing Hebrews 7:19, 10:1. Cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 59.

208 G. Kittel et al., Dictionary, 8:83, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 59.

209 G. Kittel et al., Dictionary, 8:85, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 59.

210 H. Stephanus, Thesaurus, 8:1961, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 59.

211 M. Smith, Secret Gospel, p. 14.

212 “Tertullian, speaking of mediators of the divine (Moses among Jews, Jesus among Christians),” draws a parallel to Orpheus, Melampus, and Trophonius, who “initiationibus homines obligaverunt” (‘placed men in their service through initiations’)” (P. Bonnechere, Trophonius, pp. 170–171. See Tertullian, Apology, 21, p. 36).

213 J. I. Durham, Shalom, p. 292, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 60.

214 Ibid., p. 281.

215 Ibid., pp. 286–292.

216 B. A. Levine, Presence, pp. 35–36, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 60.

217 J. I. Durham, Shalom, p. 293 n. 135.

218 G. Bornkamm et al., Matthew, p. 101, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 61.

219 H. W. Nibley, Matthew 5:48, cited in J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 61. See the overview of Moses 5, p. 350.

220 3 Nephi 12:48.

221 See 1 John 3:2.

222 See John 17:3.

223 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 14 November 1835, 2:312. More to the point, the Prophet urged his

Finally, the style of the Sermon shifts into a different mode after this invitation to become perfect. The next section of the Sermon, contains no reference to the old law of Moses... [The] text has... moved on to a new stage of the experience,²²⁴ thus accounting for the different world to which it seems to belong. In this higher level there will be greater emphasis on secret and inward righteousness, as well as controlling the needs of the flesh and of this world. Thus the text next presents a second set of requirements by discussing almsgiving, prayer, forgiveness, fasting, and total dedication of all that one has to God.

0-24 Thus, Anderson writes that the:

... story of Adam and Eve was never narrated as a simple, objective account of human beginnings, as a story that could take its place alongside modern theories of the “big bang” or evolution. Instead, the story of Adam and Eve has always been subject to liturgical enactment. It derives its meaning from the world of penitence and restoration. A more pertinent parallel than Darwinian evolution is the parable of the Prodigal Son, a favorite Gospel reading in the Lenten season;²²⁵

0-25 This quote from President J. Reuben Clark, Jr. resonates with my own innate feelings:

Years ago, I heard of a statement from a non-member banker of the city which has always impressed me. He is reported to have said, and of course this in jest, that Mormons have six senses: the five that ordinary mortals have and a sixth that enables him to believe Mormonism. I am more grateful than I can express for that sixth sense which enables me not only merely to believe, but to have a spiritual knowledge that all that I have said today is true.²²⁶

I realize from personal experience, however, that some people, lacking what is for me an instinctive and undeniable sense of the Infinite, find spiritual matters unreal and of no particular import:

They do not deny them, but they live apart from them; they do not disbelieve them, but they are silent when they are stated. They do not question the existence of Kamtchatka,²²⁷ but they have no call to busy themselves with Kamtchatka; they abstain from peculiar tenets. Nor in truth is this, though much aggravated by existing facts, a mere accident of this age—there are some people to whom such a course of conduct is always natural: there are certain persons who do not, as it would seem cannot, feel all that others feel; who have, so to say no ear for much of religion—are in some sort out of its reach.²²⁸

C. S. Lewis sympathetically portrayed such a character in his brilliant reworking of the myth of Cupid and Psyche.²²⁹ From the perspective of her sister Psyche, the character Orual suffers from a sort of spiritual blindness: where Psyche sees a palace, Orual sees only rock and heather; when Psyche serves her wine, Orual tastes only spring water. By this means, Lewis compared the problem of Orual to that of “every nice, affectionate agnostic whose dearest one suddenly ‘gets religion,’ or even every lukewarm Christian whose dearest gets a Vocation.” For such a one, the question ultimately becomes (if, indeed, it ever arises at all): “Is Psyche mad or am I blind?”²³⁰

0-26 Barney speculates as follows:

... what if Abraham did not draw the facsimiles? What if they already existed and were either adopted or adapted by an Egyptian-Jewish redactor as illustrations of the attempt on Abraham’s life and Abraham’s teaching astronomy to the Egyptians? (For convenience, I shall refer to this hypothetical Jewish redactor as “J-red.”) In this case, the facsimiles would have both an Egyptian context (reflecting the religious purpose for which they were originally created by the Egyptians) and a Semitic context (reflecting the religious purpose for which they were adopted or adapted by J-red). Thus the ultimate question would not be “What do the facsimiles mean to modern followers to “go on to perfection, and search deeper and deeper into the mysteries of Godliness” (J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 June 1844, p. 364). In this context, see also his frequent citations (and emendations) of Hebrews 5:1 (J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 1 September 1835, p. 82; 15 October 1843, p. 328; 10 March 1844, p. 338; 8 April 1844, p. 360; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 18 June 1840, 4:136).

224 Cf. H. W. Attridge, Hebrews, pp. 199-200, 204-205, 244-248, 269-272, 280-281. See also Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: The Mysteries of Aaron, Moses, and Melchizedek, p. 663.

225 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 187.

226 J. R. Clark, Jr., Blessings, pp. 878, 879.

227 A remote volcanic peninsula located in Siberia.

228 W. Bagehot, Bagehot, 1:42, cited in N. A. Maxwell, Prove, p. 88.

229 C. S. Lewis, Faces.

230 C. S. Lewis, Letters 3, letter to Katharine Farrer, 2 April 1955, p. 590.

Egyptologists?” nor “What would the facsimiles mean to an ancient Egyptian?” but rather “What would the facsimiles have meant to J-red?”²³¹

- 0-27 Commenting on the death of Blake, William Wordsworth wrote: “There was no doubt that this poor man was mad, but there is something in the madness of this man which interests me more than the sanity of Lord Byron and Walter Scott.”²³²
- 0-28 Despite heroic efforts to preserve an accurate record of the early history of the Church, a combination of factors—including regrettable lacunae in primary sources, scarcity of time and means, scribes varying in skill and commitment, and the less-stringent standards of nineteenth-century editorial practice—challenged the abilities of later editors to eliminate imperfections from the published accounts.²³³ One result is that some statements included in the Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith (TPJS)²³⁴ and the Documentary History of the Church (DHC)²³⁵ have been erroneously attributed to the direct authorship of Joseph Smith or, in other instances, are the result of significant expansion of sketchy notes in the original sources (though often, it must be said, by intimates of the Prophet who were present to hear him). Although in some cases I have deliberately used primary accounts found in works such as The Words of Joseph Smith,²³⁶ The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith,²³⁷ and The Papers of Joseph Smith,²³⁸ for the most part TPJS and DHC have proven to be reasonably reliable for my purposes.²³⁹ The task of mapping citations in widely-available published sources to corresponding statements in primary ones will be made easier as progress continues on the authoritative Joseph Smith Papers project.²⁴⁰ For a comprehensive guide to sources on Joseph Smith, see Whittaker.²⁴¹
- 0-29 According to Robinson, the apocryphal literature “was employed in basically four ways: to fill in the gaps in the scriptural account, to attack opposing theologies, to defend against the attacks of others, and to bring about or to legitimize theological change.”²⁴² With respect to scriptural gap-filling, he writes:

It was noticed anciently that the scriptural narrative often omitted information it might have been nice to have. Moreover, these omissions were often the occasion for questions and doubts about the reliability of the scriptures. For example, where did Cain get his wife, and just which fruit was the forbidden one? Did Adam and Eve ever repent? (Genesis doesn't actually say so.) But if we turn to the Testament of Adam we learn that Cain married his sister Labuda, who incidentally was the real cause of the fight between Cain and Abel, and that the forbidden fruit was the fig. And if we have any doubts about the repentance of Adam and Eve, we can read all about it in the Vita Adae et Evae, in the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan, or in the Penitence of Adam. The Book of Enoch explains what Genesis (6:1-4) meant by the “sons of God” going in unto the “daughters of men,” and the Genesis Apocryphon from Qumran can give us the details about the birth of Noah, or about Abraham and Sarah in Egypt. In fact, for the pseudepigrapher every question can have an answer.²⁴³

Our frequently unhealthy compulsion to fill in gaps in scripture stories and doctrinal understanding continues in modern times. The tendency is illustrated in a story recounted by Krister Stendahl: “You may have heard about the preacher who preached about the gnashing of teeth in hell. And one of the parishioners said, ‘But what about us who have lost our teeth?’ And the preacher answered, ‘Teeth will be provided.’”²⁴⁴

Complicating the task for the researcher, however, is increasing evidence that what have been seen in the past as “gap-filling” elaborations in ancient narratives sometimes may be, in point of fact, 231 K. L. Barney, Facsimiles, p. 114.

232 M. Butlin, William Blake. See Endnote E-297, p. 783.

233 D. C. Jessee, JS History; H. C. Searle, History.

234 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings.

235 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History.

236 J. Smith, Jr., Words.

237 J. Smith, Jr., Writings 2002.

238 J. Smith, Jr., Papers 1989-1992.

239 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings 2007, prepared as a Priesthood and Relief Society manual for the Church, used a similar approach, relying on DHC whenever feasible.

240 J. Smith, Jr., JS Papers Web Site; J. Smith, Jr., Papers 2008-.

241 D. J. Whittaker, Studying.

242 S. E. Robinson, Lying, p. 143.

243 Ibid., pp. 143-144.

244 K. Stendahl, Third Nephi, p. 152.

authentic ancient material. Explains Reeves:

Under the old scheme of analyzing “gaps” in biblical narrative, one almost invariably viewed so-called “expansions” or “embellishments” gap-fillers, if you will—such as are found in rabbinic Midrash or the works belonging to the genre of “rewritten Bible” as post-textual responses to the interpretive problems posed by puzzling features of the biblical text. Under the new perspective I am advocating, we are no longer obligated to view these “gap-fillers” as interpretive responses to a base text. We can instead entertain the distinct possibility that Midrash, “rewritten Bible,” and biblically-allied collections of traditions may preserve certain features or motifs or even in some cases provide more cohesive and thematically consistent presentations of stories than those eventually attested in what became the Bible.²⁴⁵

As an endorsement of this interpretive position, Reeves further cites Talmon, who argued that:

“The new evidence proves convincingly that not all variants in Hebrew non-masoretic and translational witnesses resulted from scribal mistakes or the deliberate interference of emendators, revisers and copyists. Rather, variants in an ancient version preserve at times pristine readings which were accidentally lost in the course of time or were designedly suppressed by later tridenters.²⁴⁶ Accordingly, in tracing the transmission history of the biblical books and submitting them to critical analysis, the evidence of the ancient versions must be carefully weighed.” He states further: “... it is my thesis that the presumably ‘re-told,’ re-read,’ ‘re-written,’ etc. Bible-related works should mostly be viewed as crystallizations of ‘living’ literary traditions, which parallel presentations of these same traditions in the books of the Hebrew Bible, but do not necessarily spring from them.”²⁴⁷

- 0-30 Wasserstrom aptly describes them as being “eclectically composed, internally differentiated, being comprised of heterogeneous narrative elements.”²⁴⁸
- 0-31 For a discussion of the difficulties in teasing out Jewish from Christian contributions to the pseudepigrapha, see Kraft.²⁴⁹
- 0-32 For example, Schwartz asserts that “a great many rabbinic myths, as found in the Midrashim, are not new creations of the rabbis, as might appear to be the case. Rather they are simply the writing down of an oral tradition that was kept alive by the people, when there was no need to suppress it any longer.”²⁵⁰ Moreover, he points out that “the rabbinic texts themselves claim that these traditions are part of the Oral Torah, handed down by God to Moses at Mount Sinai, and are therefore considerably ancient.”²⁵¹
- 0-33 For example, Reeves has concluded “that the Qurʾān, along with the interpretive traditions available in Hadīth, commentaries, antiquarian histories, and the collections of so-called ‘prophetic legends’ (qiṣṣat al-anbiyāʾ), can shed a startling light on the structure and content of certain stories found in Bible and its associated literatures (such as Pseudepigrapha and Midrash). [Thus, the] Qurʾān and other early Muslim biblically-allied traditions must be taken much more seriously as witnesses to ‘versions of Bible’ than has heretofore been the case.”²⁵² Wasserstrom refers to “arguments to the effect that active reading of ‘biblical’ or ‘extrabiblical’ narratives by Muslims was an exercise which reflexively illuminates those ‘original’ sources” and cites Halperin’s argument that transmitters of these stories in the Islamic tradition “tended to make manifest what had been typically left latent in the Jewish version which they had received.”²⁵³ For a discussion of the complex two-way relationship between Jewish pseudepigrapha and Muslim literature, see Wasserstrom.²⁵⁴
- 0-34 For example, as Lipscomb observes, even some of the late medieval compositions that “do not derive directly from earliest Christianity” may be of “great importance... in the antiquity of some of the 245 J. C. Reeves, Flowing Stream.

246 I.e., bearers of the tradition to the next generation.

247 See Talmon’s “Textual Criticism: The Ancient Versions,” in Text in Context: Essays by Members of the Society for Old Testament Study [ed. A. D. H. Mayes; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000] 141-70, at pp. 149-50 and 157 respectively. Cited in J. C. Reeves, Flowing Stream.

248 S. M. Wasserstrom, Muslim literature, p. 95.

249 R. A. Kraft, Pseudepigrapha.

250 H. Schwartz, Tree, p. lxiv.

251 Ibid., p. lxxxiv. See also E. J. Brandt, Jasher, pp. 305-306.

252 J. C. Reeves, Flowing Stream; see also T. Khalidi, Muslim Jesus, pp. 7-9, 16-17.

253 Cited in S. M. Wasserstrom, Muslim literature, p. 100.

254 Ibid.

traditions they contain, the uniqueness of some of their larger contribution to the development and understanding of Adam materials and of medieval Christianity.”²⁵⁵

0-35 The issue of determining ground truth in determining the authenticity of ancient teachings is, of course, a thorny problem of its own. In making such judgments, LDS scholars are fortunate to be able to draw on the additional touchstone of modern revelation.

0-36 Of the intense efforts of the Egyptians to gain a toehold on certainty with respect to eternal truths, Edwards writes:

The impression made on the modern mind is that of a people searching in the dark for the key to truth, and having found not one but many keys resembling the pattern of the lock, retaining all lest perchance the appropriate one should be discarded.²⁵⁶

Concerning the value of “pagan” religious traditions, Lewis wrote:

Myths have been accepted as literally true, then as allegorically true (by the Stoics), as confused history (by Euhemerus), as priestly lies (by the philosophers of the Enlightenment), as imitative agricultural ritual mistaken for propositions (in the days of Frazer). If you start from a naturalistic philosophy, then something like the view of Euhemerus or the view of Frazer is likely to result. But I am not a naturalist. I believe that in the huge mass of mythology which has come down to us [in] a good many different sources are mixed—true history, allegory, ritual, the human delight in storytelling, etc. But among these sources I include the supernatural, both diabolical and divine. We need here concern ourselves only with the latter. If my religion is erroneous then occurrences of similar motifs in pagan stories are, of course, instances of the same, or a similar, error. But if my religion is true, then these stories may well be a preparatio evangelica [= preparatory gospel], divine hinting in poetic and ritual form at the same central truth which was later focused and (so to speak) historicized in the Incarnation... My conversion, very largely, depended on recognizing Christianity as the completion, the actualization, the entelechy [= guiding spirit], of something that had never been wholly absent from the mind of man. And I still think that the agnostic argument from similarities between Christianity and paganism works only if you know the answer. If you start by knowing on other grounds that Christianity is false, then the pagan stories may be another nail in its coffin: just as if you started by knowing that there were no such things as crocodiles then the various stories about dragons might help to confirm your disbelief...

The traditions conflict, yet the longer and more sympathetically we study about them the more we become aware of a common element in many of them: the theme of sacrifice, of mystical communion through the shed blood, of death and rebirth, of Redemption, is too clear to escape notice.²⁵⁷

Of course, the difference between LDS and Lewis’ views is in our belief that the general trend of revelation from the beginning was not gradual and incremental, but rather that the fulness of the Gospel has been available to mankind at various times and places “from Adam down.”²⁵⁸

0-37 Liberally citing Joseph Smith’s teachings about the antiquity of temple rites, Nibley comments:²⁵⁹

One can easily detect familiar echoes of the endowment in religious institutions and practices throughout the world. The phenomenon is readily explained by Joseph Smith, and students of comparative religion have now come around to the same conclusion—namely, that the real endowment has been on earth from time to time and has also been spread abroad in corrupted forms so that fragments from all parts of the world can be traced back to common beginnings. “It is reasonable to suppose,” wrote Joseph Smith, “that man departed from the first teachings, or instructions which he received from heaven in the first age, and refused by his disobedience to be governed by them.”²⁶⁰ But... “man was not able himself to erect a system or plan with power sufficient to free him from a destruction which awaited him”; hence it was necessary to put him on the track again, as “from time to time these glad tidings were sounded in the ears of men in different ages of the world.”²⁶¹ “Certainly God spoke to [Abel]: ... and if He did, would He not... deliver to him the whole plan of the Gospel? ... And if Abel was taught of the coming of the Son 255 W. L. Lipscomb, Armenian, pp. 1-6.

256 I. E. S. Edwards, Pyramids, pp. 27-28, cited in H. W. Nibley, Greatness, p. 310.

257 C. S. Lewis, Without Dogma, pp. 165-166, 175-176; cf. C. S. Lewis, Miracles, pp. 176-177 n. 1.

258 T. G. Madsen, Essay, p. xvii. See Endnote 0-37, p. 29.

259 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 575-576.

260 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, p. 57.

261 Ibid., p. 58.

of God, was he not taught also of His ordinances?”²⁶² ... “For our own part we cannot believe that the ancients in all ages were so ignorant of the system of heaven as many suppose.”²⁶³ He then went on to show how Abraham, too, had the endowment.²⁶⁴

Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote:²⁶⁵

Ideas taught in the restored gospel are often reflected in other cultures—in the literature, philosophy, folklore, and religion of peoples and places around the globe. Elder Joseph F. Smith at once explained this situation and underscored the uniqueness of Latter-day Saint understanding and of our position in the world of religion:

Undoubtedly the knowledge of this law [of sacrifice] and of other rites and ceremonies was carried by the posterity of Adam into all lands, and continued with them, more or less pure, to the flood, and through Noah, who was a “preacher of righteousness,” to those who succeeded him, spreading out into all nations and countries, Adam and Noah being the first of their dispensations to receive them from God. What wonder, then that we should find relics of Christianity, so to speak, among the heathens and nations who know not Christ, and whose histories date back beyond the days of Moses, and even beyond the flood, independent of and apart from the records of the Bible.²⁶⁶

It is clear that the dispersion, diffusion, and distortion of gospel truths has left fragments of the faith in various religions and cultures throughout the world. Many see in this an attempt by man to make his own god and religion in the absence of real ones. Rather than such similarities being evidence against the existence of God, however, these refracted truths bear witness of the initial wholeness which existed in the beginning with Adam.

See Barker²⁶⁷ for a concise overview of the many factors that contributed to the loss of older traditions, especially those having to do with temple themes.

0-38 Nibley criticizes these early schools, as well as the more recent approach of Joseph Campbell.²⁶⁸ Ackerman wryly observes that while the shortcomings of Frazer’s approach were quickly discovered by his erstwhile followers, “to a remarkable degree, this news never reached the followers of the followers”²⁶⁹—a phenomenon that has continued to this day. Thus Burkert’s cynical observation that “even when Frazer’s position is destroyed it will rise again”²⁷⁰—as it has repeatedly done in several areas of scholarly study.

0-39 Comparative studies of this era tended to emphasize “the simple-minded error underlying religion, the barbarous practice underlying the story of Christ, and the savage origins behind Catholic and Anglican rituals.” However, as Csapo observes, “[i]n a less polarized atmosphere, where religion and science have both receded from the fray, it is easier to see that everything Frazer discovered of the savage origins of Christian myth and ritual might be true without leaving much of a dent upon Christianity. Origins, after all, do not leave an indelible stamp on complex social institutions.”²⁷¹ Origins are, of course, of great importance to LDS believers, who see the source of genuine ritual in divine revelation, beginning in primordial times. This belief allows for the alternative proposal that some parallels to LDS ordinances in ritual elements from other times are the cumulative results of corruptions of earlier-diffused pristine religious practices rather than formative catalysts that gradually led to the development of the forms in use today. Though such parallels do not by any means constitute proof, they may argue for possibility.

0-40 In the context of Greek ritual, Robertson likewise concludes:

It is a general feature of Greek myths... that they are closely tied to ritual. A myth was told to explain a rite, and at the end of the telling the rite was held up as proof that the myth had happened so. In Greek literature the myths have of course moved away from their original setting, and the ritual counterpart goes unmentioned but for special cases, as at the conclusion of a few tragedies,

262 Ibid., p. 59.

263 Ibid.

264 Ibid., pp. 60-61.

265 N. A. Maxwell, Flood, p. 20.

266 J. F. Smith, 9 February 1873, p. 325.

267 M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 7-10, 13-14.

268 H. W. Nibley, What, pp. 372-376.

269 R. Ackerman, Myth and Ritual, p. 188.

270 W. Burkert, cited in G. A. Anderson, Sacrifices, p. 7.

271 E. Csapo, Mythology, p. 48.

or in later, learned prose and poetry. But the ritual always continued as before (that is the nature of ritual) and was familiar to everyone (similar festivals were celebrated in every city). It gave rise to new stories, or to variations of the old.²⁷²

- 0-41 Alter sees “the prose form of Hebrew narrative” as “chief evidence” of a “deliberate avoidance of epic” in the Bible: “Prose narration, affording writers a remarkable range and flexibility in the means of presentation, could be utilized to liberate fictional personages from the fixed choreography of timeless events and thus could transform storytelling from ritual rehearsal to the delineation of the wayward paths of human freedom.”²⁷³ In ironic contrast to the sentiment expressed by Alter, the recovery of the residual elements of authentic temple ritual in the early chapters of Genesis is often of great interest to Latter-day Saints.

- 0-42 “William James once remarked that there are two kinds of scholarly temperaments: those that dread above all the risk of possibly mistaking falsehoods for truths, and those that fear even more the risk of missing potentially valuable truths.”²⁷⁴ In my view, each of these temperaments has its place. While the discussion of new ideas to be examined in the light of reason and inspiration is integral to the burden of religious scholarship, this approach is, on the other hand, generally inimical to the responsibilities assumed by those who teach in official Church capacities, where only the settled doctrines of the Church are to be advanced, and these “so plainly that no one can misunderstand.”²⁷⁵

Of course, the fact that the content of Church curriculum must be carefully considered is not necessarily inconsistent with the idea that class members should be expected to stretch their minds and hearts. Writes Nibley:

Years ago when I wrote the 1957 priesthood manual, An Approach to the Book of Mormon,²⁷⁶ the committee turned down every chapter. But President McKay overruled the committee on every chapter. He said that if it's over the brethren's heads, let them reach for it. He left every chapter just as I had it. The committee fumed at the mouth and protested, “We can't have it!” President McKay turned right around and said, “We jolly well can have it! Let them work at it a little.” I was a good friend of Brother Richard L. Evans, who always used to tell me, “Always write as if you were writing to the tireddest farmer in Koosharem.”²⁷⁷ If you are writing to the tireddest farmer in Koosharem, what do you do to keep him awake? No attention span, no interest, or anything. He's just a tired, dead farmer. If he's the one you have to write for, you're certainly going to lose your other audience in a hurry. I never obeyed that command.²⁷⁸

- 0-43 Of the former group, categorized as “bibliolaters,” Gillum writes:

Some Latter-day Saints essentially take the position, “We have a Bible, a Book of Mormon, a Doctrine and Covenants, and a Pearl of Great Price; we need no more.” Hugh Nibley was speaking to these people when he wrote: “An awesome outpouring of newly-discovered documents of direct bearing on the history and teachings of the Church is even now in full spate, amazing and confounding Jewish and Christian scholars, but bursting with good news for the Latter-day Saints—who ignore them completely.”²⁷⁹

Addressing the latter group, Gillum warns:

In my own opinion, apocryphal works can be so many jots and titillations, ultimately watering down our estimation of what true scripture really is. Before long a study of the apocrypha could lead us into believing that works like the Aquarian Gospel, Swedenborg's revelations, or Edgar Cayce's readings are as divine as our own Book of Mormon and the Bible. Indeed, with all of our added canonical scriptures, do we need to go into the scurrilous instead of the authentic?²⁸⁰

- 0-44 Kugel observes: “To make sense of these [brief and sometimes] offhand references—indeed, even to identify them as containing exegetical motifs—it is necessary to read the text in question against the background of the whole body of ancient interpretations.”²⁸¹

272 N. Robertson, Orphic Mysteries, p. 220; cf. H. W. Nibley, Greatness, pp. 294-295.

273 R. Alter, Narrative, pp. 25-26.

274 E. A. Beach, Mysteries. See W. James, Will, pp. 26, 94-95n.

275 H. B. Lee, Teachings 1996, 8 July 1966, p. 459.

276 H. W. Nibley, Approach.

277 A small town in southern Utah.

278 H. B. Nibley, Nibliography, p. 50.

279 G. P. Gillum, Bibliography, p. 128. See H. W. Nibley, Educating, p. 339.

280 Ibid., p. 128.

281 J. L. Kugel, Instances, p. 156.

FIGURE 1-1. Get Thee Hence, Satan, 1875
Carl Heinrich Bloch, 1834-1890

*And Moses received strength, and called upon God, saying: In the name of the Only Begotten, depart hence, Satan (Moses 1:21). Carl Bloch's dramatic painting of Jesus' temptation in the wilderness parallels Moses' encounter with Satan. The placement of the prostrate adversary at the feet of Christ recalls the prophecy that the head of the serpent would be crushed beneath the heel of the seed of the woman (Moses 4:21. See Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266.).*

MOSES 1

The Vision of Moses¹

Overview	33
Historical Background: Alternations of Darkness and Light.....	33
The Setting and Genre of Moses 1	36
Moses 1: Text and Commentary	40
Gleanings	71
Endnotes	75

Overview

COMPETING creation accounts from the Near East witness a variety of ancient beliefs concerning titanic struggles for preeminence among the gods. Apart from the possibility of a distant allusion in Genesis 1:2,² none of these concepts appear in the comparatively spare account of Creation in Genesis. The Pearl of Great Price, however, restores an authentic core of primeval traditions in its stories of Satan's rebellion in the premortal existence, and of his dramatic confrontation with Moses.³ Counterbalancing these dark episodes, the Pearl of Great Price also gives us brief glimpses of the bright vistas of eternity experienced by Moses,⁴ Enoch,⁵ and Abraham.⁶

The most direct scriptural parallel to Moses' encounter with Satan is Jesus' temptation in the wilderness.⁷ Just prior to the beginning of their formal ministries, the Devil finds each of them in a solitary place and launches a personal attack intended to undermine their confidence in who they are and what they have been called to do.⁸ With astonishing presumption, he calls for their allegiance and worship. In each account, Satan is defeated in his clever questioning by an unshakable adversary and is forced to depart.

Historical Background: Alternations of Darkness and Light

The account of Moses' vision was no doubt reassuring to Joseph Smith as he faced his own trials during the period this revelation was received. Richard L. Bushman observes that Moses' test "echoed Joseph's struggle with darkness before his First Vision..."⁹ The book of Moses... conveys the sense of prophethood as an ordeal. Visions of light and truth alternate with evil and darkness."¹⁰

1 See Endnote 1-1, p. 75.

2 See Endnote 1-2, p. 75.

3 Moses 1:12-22, 4:1-4; Abraham 3:27-28.

4 Moses 1:8, 27ff.

5 Moses 7:23.

6 Abraham 3:21ff.

7 Matthew 4:1-11; Mark 1:12-13; Luke 4:1-13. See Endnote 1-3, p. 75.

8 See Endnote 1-4, p. 75.

9 Joseph Smith – History 1:15-16

10 R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 135-136.

FIGURES 1-2 AND 1-3.
Jacob's Ladder, ca. 1800, William Blake, 1757-1827
Ascent, 1993, David Linn, 1959-

SEE COLOR PLATES 1-2 AND 1-3.

*For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.*¹ At left is William Blake's illustration of Jacob's vision of the ladder extending to heaven.² Blake eschews the traditional medieval portrayal of this event that required fifteen rungs to signify fifteen saving virtues. However, he does respect the convention that has ascending angels representing the active life, and descending ones the contemplative life.³ Stars like the ones shown here are typically identified with angels or with the "angelic" status conferred upon mortals who had ascended to heaven.⁴ The drawing shows "figures bearing scrolls, food and drink, and even the compasses that Blake normally associated with the unimaginative limit-setting of reason; here all the diverse attributes of the complete man are seen unified in the heavenly vision."⁵

In the second painting, the essentially collaborative nature of exaltation is addressed. Artist David Linn writes: "My intent was to address what is, for me, at the core of living the Gospel... I believe that living the Gospel requires us to lift one another out of darkness into light. This darkness or opposition can assume many forms, but is an essential element in this mortal probation, as father Lehi taught.⁶ As we lift one another we form a living chain on this mountain of mortality and in the process learn those lessons that fit us for the presence of God."⁷

1 Moses 1:39.

2 Genesis 28:12.

3 R. Giorgi, Anges, pp. 140-143.

4 E.g., M. Barker, Older, pp. 92, 159 n. 65; M. Barker, Timaheus, pp. 274-275.

5 M. Butlin, Blake, pp. 86-87.

6 2 Nephi 2:11.

7 All Things, p. 57.

Moses 1 was given to Joseph Smith at such a time of alternation of darkness and light. Although he and Oliver Cowdery had purchased a large pulpit-style edition of the King James Bible in Palmyra in October 1829,¹¹ it was not until June 1830—during a period of jubilant expectation and intense persecution—that he was able to free himself to begin a new work of translation¹² that was intended to restore "many important points touching the salvation of men, [that] had been taken from the Bible, or lost before it was compiled."¹³ Many wonderful events had recently transpired: the Book of Mormon had come from the press in March, the Church had been organized in April,¹⁴ and the first conference had been held in early June. On the other hand, tremendous opposition began to mount during a visit of the Prophet to the saints in Colesville, New York later that month:

On Saturday afternoon, June 26, they dammed a small stream to make a pond for baptisms and appointed a meeting for the Sabbath. That night the dam was torn out. The Mormons replaced the dam early Monday morning and held their baptism later that day... On their way back, a collection of the Knight's neighbors scoffed at the new Mormons as they passed by. Later about fifty men surrounded Joseph Knight's house, Joseph Smith said, "raging with anger, and apparently determined to commit violence upon us." When Joseph left..., the mob followed along, threatening physical attack...

When village toughs failed to stop the baptisms, the law stepped in. Before the newly baptized members could be confirmed, a constable from South Bainbridge delivered a warrant 11 K. P. Jackson, Cooperstown Bible, pp. 56-57.

12 See Endnote 1-5, p. 75.

13 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 February 1832, pp. 10-11. See Endnote 1-6, p. 75.

14 See Endnote 1-7, p. 75.

FIGURE 1-4. Dog Code, 1987
Brian Kershnik, 1962-

*Here is wisdom and it remaineth in me.*¹ The son of a petroleum geologist, artist Brian Kershnik grew up in Angola, Thailand, West Texas, and Pakistan before going to Denmark as a missionary—learning much in the process about the inadequacy of language for communicating life's essential—and ultimately ineffable—realities.² About this painting, he writes: "This is... about communication that we do not, will not, or cannot understand. The written characters are borrowed from the writing of Joe Adams, a man with Down's syndrome with whom I have collaborated now for nearly ten years. His beautiful letters appear to mimic the act of writing as he has observed it. He can tell you what a block of his text is generally about because he knows that stories emerge in a mysterious way from characters just like his. I am fascinated by his unfathomable and beautiful symbols, and I borrowed several for this picture."³

Though we are of the same nature as God, and have the potential to eventually become like Him, the difference in our comprehension of the universe is far greater than the gap that divides animals from man.⁴ Regrettably, we widen that gap when we refuse to speak to Him from the center of our souls.⁵ Yet

God continually endeavors to speak to us "in [our] weakness, after the manner of [our] language, that [we] might come to understanding,"⁶ a concept that Stark calls "divine accommodation."⁷

In November 1832, Joseph Smith prayed fervently for a longer glimpse at the reality behind the "dark curtain," and a release from the limitations of human language: "Oh, Lord, deliver us in due time from the little, narrow prison, almost as it were, total darkness of paper, pen and ink; and a crooked, broken, scattered and imperfect language."⁸ Our problem, of course, is not only one of language, but more importantly in the fact that, as Nibley observes, "You comprehend others only to the degree you are like them."⁹

1 Moses 1:31.

2 P. J. Schakel, Reason, p. 86; W. Shakespeare, Hamlet, 2:2:192, p. 1155.

3 L. Norris et al., Kershnik, p. 87. See Endnote 1-10, p. 76.

4 See Endnote 1-11, p. 76.

5 C. S. Lewis, Faces, p. 294; P. J. Schakel, Reason, pp. 78-80, 85.

6 D&C 1:24. See Endnote 1-12, p. 76.

7 R. Stark, Discovering, pp. 5-8. See Endnote 1-13, p. 77.

8 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 27 November 1832, 1:299. See Excursus 1: Speech, Writing, and Revelation, p. 512.

9 H. W. Nibley, Unrolling, p. 165; cf. Commentary 4:28-b, p. 276. See Endnote 1-14, p. 77.

for Joseph's arrest... On June 28, he was carried off to court in South Bainbridge by constable Ebenezer Hatch, trailed by a mob that Hatch thought planned to waylay them en route. When a wheel came off the constable's wagon, the mob nearly caught up, but, working fast, the two men replaced it in time and drove on. Hatch lodged Joseph in a tavern in South Bainbridge and slept all night with his feet against the door and a musket by his side....

The hearing [the next day] dragged on until night, when Justice Chamberlain... acquitted Joseph. Joseph had no sooner heard the verdict than a constable from neighboring Broome County served a warrant for the same crimes. The constable hurried Joseph off on a fifteen-mile journey without a pause for a meal. When they stopped for the night, the constable offered no protection from the tavern-haunters' ridicule. After a dinner of crusts and water, Joseph was put next to the wall, and the constable lay close against him to prevent escape.

At ten the next morning, Joseph was in court again... [Joseph's lawyer John Reed] said witnesses were examined until 2 a.m., and the case argued for another two hours. The three justices again acquitted Joseph... The next day Joseph and Emma were safely home in Harmony.

Joseph and Cowdery tried to steal back to Colesville a few days later to complete the confirmations that the trials had interrupted, but their enemies were too alert. They had no sooner arrived at the Knights' than the mob began to gather. The Knights had suffered along with Joseph. On the night of the South Bainbridge trial, their wagons had been turned over

FIGURE 1-5. Relativity, 1953
M. C. Escher, 1898-1972

...all things are present with me, for I know them all.¹ Both scripture and prophetic statements imply that for the Lord “the past, the present, and the future were and are, with Him, one eternal ‘now,’”² a condition that surpasses current scientific understanding.³ Escher’s representation invites viewers to contrast the limited point of view of each figure in the scene to such an all-encompassing perspective.

“This is perhaps Escher’s best-known print on the theme of relativity. It also is a fine example of Escher’s focus on unusual, and often conflicting, points of view. Here we have three forces of gravity working perpendicularly to one another. Three earth-planes cut across each other at right angles, and human beings are living on each of them. It is impossible for the inhabitants of different worlds to walk or sit or stand on the same floor, because they have differing perceptions of what is horizontal and what is vertical. Yet they may well share the use of the same staircase. On the top staircase illustrated here, two people are moving side by side and in the same direction, and yet one of them is going downstairs and the other upstairs. Contact between them is out of the question because they live in different worlds and therefore can have no knowledge of each other’s existence.”⁴

1 Moses 1:6.

2 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 15 April 1842, p. 220.

3 See Commentary 1:6-g, p. 48; Commentary 2:1-e, p. 94; and Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537.

4 M. C. Escher, Graphic Work. See Endnote 1-8, p. 75.

and sunk in the water. Mobbers piled rails against the doors and sank chains in the stream. On Joseph’s and Cowdery’s return to Colesville, there was no time for a meeting or even a meal before they had to flee. Joseph said they traveled all night, “except a short time, during which we were forced to rest ourselves[s] under a large tree by the way side, sleeping and watching alternately.”¹⁵

Later, the Prophet coolly summarized these circumstances and described how the revelation of Moses 1 had provided needed encouragement:¹⁶

... amid all the trials and tribulations we had to wade through, the Lord, who well knew our infantile and delicate situation, vouchsafed for us a supply of strength, and granted us “line upon line” of knowledge—“here a little and there a little,”¹⁷ of which the [vision of Moses] was a precious morsel.

The Setting and Genre of Moses 1¹⁸

The events described in Moses 1 apparently took place sometime after Jehovah called Moses out of the burning bush¹⁹ but before Moses had returned to Egypt to deliver the children of Israel.²⁰ Extracanonical writings parallel the book of Moses account in affirming that the stories of the Creation and the Fall were revealed to this great prophet and leader of ancient Israel in vision. For example, the book of Jubilees prefaces a recital of the Creation and other events of Genesis with the Lord’s instructions to Moses to record what he would see in vision.²¹ Similarly, 4 Ezra preserves a tradition that the Lord led Moses “up on Mount Sinai,

15 R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 116-118.

16 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, June 1830, 1:98. See Endnote 1-9, p. 76.

17 Isaiah 28:10.

18 See Endnote 1-15, p. 78.

19 Moses 1:17.

20 Moses 1:25-26.

21 O.S. Wintermute, Jubilees 2:52, p. 54. See Endnote 1-16, p. 78.

where I kept him with me many days; and I told him many wondrous things, and showed him the secrets of the times and declared to him the end of times. Then I commanded him saying, These words you shall publish openly, and these you shall keep secret.”²²

The details of Moses’ experience in chapter 1 place it squarely in the tradition of ancient “heavenly ascent” literature and its relationship to temple theology, rites, and ordinances.²³ Although the stories of such ascents are similar in many respects to temple initiation rites, they make the claim of being something more. While ancient temple rituals dramatically depict a figurative journey into the presence of God, the ascent literature portrays prophets who experience actual encounters with Deity within the heavenly temple—the “completion or fulfillment” of the “types and images” in the ordinances.²⁴ In such encounters, the prophet may experience a vision of eternity or the conferral of certain blessings that are “made sure”²⁵ by the voice of God Himself.

Though Moses 1 serves as a superb introduction to succeeding chapters describing the Creation and the Fall, its separate prologue²⁶ and epilogue²⁷ bracket the revelation, signaling its status as an independent narrative unit in its own right.²⁸ Verses 1-2 provide what Turner calls an “announcement of plot”²⁹—a brief synopsis of the chapter describing how Moses was “caught up” to receive the glory of God and converse with Him face-to-face. The outline of events shown in the figure above details how Moses first leaves His heavenly home and then undertakes a step-by-step return to the Father.³⁰

Following the prologue, Moses is given a description of God’s majesty and a confirmation of the work to which he had previously been foreordained as a son of God in the similitude of the Only Begotten.³¹ He is then shown the “world upon which he was created”—referring 22 B.M. Metzger, Fourth Ezra, 14:4-6, p. 553; cf. Moses 1:23, 1:42.

23 Excursus 54: Table of Parallels with the Apocalypse of Abraham, p. 694. See also e.g., E. Isaac, 1 Enoch, 14:8-25, pp. 20-21; F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 1:8, pp. 114-117; H. C. Kee, Testaments, Levi 5, pp. 789-790; 2 Corinthians 12:1-3; Revelation 4:1; 1 Nephi 8-13; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, p. 205. See Endnote 1-20, p. 79.

24 H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 312; cf. pp. 310-311. See W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 85:14-16, p. 159.

25 2 Peter 1:10. See Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519.

26 Moses 1:1-2.

27 Moses 1:42.

28 See Endnote 1-17, p. 78.

29 See Endnote 1-18, p. 78.

30 Moses 1:31. See Endnote 1-19, p. 78.

31 Moses 1:3-7. See Endnote 1-21, p. 79.

FIGURE 1-7. Abraham and the Angel Yahoel Approach the Throne of God, ca. 1300. Photo: Stephen T. Whitlock, 1951-

SEE COLOR PLATE 1-7.

*I saw... a throne [made] of fire and the many-eyed Wheels... And under the throne [I saw] four singing fiery Living Creatures... And a voice came to me... saying, ...“Look at the levels which are under the expanse on which you are brought”... And while he was still speaking, ... behold, the levels opened.*¹ Striking parallels to Moses’ experience are found in the Apocalypse of Abraham.² This illustration from a fourteenth-century Slavonic manuscript³ shows Abraham and the Yahoel approaching the throne of God, or rather of Christ as the illustrator depicts the scene. Behind God sits a Metatron figure, whose identity may relate to the statement that “Michael is with me [God] in order to bless you forever.”⁴ Beneath the throne are two fiery seraphim and a many-eyed “wheel” praising God.

The throne is surrounded by a series of heavenly veils, representing different levels of the firmament separating the material world—signified by the outermost dark blue veil—from God. In both the Apocalypse and the book of Moses, the key phrase “as the voice was still speaking” marks the prophet’s approach to the veil.⁵ Like Moses, Abraham looks down upon the progressively opened veils to see the affairs of what is called in modern revelation the “kingdoms of a lower order,”⁶ specifically, in this case, the events of the Creation and the Garden of Eden.⁷

1 A. Kulik, Retroverting, Apocalypse of Abraham 18:3, 19:1-4, pp. 24-25.

2 Excursus 54: Table of Parallels with the Apocalypse of Abraham, p. 694; cf. Figure E53-12 and Figure E53-13, p. 684.

3 P. P. Novickij, Otkrovenie Avraama.

4 A. Kulik, Retroverting, Apocalypse of Abraham 10:17, p. 18.

5 See Commentary 1:27-a, p. 62.

6 D&C 130:9.

7 A. Kulik, Retroverting, Apocalypse of Abraham 21:1-23:13, pp. 26-28. See Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62.

to the preexistent spirit realm—and “all the children of men which are, and which were created”—paralleling the view of organized intelligences given to Abraham.³² Then, having gone out the presence of the Father and no longer being clothed with His glory, Moses falls to the earth—meaning, first, that he collapsed in weakness, and, second, that he descended again to the relative darkness of the telestial world. He is then left to himself to be tested in a dramatic encounter with Satan.³³ Having banished Satan through the power of the Only Begotten (a motif linked to baptism³⁴), Moses is “filled with the Holy Ghost.”³⁵ Continuing to press forward, he “calls upon the name of God” in sacred prayer, and is answered by a voice from behind the veil enumerating specific blessings.³⁶ While “the voice is still speaking,” Moses looks at the veil and beholds every particle of the earth and all of its inhabitants and then sees “many lands; and each land was called earth.”³⁷

The culminating sequence begins in verse 31 when Moses, having continued to inquire of the Lord,³⁸ comes to stand in His presence. God then speaks with Moses face to face, 32 Moses 1:8; cf. Abraham 3:22-23.

33 Moses 1:9-23.

34 See Commentary 1:20-a, p. 57.

35 Moses 1:24.

36 Moses 1:25-26. See Endnote 1-22, p. 79.

37 Moses 1: 27-28, 29. See Endnote 1-23, p. 79.

38 Moses 1:30.

FIGURE 1-8. Guardians Part the Veils, Taking Muhammad by the Hand to See the Throne of God

SEE COLOR PLATE 1-8.

When Gabriel took him up to each of the heavens and asked permission to enter, he had to say whom he had brought and whether he had received a mission [or: had been sent for] and they would say “God grant him life, brother and friend!” until they reached the seventh heaven and his Lord.¹ Doubting Meccans had asked that Muhammad “confirm the authenticity of his prophethood by ascending to heaven and there receiving a holy book... In this, he was to conform to a model illustrated by many still-extant legends... regarding Enoch, Moses, Daniel, Mani, and many other messengers who had risen to heaven, met God, and received from his right hand a book of scripture containing the revelation they were to proclaim.”² During his “night journey” (isra), the angel Gabriel mounted him on Buraq, a winged steed, that “took him to the horizon” and then, in an instant, to the temple mount in Jerusalem.³ At the Gate of the Guard, Ishmael “asks Muhammad’s name and inquires whether he is indeed a true messenger.”⁴ After having given a satisfactory answer, Muhammad was permitted to gradually ascend from the depths of hell to the highest of the seven heavens on a golden ladder (mi’raj).⁵ At the gates of the Celestial Temple, a guardian angel again “ask[ed] who he [was]. Gabriel introduce[d] Muhammad, who [was] then allowed to enter the gardens of Paradise.”⁶

Commenting on the implications of this experience for later Muslims, Schimmel writes: “Islamic modernists..., when discussing the heavenly journey, have pointed out that Muhammad was able to speak to God in a true I-and-Thou relationship. This seemed to Iqbal a very important corrective of the widespread doctrine of the Unity of Being: the legend of the heavenly journey confirms that God is not a mute, remote prima causa but indeed a personal power who can be addressed, and thus proves that there is the possibility of a fruitful person-to-person dialogue between Creator and creature, a dialogue in prayer, out of which true religious activity can grow.”⁷

1 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Sirat Rasul Allāh 270-271, p. 186.

2 D. C. Peterson, Muhammad (2001), p. 527.

3 Ibid., pp. 528-529.

4 A. Schimmel, Messenger, p. 160.

5 No relationship to the English word “mirage.” See W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 136; M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Sirat Rasul, 263-271, pp. 181-187.

6 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 136 n. 134.

7 A. Schimmel, Messenger, p. 164.

describing His purposes for this earth and its inhabitants,³⁹ and outlining the Creation, the Fall, and how the Plan of Redemption was given to Adam and Eve.⁴⁰

Moses’ transforming experience prepared him for the next stage of his mission.⁴¹ Explaining the purpose of a vision of good and evil that was opened to the mind of Joseph Smith at Hill Cumorah in 1823, the angel Moroni said:

“All this is shown, the good and the evil, the holy and the impure, the glory of God and the power of darkness, that ye may know hereafter the two powers and never be influenced or overcome by that wicked one. Behold, whatever entices and leads to good and to do good, is of God, and whatever does not is of that wicked one: it is he that fills the hearts of men with evil, to walk in darkness and blaspheme God; and you may learn from henceforth, that his ways are to destruction, but the way of holiness is peace and rest.”⁴²

39 Moses 1:35-40.

40 Moses chapters 2-5. See Endnote 1-24, p. 79.

41 See Endnote 1-25, p. 80.

42 Messenger and Advocate, 2:1, October 1835, p. 198, in F. W. Kirkham, New Witness 1, pp. 98-99 and J. Smith, Jr., Papers 1989-1992, 1:87; cf. D&C 88:6, 122:7-8.

Moses 1: Text and Commentary

CHAPTER 1 (June 1830)

PROLOGUE (PP. 42-44)

THE ^awords of God, which he spake unto Moses at a time when Moses was ^bcaught up into an ^cexceedingly high mountain, 2 And ^ahe saw God face to face, and he talked with him, and the ^bglory of God was upon Moses; therefore Moses could endure his presence.

MOSES IN SPIRIT WORLD (PP. 44-50)

3 And ^aGod spake unto Moses, saying: ^bBehold, I am the Lord God ^cAlmighty, and ^dEndless is my name; for I am ^ewithout beginning of days or end of years; and is not this endless?

4 And, behold, thou art ^amy son; wherefore look, and I will show thee the workmanship of mine hands; but not all, for ^bmy works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease.

5 Wherefore, no man can behold all my ^aworks, except he behold all my glory; and ^bno man can behold all my glory, and afterwards remain ^cin the flesh on the earth.

6 And ^aI have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of ^bmine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten ^cis and shall be ^dthe Savior, for he is ^efull of grace and truth; but ^fthere is no God beside me, and ^gall things are present with me, for I know them all.

7 And now, behold, ^athis one thing I show unto thee, Moses, my son, for ^bthou art in the world, and now I show it unto thee.

8 And it came to pass that ^aMoses looked, and ^bbeheld the world upon which he was created; and Moses beheld the world and the ends thereof, and ^call the children of men which are, and which were created; of the same he greatly marveled and wondered.

MOSES FALLS TO EARTH (PP. 51-52)

9 And the presence of God withdrew from Moses, that his glory was not upon Moses; and Moses was left unto himself. And ^aas he was left unto himself, he fell unto the earth.

10 And it came to pass that ^ait was for the space of many hours before Moses did again receive his natural strength like unto man; and he said unto himself: Now, ^bfor this cause I know that ^cman is nothing, which thing I never had supposed.

11 But now ^amine own eyes have beheld God; but not my natural, but my spiritual eyes, for my natural eyes could not have beheld; for I should have withered and died in his presence; but his glory was upon me; and I beheld his face, for I was transfigured before him.

MOSES DEFEATS SATAN (PP. 52-59)

12 And it came to pass that when Moses had said these words, behold, ^aSatan came ^btempting him, saying: ^cMoses, son of man, ^dworship me.

13 ^aAnd it came to pass that ^bMoses looked upon Satan and said: Who art thou? For behold, ^cI am a son of God, in the similitude of his Only Begotten; and ^dwhere is thy glory, that I should worship thee?

14 For behold, I could not look upon God, except his glory should come upon me, and I were ^atransfigured before him. But ^bI can look upon thee in the natural man. ^cIs it not so, surely?

15 Blessed be the name of my God, for his Spirit hath not altogether withdrawn from me, or else ^awhere is thy glory, for it is darkness unto me? And I can judge between thee and God; for ^bGod said unto me: Worship God, for him only shalt thou serve.

16 ^aGet thee hence, Satan; deceive me not; for God said unto me: ^bThou art after the similitude of mine Only Begotten.

17 And he also gave me ^acommandments when he called unto me out of the burning bush, saying: ^bCall upon God ^cin the name of mine Only Begotten, and worship me.

18 And again Moses said: I will not cease to call upon God, I have other things to inquire of him: for ^ahis glory has been upon me, wherefore ^bI can judge between him and thee. Depart hence, Satan.

19 And now, when Moses had said these words, ^aSatan cried with a loud voice, and ^bbranted upon the earth, and ^ccommanded, saying: ^dI am the Only Begotten, ^eworship me.

20 And it came to pass that ^aMoses began to fear exceedingly; and as he began to fear, he saw the bitterness of hell. Nevertheless, calling upon God, he received strength, and he commanded, saying: ^bDepart from me, Satan, for this one God only will I worship, which is the God of glory.

21 And now ^aSatan began to tremble, and the earth shook; and ^bMoses received strength, and called upon God, ^csaying: In the name of the Only Begotten, depart hence, Satan.

22 And it came to pass that ^aSatan cried with a loud voice, with weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth; and ^bhe departed hence, even from the presence of Moses, that he beheld him not.

23 And now ^aof this thing Moses bore record; but ^bbecause of wickedness it is not had among the children of men.

MOSES CALLS UPON GOD (PP. 59-61)

24 And it came to pass that ^awhen Satan had departed from the presence of Moses, that ^bMoses lifted up his eyes unto heaven, ^cbeing filled with the Holy Ghost, ^dwhich beareth record of the Father and the Son;

25 And ^acalling upon the name of God, ^bhe beheld his glory again, for it was upon him; and ^che heard a voice, saying: ^dBlessed art thou, Moses, for I, the Almighty, have chosen thee, and ^ethou shalt be made stronger than many waters; for they shall obey thy command ^fas if thou wert God.

26 And lo, I am with thee, even unto the end of thy days; for ^athou shalt deliver my people from bondage, even Israel my chosen.

VISION AT THE VEIL (PP. 62-64)

27 And it came to pass, ^aas the voice was still speaking, ^bMoses cast his eyes and beheld the earth, yea, ^ceven all of it; and there was not a particle of it which he did not behold, discerning it ^dby the spirit of God.

28 And he beheld also the inhabitants thereof, and there was not a soul which he beheld not; and he discerned them by the Spirit of God; and their numbers were great, ^aeven numberless as the sand upon the sea shore.

29 And he beheld many lands; and ^aeach land was called earth, and there were inhabitants on the face thereof.

30 And it came to pass that Moses called upon God, saying: ^aTell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?

IN GOD'S PRESENCE (PP. 64-69)

31 And behold, the ^aglory of the Lord was upon Moses, so that ^bMoses stood in the presence of God, and talked with him face to face. And ^cthe Lord God said unto Moses: For mine own purpose have I made these things. ^dHere is wisdom and it remaineth in me.

32 And ^aby the word of my power, have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is ^bfull of grace and truth.

33 And ^aworlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and ^bby the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten.

34 And the first man of all men have I called ^aAdam, which is many. 35 But ^aonly an account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you. For behold, there are many worlds that have passed away by the word of my power. And there are many that now stand, and ^binnumerable are they unto man; but ^call things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them. 36 And it came to pass that Moses spake unto the Lord, saying: Be merciful unto thy servant, O God, and tell me concerning this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, and also the heavens, and then thy servant will be content. 37 And the Lord God spake unto Moses, ^asaying: The heavens, they are many, and they cannot be numbered unto man; but they are numbered unto me,	for they are mine. 38 And as ^aone earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof even so shall another come; and ^bthere is no end to my works, neither to my words. 39 For behold, ^athis is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man. 40 And now, Moses, my son, I will speak unto thee concerning ^athis earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write the things which I shall speak. EPILOGUE (PP. 69-71) 41 And in a day when the children of men shall esteem my words as naught and ^atake many of them from the book which thou shalt write, behold, ^bI will raise up another like unto thee; and they	shall be had again among the children of men—among as many as shall believe. 42 (These words were spoken unto Moses in the mount, the name of which shall not be known among the children of men. And now they are spoken unto you. ^aShow them not unto any except them that believe. Even so. Amen.)
--	--	--

1 The words of God, which he spake unto Moses at a time when Moses was caught up into an exceedingly high mountain,

- 1 a words of God, which he spake unto Moses. Verses 1 and 2 form a preface that should be read as an “announcement of plot” for what will occur in the rest of the chapter.⁴³ Nibley compares such remarks to “stage directions” written in red ink in Egyptian texts, intended for recital by the lectern priest.⁴⁴

Allusions to a revelation on Sinai in which Moses saw the panorama of creation occur in several ancient sources⁴⁵—this chapter gives an account of the dramatic context preceding that event.

- b caught up. The statement that Moses was “caught up” reveals that his ascent was accomplished by God’s power and not his own. Such a grammatical construction is called the “divine passive,” the unstated agent being God.⁴⁶

Parallel descriptions occur elsewhere in scripture. 2 Corinthians 12:2 says that Paul was “caught up”—i.e., “snatched away”⁴⁷—to the third heaven.⁴⁸ 1 Thessalonians 4:17 uses the same term to describe those who would be taken up from the earth to descend with Jesus Christ at his second coming.⁴⁹ Similarly, Enoch saw many who were “caught up by the powers of heaven into Zion” after his city had been taken up into heaven.⁵⁰ Such experiences may imply a context in which priesthood ordinances are received. For example, we are told elsewhere that Adam was “caught away by the Spirit of the Lord” into the water and baptized.⁵¹

Another close parallel to Moses’ experience is found in 1 Nephi 11:1 where Nephi was “caught away in the Spirit of the Lord, yea, into an exceedingly high mountain, which [he] never had before seen.”⁵² Nephi later said that “upon the wings of his Spirit hath my body been carried away upon exceedingly high mountains,”⁵³ just as the Apocalypse of Abraham records that Abraham was raised up to heaven on the wings of a bird.⁵⁴

Ephrem the Syrian portrays Eve in the Garden of Eden as a dove, and Satan appearing as a dove to deceive her.⁵⁵ However, the Prophet explained that: “The sign of the dove was instituted before the creation of the world, a witness for the Holy Ghost, and the Devil cannot come in the sign of a dove.”⁵⁶ Nibley comments: “[T]he dove that takes one to heaven is the Holy Ghost, who also instructs and teaches ‘through the heavens,’ ‘revealing... the grand Key-words... as, also, the sign’⁵⁷ by which alone supernal knowledge can be conveyed.”⁵⁸ Whether representing the ascent to heaven of the souls of the living⁵⁹ or dead,⁶⁰ or else the 43 L. Turner, Announcements; cf. H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, pp. 193-194.

44 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, pp. 193-194, 18, p. 220; cf. Moses 1:23, 42.

45 M. Barker, Revelation, pp. 24-25; E. D. Clark, Prologue.

46 K. L. Barney, June 21 2006.

47 Greek harpazo.

48 Cf. 3 Nephi 28:13.

49 Cf. D&C 88:96; 101:31; 109:75.

50 Moses 7:27.

51 Moses 6:64.

52 Cf. Exodus 19:3; Ezekiel 40:2; JST Matthew 4:8; Revelations 21:10; Moses 7:2. For other parallels between Nephi and Moses, see N. B. Reynolds, Kingship, pp. 172-177.

53 2 Nephi 4:25.

54 R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, 12:10, p. 695; cf. H. W. Nibley, Abraham 2000, p. 18, Genesis 15:9ff. See Figure E53-13, p. 684 for an illustration from a Slavonic Apocalypse of Abraham that shows the patriarch and the angel Yahoel ascending on the wings of birds. See Endnote 1-26, p. 80.

55 Ephrem the Syrian, Fall, 4, p. 101. See Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163; 4:5-b, p. 246.

56 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 29 January 1843, p. 276; cf. B. R. McConkie, Mortal Messiah, 1:404; J. Smith, Jr., Words, 21 March 1841, p. 66.

57 Book of Abraham, Facsimile 2, explanation of Figure 7.

58 H. W. Nibley, Abraham 2000, pp. 56-57.

59 E.g., Nephi, Moses.

60 E.g., E. S. Drower, Adam, pp. 8, 32; H. W. Nibley, New Look, July 1969, p. 109; H. W. Nibley, Approach to Abraham, pp. 261-264; M. D. Rhodes, Hor, p. 20.

1 The words of God, which he spake unto Moses at a time when Moses was caught up into an exceedingly high mountain, descent of heavenly messengers to earth,⁶¹ the common idea behind the symbol of a bird—and specifically in this context a dove—is that of sacred communication and communion between the spheres, “the certain tie between heaven and earth.”⁶²

- c exceedingly high mountain. The location of this mountain is assumed to be somewhere near the northwest edge of the Arabian Peninsula. Potter adduces evidence that identifies the site with a mountain in the vicinity of Midian named Jabel al-Lawz.⁶³ He argues that at this location, rather than at the traditional spot on St. Catherine’s mountain in the Sinai Peninsula, Moses would have received his commission to free Israel from Egypt.⁶⁴ Later, it also would be the place where God would reveal the Law and the instructions for building the Tabernacle, and where the incident with the golden calf would take place.⁶⁵ Potter further conjectures that this may be the same “exceedingly high mountain” to which Nephi was “caught away” in vision,⁶⁶ since it is less than eighteen miles away from what some believe is the most plausible candidate for the valley of Lemuel, where he was camped at the time.⁶⁷

Note the similar wording that is associated with the mountain where God showed himself to the Brother of Jared: it was called Shelem “because of its exceeding height.”⁶⁸ As Thomas observes, the essential thing is to suggest “a place that is suitably high for temple activity.”⁶⁹ Thomas describes the spectrum of meanings associated with the three Hebrew consonants slm: “peace, tranquility, contentment, safety, completeness, being sound, finished, full, or perfect. Shelem (and Hebrew shalom) signify peace with God, especially in the covenant relationship. It also connotes submission to God, which we see in the Arabic words muslim and islam. In particular, shelem has reference to the peace offering of the law of sacrifice, which corresponds to the seeking of fellowship with God, and thereby has a relationship to the meanings of the at-one-ment; that is, shelem, fellowship, sealing, and at-one-ment have an obvious relationship.”⁷⁰ Nibley further explains: “The original word of Shelem, Shalom, means ‘peace,’ but it originally meant ‘safe’ (safety, security) because it was a high place. The Shelem was a high place. It’s still the word for ladder: silma, selma, a sullam in Arabic.”⁷¹ This connotation is significant because the ladder is a symbol often used to represent the process of exaltation.⁷²

- 61 H. W. Nibley, New Look, July 1969, pp. 108-110, August 1969, pp. 75-77; H. W. Nibley, Approach to Abraham, pp. 258-265, 268-269; J. Smith, Jr., Words, before 8 August 1839, p. 10; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, December 1835, p. 98.
- 62 H. W. Nibley, New Look, July 1969, p. 109; H. W. Nibley, Approach to Abraham, p. 263. See W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 156 for a Sufi allegory involving birds who fly to the Celestial Temple. See also E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, pp. 82-83; B. Mikael, Mysteries, pp. 18-20; Figure 3-8, p. 145; Figure 6-14, p. 473; Commentary 2:2-c, p. 97; 3:9-g, p. 163; 4:5-b, p. 246. See Endnote E-204, p. 754.
- 63 G. Potter, Sinai. Frank Moore Cross agrees with a general location in Midian (F. M. Cross, Epic, pp. 46, 66-67).
- 64 Exodus 3.
- 65 Exodus 19-32.
- 66 1 Nephi 11:1.
- 67 S. K. Brown, Hunt; G. Potter et al., Lehi, pp. 31-51; R. Wellington et al., Lehi’s Trail, p. 29. For a differing view, see J. R. Chadwick, Wrong Place.
- 68 Ether 3:1. A change to “exceedingly” was made in the LDS 1921 edition (K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 57). Note that, like the Book of Mormon, OT1 and OT2 read “exceeding” rather than “exceedingly” (S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 83, 591).
- 69 M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared, p. 391. Regarding a plausible candidate for the mountain Shelem, Potter notes: “At nearly 6,000 feet, [Jabal Samham] is the highest mountain in southern Oman and is mentioned by name in Genesis 10:30, where it is known as ‘Sephar, a mount of the east’” (G. Potter et al., Lehi, p. 130).
- 70 M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared, p. 391.
- 71 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, p. 196.
- 72 R. Guénon, Symboles, pp. 336-339; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 348—see pp. 346-348, 354. See also M. C. Thomas, Hebrews; M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared; Genesis 28:12; overview of Moses 1, p. 34; Figure 5-13, p. 351.

1 The words of God, which he spake unto Moses at a time when Moses was caught up into an exceedingly high mountain,

2 And he saw God face to face, and he talked with him, and the glory of God was upon Moses; therefore Moses could endure his presence.

3 And God spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, I am the Lord God Almighty, and Endless is my name; for I am without beginning of days or end of years; and is not this endless?

In scripture, the term “mountain” is often used figuratively to describe temples.⁷³ When temples have not been available, mountains have often provided the same function.⁷⁴

- 2 a he saw God face to face. Moses’ encounter with God was no mere dream or vague sense of presence, but rather an intimate and direct dialogue with a glorious visible and audible personage. The eyewitness quality of Moses’ experience is emphasized by repeated references to its visual aspects.⁷⁵

Thomas observes that “seeing” and “knowing” are often closely associated in scripture, the ultimate in knowledge being manifested when, like Moses or the Brother of Jared, one is permitted to see the Lord face to face.⁷⁶

- b glory of God was upon Moses. The Hebrew word for the glory (kabod—heavy, weighty, burdensome) of God connotes the magnificence of His immediate presence. The sense in which this may also signal a real bodily presence is captured in the English phrase: “he was there in all his glory.”⁷⁷

The term “glory” is repeated twelve times within the chapter, serving to make the contrast between God’s splendor and Satan’s pale imitation blatantly apparent.⁷⁸ Moses 1 frequently reminds the reader that man can neither endure God’s presence nor fully discern His works unless transfigured by His power.⁷⁹ The exposition of the theme of God’s glory will culminate in v. 39.

- 3 a God spake unto Moses. Although v. 6 seems to imply that God the Father is speaking directly to Moses, the voice is typically understood to be that of Jehovah, the premortal Jesus Christ.⁸⁰ Moses 5:9, in similar fashion, seems to be an example of the Holy Ghost speaking as the Father. Whereas such ambiguity in scripture sometimes may be due to historical complexities in textual transmission, in this context, it could be an example of divine investiture. This concept describes the situation where Christ is authorized to speak and act as if He were the Father.⁸¹

73 Isaiah 2:2; Psalm 48:2; R. J. Clifford, Temple; J. M. Lundquist, Meeting Place, pp. 6-10; J. M. Lundquist, Typology, pp. 84-86.

74 E.g., the Mount of Transfiguration (M. B. Brown, Gate, pp. 174-175, 195 n. 23), the mount where the Lord showed himself to the Brother of Jared (M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared), and Ensign Peak in the Salt Lake Valley (M. B. Brown et al., Symbols, pp. 119, 159; B. H. Roberts, Comprehensive History, 3:386).

75 I.e., “see” (Moses 1:2, 20), “look” (vv. 4, 8, 13, 14), “behold” (vv. 5, 7, 8, 11, 22, 25, 27, 28, 29, 35, 39), “show” (v. 7), “eyes” (v. 11, 24), and “discern” (v. 28).

76 E.g., 1 Nephi 5:4; 3 Nephi 11:15; Alma 36:26; D&C 45:46; 50:45; 93:1. See also L. E. Dahl et al., Lectures, 7:16-18, pp. 101-103; J. Smith, Jr., Words, 27 June 1839, p. 5; 1 May 1842, p. 120; 14 May 1843, pp. 200-202; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 27 June 1839, pp. 149-150; M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared, p. 395.

77 T. G. Madsen, House, p. 280.

78 Moses 1:13, 14, 15, 20.

79 Moses 1:1, 5, 9, 11, 14, 25, 31. See also vv. 27, 28; D&C 67:11-12; 84:22; D. C. Mouritsen, Transfiguration. Contrast Commentary 1:14-b, p. 54.

80 Cf. D&C 29:1, 42, 46; M. Barker, Hidden, p. 74; Irenaeus, Proof, 44-45, pp. 76-77; Novatian, Trinity, 18, pp. 627-629.

81 H. D. Peterson, Commentary, pp. 74-75. For the First Presidency’s full statement on this and related topics, see J. R. Clark, Messages, 5:31-32. See also G. L. Burgon, Name; B. R. McConkie, NT Commentary, 1:73, 77, 85, 468; 2:183; 3:137, 138; B. R. McConkie, Promised Messiah, pp. 64, 349, 369, 370, 558, 601-602; B. R. McConkie, Mortal Messiah, 1:349; 2:81; H. D. Peterson, Commentary, pp. 74-75; D. R. Seely, Jehovah; J. E. Talmage, Articles (1984), pp. 424-425; J. A. Tvedtnes, Metcalfe, p. 18.

3 And God spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, I am the Lord God Almighty, and Endless is my name; for I am without beginning of days or end of years; and is not this endless?

4 And, behold, thou art my son; wherefore look, and I will show thee the workmanship of mine hands; but not all, for my works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease.

Noting that “latter-day revelation gives us the fuller account and meaning of what actually took place on the Mount,” Elder Alvin R. Dyer taught that both the Father and the Son were present on this occasion. He saw the event as “similar to that which was experienced by Joseph Smith in the Sacred Grove, wherein God the Father appeared and announced his Son who stood by him, by stating, ‘This is my Beloved Son.’”⁸² If such were indeed the case, it would allow for speech from both the Father and the Son on this occasion, and thus would obviate the need to interpret the words of God to Moses as an instance of divine investiture.

- b Behold I. The “I” is repeated in OT1: “Behold I I.” The current text follows OT2.⁸³

I am. This phrase begins a typical aretology,⁸⁴ whereby God proclaims His particular virtues and offices.⁸⁵ By reinvoking at the start the divine title that was disclosed to Moses previously,⁸⁶ God both establishes His identity and sets the context for the later affirmations of His relationship with Moses.⁸⁷ Later, in Moses’ dialogue with Satan, a similar interplay of divine titles and assertions of relationship recurs with different effect.⁸⁸

- c Almighty. The title recalls the demonstration of God’s power over the waters as the first act of creation.⁸⁹ Moses will in like manner “be made stronger than many waters.”⁹⁰

- d Endless. The term corresponds to the Hebrew Ein Sof, the name used for God in the Jewish Kabbalah.⁹¹ “This name ties to God’s characteristic of being ‘without beginning of days or end of years’ and His creation of ‘innumerable’ worlds.”⁹² It combines to form a single name with the term ‘Eternal.’⁹³ The endlessness of God, His works, and His words is stressed throughout the chapter: “without end,” “numberless,” “without number,” “innumerable,” “cannot be numbered,” “no end.”⁹⁴

- e without beginning of days or end of years. In other places in scripture, this phrase is used to describe the Holy Priesthood.⁹⁵

- 4 a my... mine. The possessives “my” and “mine” are repeated by the Lord throughout His dialogue with Moses.⁹⁶ The recurrence of the pronouns “I” and “me” not only personalizes the account, but also throws into stark relief the almighty, endless, and eternal nature of God in contrast to the subordinate status of Moses and the absurd pretensions of Satan. The 82 A. R. Dyer, Meaning, p. 12.

83 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 83, 591.

84 Greek arete = virtue or quality.

85 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, pp. 213-214.

86 Exodus 3:13-14.

87 I.e., “thou art my son” (Moses 1:4), “my son, thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten” (Moses 1:6).

88 Moses 1:13, 19.

89 Moses 2:1-2.

90 Moses 1:25, R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 21.

91 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, p. 213.

92 Moses 1:3, 35.

93 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 21. See Moses 7:35; D&C 19:11; D&C 132:20.

94 Moses 1:4, 28, 33, 35, 37, 38.

95 JST Hebrews 7:3.

96 I.e., “my name” (Moses 1:3), “my son” (vv. 4, 6, 7, 40), “the workmanship of mine hands” (v. 4), “my works”/ “my work” (vv. 4, 5, 38, 39), “my words” (vv. 4, 38, 41), “my glory” (vv. 5, 39), “mine Only Begotten” (vv. 6, 32, 33), “my chosen” (v. 26), “mine own purpose” (v. 31), “the word of my power” (vv. 32, 35), “they [i.e., all things, the heavens] are mine” (vv. 35, 37).

4 And, behold, thou art my son; wherefore look, and I will show thee the workmanship of mine hands; but not all, for my works are without end, and also my words, for they never cease.

5 Wherefore, no man can behold all my works, except he behold all my glory; and no man can behold all my glory, and afterwards remain in the flesh on the earth.

6 And I have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth; but there is no God beside me, and all things are present with me, for I know them all.

frequent use of “I” continues in Moses 2, where the JST effects a transformation that collapses the distance of Genesis’ third-person creation account into first-person narrative.

b my works are without end, and also my words. See v. 32 and Commentary 1:38-b, p. 67.

5 a works. This is given as “work” in OT2. OT1 and all publications read “works.”⁹⁷

b no man can behold all my glory. Clark cites a parallel talmudic source that says that: “God would not grant Moses’ wish to behold all his glory.”⁹⁸

c in the flesh on the earth. No one can behold all God’s glory before he has received God’s fulness—thus Moses’ vision must be limited at this time to “this one thing.”⁹⁹ Note that the three Nephite disciples were “caught up into heaven” and “were changed from this body of flesh into an immortal state, that they could behold the things of God.”¹⁰⁰

Nibley remarks that “dire consequences” may result from transgression of divinely-set bounds: “Pistis Sophia went beyond her ‘degree’ and, becoming ambitious, ‘looked behind the veil’ [and] fell from glory.”¹⁰¹ Sounding a similar theme, a petitioner in the Islamic mystical text The Mother of Books is warned by God that if one were to move “the curtain and the veil the slightest bit [to] make the high king visible... their spirit would leave their body.”¹⁰²

The words “on the earth” were inserted in the hand of Sidney Rigdon above the relevant line of the passage in OT2, without punctuation.¹⁰³ RLDS D&C 22:3d adds a comma, resulting in the phrase “in the flesh, on the earth.” If it correctly represents the intended sense, this alternate punctuation might imply that the two clauses are parallel and, perhaps, synonymous.

6 a I have a work for thee, Moses, my son. Having sketched out the overwhelming extensiveness of His own works and glory,¹⁰⁴ God outlines the work that Moses is foreordained to perform, the nature of which will be further elaborated after his defeat of Satan.¹⁰⁵ The Prophet Joseph Smith spoke of Moses specifically as one of the “sons of God who exalt[ed] themselves to be Gods, even from before the foundation of the world.”¹⁰⁶ In this verse, the Lord invokes Moses’ status as a son of God in the similitude of [the] Only Begotten.¹⁰⁷ This suggests that Moses’ vision must extend beyond any specific assignments to the realization that, in a general sense in this life, and more fully in the next, his work is to be patterned after God’s 97 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 591 and 59.

98 E. D. Clark, Prologue, p. 140.

99 Moses 1:7. See also Commentary 4:28-b, p. 276.

100 3 Nephi 28:13, 15. See also 3 Nephi 28:36-40.

101 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 443. See C. Schmidt, Pistis, 1:29-30, pp. 83-91; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 1:29-30, pp. 33-36.

102 W. Barnstone et al., Gnostic, p. 672.

103 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 591; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 59. Contrast 2 Nephi 10:7.

104 Moses 1:4-5.

105 Moses 1:25-26.

106 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 June 1844, p. 375; cf. Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519. See Endnote E-4, p. 703.

107 Cf. Moses 1:13, Deuteronomy 18:15.

6 And I have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth; but there is no God beside me, and all things are present with me, for I know them all.

own as he assumes the role of lawgiver, savior, and mediator to his people.¹⁰⁸ Every person who has come to this earth similarly covenanted in premortal life to enter a partnership with the Lord to become saviors for the whole human family.¹⁰⁹

- b mine Only Begotten. Although these words imply that this is the voice of God the Father, it could be instead Jesus Christ who is speaking as the Father by divine investiture of authority.¹¹⁰

Only Begotten. The expression “Only Begotten” appears five times in the KJV New Testament.¹¹¹ The term also appears nine times in the Book of Mormon, 13 times in the Doctrine and Covenants, and 25 times in the relatively brief book of Moses.¹¹²

Insofar as NT usage is concerned, Barney notes that “Only Begotten” derives from a mistranslation of a Greek term (monogenes) that means either “sole descent, only child” or “only, peerless, matchless, unique, of singular importance.” “Although it is a mistranslation, it is not that far removed from the correct meaning, as the suggestion of being begotten is to some extent inherent in the designation ‘son’ (huios) itself.”¹¹³ However, it is clear that the Apostle “John did not refer to Jesus as God’s ‘only begotten’ son, because he designated all who received Jesus as being spiritually begotten of God.”¹¹⁴ Moreover “in LDS thought we are all spiritually begotten sons and daughters of heavenly parents.” In the case of the book of Moses and other modern scripture, Barney argues that the use of the term Only Begotten “is simply a reflection of the English translational tradition, . . . [though the phrase] works for us theologically with the qualifier ‘in the flesh.’”¹¹⁵

- c is and shall be. This phrase serves to emphasize that Christ’s work as the Savior was not limited to His earthly ministry, but had its beginning “from before the foundation of the world.”¹¹⁶ Moreover, being infinite and eternal, the Atonement can appropriately be referred to as if it had already taken place.¹¹⁷
- d the Savior. This title is not present in OT1,¹¹⁸ but was added above the line in OT2 by an undetermined scribe.¹¹⁹
- e full of grace and truth. D&C 93 makes it clear that receiving the “fulness” is accomplished gradually by continuing from “grace to grace.”¹²⁰ The same revelation invites us to follow Jesus Christ in the same way to the identical end.¹²¹

Comments Nibley, “How do you define grace? That’s charis; that’s everything good. Charis is your attitude toward others, toward everything else. It is an attitude of complete love. It is related to our word cheer and the Latin, gratia which means ‘thanks, grace,’ etc....

108 Exodus 32:30ff.

109 Elder John A. Widtsoe, cited in A. F. Bennett, Saviors, pp. 11-12; B. K. Packer, Holy Temple, p. 216. See also Commentary 1:39-a, p. 68 and 1:41-b, p. 69.

110 See Commentary 1:3-a, p. 44.

111 Plus one JST addition in 1 Timothy 2:4.

112 Moses 1:6, 16, 17, 21, 32, 33; 2:1, 26, 27; 4:1, 3; 5:7, 9, 57; 6:52, 57, 59, 62; 7:50, 59, 62.

113 K. L. Barney, Only.

114 E.g., John 1:12-13; 1 John 3:9.

115 K. L. Barney, Only.

116 See Commentary 5:57-b, p. 399.

117 Cf. Jarom 1:11; Mosiah 3:13, 16:6.

118 See S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 83.

119 Ibid., p. 591; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 59.

120 Moses 1:12-16.

121 D&C 93:19-20. Cf. Moses 1:32, 5:7.

6 And I have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth; but there is no God beside me, and all things are present with me, for I know them all.

Mephistopheles [is] all negative, all willing to destroy. This is the absolute opposite of that... nothing false, nothing deceiving, nothing phony.”¹²²

- f there is no God beside me. Shortly, Moses will be required to refuse Satan’s defiant command: “Moses, son of man, worship me.”¹²³ Later, he will also face the overwhelming challenge of convincing the children of Israel that there is only one God that they should worship, in contrast to the numerous idolatrous deities to whom the Egyptians paid tribute.¹²⁴

Joseph Smith taught that there is “but one God—that is, pertaining to us.”¹²⁵ While clarifying the unique role of the Father with respect to mankind, neither this verse nor the statement of Joseph Smith denies existence to other perfected beings who, although not the subject of worship, may be rightfully called gods.¹²⁶

Note that OT1 and OT2 read “none other God beside me.”¹²⁷ The change to “no God” was first made by the RLDS I.V. publication committee.¹²⁸ The 1851 Times and Seasons publication had “besides” instead of “beside.”¹²⁹

- g all things are present with me. Alma wrote: “all is as one day with God, and time only is measured unto men”¹³⁰ and D&C 130:7 states that “all things for [the angels’] glory are manifest, past, present, and future, and are continually before the Lord.”¹³¹ Moses seems to have temporarily had a similar experience as a mortal.¹³² Elder Neal A. Maxwell concluded: “God does not live in the dimension of time as do we. We are not only hampered by our finiteness (experiential and intellectual), but also by being in the dimension of time. Moreover, God, since ‘all things are present’ with him, is not simply predicting based solely on the past. In ways that are not clear to us, he sees rather than foresees the future, because all things are at once present before him.”¹³³

A similar conception of God’s experience of time was proposed in the sixth century by Boethius.¹³⁴ Current scientific theory also sees the concept of time as being less like a flowing river and more like “a giant block of ice with every moment forever frozen into place.”¹³⁵ Though Einstein, for example, worried about the fact that science could not yet adequately account for the fact that the “experience of the ‘now’ means something special for man,” he firmly resisted the temptation to concede to universal intuition.¹³⁶ A few weeks before his own death, he wrote to the grieving family of a lifelong friend who had just passed away: “Now he has departed from this strange world a little ahead of me. That means nothing. For us believing physicists, the distinction between past, present, and future is only a stubborn illusion.”¹³⁷

122 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, pp. 214-215.

123 Moses 1:12.

124 Exodus 20:2-5; 1 Corinthians 8:5-6. See statement of the First Presidency in J. R. Clark, Messages, 4:269-271.

125 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 June 1844, p. 370.

126 D&C 132:20. See also Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111; 4:11-b, p. 253; 4:28-a, p. 276.

127 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 83, 591.

128 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 59.

129 Ibid., p. 59.

130 Alma 40:8.

131 Cf. D&C 88:41, Isaiah 46:9-10, Acts 15:18, D&C 29:31-33.

132 See Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62.

133 N. A. Maxwell, Things, p. 29; cf. M. Barker, Boundary, pp. 215-217; C. S. Lewis, Image, pp. 88-89; C. S. Lewis, Mere, 4:3, p. 147; C. S. Lewis, Providences; J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, p. 27 n. 1; Hymns (1985), #133: “So may the world its future spread before Thee.”

134 A. M. S. Boethius, Consolation, 5:3-6, pp. 100-114. For more on Boethius, see Moses 1 Gleanings, p. 73.

135 B. Greene, Fabric, p. 141.

136 Ibid., p. 141.

137 Cited in W. Isaacson, Einstein, p. 540. See also D. Wilkinson, Hawking, pp. 119-121.

6 And I have a work for thee, Moses, my son; and thou art in the similitude of mine Only Begotten; and mine Only Begotten is and shall be the Savior, for he is full of grace and truth; but there is no God beside me, and all things are present with me, for I know them all.

7 And now, behold, this one thing I show unto thee, Moses, my son, for thou art in the world, and now I show it unto thee.

8 And it came to pass that Moses looked, and beheld the world upon which he was created; and Moses beheld the world and the ends thereof, and all the children of men which are, and which were created; of the same he greatly marveled and wondered.

The view that God “transcends” time in the above sense not only raises theological questions, but also entails dilemmas from philosophical and scientific perspectives, motivating Ostler’s closely-reasoned arguments that an LDS theological position of this sort is untenable.¹³⁸ For example, if this picture of God’s timelessness is accurate, it would seem that, in some manner, God must be able to stand outside of the universe while also being able to participate in it.¹³⁹ This idea stands in contrast to current scientific understanding embodied in the theory of relativity, which does not admit an observer from within to be “present to all actualities throughout the universe in a single frame of reference.”¹⁴⁰ Moreover, though having appeared to prophets in glorified corporeal form, it seems reasonable to imply that God must somehow be capable of transcending fundamental limitations of human understanding deriving from the finite nature of physical senses and measures, the unimaginable scale of what would need to be known, and—if that were not enough—the fact that a perfect knowledge of the state of things seems precluded by the laws of quantum physics themselves.¹⁴¹

- 7 a this one thing. That is, the world upon which Moses was created.¹⁴² The limited nature of Moses’ vision is emphasized by reiteration: “this one thing,” “the world,” and “it.”¹⁴³ So comprehensive is this limited view, however, that even it will prove overwhelming to Moses.¹⁴⁴

Nibley comments: “I’m going to limit you to this one thing because I have one assignment,’ the Lord says. We focus on the thing we are supposed to do. ‘... for thou art in the world and now I show it unto thee.’ I will show you the world you are in. [This is] the anthropic principle.”¹⁴⁵ Where you are determines the way everything will appear to you and be to you because you have to act from that point. You don’t see everything, you don’t move in all directions, and you don’t know what’s behind you at this very moment.”¹⁴⁶

- b thou art in the world. See Commentary 1:8-b, p. 50.

- 8 a Moses looked. When the Lord spoke with Abraham face to face, He first put His hand upon the latter’s eyes to prepare him for his vision of the universe.¹⁴⁷ Joseph Smith was reportedly so touched at the beginning of the First Vision, and perhaps prior to receiving D&C 76.¹⁴⁸

138 B. T. Ostler, Attributes; B. T. Ostler, Theism. See Sherlock for a useful summary and critique of Ostler’s view-point (R. Sherlock, Ostler, pp. 292-299, 302-303).

139 B. K. Harrison, Truth, p. 166.

140 B. T. Ostler, Attributes, p. 354.

141 See Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537 for more discussion of these issues. Many sources contain extended discussions of God’s foreknowledge and timelessness (e.g., B. M. Hauglid, Time; R. J. Ingebretsen, Astronomy, pp. 38-48; C. S. Lewis, Miracles, pp. 226-234; N. A. Maxwell, Experience, pp. 6-27; B. T. Ostler, Theism, pp. 25-75; D. L. Paulsen, Response to Pinnock, pp. 530-532; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 6 February 1840, 4:78; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 15 April 1842, p. 220; W. V. Smith, JS Commentary, p. 81; J. E. Talmage, Articles (1984), pp. 173-174). For an overview of Egyptian concepts, see H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 228-232.

142 Moses 1:8.

143 Cf. “but not all” (v. 4), “it remaineth in me” (v. 31), and “only an account of this earth” (v. 35).

144 Moses 1:8-10.

145 See Commentary 1:39-a, p. 68.

146 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, p. 215. See also H. W. Nibley, Funeral, pp. 298-299.

147 Abraham 3:11-12.

148 See Endnote 1-27, p. 80.

8 And it came to pass that Moses looked, and beheld the world upon which he was created; and Moses beheld the world and the ends thereof, and all the children of men which are, and which were created; of the same he greatly marveled and wondered.

- b beheld the world upon which he was created. “World” is used three times in this chapter—once in v. 7 and twice in v. 8. The related term “earth” is used in v. 5, and then afterwards is used exclusively until the end of the chapter.¹⁴⁹ “Earth” also appears throughout the account of creation in chapters 2-4.¹⁵⁰ Both terms appear in Moses chapters 5-7, with the term “earth” continuing to predominate.

This phrase arguably refers to the world of spirits rather than to the earth, paralleling Abraham’s view of organized intelligences (spirits) that preceded his creation vision.¹⁵¹ Clark cites a rabbinic source as saying that “‘God did shew unto Adam every Generation,’ meaning ‘all the Souls, which were to come into the World,... so that Adam could perfectly distinguish them,’ later ‘thus it happened on Mount Sinai’ with Moses, so that ‘the Souls, which were not then born into the world, were present on Mount Sinai, in the same form in which they were to appear in the World.’”¹⁵²

The statement about “the world upon which he was created” seems to be made in deliberate contradistinction to the later reference to “the earth upon which thou standest”¹⁵³—the qualifications used in each case would be unnecessary if the “world” and the “earth” were one and the same place. Moreover, if the world Moses is shown in v. 8 were the same as the earth he beholds in vv. 27-28, why the need for two separate visions? Such puzzles are resolved if we take “world” in the book of Moses as most often referring to the realm of the human family in premortal life.¹⁵⁴ This also sets a context where the phrase “thou art in the world”¹⁵⁵ can be understood, not as an obvious truism, but as a comprehensible justification for why it was expedient to show Moses the world of spirits at that particular time. Finally, if we accept this interpretation, Moses 6:51 can function as a deliberate parallelism (“I made the world, and men before they were in the flesh”) rather than as a pair of loosely related assertions.

OT2 reads “as Moses beheld the world.”¹⁵⁶ The current text is from the Times and Seasons.¹⁵⁷

- c all the children of men which are, and which were created. See Commentary 1:8-b, p. 50; and compare Moses 1:28, where Moses sees all the inhabitants of the earth. See also the similar experiences of Enoch,¹⁵⁸ the brother of Jared,¹⁵⁹ and Abraham.¹⁶⁰

The OT1 phrase “which was and which was created”¹⁶¹ was emended in the hand of Sidney Rigdon in OT2 to read “which are, and which were created.”¹⁶²

149 Moses 1:9, 19, 21, 27, 29, 35, 36, 38, and 40.

150 With the exceptions of Moses 1:33, 35; and 4:6.

151 Abraham 3:22-23; cf. Enoch’s vision in Moses 6:36.

152 E. D. Clark, Prologue, p. 138; cf. Qur’an 7:172; 30:30; 33:7; 53:56; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 39-40; Excursus 48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants, p. 649.

153 Moses 1:40.

154 15 consistent occurrences; two possible exceptions in Moses 1:33, 35; two exceptions in 6:59; and one in 7:4.

155 Moses 1:7.

156 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 591.

157 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 41.

158 Moses 7:23.

159 Ether 3:25.

160 Abraham 3:21-22.

161 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 83.

162 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, pp. 59, 591.

9 And the presence of God withdrew from Moses, that his glory was not upon Moses; and Moses was left unto himself. And as he was left unto himself, he fell unto the earth.

10 And it came to pass that it was for the space of many hours before Moses did again receive his natural strength like unto man; and he said unto himself: Now, for this cause I know that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed.

- 9 a as he was left unto himself, he fell unto the earth. Nibley describes this scene as “Moses, landing on earth as a natural man.”¹⁶³ If we assume that this verse has a second meaning referring to Moses leaving his view of the spirit world¹⁶⁴ and returning to his vantage point on earth, this “fall” could be seen as a figurative recapitulation of Adam’s Fall from the presence of God to the telestial state where Satan will be allowed to try him.
- 10 a it was for the space of many hours before Moses did again receive his natural strength like unto man. Moses was both spiritually and physically exhausted, recalling the aftermath of similar experiences by other prophets. Following one of his visions, Daniel reported that he “fainted, and was sick certain days,”¹⁶⁵ and of a second occasion he wrote: “I was left alone... and there remained no strength in me... and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my face toward the ground.”¹⁶⁶ Lehi “cast himself on his bed, being overcome with the Spirit.”¹⁶⁷ Saul “fell to the earth” during his vision¹⁶⁸ and remained blind until healed by Ananias.¹⁶⁹ Similarly, Alma “fell to the earth; and it was for the space of three days and three nights that [he] could not open [his] mouth, neither had [he] the use of [his] limbs.”¹⁷⁰ Of his weakness following the First Vision, Joseph Smith wrote: “When I came to myself again, I found myself lying on my back, looking up into heaven. When the light had departed, I had no strength...”¹⁷¹ Concerning his experience of watching Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon as they received the vision of the three degrees of glory,¹⁷² Philo Dibble wrote: “Joseph sat firmly and calmly all the time in the midst of a magnificent glory, but Sidney sat limp and pale, apparently as limber as a rag, observing which Joseph remarked, smilingly, ‘Sidney is not used to it as I am.’”¹⁷³ Note also that when Jesus Christ was “led by the Spirit into the wilderness,”¹⁷⁴ it was at a point of physical weakness following a forty-day fast when Satan appeared to tempt Him.
- b for this cause I know. OT1 and OT2 give this phrase as “for this once I know.”¹⁷⁵ However, the current text follows the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.¹⁷⁶ Similar statements are common in ascension accounts, where they signify that one’s eyes have been opened.¹⁷⁷
- c man is nothing. King Benjamin said: “Ye cannot say that we are even as much as the dust of the earth.”¹⁷⁸ Elder Neal A. Maxwell wrote that Moses’ statement “surely was not a reflection on man, ‘God’s greatest miracle,’ but a placing of man in the vast perspective of God’s creations and a realizing, even so, that we are God’s exclusive work and his greatest glory.”¹⁷⁹

163 H. W. Nibley, Assembly, p. 128.

164 See Commentary 1:8-b, p. 50.

165 Daniel 8:26.

166 Daniel 10:8-9.

167 1 Nephi 1:7.

168 Acts 9:4.

169 Acts 9:17-18.

170 Alma 36:10; cf. Mosiah 27:12, 18-19.

171 JS-H 1:20.

172 D&C 76.

173 Cited in L. R. Flake, Three Degrees, p. 6.

174 JST Luke 4:1.

175 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 83, 592.

176 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 14.

177 Cf. Commentary 4:11-a, p. 253; 4:13-a, p. 258; 5:10-e, p. 363.

178 Mosiah 2:25; cf. Mosiah 4:5-7, 11; Alma 26:12; Helaman 12:7.

179 N. A. Maxwell, Notwithstanding, p. 75; cf. T. S. Monson, Priesthood Trust, p. 56. See also Moses 1:39.

10 And it came to pass that it was for the space of many hours before Moses did again receive his natural strength like unto man; and he said unto himself: Now, for this cause I know that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed.

11 But now mine own eyes have beheld God; but not my natural, but my spiritual eyes, for my natural eyes could not have beheld; for I should have withered and died in his presence; but his glory was upon me; and I beheld his face, for I was transfigured before him.

12 And it came to pass that when Moses had said these words, behold, Satan came tempting him, saying: Moses, son of man, worship me.

Moses has learned more than just the fact that man is nothing. The subsequent text pointedly demonstrates that, more generally, he has increased his capacity to discern good from evil.¹⁸⁰ Faulconer notes that it was only after that Moses saw that he was nothing that, “with extraordinary confidence, he is able to say to Satan, ‘I am a son of God... where is thy glory, that I should worship thee?’¹⁸¹... Obviously, recognizing his own nothingness has nothing to do with having a bad self-image or groveling in his nothingness. It is instead coming to a full realization of his dependence upon God, of his inability to save himself and of God’s merciful willingness to save him. That realization of his nothingness is also a realization of his relation to God as a child.”¹⁸²

- 11 a mine own eyes have beheld God; but not my natural, but my spiritual eyes, for my natural eyes could not have beheld. Joseph Smith explained that “All things... God... has seen fit... to reveal to us... are revealed to us in the abstract, and independent of affinity of this mortal tabernacle, but are revealed to our spirits precisely as though we had no bodies at all.”¹⁸³ In vv. 13-15, Moses will recognize the difference between God’s glory and Satan’s darkness by the fact that he “must be protected to see Jehovah but could face this imposter with his natural eyes and without discomfort.”¹⁸⁴

OT1 reads “but now mine eyes, mine own eyes but not mine eyes for mine eyes could not have beheld.”¹⁸⁵ The wording in all subsequent publications closely resembles changes made in the hand of Sidney Rigdon in OT2.¹⁸⁶

- 12 a Satan came. Nibley comments: “Now the play begins because you have to have an antagonist and a protagonist in a play. Now Satan enters the scene. Notice, when the hero is at his lowest, when he is the most helpless, that is the time that Satan strikes... Faust is in the dark ready to commit suicide, and Satan appears to him there. It’s the same thing with Job. The tempters, his companions, come to him then.”¹⁸⁷ “The result is a stichomythia. Now we are going to get a combat... Before a duel between the heroes of the kings, there is a long preliminary exchange of insults that goes on.”¹⁸⁸ This is a regular part of heroic literature.”¹⁸⁹
- b tempting. The word “tempt” corresponds to Hebrew (nsh) and Greek (peirazo)—meaning to try, test, or prove. Such tests may be instigated by God,¹⁹⁰ by Satan,¹⁹¹ or by others.¹⁹²

180 See Commentary 1:11-18, pp. 52-56.

181 Moses 1:13.

182 J. E. Faulconer, Self-Image, p. 26.

183 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 355; cf. Job 19:25-26: “yet in my flesh shall I see God.”

184 S. W. Kimball, They Shall See God; cf. H. D. Peterson, Commentary, p. 90; Commentary 1:12-d, p. 53; Moses 1:14; W. W. Isenbergh, Philip 57-58, pp. 144-145. See also Commentary 1:2-b, p. 44 and Enoch’s experience in Moses 6:36.

185 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 84.

186 Ibid., p. 592; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 60.

187 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, p. 216.

188 See, e.g., 1 Samuel 17:8-10, 43-47.

189 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 217; cf. S. D. Ricks et al., King, pp. 249-253.

190 E.g., Genesis 22:1.

191 E.g., Luke 4:2.

192 E.g., John 8:6.

12 *And it came to pass that when Moses had said these words, behold, Satan came tempting him, saying: Moses, son of man, worship me.

13 And it came to pass that Moses looked upon Satan and said: Who art thou? For behold, I am a son of God, in the similitude of his Only Begotten; and where is thy glory, that I should worship thee?

c Moses, son of man. The scriptural epithet “son of man” can be interpreted in more than one way. The correct alternative can only be inferred by clues in the context of a given scriptural passage. In this verse and in translations of the Hebrew ben ‘adam, the words refer to a descendant of Adam—in other words, “any mortal man.”¹⁹³ However, when prefaced with the definite article (“the Son of Man”), they describe “an expected apocalyptic heavenly figure, identified with the Messiah.”¹⁹⁴ In a related sense, Jesus is “the son of the archetypal Man, the perfect heavenly Man, the Eternal Father.”¹⁹⁵ In the context of this verse, it should be remembered that Moses had just been told by the Lord that he was a “son of Man,” in the similitude of the Only Begotten. Satan’s words, referring to Moses as merely a “son of man,” recall the tactic he later used to taunt Jesus Christ: “If thou be the Son of God...”¹⁹⁶

d worship me. Prefiguring his encounter with Christ in the wilderness, Satan tempts Moses—in his physically weakened state—to worship him.¹⁹⁷ Moses, with a veil of forgetfulness obscuring the memory of his preexistent glory, and not yet having had his vision of the events of the Grand Councils, the Creation, and the Fall, was thought by Satan to have been easy prey. In this respect, Satan, “an unembodied spirit—he the disinherited, the rebellious and rejected son... [with] a remembrance of those primeval scenes”¹⁹⁸ was at a distinct advantage.

The Devil’s recurrent demands for worship recall a story attested in several ancient sources that the premortal rebellion began when Satan refused God’s request to bow down in homage to the newly-created Adam.¹⁹⁹

13 a And it came to pass that. This OT1 phrase was changed to read “but it came to pass that” in OT2 by the hand of Sidney Rigdon.²⁰⁰

b Moses looked. OT2, in the handwriting of Sidney Rigdon, expands this phrase from OT1 to read “Moses lifted up his eyes and looked.”²⁰¹

c I am a son of God, in the similitude of his Only Begotten. His eyes having been opened, Moses confronts Satan with the same words that God spoke to him earlier.²⁰² These words constitute a “humiliating exposure of Satan”—an announcement that Moses “actually is what his adversary falsely claims to be.”²⁰³

193 E.g., Daniel 8:17.

194 E.g., Daniel 7:13.

195 S. E. Robinson, Names, p. 740; cf. M. Barker, Lost, pp. 91-104. See Moses 6:57, 7:35.

196 Matthew 4:3, 6, emphasis mine. See the overview of Moses 5, p. 329, Commentary 2:26-c, p. 113, and Excursus 30: Adam-God Theory and the Heavenly and Earthly Adam, p. 603.

197 Cf. Matthew 4:8-9.

198 J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, p. 124.

199 See the overview of Moses 4, p. 225, and Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582.

200 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 592; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 60.

201 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 592; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 60.

202 Moses 1:6; cf. Commentary 1:12-c, p. 53.

203 H. W. Nibley, To Open, p. 5, emphasis mine. See Commentary 1:10-c, p. 51 and Moses 1:16, 19.

13 And it came to pass that Moses looked upon Satan and said: Who art thou? For behold, I am a son of God, in the similitude of his Only Begotten; and where is thy glory, that I should worship thee?

14 For behold, I could not look upon God, except his glory should come upon me, and I were transfigured before him. But I can look upon thee in the natural man. Is it not so, surely?

15 Blessed be the name of my God, for his Spirit hath not altogether withdrawn from me, or else where is thy glory, for it is darkness unto me? And I can judge between thee and God; for God said unto me: Worship God, for him only shalt thou serve.

d where is thy glory. “The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth. Light and truth forsake that evil one.”²⁰⁴ The events of this vision show Satan to possess neither light²⁰⁵ nor truth.²⁰⁶

14 a transfigured before him. The 1843 Times and Seasons publishers altered the text to read “strengthened before him.”²⁰⁷

b I can look upon thee in the natural man. See Commentary 1:2-b, p. 44 and 1:11-a, p. 52.

c Is it not so, surely? Blessed be. OT1 reads “if not so surely blessed be.”²⁰⁸ OT2 crosses out part of the (erroneously copied?) phrase “is if not is” and reads simply “Surely blessed be.”²⁰⁹ The current wording first appeared in the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.²¹⁰

15 a where is thy glory, for it is darkness unto me? Similarly, in the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan, God warns Adam and Eve about Satan, saying: “This is he who promised you majesty and divinity. Where, then, is the beauty that was on him? Where is his divinity? Where is his light? Where is the glory that rested on him?”²¹¹

Here, Satan no doubt appeared to Moses deceptively as an angel of light.²¹² Elder Parley P. Pratt wrote that “although [spirits not worthy to be glorified] often attempt to pass as angels of light there is more or less of darkness about them. So it is with Satan and his hosts who have not been embodied.”²¹³ Stone sees a passage in the Latin Life of Adam and Eve as implying “that all Satan lacked to look like a heavenly angel was the glory. He lost the glory when he fell, and he could take it on temporarily in order to deceive Adam and Eve.”²¹⁴ Thus, Satan is sometimes depicted in early Christian art as angelic in form but differing in color—e.g., appearing with “false glory” in a blue tint rather than in a whiteness of glory.²¹⁵ One might alternatively interpret Satan’s blue color as his appearing, deceptively, in a form corresponding to the blue robe of the high priest, a robe which represented being clothed in the likeness of the body—the blue-black “shadow”—of the incarnate Logos.²¹⁶ Comments Nibley: “Remember, glory cannot be faked... We try to do that with special effects, etc., but they always fall flat... Imitation glory is darkness; it’s sad. The glory of a merry-go-round, or the glory of Las Vegas, all that light, all that neon glitter. Is that your idea of glory?”²¹⁷

204 D&C 93:36-37.

205 E.g., Moses tells Satan that his purported glory “is darkness unto me” (Moses 1:15).

206 E.g., Satan’s false claim: “I am the Only Begotten” (Moses 1:19). See Commentary 1:10-b, p. 51 and 1:12-d, p. 53.

207 History of JS 4:5, p. 72; see K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 14.

208 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 84.

209 Ibid., p. 592.

210 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 27.

211 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:51, p. 56.

212 2 Corinthians 11:12-15; 2 Nephi 9:9; D&C 128:20, 129:4-7; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 1 April 1842, pp. 204-205.

213 P. P. Pratt, Key, p. 72.

214 M. E. Stone, Adam’s Contract, pp. 18-19; cf. S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:27, pp. 27-29, 1:60, pp. 67-70, and 2:5, pp. 110-111.

215 M. E. Stone, Adam’s Contract, pp. 18-19.

216 M. Barker, Gate, pp. 119-120; W. Williams, Shadow. See Commentary 4:5-a, p. 246.

217 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 218; cf. H. W. Nibley, House of Glory, p. 334. For a listing of some of the Devil’s purported disguises as given in ancient literature, see D. C. Allison, Testament, pp. 327-328. See 15 Blessed be the name of my God, for his Spirit hath not altogether withdrawn from me, or else where is thy glory, for it is darkness unto me? And I can judge between thee and God; for God said unto me: Worship God, for him only shalt thou serve.

16 Get thee hence, Satan; deceive me not; for God said unto me: Thou art after the similitude of mine Only Begotten.

17 And he also gave me commandments when he called unto me out of the burning bush, saying: Call upon God in the name of mine Only Begotten, and worship me.

Accounts of Satan's loss of glory are given in stories of his premortal rebellion²¹⁸ and of the penalties he received following his deception of Eve in the Garden of Eden.²¹⁹

The current text of Moses follows OT1. The later OT2 reads instead "I say 'Where is thy glory?'"²²⁰

darkness. OT1 and OT2 read "blackness" in place of "darkness."²²¹ The change to "darkness" was first made in the 1843 Times and Seasons publication²²² and perpetuated in subsequent editions. The term "blackness" appears once in JST Genesis²²³ and, likewise, the term "black" appears uniquely in Moses 7:22.²²⁴

b God said unto me: Worship God, for him only shalt thou serve. In replying to Satan, the words of Moses fittingly parallel a saying of Jehovah, just as Christ, the embodied Jehovah, later cites the words of Moses during his temptation.²²⁵

16 a Get thee hence, Satan. Moses will fail three times in his attempts to banish Satan,²²⁶ succeeding at last only when he invokes the name of the Only Begotten.²²⁷ Note that when Jesus banished Satan following his temptation in the wilderness, a single command from the Only Begotten Himself sufficed.²²⁸

b Thou art after the similitude of mine Only Begotten. Cf. Commentary 1:13-c, p. 53.

17 a commandments. OT1, OT2, and RLDS D&C 22:10 read "commandment."²²⁹ The change to commandments, which had previously appeared in the 1851 Times and Seasons publication, stems from the 1902 LDS edition.²³⁰

b Call upon God. This phrase recurs in verses 18, 20, and 25. Note that when Adam and Eve "called upon the name of the Lord,"²³¹ they were answered with commandments and angelic visitations revealing priesthood ordinances.²³² Discoursing on 2 Peter 1:10, the Prophet urged the Saints: "I would exhort you to go on and continue to call upon God until you make your calling and election sure."²³³ Moses' perseverance in calling upon God illustrates this pattern, and eventually will be rewarded when he enters the Lord's presence.

Commentary 1:11-a, p. 52 and 1:13-d, p. 54.

218 Commentary 4:1-4, pp. 243-246 and the overview of Moses 4, pp. 223-227.

219 Commentary 4:20-21, pp. 264-267. See also Commentary 1:10-b, p. 51, 1:12-d, p. 53, 1:13-d, p. 54, and 3:25a, p. 185.

220 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 592.

221 Ibid., pp. 84, 592.

222 History of JS 4:5, p. 72.

223 Moses 7:8.

224 See Commentary 5:40-c, p. 386.

225 Deuteronomy 6:13; Matthew 4:10.

226 Moses 1:16, 18, 20.

227 Moses 1:21.

228 Matthew 4:11. See also Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266.

229 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 84, 592.

230 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 61.

231 Moses 5:4.

232 See also Commentary 6:4-a, p. 477.

233 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 14 May 1843, p. 299.

17 And he also gave me commandments when he called unto me out of the burning bush, saying: Call upon God in the name of mine Only Begotten, and worship me.

18 And again Moses said: I will not cease to call upon God, I have other things to inquire of him: for his glory has been upon me, wherefore I can judge between him and thee. Depart hence, Satan.

19 And now, when Moses had said these words, Satan cried with a loud voice, and ranted upon the earth, and commanded, saying: I am the Only Begotten, worship me.

- c in the name of mine Only Begotten. Although the commandment to pray “in the name of mine Only Begotten” does not appear explicitly in the Old Testament, the Bible does record that Moses learned the name of Jehovah at the time he saw the burning bush.²³⁴ The book of Moses records that Adam received an identical commandment.²³⁵
- 18 a his glory has been upon me. OT1 and OT2 add: “and it is glory unto me.” However, the current text of the book of Moses follows the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.²³⁶
- b I can judge between him and thee. This phrase confirms that Moses has, like Adam and Eve after the Fall, “learned to distinguish between good and evil.”²³⁷
- 19 a Satan cried with a loud voice. Moses’ continued resistance calls for a dramatic change in tactics: “Satan... casts aside his celebrated but now useless subtlety and launches a frontal attack of satanic fury, a tremendous tantrum.”²³⁸

Blaming Adam for all his troubles, the Armenian version of the Life of Adam and Eve records that Satan “wept loudly” as he railed forth in self-pity, and the Latin version has him “groaning.” The Georgian version highlights the manipulative intent of the Devil’s theatrics, stating that he “began to cry with forced tears.”²³⁹

- b ranted upon the earth. The term “ranted” is a conjectural emendation of the term “wrent” in OT1 and OT2.²⁴⁰ To rant is to speak in a violent, loud, extravagant, and vehement manner for maximal rhetorical effect.

The JST manuscript has been emended differently in RLDS D&C 22:12 to read “went upon the earth.” Although this reading is more natural from a grammatical perspective, it seems a poor fit to the context of the rest of the verse. Based on parallel spellings in the Printer’s Manuscript of the Book of Mormon and the JST, Jackson rightfully concludes that the original manuscript term “wrent” “is likely a regional spelling of ‘rent,’ the past tense of ‘rend,’ ‘to tear.’”²⁴¹ In other words, Satan “tore upon the earth.”²⁴²

This reading perfectly fits the character of the adversary: Satan’s objective is to rend and destroy, while Christ’s mission is to unite and atone.²⁴³

- c commanded. Satan counters Moses’ stubborn obedience to God’s commandment²⁴⁴ with a direct command of his own. In the end, it will be Satan who yields to Moses’ command—a

234 Exodus 4:13-15.

235 Moses 5:8.

236 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 41.

237 H. W. Nibley, To Open, p. 18; cf. Commentary 1:10-b, p. 51; 4:11-a, p. 253; 4:13-a, p. 258; 5:10-e, p. 363.

238 H. W. Nibley, To Open, p. 5.

239 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 12:1, p. 15E.

240 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 84, 593.

241 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 50.

242 Cf. Commentary 1:21-a, p. 57.

243 See the overview of Moses 6, pp. 467-469, and Excursus 46: The Origin and Meaning of the Term “Atonement”, p. 642.

244 Moses 1:17.

19 And now, when Moses had said these words, Satan cried with a loud voice, and ranted upon the earth, and commanded, saying: I am the Only Begotten, worship me.

20 And it came to pass that Moses began to fear exceedingly; and as he began to fear, he saw the bitterness of hell. Nevertheless, calling upon God, he received strength, and he commanded, saying: Depart from me, Satan, for this one God only will I worship, which is the God of glory.

21 And now Satan began to tremble, and the earth shook; and Moses received strength, and called upon God, saying: In the name of the Only Begotten, depart hence, Satan.

command executed in the authority and power of the priesthood after the order of the true Son of God.²⁴⁵

- d I am the Only Begotten. Note that the truth of Moses' assertions²⁴⁶ stands in direct contradiction to the false claims repeatedly advanced by Satan.²⁴⁷
- e worship me. Islamic tradition includes a similar theme. Citing a commentary on Qur'an 21:29 ("I am a god besides Him"), the Islamic scholar al-Tabari takes the phrase to mean that Satan "calls to worship of himself."²⁴⁸
- 20 a Moses began to fear exceedingly... Nevertheless, calling upon God, he received strength. Nibley summarizes: "...true to the ancient pattern, the hero is momentarily bested, overcome by the powers of darkness... But with his last ounce of strength he calls upon God from the depths and is delivered: he has won the fight, he has prevailed against the power of him who 'sought to destroy the world, for he knew not the mind of God.'"²⁴⁹ "This is the de profundis. That's the 130th Psalm... 'Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord.'"²⁵⁰ Just as in the myth of Osiris, the "final test is the baptism... Moses is delivered from the waters and comes out."²⁵¹ In the typology of such tests, the righteous are raised in glory while the wicked drown and perish.²⁵²
- b Depart from me, Satan. OT1 and OT2 read "Depart hence, Satan."²⁵³ The current text of Moses follows the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.²⁵⁴
- 21 a Satan began to tremble, and the earth shook. The thunderous shaking of the ground echoes the emotional intensity of Satan's rage in terrifying reverberations. Writes Nibley: "[Satan is] the gaieokhon, the earthshaker. It means... both the earthshaker and the earthholder. If he holds it, he shakes it. So it goes back to the common thing, that he is of this earth, under the earth. And, of course, he is Pluto and he is wealth, too."²⁵⁵

Other scriptural references linking Satan and trembling include James 2:19 ("the devils also believe, and tremble"²⁵⁶) and Isaiah 14:4, 7, 16 ("How hath the oppressor ceased!... The 245 Moses 1:21-22; see also D&C 107:3.

246 See Commentary 1:13-c, p. 53 and Moses 1:16.

247 See Commentary 4:1-d, p. 243; 4:5-b, p. 246; 5:13-b, p. 365.

248 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:80, p. 251.

249 H. W. Nibley, To Open, p. 5. See Moses 4:6; cf. JS-H 1:15-17.

250 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 219. See also H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 75.

251 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 10, p. 118; cf. Figure 4-14, p. 231. See Endnote 4-50, p. 312.

252 Exodus 14:27-30, 1 Peter 3:18-21; cf. Commentary 1:24-a, p. 59; 1:25-e, p. 60; 4:21-d, p. 266; 4:31-d, p. 280; 5:6-a, p. 360; Figure 5-3, p. 330; Excursus 1: Speech, Writing, and Revelation, p. 512. See Endnote 5-23, p. 435.

253 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 84, 593.

254 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 41.

255 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, pp. 212-213.

256 Greek phrissō = shudder or shiver. Cf. Matthew 8:29 where the trembling can be viewed as "indicating a cognizance of their appointed doom" (W. E. Vine et al., Dictionary (1996), s.v. shudder, p. 573).

21 And now Satan began to tremble, and the earth shook; and Moses received strength, and called upon God, saying: In the name of the Only Begotten, depart hence, Satan.

22 And it came to pass that Satan cried with a loud voice, with weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth; and he departed hence, even from the presence of Moses, that he beheld him not.

whole earth is at rest, and is quiet... Is this the man that made the earth to tremble,²⁵⁷ that did shake²⁵⁸ kingdoms”).²⁵⁹

This verse is an interesting parallel to rabbinic commentary that also pictures Cain as someone who made the earth tremble.²⁶⁰

- b Moses received strength, and called upon God. In the previous verse, Moses received strength after calling upon God—here, the order of these events is reversed.
- c saying: In the name of the Only Begotten, depart hence, Satan. The dramatic turning point of this episode hinges on Satan’s desperate false claim to be the Only Begotten, and Moses’ final, successful dismissal of Satan, accomplished by invoking the name of the true Only Begotten.

A medieval Ethiopian text similarly witnesses a belief in the efficacy of the name of God in conquering Satan. In an account of the battle between Satan’s rebellious armies and the hosts of heaven the angels twice charged Satan’s ranks unsuccessfully. However, prior to their third attempt, they were given a cross of light inscribed “In the Name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit,” and “when Setnael [Satan] saw that inscription he was vanquished.”²⁶¹

This verse has a complex history of revisions. OT1 reads: “And Moses receiving strength called upon God saying In the name of Jesus Christ depart hence Satan.”²⁶² OT2 reads: “And Moses received strength and called upon God in the name of his Son, saying to Satan depart hence.”²⁶³ The 1866-67 RLDS Publication inexplicably substituted the title “Only Begotten” for “his Son.” The book of Moses currently follows a combination of OT1 and OT2, while carrying over the term “Only Begotten” from the RLDS publication.²⁶⁴

- 22 a Satan cried with a loud voice. In an elegant parallel to verse 19, Satan cries out a second time with a loud voice. In this instance, however, the cry is not a flourish of rhetorical melodrama, but rather a despairing wail reflecting the misery and hopelessness of the damned.

- b he departed hence, even from the presence of Moses. Silenced and vanquished, Satan disappears from the scene.

OT1 and OT2 read: “and departed hence; yea, from the presence of Moses.”²⁶⁵ The current text follows the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.²⁶⁶

257 Hebrew ragaz = to be agitated, angry, to quiver or quake (F. Brown et al., Lexicon, p. 919b).

258 Hebrew rash = quake, shake (ibid., p. 950b).

259 Cf. Moses 7:13, S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:48, p. 53; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 88:2, p. 364). See also Commentary 1:19-b, p. 56.

260 See Commentary 5:41-b, p. 388. See also Genesis 27:33 (Isaac) and Alma 11:46 (Zeezrom).

261 B. Mikael, Mysteries, p. 17.

262 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 84.

263 Ibid., p. 593.

264 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 62; R. J. Matthews, What Is, pp. 35-36, 154.

265 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 84, 593.

266 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, pp. 17, 63.

23 And now of this thing Moses bore record; but because of wickedness it is not had among the children of men.

24 And it came to pass that when Satan had departed from the presence of Moses, that Moses lifted up his eyes unto heaven, being filled with the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of the Father and the Son;

25 And calling upon the name of God, he beheld his glory again, for it was upon him; and he heard a voice, saying: Blessed art thou, Moses, for I, the Almighty, have chosen thee, and thou shalt be made stronger than many waters; for they shall obey thy command as if thou wert God.

- 23 a of this thing Moses bore record. Johnson views this verse in company with v. 41 as a marker for a parallel panel structure comprising vv. 1-23 and 24-41.²⁶⁷
- b because of wickedness it is not had among the children of men. Turner wryly comments: “No doubt Satan was not anxious to have this demeaning episode publicized.”²⁶⁸
- 24 a when Satan had departed from the presence of Moses. In some Christian traditions, the motif of the banishment of Satan is closely linked to the ordinance of baptism.²⁶⁹ Note in this verse and the next the first explicit mention of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost in close proximity, recalling the words of the baptismal prayer,²⁷⁰ in conjunction with the subsequent statements that Moses “lifted his eyes unto heaven,”²⁷¹ was “filled with the Holy Ghost,” and was “made stronger than many waters.”²⁷² Such a reading would also be consistent with the book of Moses motif of calling upon God and being answered with additional commandments and ordinances, as noted previously.²⁷³
- b Moses lifted up his eyes unto heaven. Freed from transfixion on the vision of hell below, Moses looks up again to heaven. Similarly, “at the very moment when [he] was ready to sink into despair,” Joseph Smith looked up to see “a pillar of light exactly over [his] head.”²⁷⁴
- Nibley conjectured that this phrase signified that Moses was being “carried up to heaven... by the Holy Ghost.”²⁷⁵ However, it seems more likely that the event to which Nibley refers occurs a little later in the account.²⁷⁶
- c being filled with the Holy Ghost. The Holy Ghost has ministered to mankind since the time of Adam.²⁷⁷
- d which beareth record of the Father and the Son. Similar wording recurs three more times in the book of Moses.²⁷⁸
- 25 a calling upon the name of God. In his discussion of early Christian and Jewish rituals related to temple practices, Tvedtnes discusses the prayer circle, noting that “prayer opens the veil

267 M. J. Johnson, Prologue, pp. 12-13.

268 R. Turner, Visions of Moses, p. 55. See also Commentary 1:42-a, p. 69.

269 See Commentary 1:20-a, p. 57; 1:25-e, p. 60; 4:21-d, p. 266; 4:31-d, p. 280; 5:6-a, p. 360; Figure 5-3, p. 330; Excursus 1: Speech, Writing, and Revelation, p. 512. See Endnote 5-23, p. 435.

270 D&C 20:73.

271 Cf. Matthew 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42.

272 Cf. Commentary 5:9-b, p. 362.

273 Commentary 1:17-b, p. 55.

274 JS-H 1:16. See Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62.

275 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 220. See Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42.

276 See Commentary 1:27-a, p. 62.

277 See Moses 5:9; 6:52; 2 Peter 1:21; J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1935, 1:46-47.

278 Moses 5:9; 6:66; 7:11.

25 And calling upon the name of God, he beheld his glory again, for it was upon him; and he heard a voice, saying: Blessed art thou, Moses, for I, the Almighty, have chosen thee, and thou shalt be made stronger than many waters; for they shall obey thy command as if thou wert God.

to allow one to enjoy the presence of God.”²⁷⁹ From this and subsequent verses, it can be concluded that Moses had learned so to pray.²⁸⁰

- b he beheld his glory again, for it was upon him. The current text follows the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.²⁸¹ OT1 reads “was upon him.” OT2, however, reads with a significant difference (in the handwriting of Sidney Rigdon): “he beheld again his glory, for it rested upon him.”²⁸² If the altered wording was added under inspiration, perhaps it was intended to imply that the glory now conferred upon Moses was of a permanent rather than transient nature (“rested upon him” vs. “was upon him”²⁸³)—his now having “put on the garment of glory,”²⁸⁴ even “the robe of righteousness.”²⁸⁵
- c he heard a voice. Since the moment he “fell to the earth,”²⁸⁶ Moses could no longer speak face to face with the Lord, having been “shut out from his presence.”²⁸⁷ However, when Satan was banished, the Lord began to minister to Moses through the intermediary of the Holy Ghost.²⁸⁸ Now we are told that a voice speaks to Moses from beyond the heavenly veil, portending his return back into the Lord’s presence.²⁸⁹ Ancient ascent and temple texts affirm that in preparation for entry into the holy presence, the initiate exchanged words with a divine voice at the veil, sometimes depicted visually as the welcoming hand of God that is grasped by the initiate.²⁹⁰ Once he has been thoroughly tested, the “last phrase” of welcome is extended to the successful candidate, “Let him come up!”²⁹¹

The completion of this series of upward steps has required Moses’ utmost tenacity. Comments Nibley: “Is this a return to heaven or is it halfway? Remember, [it’s like climbing a] mountain. It’s as high as you can go, I suppose[, then the Lord must take over]. But he sees the glory of God which was upon him. Then he heard a voice announcing he is the victor. He is recognized [as] the king.”²⁹²

- d Blessed art thou, Moses. The promise given to Moses concerning the work he was foreordained²⁹³ to do is now reaffirmed. Here, at the heavenly veil, Moses receives blessings that foreshadow his role as deliverer to the children of Israel, in similitude of the Savior.
- e thou shalt be made stronger than many waters. The most obvious reference here is to the power Moses will be given to divide the Red Sea.²⁹⁴ However, we should also note the parallel 279 J. A. Tvedtnes, Rituals; B. K. Packer, Personal Revelation, p. 59; W. Clayton, Chronicle, 15 June 1844, p. 134.

280 Joseph Smith to Bathsheba W. Smith, Juvenile Instructor, 27, 1 June 1892, p. 345, cited in D. M. Quinn, Prayer Circles, p. 1.

281 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 41.

282 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 85, 593.

283 See Moses 1:2, 9, 11, 14, 18.

284 G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 62:15-16, p. 81.

285 2 Nephi 9:14. See the overview of Moses 4, pp. 234-240.

286 Moses 1:9.

287 Cf. Moses 5:4.

288 Moses 1:24; cf. Moses 5:9.

289 Moses 1:31.

290 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 449-457; P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, p. 296 n. 45a; H. W. Nibley, Atonement, p. 562; Figure 6-14, p. 473; Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, Dexiosis, p. 681; the Mandaean Texts and Manichaean Texts sections of Annotated Bibliography, pp. 870, 884; and Figure B-1, p. 872. See Endnote 1-22, p. 79.

291 M. E. Stone, Fall of Satan, p. 47; cf. Revelation 4:1: “Come up hither”; Matthew 25:21: “Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.”

292 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 220.

293 Moses 1:6.

294 Exodus 14:21-22; Joshua 3:14-17.

25 And calling upon the name of God, he beheld his glory again, for it was upon him; and he heard a voice, saying: Blessed art thou, Moses, for I, the Almighty, have chosen thee, and thou shalt be made stronger than many waters; for they shall obey thy command as if thou wert God.

26 And lo, I am with thee, even unto the end of thy days; for thou shalt deliver my people from bondage, even Israel my chosen.

to God's subduing of the waters at creation,²⁹⁵ particularly in light of the phrase that follows: "as if thou wert God." Recall also that God's voice is compared in scripture to the "rushing of great waters."²⁹⁶ All this can be taken to mean that Moses is being promised the blessings of exaltation. Explains Nibley: "In most versions of the year-drama [enacted in diverse cultures throughout the world and paralleling the experience of Moses],²⁹⁷ the king wages combat with his dark adversary of the underworld, emerging victorious after a temporary defeat from his duel with death'... Moses is proclaimed king after he has overcome the waters of Meribah—death; therefore, God says, 'I shall make you king in my place, and you shall rule over my people as if you were God.' Moses is put in God's place."²⁹⁸

Also affirming the deification of Moses, Philo wrote: "For when [Moses] had left all mortal categories behind he was changed into the divine, so that such men become kin to God and truly divine."²⁹⁹ With respect to Moses' command of the elements, Philo wrote that "... each of the elements was made subject to Moses as master and altered its inherent properties to become subject to his commands."³⁰⁰ Philo realized that Moses' experience was not unique; rather, his exaltation exemplified a pattern that previously had been followed by Abraham and would continue to be emulated by all who belonged to true Israel.³⁰¹ According to Philo, Moses enters into God's presence and "abides there while he learns the secrets of the most holy mysteries. There he becomes not only one of the ... initiated, but also the hierophant³⁰² and teacher of divine rites, which he will impart to those whose ears are purified. He then has ever the divine spirit at his side, taking the lead in every journey of righteousness"³⁰³ or, in other words, "to lead one along the 'whole road,' the entire way to perfection."³⁰⁴

f as if thou wert God. In the authority and power of the priesthood he has received, Moses soon will be fully enabled to speak and act on God's behalf.

The current text is consistent with OT1.³⁰⁵ OT2 replaces these words with a new reading in the handwriting of Sidney Rigdon: "even as my commandments."³⁰⁶

26 a thou shalt deliver my people from bondage. God reiterates the commission He gave Moses at the time of his first call.³⁰⁷

295 See Commentary 2:2-b, p. 96; J. L. Kugel, Instances, pp. 156-157.—

296 D&C 110:3; cf. Ezekiel 1:24, 43:2; Revelation 1:15; D&C 133:22; cf. J. L. Kugel, Instances, pp. 156-157.

297 See Commentary 5:47-a, p. 395; Excursus 35: Lamech's "Sword Song", p. 612; overviews of Moses 4 and 6, pp. 221, 458. See Endnote 4-21, p. 304. See Endnote 4-4, p. 298.

298 H. W. Nibley, Circle, p. 157. See H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 10, p. 118; Commentary 1:20-a, p. 57. See also related discussion in N. Russell, Deification, p. 68.

299 Philo, Exodus, 2:29, p. 70; cf. R. S. Eccles, Pilgrimage, pp. 60-61. See Endnote E-221, p. 757.

300 See Philo, Moses 1, 1:155-156, p. 473.

301 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 7.

302 I.e., priestly revealer or guide.

303 Philo, Giants, 54-55, p. 473. See also E. R. Goodenough, Introduction to Philo, pp. 147-148; W. A. Meeks, Moses.

304 E. R. Goodenough, Light, p. 214 n. 105. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: The Mysteries, p. 663ff.

305 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 85.

306 Ibid., p. 593; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 63.

307 Exodus 3:7-10.

27 And it came to pass, as the voice was still speaking, Moses cast his eyes and beheld the earth, yea, even all of it; and there was not a particle of it which he did not behold, discerning it by the spirit of God.

- 27 a as the voice was still speaking. Remarkably, a nearly identical phrase (“And while he [the angel] was still speaking”) appears in the Apocalypse of Abraham immediately preceding Abraham’s recitation of certain words taught to him by the angel in preparation for his ascent to receive a vision of the work of God.³⁰⁸ In that account, Abraham’s recitation ends with: “Accept my prayer and... sacrifice... Receive me favorably, teach me, show me, and make known to your servant what you have promised me.”³⁰⁹ The text relates that while Abraham “was still reciting the song” (i.e., a recitation of a fixed set of words he had been taught by the angel), he heard a voice “like the roaring of the sea”³¹⁰ and was brought into the presence of the fiery seraphim surrounding the heavenly throne.³¹¹ Significantly, when Abraham passes back through the heavenly veil in the opposite direction on his return to the earth, the words “And while he was still speaking” recur.³¹²
- b Moses cast his eyes and beheld the earth. Previously, as he stood on the earth, Moses had “lifted up his eyes unto heaven.”³¹³ Now, after ascending to heaven, he cast his eyes down to see the earth and all of its inhabitants.³¹⁴ He witnessed its entire history from beginning to end like Adam, Enoch, the Brother of Jared, John the Beloved, and others.³¹⁵ Moroni taught that those with perfect faith cannot be “kept from within the veil” (i.e., cannot be kept from passing through the veil³¹⁶)—meaning the heavenly veil behind which God dwells, whose earthly counterpart is the temple veil that divides the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies.³¹⁷

The heavenly veil corresponding to the firmament of the Creation is sometimes represented as a shining pavement on which the Lord stands³¹⁸ or as the “sea of glass” where God resides.³¹⁹ Islamic and Jewish sources imply that the unenlightened might mistakenly confuse such a crystal pavement with water.³²⁰ Such descriptions also relate to the white stone that will be given to the Saints “whereby things pertaining to a higher order of kingdoms will be made known.”³²¹

Extracanonical accounts speak of a “blueprint” of eternity that is worked out in advance and shown on the inside of the heavenly veil.³²² Writes Barker: “Those who passed beyond the veil found themselves outside time. When Rabbi Ishmael ascended and looked back he saw the curtain on which was depicted past, present and future. ‘All generations to the end of time were printed on the curtain of the Omnipresent One. I saw them all with my own

308 R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, 17:1, p. 696.

309 Ibid., 17:20-21, p. 697.

310 Cf. “voice of many waters” (ibid., 17:1, p. 696); Commentary 1:25-c, p. 60.

311 R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, 18:1-14, p. 698.

312 Ibid., 30:1, p. 704. For a discussion of parallels between the book of Abraham and the Apocalypse of Abraham, see J. W. Ludlow, Visions, pp. 62-65.

313 Moses 1:24.

314 Moses 1:28; cf. Commentary 1:8-b, c, p. 50.

315 D&C 107:56, Moses 7:4-67, Ether 3:25, M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared, 1 Nephi 14:25, 1 Nephi 14:26; cf. Luke 4:5.

316 Ether 3:20; cf. Moses 3:26.

317 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 45:1, p. 296 n. a.

318 E.g., Exodus 24:9-10; Daniel 10:6; D&C 110:2.

319 Revelation 4:6, 21:18, 21; D&C 130:8-9, 137:4; Ezekiel 1:22, 26.

320 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, pp. 534-535; J. Dan, Mysticism, 1:276-279; W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, pp. 131, 270; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 14:10, p. 257; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 270; Qur’ān 27:38-44. See also 1 Kings 10:1-13; Ezekiel 1:22; Exodus 24:10; Revelation 21:18, 21.

321 D&C 130:4-11; cf. Revelation 2:17; Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177; Figure 4-4, p. 219. See Endnote 4-9, p. 299. See Endnote 4-22, p. 304. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: Jewish and Christian Analogues, p. 679. See Commentary 1:6-g, p. 48 and 2:1-e, p. 94 regarding God’s timelessness and the scope of divine knowledge.

322 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 10, p. 117.

27 And it came to pass, as the voice was still speaking, Moses cast his eyes and beheld the earth, yea, even all of it; and there was not a particle of it which he did not behold, discerning it by the spirit of God.

eyes’...³²³ [Similarly,] Enoch was taken up by three angels and set up on a high place whence he saw all history, past, present and future.”³²⁴

The Apocalypse of Abraham describes how the patriarch ascended, and then looked down to see the affairs of what is called in modern revelation the “kingdoms of a lower order.”³²⁵ The Lord’s voice commanded him to look, and veils were opened beneath his feet: “And while he was still speaking the expanses under me, the heavens, opened and I saw on the seventh firmament upon which I stood fire spread out... And I looked... downward to the sixth firmament... [and] the sixth firmament... removed itself... [and] I saw... the fifth (firmament).”³²⁶ Then, as did Moses, Abraham seems to have seen the heavenly plan for creation—“the creation that was depicted of old³²⁷ on this expanse” (21:1³²⁸), its realization on the earth (21:3-5), the Garden of Eden (21:6), and the spirits of all men with certain ones “prepared to be born of you [i.e., Abraham] and to be called my people (21:7-22:5)”³²⁹ When Abraham is told again to “Look... at the picture,” he sees Satan inciting the Fall of Adam and Eve (23:1-14).³³⁰

Jesus Himself, when He was tempted in the desert saw “all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time,”³³¹ an experience that Barker recognizes as “a characteristic of the temple mystics’ overall view of history.”³³² Islamic tradition preserves the same motif in the story of how “Adam took out the cloth and spread it out. Upon it were the forms of the prophets [= the pious] and the pharaohs [= the wicked], rank after rank.”³³³

In November 1832, Joseph Smith used imagery related to the veil in a manner similar to all these accounts, as he and William W. Phelps prayed fervently for a longer glimpse at the reality behind the “dark curtain,” and for a release from the limitations of human language: “Oh, Lord, when will the time come when Brother William, Thy servant, and myself, shall behold the day that we may stand together and gaze upon eternal wisdom engraven upon the heavens, while the majesty of our God holdeth up the dark curtain until we may read the round of eternity,³³⁴ to the fulness and satisfaction of our immortal souls? Oh, Lord, deliver us in due time from the little, narrow prison, almost as it were, total darkness of paper, pen and ink; and a crooked, broken, scattered and imperfect language.”³³⁵

c even all of it. OT1 and OT2 read “even all the face of it.”³³⁶ The change in the current text dates to the 1902 edition of the Pearl of Great Price.³³⁷

323 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 45:6, p. 299.

324 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 28. See also M. Barker, Boundary, pp. 215-217.

325 D&C 130:9.

326 R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, 19:1, 4-5, 9, pp. 698-699; cf. Abraham 3:1-18.

327 I.e., formerly shadowed, sketched, outlined, prefigured (R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, p. 699 n. 21a).

328 Cf. Abraham 5:3-5.

329 Cf. Abraham 3:22-23.

330 R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, pp. 699-701.

331 Luke 4:5.

332 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 95.

333 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 82.

334 Nibley discusses parallels between the picture shown to Moses, the “great round” of the hypocephalus, and imagery from Homer (H. W. Nibley, Abraham 2000, pp. 42ff.).

335 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 27 November 1832, 1:299.

336 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 85, 593.

337 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 45.

27 And it came to pass, as the voice was still speaking, Moses cast his eyes and beheld the earth, yea, even all of it; and there was not a particle of it which he did not behold, discerning it by the spirit of God.

28 And he beheld also the inhabitants thereof, and there was not a soul which he beheld not; and he discerned them by the Spirit of God; and their numbers were great, even numberless as the sand upon the sea shore.

29 And he beheld many lands; and each land was called earth, and there were inhabitants on the face thereof.

30 And it came to pass that Moses called upon God, saying: Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?

31 And behold, the glory of the Lord was upon Moses, so that Moses stood in the presence of God, and talked with him face to face. And the Lord God said unto Moses: For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom and it remaineth in me.

d by the spirit of God. “This is not just God’s ability to produce a comprehensive vision, but an ability to change Moses so that he could comprehend it.”³³⁸ The “spirit” by which Moses discerns is written in lower case in this verse; however, it inexplicably appears in upper case in a similar context in v. 28.

28 a even numberless as the sand upon the sea shore. Here, the term numberless does not mean “infinite” but rather “too many to be counted.”³³⁹

OT2 reads: “even as numberless.”³⁴⁰

29 a each land was called earth. Taken in the context of vv. 30-38, these words seem to imply that Moses saw many peopled planets, each one of which was called earth by its inhabitants. Alternatively, his view of “many lands” could be simply a part of “an account of this earth”³⁴¹ to which his vision was originally to be limited.

30 a Tell me... why... and by what. The answers to these sacred questions will be given to Moses subsequently when he enters the presence of the Lord.³⁴²

In the hand of Sidney Rigdon, OT2 was changed to read “shew me,”³⁴³ further emphasizing the visual nature of Moses’ experience.³⁴⁴ Consistent with the current text, OT1 reads “by what,”³⁴⁵ while OT2 reads “by whom.”³⁴⁶

31 a glory of the Lord. OT1 and OT2 read “the glory of God”³⁴⁷—implying more clearly that Moses stood in the presence of the Father rather than the Son. The current text dates to the 1902 edition of the Pearl of Great Price.³⁴⁸

b Moses stood in the presence of God, and talked with him face to face. This glorious event, anticipated by the chapter summary in v. 2, opens the culminating sequence of Moses’ vision. In the final verses of this chapter, God will reveal something of His purposes and will introduce the vision of Creation, the Fall, and the Plan of Salvation recounted in chapters 2-5.

338 F. B. Salisbury, Creation, p. 65.

339 The same description is used in Genesis 22:17, Hebrews 11:12, D&C 132:30, and Abraham 3:14.

340 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 593-594.

341 Moses 1:35.

342 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 32. See Moses 1:31.

343 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 594.

344 See Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62.

345 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 85.

346 Ibid., p. 594.

347 Ibid., pp. 85, 594.

348 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 45.

31 And behold, the glory of the Lord was upon Moses, so that Moses stood in the presence of God, and talked with him face to face. And the Lord God said unto Moses: For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom and it remaineth in me.

32 And by the word of my power, have I created them, which is mine Only Begotten Son, who is full of grace and truth.

33 And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten.

c the Lord God said unto Moses. Speaking face to face, God now replies to the questions Moses raised in v. 30. Though God says here that He will not reveal the answer to Moses' first question ("why these things are so"), later He does give a limited explanation.³⁴⁹ His answer to Moses' second question ("by what") is summarized in verse 32, and eventually elaborated in the account of the Creation in Moses 2-3.³⁵⁰

d Here is wisdom and it remaineth in me. The phrase "it remaineth in me" subtly echoes scriptural passages that depict God and wisdom as inseparably associated since before the creation of the earth.³⁵¹ This exclusive relationship makes the mysteries of true wisdom inaccessible to man except as made known through God himself.³⁵² The Book of Mormon employs similar phraseology to describe how God's hidden intentions—in this case the preservation of Nephite records—are "wise purposes in him"—things that can only be known by direct revelation.³⁵³ The term "wisdom" recurs once in the book of Moses, in an exposition on the gifts of the Comforter.³⁵⁴

In the mystical Islamic work The Mother of Books, a petitioner also prays with a "typical list of questions": "My Lord, how did the high king create all these spheres and palaces? From where did he make the spirits? What was the origin of his creation?" and receives an answer similar to the one given to Moses: "The creation of these realms is hard to fathom. Not everyone knows the way to knowledge, and its secret [is] well-concealed."³⁵⁵ The Gospel of Philip specifies the mechanism of concealment in asserting that it is the "veil [that] at first concealed how God controlled the creation."³⁵⁶ b full of grace and truth. See Commentary 1:6-e, p. 47 and Moses 5:7.

32 a by the word of my power, have I created them, which is my Only Begotten Son. See Moses 1:33; Commentary 2:1-d, p. 93; 2:5-c, p. 102.

33 a worlds without number. Clark³⁵⁷ cites a passage in the Zohar which tells of "a hidden region, so transcendent that it passes all understanding, the very source whence the worlds were designed and came into being"³⁵⁸... So also, according to the Syriac Apocalypse of Baruch, Moses was shown 'the worlds which have not yet come.'³⁵⁹

b by the Son I created them.³⁶⁰ That the worlds were not only created by the Son but also re-deemed by him is made clear by the Prophet's poetic paraphrase of D&C 76:23-24:

349 Moses 1:39.

350 R. J. Matthews, Moses, p. 64.

351 E.g., Proverbs 8:22-30.

352 Job 28; 1 Corinthians 2:7-10; Alma 12:9-11; D&C 76:7, 10; 84:19; 107:18-19; see Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

353 1 Nephi 9:5. See also e.g., 1 Nephi 3:19; 5:22; 19:3; Words of Mormon 1:7; Alma 37:12, 14, 18.

354 Moses 6:61. See Commentary 4:11-a, b, c, p. 253, 4:12-c, p. 255, and Excursus 2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom, p. 516.

355 W. Barnstone et al., Mother, p. 685.

356 W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 84:23-25, p. 159.

357 E. D. Clark, Prologue, p. 139.

358 H. Sperling et al., Zohar, Waera (Exodus 6:2-9:35), 22a, 3:75.

359 A. F. J. Klijn, 2 Baruch, 59:9, p. 642. Cf. Commentary 1:35-b, p. 67.

360 See Commentary 1:32-a, p. 65.

33 And worlds without number have I created; and I also created them for mine own purpose; and by the Son I created them, which is mine Only Begotten.

34 And the first man of all men have I called Adam, which is many.

19. And I heard a great voice, bearing record from heav'n,
"He's the Savior, and only begotten of God—
By him, of him, and through him, the worlds were all made,
Even all that career in the heavens so broad,

20. Whose inhabitants, too, from the first to the last,
Are sav'd by the very same Savior of ours;
And, of course, are begotten God's daughters and sons,
By the very same truths, and the very same pow'rs."³⁶¹

by the Son. OT2 reads "by the same."³⁶² The change to "by the Son" was first made in the 1843 Times and Seasons publication.³⁶³

- 34 a Adam, which is many. Draper et al.³⁶⁴ conclude that the phrase "which is many" could mean one of three things: 1. that Adam is the first man of all men among all the worlds God has created; 2. that Adam is the name given to the first man on each of the many worlds God has created;³⁶⁵ or, 3. that there are many descendants of Adam on this earth.³⁶⁶

The name "Adam" occurs in several Semitic languages. Westermann accepts a derivation from the Arab term adim meaning "skin" or "surface," thus simultaneously conveying the idea of the skin of the human being (adam) and the surface of the earth (adamah).³⁶⁷ The motif associating Adam with the earth is found in several places in the book of Moses—for example, Adam is made from the dust of the ground,³⁶⁸ it is later cursed because of him,³⁶⁹ and he will return to it when he dies.³⁷⁰ Whitlock also points out the association between the red earth and red blood (Hebrew dam)—blood being a condition of mortality.³⁷¹ He observes that there may be "something symbolic in the joining of the mortal/of-the-blood (Adam) with the living Eve (Hebrew havvah = "life") to produce living offspring, that transcends earthly life and is echoed in reverse in the Nativity."³⁷² Taking a cue from Moses 1:34, Nibley sees "many" as one connotation of the Egyptian name Atum, citing studies that define it to mean "both the creator ['the ancient one'] and 'the [collective] sum of all future beings'... 'all embracing,' 'the sum of everything'... or the uniting of many in one, combining all preexistent beings in a single archetype who thereby represents all beings thereafter."³⁷³

In Abraham 1:3, the word Adam is associated with the idea of his being a "first father."³⁷⁴ The 1981 edition of the Pearl of Great Price corrected a portion of the text in this verse. It was given previously as "the first man, who is Adam, our first father," but in 1981 was amended to read "the first man, who is Adam, or first father." Note that Eve is similarly referred to in Moses 4:26 as the "first of all women," and that Nephi refers to Adam and Eve as our "first 361 J. Smith, Jr. (or W. W. Phelps), A Vision, 1 February 1843, stanzas 19-20, cited in L. E. Dahl, Vision, p. 298.

362 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 594.

363 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 27.

364 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 33.

365 Brigham Young, 6 October 1854, cited in J. L. Robinson et al., Robinson, p. 172; E. W. Tullidge, Women, p. 180.

366 F. B. Salisbury, Creation, p. 66; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, footnote by Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, Jr., p. 167.

367 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 201; Suyuti in al-Tabari, Creation, 1:88, p. 260; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 17.

368 Moses 3:7.

369 Moses 4:23.

370 Moses 4:25. See D. N. Freedman et al., Eerdmans, p. 19.

371 Cf. J. Smith, Jr., 13 April 1843, "red earth" in E. England, Laub, p. 25; M-A Ouakknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 12, p. 84.

372 S. T. Whitlock, 23 August 2006.

373 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 217; cf. H. W. Nibley, Abraham 2000, p. 77; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 222; 7, pp. 87-88.

374 B. R. McConkie, Sermons, p. 254; cf. W. Clayton, Chronicle, 28 December 1845, p. 238.

34 And the first man of all men have I called Adam, which is many.

35 But only an account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you. For behold, there are many worlds that have passed away by the word of my power. And there are many that now stand, and innumerable are they unto man; but all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them.

36 And it came to pass that Moses spake unto the Lord, saying: Be merciful unto thy servant, O God, and tell me concerning this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, and also the heavens, and then thy servant will be content.

37 And the Lord God spake unto Moses, saying: The heavens, they are many, and they cannot be numbered unto man; but they are numbered unto me, for they are mine.

38 And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words.

parents.”³⁷⁵ President Brigham Young taught that Adam “signifies first man, and Eve signifies first woman.” “Every world has an Adam, and an Eve: named so, simply because the first man is always called Adam, and the first woman Eve.”³⁷⁶ By implication, Munoa connects “the motif of... being the first” with that of being “the oldest”—hence, the use of “Ancient of Days” as a title for Adam.”³⁷⁷

35 a only an account of this earth. See Commentary 1:5-b, p. 46, 1:5-c, p. 46, and 1:7-a, p. 49.

b innumerable they are unto man. President Brigham Young said: “How many earths are there? I observed this morning that you may take the particles of matter composing this earth, and if they could be enumerated they would only be a beginning to the number of the creations of God; and they are continually coming into existence, and undergoing changes and passing through the same experience that we are passing through.”³⁷⁸

OT1 and OT2 read “numberless”;³⁷⁹ the current text follows the 1843 Times and Seasons.³⁸⁰

c all things are numbered unto me, for they are mine and I know them. Cf. Moses 1:37; Matthew 10:30: “But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.”

37 a saying: The heavens. The text follows OT1.³⁸¹ OT2 reads “of the heavens, saying, These.”³⁸²

38 a one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof. Though this could be taken as referring to the natural winding down of our particular part of the universe, it seems more likely that this passing away signifies the undoing of the first act of Creation—not a destruction, but rather a reunification of the formerly divided heaven and earth. At that time, said the Lord, “the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together.”³⁸³

b there is no end to my works, neither to my words.³⁸⁴ The endlessness of God’s works and His words are inseparably linked. Jesus Christ, as the “word of my power,”³⁸⁵ is the one by 375 1 Nephi 5:11; cf. Wisdom of Solomon, where Adam is also called the “first father” (S. Sandmel et al., Solomon, 10:1-2, p. 104; see also Isaiah 43:27).

376 B. Young, 8 October 1854, pp. 100, 93.

377 P. B. Munoa, Four Powers, pp. 108-109. See also Joseph Smith, Jr. in D. M. Quinn, Prayer Circles, p. 83; overview of Moses 5, p. 325.

378 B. Young, 10 July 1870, p. 71; cf. Commentary 1:33-a, p. 65. See Moses 1:35-38.

379 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 85, 594.

380 History of JS 4:5, p. 72. See K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 17.

381 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 85.

382 Ibid., p. 594.

383 D&C 101:23; cf. Isaiah 25:6-9; 3 Nephi 26:3-5; H. W. Nibley, Treasures, pp. 185-186; Commentary 2:3-a, p. 99.

384 Cf. Moses 1:4.

385 See Commentary 1:32-a, p. 65; cf. D&C 29:30; John 1:1-3.

38 And as one earth shall pass away, and the heavens thereof even so shall another come; and there is no end to my works, neither to my words.

39 For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

whom these works were created. Likewise, Egyptian creation texts link the divine word with creative power,³⁸⁶ a theme also taken up in Jacob 4:9. Explains Nibley: “It is the Egyptian sia, ‘intelligence,’ awareness, that comes first. But it is lost without hu, ‘authoritative utterance,’³⁸⁷ ‘communication’... The one is incomplete without the other, and this is made very clear in the oldest Egyptian creation drama,³⁸⁸ where God ‘conceives in his mind’ and then ‘utters with his mouth,’ communicating his intention to the council of the gods at each step of the creation. This is the very modern doctrine of anthropism.³⁸⁹ Without sia—intelligence, awareness—what would exist? And if it were confined to one mind only, what would be accomplished?”³⁹⁰

39 a this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.

Flake writes: “With this reply, [Joseph] Smith rejected 1,500 years of Christian theological anthropology by making God ontologically related to creation. God is both defined as Father and glorified as God by the capacity and purpose to engender the divine life in humans. To Smith, ‘Father God’ is not only a metaphor for expressing divine love, but is definitive of God and indicative of human possibility, even human capacity to receive the divine nature.”³⁹¹

“Immortality is to live forever in the resurrected state with body and spirit inseparably connected.”³⁹² This is a blessing that will be given to each one of God’s children.³⁹³ On the other hand, eternal life “is to gain exaltation in the highest heaven.”³⁹⁴ which means having “the kind of life that God has. All those who become sons and daughters of God will have the additional gift of eternal life, which is the greatest gift of God.”³⁹⁵ Comments Nibley: “[God’s] whole concern... is to pass on to others what he has. ‘The glory of God is intelligence,’³⁹⁶ which he wishes to share with all others. Glory is shared intelligence. Hence his works always go along with his words.”³⁹⁷

God’s work and glory must by inference become man’s work and glory.³⁹⁸ Elder John A. Widtsoe has written: “Under the gospel what is man’s highest ideal? Under the gospel it must be to become like the Father. If the Lord’s concern is chiefly to bring happiness and joy, salvation, to the whole human family, we cannot become like the Father unless we too engage in that work.”³⁹⁹

The earlier version of this verse in OT1 reads: “this is my work to my glory to the immortality and the eternal life of man.”⁴⁰⁰

386 E.g., J. B. Pritchard, ANET, pp. 5-6.

387 A. H. Gardiner, Grammar, pp. 588, 580.

388 See Excursus 1: Speech, Writing, and Revelation, p. 512.

389 See Commentary 1:39-a, p. 68.

390 H. W. Nibley, Drama, p. 26.

391 K. Flake, Translating Time, p. 519.

392 B. R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, p. 376.

393 1 Corinthians 15:22.

394 S. W. Kimball, Eternal Hope, p. 72. See also J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, pp. 346-347.

395 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 22 April 1939, 2:8. See D&C 14:7.

396 D&C 93:36.

397 H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 60. See Commentary 1:38-b, p. 67.

398 See Commentary 1:6-a, p. 46.

399 Cited in A. F. Bennett, Saviors, pp. 11-12; B. K. Packer, Holy Temple, p. 216. See G. B. Hinckley, Sunday AM, 2 April 1995, pp. 17-18, 20; M. G. Romney, Living, p. 93. See also Excursus 4: Chance and Purpose in Creation, p. 524.

400 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 86; R. J. Matthews, What Is, p. 31.

40 And now, Moses, my son, I will speak unto thee concerning this earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write the things which I shall speak.

41 And in a day when the children of men shall esteem my words as naught and take many of them from the book which thou shalt write, behold, I will raise up another like unto thee; and they shall be had again among the children of men—among as many as shall believe.

42 (These words were spoken unto Moses in the mount, the name of which shall not be known among the children of men. And now they are spoken unto you. Show them not unto any except them that believe. Even so. Amen.)

- 40 a this earth upon which thou standest; and thou shalt write. As this verse makes clear, Moses authored an original version of the creation account by specific assignment.⁴⁰¹

Johnson sees a small chiasm stretching from Moses 1:40 through 2:1 pivoting around the prophecy of another one like Moses being raised up, with v. 42 being treated as parenthetical.⁴⁰²

OT2 refers to Moses in the second person plural form—or perhaps it should be regarded simply as a modernization of the archaic “thou”: “this earth upon which you stand; and you shall write.”⁴⁰³

- 41 a take many of them from the book which thou shalt write.⁴⁰⁴ In this connection, note that the overwhelming bulk of JST Genesis revisions consist of additions rather than omissions of material. Barker has written extensively about conscious omissions and alterations of scriptures relating to key doctrines in the Old Testament.⁴⁰⁵ A specific example of material presumably removed from a later chapter of Genesis is the prophecy of Joseph recorded in JST Genesis 50:24-37 and 2 Nephi 3:5-22.

- b I will raise up another like unto thee; and they shall be had again among the children of men. Compare 2 Enoch: “And... another generation will arise, the last of many... And I shall raise up for that generation someone who will reveal to them the books in your handwriting and those of your fathers. And he will have to point out to... truthful men, and those who carry out my will.”⁴⁰⁶

Moses uses similar words in his prophecy of the coming of the Savior.⁴⁰⁷ However, the current passage clearly refers to Joseph Smith, who is specifically compared to Moses in other scriptures.⁴⁰⁸

- 42 a Show them not unto any except them that believe. 4 Ezra records that the Lord commanded Moses to openly reveal only part of his visions on Mt. Sinai; the rest was to be kept secret. Similarly, Ezra is reported to have been told that certain books were to be read by the “worthy and unworthy” whereas others were to be only given “to the wise.”⁴⁰⁹ The Mishnah contained a “rule that certain texts could not be read in public, or could be read but not explained.”⁴¹⁰ Ezekiel’s vision of the throne was one such passage; it could not be discussed

401 Cf. O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 2:1, p. 55.

402 M. J. Johnson, Prologue, pp. 15-16.

403 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 594.

404 Cf. Moses 1:23; 1 Nephi 13:4, 24-28.

405 E.g., M. Barker, Older; M. Barker, Joseph Smith, pp. 77-78.

406 F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 35:1-2, p. 158. Cf. Luke 2:14.

407 Deuteronomy 18:15; Acts 3:19-26; 1 Nephi 22:20-21; 3 Nephi 20:23; JS-Hist 1:40.

408 2 Nephi 3:9; D&C 28:2, 103:16; cf. D&C 107:9. See K. Muhlestein, Flow, pp. 48-49.

409 B. M. Metzger, Fourth Ezra, 14:6, 45-47, pp. 553, 555. Rabbinical arguments to this effect are summarized in A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 656-657. See also H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, pp. 223-224. For examples of other scriptural passages that speak of restrictions on making revelations known, see 2 Corinthians 12:4; 3 Nephi 17:16-17; 28:13-16; Ether 3:21-4:7; Moses 4:32. See also Commentary 1:23-b, p. 59.

410 J. Neusner, Mishnah, Hagigah 2:1, p. 330.

42 (These words were spoken unto Moses in the mount, the name of which shall not be known among the children of men. And now they are spoken unto you. Show them not unto any except them that believe. Even so. Amen.)

unless the other person already understood it ‘of his own knowledge.’ Nor could the blessing of the priests—‘May the Lord make his face shine upon you’⁴¹¹ be explained.”⁴¹²

The current text follows OT1, except that the archaic “shew” has been changed to “show.”⁴¹³ In OT2, a slightly different phrase (“And now they are also spoken unto you. Shew them not unto any except them that believe until I command you. Amen”) is crossed out and the phrase “Even so” is omitted, so that the chapter ends with the phrase “children of men.”⁴¹⁴

411 Numbers 6:24-26.

412 M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 91-92.

413 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 86.

414 Ibid., p. 595.

Gleanings

Table of Contents

H. W. Nibley: A Chapter of "Most Boundless Wonder and Esteem"	71
J. Smith, Jr.: To Foreknow Is Not the Same as To Foreordain	73
C. S. Lewis: The Nature of God's Foreknowledge	73
D. L. Paulsen: God's Foreknowledge and Man's Freedom	74
R. L. Bushman: A God Who Is Approachable and Friendly	74

Hugh W. Nibley: A Chapter of "Most Boundless Wonder and Esteem"⁴¹⁵

[Joseph Smith] brought out three formidable volumes of scripture. One need look no farther than the opening chapter of each of these to realize that a new dispensation is indeed upon us, with all the visions and blessings of old. The first section of the Doctrine and Covenants... takes up all the main themes of the gospel that had been the burden of every former dispensation, and had been lost in all the dark intervals between them, and weaves them together into one strong texture in which warning and deliverance are equally balanced... At the same time, the opening chapter of the Book of Mormon emerges as the perfect model and type of those more specialized apocalypses or testaments attributed to individuals that are now taking up their position in the growing procession of early Jewish and Christian Apocrypha...

But it is the first chapter of the book of Moses that commands the most boundless wonder and esteem... What other prelude could there be to the history of the race, what other prologue could ever give it such depth of meaning and such gratifying consistency? First, we find Moses in the presence of God and the bosom of eternity, being apprised of a special calling to which he has been appointed as co-worker with the Savior.⁴¹⁶ A preliminary test is indicated—suddenly the lights go out and Moses is found lying unconscious and helpless upon the earth; as he slowly comes to himself, he recognizes the misery and the glory of fallen man: "Now... I know that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed." And then, in the same breath: "But now mine own eyes have beheld God... his glory was upon me... I was transfigured before him."⁴¹⁷ Weakness is his present condition, glory his everlasting birthright.

It is in this moment of man's greatest helplessness and vulnerability that Satan chooses to strike, attempting first by persuasion and then by intimidation to get Moses to worship him as the god of this world. But Moses has not wholly forgotten who he is, "a son of God, in the similitude of the Only Begotten,"⁴¹⁸ and denounces Satan as a sham, while professing himself awaiting further light and knowledge: "I will not cease to call upon God, I have other things to inquire of him."⁴¹⁹ The humiliating exposure of Satan becomes unendurable when Moses announces that he actually is what his adversary falsely claims to be, "a son of God, in the similitude of his Only Begotten; and where is thy glory that I should worship thee?"⁴²⁰ This is too much for Satan, who casts aside his celebrated but now useless subtlety and launches a frontal attack of satanic fury, a tremendous tantrum, as he "cried with a 415 H. W. Nibley, To Open, pp. 4-6. emphasis throughout is mine.

416 Moses 1:3-9.

417 Moses 1:10-11.

418 Moses 1:13.

419 Moses 1:18.

420 Moses 1:13.

loud voice, and [ranted] upon the earth, and commanded, saying: I am the Only Begotten, worship me.”⁴²¹ The whole scene is presented in dramatic form as a ritual combat, a stichomythia, and true to the ancient pattern, the hero is momentarily bested, overcome by the powers of darkness, as he “began to fear,” and “saw the bitterness of hell.”⁴²² But with his last ounce of strength he calls upon God from the depths and is delivered: he has won the fight, he has prevailed against the power of him who “sought to destroy the world,” “for he knew not the mind of God.”⁴²³

And now the scene changes (verses 23 and 24 read like stage directions); the lights go up, the music soars and Moses, though remaining on earth, is again invested with glory and hears the voice of God proclaiming him victor, worthy and chosen to lead God’s people “as if thou wert God”⁴²⁴—the type and model of the ancient Year King proclaimed after his victory over death as God’s ruler on earth. He is specifically told that he shall “be made stronger than many waters”⁴²⁵—for he has just passed through the waters of death and rebirth, de profundis; and shown himself capable and worthy of the mission which is now entrusted to him.

After this royal acclamation, reminiscent of combat and coronation episodes dramatized in the earliest year rites throughout the ancient world, after the coronation, the scene again changes, as Moses and the reader view the field of labor in which the prophet is to work; he receives a thorough briefing, an intimate knowledge of the earth in its cosmic setting, its physical makeup (“every particle” of it), and everything that lives upon it.⁴²⁶ Naturally, he wants to know what is behind the behind and beyond the beyond, but God assures him that such knowledge is not for now: “But only an account of this earth, and the inhabitants thereof, give I unto you,”⁴²⁷ with which knowledge Moses is finally “content.”⁴²⁸ Nevertheless, quite fundamental to a correct understanding of this world is its relationship to the wider structure of things, to heavens without end and worlds without number, constantly coming into existence and passing away in an endless processing; “... and there is no end to my works, neither to my words.”⁴²⁹ And this cosmic discourse is summed up and concluded in the most comforting proclamation of all: “For behold, this is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man.”⁴³⁰ All this becoming and passing away, the endless processing of the same elements, would offer only the overpowering and depressing prospect of science fiction, were it not for that ultimate assurance: man is going somewhere after all; in the course of nature he is doomed⁴³¹ but the course of nature does not have the last word—God is on top of the problem and he is working for us.

The three concluding verses of the chapter place upon it an undeniable seal of authenticity. Of careful concern in each of the records handed down through the Prophet Joseph is the establishing of the exact manner in which the work has been preserved. This is another mark of the newly-discovered pseudepigrapha: these verses of Moses might have been taken

421 Moses 1:19.

422 Moses 1:20.

423 Moses 4:6.

424 Moses 1:25.

425 Moses 1:25.

426 Moses 1:27-28.

427 Moses 1:35.

428 Moses 1:36.

429 Moses 1:38.

430 Moses 1:39.

431 2 Nephi 9:7.

out of any number of Jewish or Christian Apocrypha; especially those writings from the “Forty-day Literature” in which the Coptic records are so rich: “And now Moses, my son... thou shalt write the things which I shall speak. And in a day when the children of men shall esteem my words as naught and take many of them from the book which thou shalt write, behold, I will raise up another like unto thee; and they shall be had again among the children of men—among as many as shall believe.”⁴³² And so the present dispensation gets them: “And now they are spoken unto you. Show them not unto any except them that believe.”⁴³³ Such is the standard formula for the preservation and transmission of apocalyptic writings.

Joseph Smith, Jr.: To Foreknow Is Not the Same as to Foreordain⁴³⁴

I believe that God foreknew everything, but did not foreordain everything; I deny that foreordain and foreknow is the same thing.⁴³⁵

C. S. Lewis: The Nature of God’s Foreknowledge⁴³⁶

Lewis, summarizing 5:3-6 of Boethius’ *De Consolatione Philosophiae*⁴³⁷ writes:

... the question never was whether foreknowledge necessitates the act but whether it is not evidence that the act must have been necessary. Can there, then, be foreknowledge of the indeterminate? In a sense, yes. The character of knowledge depends not on the nature of the object known but on that of the knowing faculty. Thus in ourselves sensation, imagination, and ratio all in their several ways “know” man. Sensation knows him as a corporeal shape; imagination, as a shape without matter; ratio, as a concept, a species. None of these faculties by itself gives us the least hint of the mode of knowledge enjoyed by its superior. But above ratio or reason there is a higher faculty intelligentia or understanding... And Reason cannot conceive the future being known except as it would have to be known, if at all, by her; that is, as determinate. But it is just possible even for us to climb up to the intelligential level and get a glimpse of the knowledge which does not involve determinism.

Eternity is quite distinct from perpetuity, from mere endless continuance in time. Perpetuity is only the attainment of an endless series of moments, each lost as soon as it is attained. Eternity is the actual and timeless fruition of illimitable life. Time, even endless time, is only an image, almost a parody, of that plenitude; a hopeless attempt to compensate for the transitoriness of its “presents” by infinitely multiplying them... And God is eternal, not perpetual. Strictly speaking, He never foresees; He simply sees. Your “future” is only an area, and only for us a special area of His infinite Now. He sees (not remembers) your yesterdays acts because yesterday is still ‘there’ for Him; he sees (not foresees) your tomorrow’s acts because He is already in tomorrow. As a human spectator, by watching my present act, does not at all infringe its freedom, so I am nonetheless free to act as I choose in the future because God, in that future (His present) watches me acting.

432 Moses 1:40-41.

433 Moses 1:42.

434 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 6 February 1840, 4:78.

435 Cf. “Everything is foreseen, and free choice is given” (J. Neusner, Mishnah, Abot 3:15, p. 680). See the related discussion in A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 216-219.

436 C. S. Lewis, Image, pp. 88-89; cf. C. S. Lewis, Mere, 4:3, p. 147; C. S. Lewis, Miracles, On Special Providences, pp. 226-234.

437 A. M. S. Boethius, Consolation, pp. 100-114. See L. T. Zagzebski, Dilemma, for a formal treatment of Boethius’ proposal (pp. 36-65), and various alternatives to it. G. E. Ganssle, God and Time provides additional useful philosophical perspectives on these and related questions. C. H. Pinnock et al., Openness includes chapters from a variety of theological and philosophical perspectives that, among other things, question the idea of extent of God’s foreknowledge. For a brief sampling of scientific perspectives, see Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537.

David L. Paulsen: God's Foreknowledge and Man's Freedom⁴³⁸

Latter-day Saints differ among themselves in their understandings of the extent of God's foreknowledge. Some, including Presidents Brigham Young and Wilford Woodruff, have thought that God increases endlessly in knowledge and, hence, presumably, at every time lacks exhaustive foreknowledge.... Other Latter-day Saints hold to a more traditional view that God's knowledge, including the foreknowledge of future free contingencies, is exhaustively complete.... Despite these differing views within the LDS tradition, there is accord on three fundamental points: (1) man is an agent with power to choose other than what he, in fact, chooses; (2) Whatever the extent and nature of God's foreknowledge, it is not inconsistent with man's freedom—God's knowledge does not causally determine human choices; and (3) God's knowledge, like God's power, is maximally efficacious. No event occurs that he has not anticipated at least qua possibility or has not taken into account in his planning.

Richard L. Bushman: A God Who Is Approachable and Friendly⁴³⁹

The vision of Moses... depicts a Creator whose power and might exceeded all human comprehension. Moses is given a glimpse of God's glory while on a high mountain⁴⁴⁰ and then Moses abruptly drops back to earth.⁴⁴¹ Decimated by the experience, Moses exclaims in wonder: "Now for this cause I know that man is nothing, which thing I never had supposed."⁴⁴² He recognizes that he cannot even look upon God without the protection of His Spirit when he says, "Now mine own eyes have beheld God; but not my natural, but my spiritual eyes, for my natural eyes could not have beheld; for I should have withered and died in his presence; but his glory was upon me; and I beheld his face."⁴⁴³ Even so, Moses is not entirely intimidated by the God of his visions. Moses asks God why he created the worlds and persists when God rebuffs him.⁴⁴⁴ Finally the great God yields to Moses' entreaties and explains that the divine purpose is "to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man."⁴⁴⁵ This God was willing to converse about His purposes...[E]mergent Mormonism portrayed a God who was approachable and friendly.

438 D. L. Paulsen, Response to Pinnock, pp. 530-532.

439 R. L. Bushman, Creation of the Sacred, p. 95.

440 Moses 1:1-2.

441 Moses 1:9.

442 Moses 1:10.

443 Moses 1:11.

444 Moses 1:30-36.

445 Moses 1:39.

Endnotes

- 1-1 This account of Moses' visions, constituting section 22 of the Community of Christ editions of the Doctrine and Covenants, was reprinted in the prefatory material of their Inspired Version of the Bible until the 1991 edition, when it was omitted "because of space considerations only."⁴⁴⁶
- 1-2 Some scholars find traces of such beliefs in the subduing of the powers of watery chaos prior to creation.⁴⁴⁷
- 1-3 See Barker for a summary of parallels between Jesus' experience in the wilderness, His baptism, and the ascension literature.⁴⁴⁸
- 1-4 Noting parallels in the experiences of Adam, Enoch, Moses, Jesus Christ, and Joseph Smith in confronting the power of the Devil, Elder Alvin R. Dyer observed that Satan "has exerted his greatest influence of evil when a dispensation of the Gospel has been given in an effort to prevent it."⁴⁴⁹ In answer to Heber C. Kimball's concern that "there might be something wrong in him" because of the vision of evil spirits he had had while opening missionary work in England, the Prophet is reported by Kimball's daughter Helen Mar Whitney to have said: "When I heard of it, it gave me great joy, for I then knew the work of God had taken root in that land. It was this that caused the Devil to make a struggle to kill you.' Joseph then said the nearer a person approached to the Lord, the greater power would be manifest by the Devil to prevent the accomplishment of the purposes of God."⁴⁵⁰
- 1-5 Matthews comments: "Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith... did not state their purpose in purchasing the Bible at that time, but in view of the instructions and experiences they had received, it is possible that they were thinking of a new translation of the Bible even at that early date."⁴⁵¹ Moses 1 was recorded on the first three pages of a fifty-two page folio that continued without a break into the translation of the first chapters of Genesis, and was similarly positioned in later JST manuscripts. It seems reasonable to conclude that Moses 1 was not merely "an independent revelation that evolved into a retranslation of the Bible,"⁴⁵² but rather was preconceived as an integral part of the translation project from its inception.
- 1-6 As was later explained, "[f]rom what we can draw from the Scriptures relative to the teaching of heaven, we are induced to think that much instruction has been given to man since the beginning which we do not possess now."⁴⁵³ Joseph Smith also wrote: "I believe the Bible as it read when it came from the pen of the original writers. Ignorant translators, careless transcribers, or designing and corrupt priests have committed many errors."⁴⁵⁴ See Matthews for an overview of this topic.⁴⁵⁵
- Flake summarizes how scholarly views of the Bible have changed since the time of Joseph Smith:
- Today, the Bible itself is believed to be largely the product of periodic manipulation of foundational texts. "Redaction" has become the preferred term for an invasive revision of a source that seamlessly inserts new material in an authoritative text in order to meet new exigencies. Though only a gleam in the eye of the academy at the time Smith was writing and still a source of concern for literalist readers, redaction has become the regnant explanation for the construction of the Bible as having "experienced change, accretions, and reinterpretations as it was being transmitted through centuries."⁴⁵⁶
- 1-7 Joseph's continuing role as a seer and a translator had been affirmed by a revelation received at that organizational meeting.⁴⁵⁷
- 1-8 Describing the artist's frustration with his own limited capacities for expression, Callaghan writes:

446 J. Smith, Jr., Holy Scriptures.

447 Commentary 2:2-c, p. 96.

448 M. Barker, Risen, pp. 49-50; M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 91-95.

449 A. R. Dyer, Meaning, p. 11.

450 Women's Exponent, 15 December 1885, cited in H. L. Andrus et al., They Knew, p. 176; J. Smith, Jr., Encyclopedia, p. 190.

451 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 26.

452 R. L. Bushman, Mormonism, p. 64.

453 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, p. 61.

454 Ibid., 15 October 1843, p. 327.

455 R. J. Matthews, Role of JST.

456 K. Flake, Translating Time, p. 509.

457 D&C 21:1-68.

“Escher... could not bear to look at his prints after he had finished them and did not hang any of them in his studio. He considered them failures because none fully captured the visions of his mind’s eye.”⁴⁵⁸

- 1-9 For Joseph Smith, as Bushman insightfully observes, knowledge was not only a source of power and salvation⁴⁵⁹ but also of comfort.⁴⁶⁰ Said the Prophet on one occasion, “I am glad I have the privilege of communicating to you some things which if grasped closely will be a help to you when the clouds are gathering and the storms are ready to burst upon you like peals of thunder. Lay hold of these things and let not your knees tremble, nor hearts faint.”⁴⁶¹

- 1-10 About the spiritual nature of his art, Kershnik wrote:

Spiritual art is by no means limited to so-called religious subject matter, nor is art with religious subject matter necessarily the fruit of the Spirit. Spiritual art is the result of honest and goodly efforts to reach for an understanding that is beyond our own, hopefully enabling us to better see God. Additional results of this effort, such as increased understanding of ourselves and others, are incidental, even if they are significant.

I rarely paint scriptural imagery. I hope (God is my critic) that I always paint spiritual art, even if it is not obviously so.⁴⁶²

- 1-11 About this gap between human actuality and potential, President Spencer W. Kimball wrote: “... from the worm to the god is the potential of man.”⁴⁶³ When he was created, there were put into him the seeds of godhood, the power to think and to reason, the power to lift himself from beasthood to godhood.”⁴⁶⁴

The idea of Christ as the good shepherd⁴⁶⁵ is not only an apt description of His role in relation to us, but also of our relationship to Him. In other words, it is meant to show not only that He cares for us individually as a shepherd cares for each one of his sheep, but also that we are at present, in comparison to Him, an ignorant, helpless, and wayward lot.⁴⁶⁶ This realization gives a new appreciation for the depth of the “condescension of God.”⁴⁶⁷

In scripture, the vastness of God’s wisdom is frequently contrasted to the pretended wisdom of man.⁴⁶⁸ This is personified in the book of Proverbs as the pursuit of the “foolish woman,”⁴⁶⁹ or in apocalyptic literature as the image of “the whore of all the earth.”⁴⁷⁰ The consequences of such “foolishness”⁴⁷¹ might be confined in scope or, as in the account of the Watchers, the unlawful use of wisdom could lead to a virtually unredeemable corruption of the entire earth.⁴⁷²

- 1-12 Notwithstanding all this, Madsen argues that the distinction between God and man is not unbridgeable:

Søren Kierkegaard’s widely influential phrase, “the infinite qualitative distinction between God and man,” is misleading and debasing. The distinction is neither infinite nor qualitative. Vast though it is, it is a distinction of degree. To deny our divine origins—and likewise our divine potential—is blasphemous humility. Even when we see ourselves as “less than the dust of the earth,”⁴⁷³ we are of the same species as the gods. The ultimate intent and meaning of Christ’s life and death is theosis: the universal transformation of the whole of human nature and the whole of the human family.⁴⁷⁴

458 C. A. Callaghan, Other Worlds, p. 10.

459 D&C 130:18-19; 131:5-6; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 8 April 1843, pp. 287-288; 14 May 1843, p. 297.

460 R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 487-488.

461 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 16 April 1843, p. 196.

462 All Things, p. 54.

463 Psalm 22:6; 8:4-6.

464 S. W. Kimball, Perfect.

465 E.g., John 10:1-18.

466 Isaiah 53:6.

467 1 Nephi 11:16, 11:26.

468 E.g., 1 Corinthians 1:24-2:16; 2 Nephi 9:28, 9:42, 9:43; 15:21; 27:26; 28:15; Alma 37:7.

469 E.g., Proverbs 7:4-27; 9:13-18.

470 Revelation 17:1-18; 1 Nephi 14:10; 22:13; 2 Nephi 10:16; D&C 29:21; 86:3.

471 1 Corinthians 1:20.

472 M. Barker, Older, pp. 94-95. See Moses 8:13 and Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

473 Mosiah 4:2; Helaman 12:7.

474 T. G. Madsen et al., Human Nature, p. 107.

- 1-13 Stark defines the concept of “divine accommodation,” which “holds that God’s revelations are always limited to the current capacity of humans to comprehend—that in order to communicate with humans, God is forced to accommodate their incomprehension by resorting to the equivalent of ‘baby talk.’” Moreover, “all revelations are subject to misunderstanding, exaggeration, and faulty transmission.”⁴⁷⁵

Further elaborating this concept, McLachlan writes: “Latter-day Saints do not attribute infallibility to the scriptures because the scriptures are filtered through human understanding—whether by the prophets who received and wrote the message or we who are attempting to understand it.”⁴⁷⁶

- 1-14 Nibley observes:

You comprehend what you are like, don’t you? In other words, you identify. We are told time and again that when Jesus came down to earth he took flesh so that we could comprehend him. He became like us. “Among the angels he was an angel. Among men he was a man.” He descends to the level of the people whom he must teach, because he must do it in order to teach them... You comprehend others only to the degree that you are like them... By comprehending something, you embrace it, literally; it is part of you; you identify with it completely. This means that life will look very different hereafter, when we can identify with, for example, animals. It wouldn’t be unfair to lower creatures to compare them with ourselves—they would lose nothing by it. Can they not have joy in the sphere in which they were created without having our particular type of glory? They aren’t missing anything at all, because we’re sharing a common existence. The man comprehends a great deal more in the love of his dog, and the other way around. If there is a good feeling between the man and his dog, neither feels cheated; neither feels that he is being left out of anything, because they are actually sharing in each other’s worlds. You can say that a man has a very intelligent dog of which he is very fond and that the dog is very fond of the man. They actually share a very real experience, so that neither has to envy the other at all.⁴⁷⁷

The philosopher Wittgenstein famously wrote: “If a lion could talk, we could not understand him” (Wenn ein Löwe sprechen könnte, wir könnten ihn nicht verstehen).⁴⁷⁸ This does not mean that a lion cannot have a language that in principle could be “translated” to our own, but rather that his whole experience of life is so different from ours that the meaning of the words would be lost. In Wittgenstein’s terms, this is due to the fact that we cannot enter into the lion’s “form of life” (Lebensform). Similarly, “when we come into a strange country with entirely strange traditions; and, what is more, even given a mastery of the country’s language[, we] do not understand the people. (And not because of not knowing what they are saying to themselves.) We cannot find our feet with them.”⁴⁷⁹

By way of contrast, Jesus’ divinity coupled with his full experience of humanity endows him with the capacity to “[bear] our griefs and [carry] our sorrows,”⁴⁸⁰ knowing “according to the flesh how to succor his people.”⁴⁸¹ Jesus Christ “ascended up on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things, that he might be in all and through all things, the light of truth.”⁴⁸² Because He understands us, He can help us. As William James wrote:

In this real world of sweat and dirt, it seems to me that when a view of things is “noble,” that ought to count as a presumption against its truth, and as a philosophic disqualification. The prince of darkness may be a gentleman, as we are told he is, but whatever the God of earth and heaven is, he can surely be no gentleman. His menial services are needed in the dust of our human trails, even more than his dignity is needed in the empyrean.⁴⁸³

Hustwit observes that “[God] has not remained an abstraction apart from human life and suffering... [On the other hand,] Aristotle’s unmoved mover has nothing to say to a human being, but if it did, like Wittgenstein’s lion, no one would understand it. Neither would it have the moral authority to speak.”⁴⁸⁴

475 R. Stark, Discovering, pp. 6, 52

476 J. McLachlan, Reply, p. 209.

477 H. W. Nibley, Unrolling, pp. 165-166.

478 L. Wittgenstein, Investigations, II:xi, pp. 190c, 190.

479 Ibid., p. 190c.

480 Isaiah 53:4.

481 Alma 7:12

482 D&C 88:6; cf. 1 Nephi 11:16; 11:26; D&C 122:8.

483 W. James, What Pragmatism Means, p. 72. See also P. M. Van Buren, Lions, p. 228.

484 R. Hustwit, Kierkegaard.

1-15 See Johnson⁴⁸⁵ for the application of methods of biblical criticism to the text of Moses 1.

1-16 Clark summarizes parallels between Moses 1, the book of Jubilees, and various Jewish traditions about the ascension of Moses. Summarizing significant passages in Jubilees, he writes that:

... in contrast to Genesis, the creation account is preceded by an entire chapter of prologue that describes the setting for the subsequent divine revelation to Moses. Moses is divinely summoned to a mountain where he experiences God's glory and is instructed to record what he would be told. He is then apprised of the future apostasy of the children of Israel after they are settled in the promised land and how they would kill the prophets and go into captivity. He learns that eventually, however, the children of Israel would repent and be transplanted back as a righteous plant. Following Moses' intercessory prayer, in which he pleads with the Lord to show mercy and salvation to the people, Moses is again instructed to write everything that should be made known to him, and the "angel of the presence" is told to dictate to Moses the whole account of the creation and the division of years until all creation would be renewed by the powers of heaven."⁴⁸⁶

1-17 Of this chapter's relationship to the later work on Genesis, Matthews wrote: "The Prophet did not say what connection this revelation has with the actual Translation of the Bible or whether it was received while he was engaged in the translation. However the fact that it was included in each of the three of the Old Testament manuscripts of the New Translation suggests that there is a close historical connection."⁴⁸⁷

1-18 Writes Turner:

Narratives in general have several ways of alerting readers to what is likely to transpire in the story as it unfolds, or how to make sense out of what they have just read, and Genesis itself uses several such conventions. For example, it prefates some individual stories with headlines which give advance warning about the significance or meaning of the ensuing narrative, as in 22:1: "After these things God tested Abraham." This headline does not tell us why God wanted to test Abraham, but it informs us that if we are to read 22:2ff. correctly, we must view it from this perspective.... [Though] the reader is [frequently] left on his or her own with the text,... [there] are important exceptions to this,... for Genesis does employ what might be termed Announcements of Plot. Each of the four narrative blocks which comprise the book (i.e., the primeval history and the stories of Abraham, Jacob, and Jacob's family) is prefaced by statements which either explicitly state what will happen, or which suggest to the reader what the major elements of the plot are likely to be... and it is a natural question for the reader to ask whether in fact what is expected to happen actually does happen.⁴⁸⁸

Indeed, as Alter expresses, while the purpose of the whole of biblical narrative is to "reveal the enactment of God's purposes in historical events," this enactment "is continuously complicated by a perception of two, approximately parallel, dialectical tensions. One is a tension between the divine plan and the disorderly character of actual historical events, or, to translate this opposition into specifically biblical terms, between the divine promise and its ostensible failure to be fulfilled; the other is a tension between God's will, His providential guidance, and human freedom, the refractory nature of man."⁴⁸⁹

1-19 Apart from the specifics of what is actually said, an important purpose of the chapter's prologue—as similarly in the function of Moses 1 as a whole to the story of creation, and, for that matter, the story of creation to the entire book of Genesis—is, as Lewis aptly described the opening paragraph of Paradise Lost, to give us "the sensation that some great thing is now about to begin."⁴⁹⁰ No doubt this purpose accounts in part for the style and structure of the tightly-packed narrative and dialogues of Moses 1 as well as, perhaps, the solemn and grand repetitions of God's near soliloquy in Moses 2. To get a proper sense for the intended effect of the whole, it is useful to read the first four chapters of Moses at one sitting. At such times, advises Lewis, we should permit ourselves to be swept along "as though we were attending an actual recitation and nowhere [allowed] to settle down and luxuriate on any one line or paragraph." Though the focus of the story changes from chapter to chapter, these transitions should 485 M. J. Johnson, Prologue.

486 E. D. Clark, Prologue, p. 135. See also H. W. Nibley, To Open, pp. 7-19.

487 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 27.

488 L. Turner, Announcements, pp. 13-14.

489 R. Alter, Narrative, p. 33.

490 C. S. Lewis, Preface, VII, p. 41.

be “felt as we feel the pause in a piece of music, where the silence is part of the music, and not as we feel the pause between one item of a concert and the next.”⁴⁹¹

- 1-20 Rabbi Nathan says that on Sinai, Moses “was sanctified and became like the ministering angels.”⁴⁹² Going further, “Philo is so carried away by the exalted Moses that he frequently speaks of him as having been deified, or being God. ‘For when he had left all mortal categories behind he was changed into the divine, so that he might be made akin to God and truly divine.’⁴⁹³ Philo vacillates on this point, but the fact that he could make such a statement is highly significant.”⁴⁹⁴ Fletcher-Louis summarizes similar teachings from the Dead Sea Scrolls.⁴⁹⁵

Ginzberg reports traditions of “several ascensions of Moses”: a first “at the beginning of his career,” a second “at the revelation of the Torah,” and the third “shortly before his death.”⁴⁹⁶ For a brief overview of accounts that interpreted Moses’ ascent to Sinai as an ascent to the Holy of Holies, see Barker.⁴⁹⁷ For useful general summaries of ascent literature, see Barker, Hamblin, and McConkie.⁴⁹⁸ For an interpretation of the Islamic hajj pilgrimage as a form of ascent, see Ashraf,⁴⁹⁹ and for the Islamic story of Habib, who “entered [Paradise] alive,” see Yasar.⁵⁰⁰ For a discussion of Moses’ vision on Sinai as an ascent and rebirth, see Borgen.⁵⁰¹ See also Excursus 2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom, p. 516.

- 1-21 For a discussion of “prologues in heaven” in scripture, literature, and ancient sources see Nibley⁵⁰² and the overviews of Moses 3 and 4.⁵⁰³
- 1-22 “In a stock presentation found in early Jewish synagogues as well as on very early Christian murals, ‘the hand of God is represented, but could not be called that explicitly, and instead of the heavenly utterance, the bath-kol [echo, distant voice, whisper] is given.’ ... In early Christian representations the hand of God reaching through the veil is grasped by the initiate or human spirit who is being caught up into the presence of the Lord.”⁵⁰⁴ Discussions of the sacred handclasp are available in several sources.⁵⁰⁵
- 1-23 In extracanonical writings, accounts of similar visions speak of a “blueprint” of eternity that is worked out in advance and shown on the inside of the heavenly veil.⁵⁰⁶
- 1-24 This tentative interpretation of the structure and sequence of the events of Moses 1 resulted from an effort to understand several puzzling questions raised by a close reading of the text. For instance, why do we find similar wording in verses 2 and 31? Answer: Verse 2 anticipatorily summarizes verse 31, the most important event of the chapter where Moses sees God face to face. Why are there two seemingly similar visions of the world/earth and the children of men/inhabitants?⁵⁰⁷ Answer: The first is a vision of the spirit world and its organized intelligences,⁵⁰⁸ and the second is of the earth and its inhabitants. Why does the text specify “the world upon which he was created” instead of simply “the world”?⁵⁰⁹ Answer: Moses’ spirit was created at or near the residence of God (the place of “first

491 Ibid., pp. 41, 45.

492 J. Goldin, Fathers, 1, p. 3.

493 Philo, Exodus, 2:29, p. 70.

494 E. R. Goodenough, Introduction to Philo, pp. 148-149; cf. R. S. Eccles, Pilgrimage, pp. 60-61. See E. R. Goodenough, Light, pp. 223-229. See Endnote E-221, p. 757.

495 C. H. T. Fletcher-Louis, Glory, pp. 136-149.

496 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 5:417.

497 M. Barker, Great High Priest, pp. 218-219.

498 M. Barker, Risen; M. Barker, Temple Theology; W. J. Hamblin, Temple Motifs; J. F. McConkie, Premortal.

499 S. A. Ashraf, Inner, p. 125.

500 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, pp. 227-228.

501 P. Borgen, John and Philo, pp. 60-65.

502 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, pp. 205-216.

503 See the overviews of Moses 3, pp. 134-139 and Moses 4, pp. 216-227.

504 H. W. Nibley, Atonement, p. 562.

505 T. M. Compton, Token; T. M. Compton, Handclasp; S. D. Ricks, Dexiosis. See also Commentary 1:25-c, p. 60; Figure 5-13, p. 351; Figure 6-14, p. 473; Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, Dexiosis, p. 681; Figure B-1, p. 872.

506 See Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62.

507 Moses 1:7-8, 1:27-28.

508 Cf. Abraham 3:22-23.

509 Moses 1:8.

creation”⁵¹⁰), however subsequent events of his vision take place after he “fell unto the earth.”⁵¹¹ Why does Moses hear only a “voice” in verses 25-27? Answer: During his experiences on the telestial earth, the Holy Ghost ministers to him⁵¹² while he is temporarily separated from the Lord’s presence. The divine voice comes from behind the heavenly veil, preparing him to speak with God face to face.⁵¹³

1-25 An endowment may be a prerequisite for the carrying out of certain divine assignments, especially missionary work.⁵¹⁴ In a meeting with the Twelve where the gathering of volunteers for expeditions to explore the West for future colonization was discussed, Joseph Smith said, “I want every man that goes to be a king and a priest. When he gets on the mountains, he may want to talk with his God.”⁵¹⁵

1-26 The mention of the descent of the dove at Jesus’ baptism in all four Gospels and in the Doctrine and Covenants suggests the importance of this event. It is striking, however, that none of these scriptural accounts offer any explanation of the dove’s appearance, apparently assuming that its significance will be apparent to the careful reader. A connection between the experiences of Moses and that of Jesus at his baptism can be made if one regards the event, as does Barker, as a heavenly “ascent experience.”⁵¹⁶ Such an experience would be consistent with the idea of baptism as a figurative death and resurrection.⁵¹⁷ This interpretation also sheds light on the Evangelists’ description of the opening of the heavens, the proclamation of Divine Sonship by the Father,⁵¹⁸ and the presence of the dove as a symbol of the renewing of creation and the subduing of Satan.⁵¹⁹ Schroer emphasizes the connection between the symbolism of the dove, the Holy Spirit, and the ancient figure of Wisdom: “Like heavenly Sophia, the Son is the sole mediator of divine revelation, and the content of that heavenly revealed knowledge is Wisdom or the Son her/himself.... The baptismal event reveals that Jesus is the person in whom/ upon whom Wisdom/Spirit finds rest,” and the dove serves as a tangible messenger of Divine love and approval.⁵²⁰ “[T]he dove always symbolized the love of God for man and the love of man for God, love in which the hope of immortality was found and realized.”⁵²¹

1-27 Walker recorded the following concerning the First Vision:

Br. John Alger said while speaking of the Prophet Joseph, that when he, John, was a small boy he heard the Prophet Joseph relate his vision of seeing the Father and the Son. [He said t]hat God touched his eyes with his finger and said “Joseph, this is my beloved Son hear him.” As soon as the Lord had touched his eyes with his finger, he immediately saw the Savior. After meeting, a few of us questioned him about the matter and he told us at the bottom of the meeting house steps that he was in the house of Father Smith in Kirtland when Joseph made this declaration, and that Joseph while speaking of it put his finger to his right eye, suiting the action with the words so as to illustrate and at the same time impress the occurrence on the minds of those unto whom he was speaking. We enjoyed the conversation very much, as it was something that we had never seen in church history or heard of before.⁵²²

510 See the book of Abraham, Facsimile 2, figures 1-2.

511 Moses 1:9; cf. B. Young, 10 July 1874, p. 143.

512 Moses 1:24.

513 Cf. Moses 5:4, 5:9.

514 E.g., Luke 24:49; D&C 105:11-13; Brigham Young in W. Clayton, Chronicle, 26 December 1845, p. 234. See Excursus 15: Description of the LDS Temple Endowment, p. 557.

515 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 23 February 1844, p. 333; cf. 12 November 1835, p. 91.

516 M. Barker, Risen; cf. M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 91-94; G. Lettieri, Ambiguity, pp. 26-29; Commentary 5:6-a, p. 360.

517 Romans 6:4-6.

518 Matthew 3:16; Mark 1:10; Luke 3:22; John 1:32; D&C 93:15; M. Barker, Risen, pp. 46-49; cf. Commentary 1:24-a, p. 59. Barker notes that the oldest surviving versions of Luke’s gospel quote the royal birth texts of the temple: “You are my son. Today I have begotten you” (Luke 3:22, quoting Psalm 2:7)—“this was the high priest’s experience when he was born as the Son before being sent out into the world: he stood before the throne” (compare Galatians 4:4). “In his description of Jesus’ departure, he also used high priestly imagery: Jesus blessed the disciples (Luke 24:50) and ‘a cloud took him out of their sight’ (Acts 1:9)” (M. Barker, Christ-mas, pp. 50, 52).

519 M. Barker, Risen, p. 36 n. 21; Genesis 8:6-12; Commentary 2:2-c, p. 96; 4:21-d, p. 266; 4:31-d, p. 280.

520 S. Schroer, Dove, pp. 144, 145, 137-138; cf. Isaiah 11:2; Matthew 11:19; 1 Corinthians 1:24; M. Barker, Hidden, p. 93; E. R. Goodenough, Pagan Symbols, 8:27-46.

521 E. R. Goodenough, Pagan Symbols, 8:41.

522 J. Smith, Jr., n. d., as reported in C. L. Walker, Diary, 2 February 1893, 2:755-756, punctuation and capitalization modernized.

Whether literally or figuratively, Joseph said that his eyes were also touched prior to his receiving D&C 76:

... the Lord touched the eyes of our understandings, and they were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone round about.

And we beheld the glory of the Son, on the right hand of the Father, and received of his fulness.⁵²³

As in the First Vision, the initial result of the “touch” that opened Joseph Smith’s eyes was that he beheld the Savior in His glory. The statement that they “received of his fulness” is also remarkable. Here are the corresponding verses in the Prophet’s poetic rendition of D&C 76:

15. I marvel’d at these resurrections, indeed!
For it came unto me by the spirit direct:—
And while I did meditate what it all meant,
The Lord touch’d the eyes of my own intellect:—

16. Hosanna forever! they open’d anon,
And the glory of God shone around where I was;
And there was the Son, at the Father’s right hand,
In a fulness of glory, and holy applause.⁵²⁴

- 1-28 Joseph Smith used the ladder to represent the process of exaltation: “When you climb up a ladder, you must begin at the bottom, and ascend step by step, until you arrive at the top; and so it is with the principles of the Gospel—you must begin with the first, and go on until you learn all the principles of exaltation.”⁵²⁵ For an in-depth discussion of the symbolism of the ladder, see Guénon.⁵²⁶
- 1-29 Similar patterns between the Merkabah literature and Islamic mi’raj accounts are described by Schimmel, “for instance, the wayfarer’s examination at the gate; the ‘staying upright’; the idea that the angels, contrary to the perfected seeker, are not allowed into the Divine Presence; and the symbolism of the Divine Throne, which appears so prominently in poetical descriptions of the mi’raj, especially in the Persianate tradition.”⁵²⁷ See Schimmel⁵²⁸ for an extensive discussion of Muhammad’s experience and its significance in ancient and modern Islamic traditions.

523 D&C 76:19-20.

524 J. Smith, Jr. (or W. W. Phelps), A Vision, 1 February 1843, stanzas 15-16, p. 82, reprinted in L. E. Dahl, Vision, p. 297; emphasis added. Thanks to Bryce Haymond for pointing out this reference.

525 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 348; cf. 7 April 1844, pp. 346-348, 354.

526 R. Guénon, Symboles, pp. 336-339. See also Commentary 1:1-c, p. 43 and Figure 5-13, p. 351.

527 A. Schimmel, Messenger, p. 298 n. 8.

528 Ibid., pp. 159-175.

FIGURE 2-1. Creation of Sun, Moon, and Planets, 1511
Michelangelo Buonarroti, 1475-1564

And I, God, said: Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night (Moses 2:14). Distinction and separation are the central themes of the creation account. Here, God dramatically extends his arms in opposite directions, majestically assigning the golden ball of the sun to rule the day, and the gray moon to rule the night. To achieve a “special otherworldly effect,” the moon was “painted without paint”—in other words, it is the actual color of the bare plaster surface beneath the fresco itself (B. Blech et al., Secrets, p. 195).

Although, from an LDS perspective, it is hard to imagine a more “traditional” depiction of creation, Michelangelo’s portrait is thoroughly unacceptable to rabbinic Judaism. For one thing, Ellis observes, the anthropomorphic portrayal violates both the second commandment and also the idea that God is “unknowable, unimaginable” and “visually unportrayable.” Additionally, God is shown as effecting creation through action rather than by the sole means of “potent speech-acts that enact the creative power of language.” Thus, he explains, Michelangelo’s God is both inexplicably busy and “un-Jewishly mute” (R. S. Ellis, Images). “For the Jew,” writes Susan Handelman, “God’s presence is inscribed or traced within a text, not a body. Divinity is located in language, not person” (ibid.).

MOSES 2

The Creation

Overview	83
Contributions of the Books of Moses and Abraham	83
Creation as Progressive Distinction and Separation.....	85
The Order and Perfection of Creation	87
Moses 2: Text and Commentary	92
Gleanings	119
Endnotes	125

Overview

AFTER the period of arrests and mob threats that accompanied the transcription of Moses 1 in June 1830, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery divided their time between “the studying of the scriptures,” “preaching,” “confirming the church at Colesville,” and performing their “labors on the land.”¹ Oliver was scribe not only for the first manuscript version of Moses 1, but also for Moses 2-5:43 which is known to have been completed sometime before 21 October 1830.² The heading to OT1 Moses 2-4 specifically indicates that this portion of the translation was “given to the Elders of the Church of Christ,” likely at the second conference of the Church that was held on September 26-28, 1830.³

Contributions of the Books of Moses and Abraham

While it is true that some significant details were added to Genesis in the translation of Moses 2, it is perhaps more noteworthy that the effort resulted in no major reshaping of the creation story.⁴ A brief prologue affirming that the account derives from the words of the Lord directly to Moses is added in verse 1. The repetition of the phrase “I, God” throughout the chapter also emphasizes its firsthand nature. The fact that all things were created “by mine Only Begotten”⁵ is made clear, as is the Son’s identity as the co-creator at the time when God said “Let us make man.”⁶ Consistent with the words of Christ to the Brother of Jared,⁷ we learn that man was created in the image of the Only Begotten, which is equated to being created in God’s own image.⁸ Apart from these important points, the structure and basic premises of the Genesis account of the Creation were left intact.

While following generally similar schemas, the two later versions of the creation story given in the book of Abraham and in modern temples are replete with additional changes—some subtle and others stunning—that give new perspectives on the events portrayed. Nielsen and Ricks provide a useful summary of these differences:

- 1 D&C 26:1.
- 2 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 57.
- 3 K. Muhlestein, Flow, p. 43. See Endnote 2-1, p. 125.
- 4 See Endnote 2-2, p. 125.
- 5 Moses 2:1.
- 6 Moses 2:26.
- 7 Ether 3:15.
- 8 Moses 2:27.

By the time Joseph Smith published [the book of Abraham] “translation” in 1842, he had gained a much deeper understanding—both through additional revelation and through some study of Hebrew.⁹ In light of the doctrine of the Council in Heaven, Joseph Smith had pointed out that the Hebrew term Elohim, a plural form, should be rendered the “Gods” in the creation account, not as the traditional “God.”¹⁰ It is so rendered throughout Abraham’s account.¹¹ In light of the doctrine of the eternal nature of matter, the word traditionally translated as “created” becomes “organized.” The phrase “without form and void” (Hebrew tohu wa-bohu) is rendered, quite properly, “empty and desolate” and describes the condition of the earth after it was organized, not before.¹²

FIGURE 2-2. The First Day of Creation, 1925

M. C. Escher, 1898-1972

*And the earth was without form and void; and I caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep; and my Spirit moved upon the face of the water; for I am God.*¹ The Hebrew term here translated “moved” is used in Deuteronomy 32:11 to describe an eagle hovering attentively over its young.² Consistent with such a picture, the book of Abraham employs the term “brooding.”³

1 Moses 2:2.

2 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 25.

3 Abraham 4:2. See Commentary 2:2-a, p. 97.

The term “day” (Hebrew yom) for the seven “days” of Creation is given as “time,” a permissible alternative in both Hebrew and English; and it is explicitly pointed out that the “time” in which Adam should die if he partook of the forbidden fruit “was after the Lord’s time, which was after the time of Kolob[, a great star that Abraham had seen nearest to the throne of God, whose revolution, one thousand years by our reckoning, is a day unto the Lord]; “for as yet the Gods had not appointed unto Adam his reckoning.”¹³

On the basis of the above passage, which clearly excludes the possibility of earthly twenty-four-hour days being the “days” or “times” of Creation, some Latter-day Saint commentators have argued for one-thousand-year periods as the “times” of Creation as well as the “time” of Adam’s earthly life after the fall; others have argued for indefinite periods of time, as long as it would take to accomplish the work involved.¹⁴ Abraham’s account does contain the interesting passage, in connection with the “organizing” of the lights in the “expanse” of heaven, “The Gods watched those things which they had ordered until they obeyed.”¹⁵ Abraham’s account actually includes twelve different “labors” of the Gods, divided up among the “days” in the manner of Genesis. The later temple account of Creation gives an abbreviated version of those

9 See Endnote 2-3, p. 125.

10 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 16 June 1844, p. 379.

11 See Endnote 2-4, p. 125.

12 Abraham 4:2.

13 Abraham 5:13, 3:2-4 and Excursus 18: Kolob, p. 565. See Endnote 2-5, p. 125.

14 See Endnote 2-6, p. 125.

15 Abraham 4:14-18.

labors, divided up differently among the seven days while retaining the same order, suggesting that it may not be significant which labor is assigned to which day.¹⁶

Abraham connects the seemingly differing accounts of Genesis 1 and 2 within the context of the Council in Heaven. Abraham's seven-day account proceeds through the work of the first five creative times and part of the sixth as the physical creation of the earth and its preparation to support life before life was actually placed upon it. Thus, during the third time, "the Gods organized the earth to bring forth grass and the earth to bring forth the tree from its own seed."¹⁷ And during the fifth time, the Gods "prepared the waters that they might bring forth great whales, and every living creature, and every winged fowl after their kind."¹⁸ Similarly, on the sixth time "the Gods prepared the earth to bring forth the living creature after his kind. And the Gods saw they would obey."¹⁹ Then upon the sixth time, the Gods again took counsel among themselves and determined to form man, and to give them dominion over the plants and animals that should come upon the earth.²⁰ "And the Gods said among themselves: On the seventh time we will end our work, which we have counseled; and we will rest. And thus were their decisions at the time that they counseled among themselves."²¹ The account paralleling Genesis 2 then follows smoothly as an account of the actual placing of life upon the earth: "And the Gods came down and formed these the generations of the heavens and of the earth, when they were formed in the day that the Gods formed the earth and the heavens, according to all that which they had said concerning every plant of the field before it was in the earth."²²

The different creation accounts were necessarily prepared so that they could be appreciated despite the limits of human comprehension—"in [our] weakness, after the manner of [our] language, that [we] might come to understanding."²³ Though it might be tempting to label one version of the story as more "accurate" or "complete" in some sense than another, differences, and even seeming inconsistencies, sometimes may be due to the unique perspective from which each account is being given. For example, while some of the events of Genesis are clearly told from a divine point of view, others are phrased in "phenomenal language," i.e., "wording that represents things as they appear to a casual human observer on the face of the earth."²⁴ Access to multiple accounts also leads us to consider why certain details in a story are present in one version and not in another²⁵—especially when it would have seemed natural to include them.²⁶ Different versions of the same events may be recorded for disparate sets of readers, or may deliberately serve different pedagogical purposes,²⁷ a possibility to be discerned through careful examination of the material.²⁸

Creation as Progressive Distinction and Separation

Consider that the first action of Creation in Moses 2 is the appearance of light and its separation from darkness.²⁹ Griffith-Jones eloquently presents some of the many possible insights that could be gleaned from this fact:

16 See Endnote 2-7, p. 125.

17 Abraham 4:12, emphasis added.

18 Abraham 4:21.

19 Abraham 4:24-25.

20 Abraham 4:26-29.

21 Abraham 5:2-3.

22 F. K. Nielsen et al., Creation Accounts, pp. 340-342. See Abraham 5:4-5.

23 D&C 1:24. See Endnote 2-8, p. 126.

24 W. Bradley, Why, p. 164. See Endnote 2-9, p. 126.

25 See Endnote 2-10, p. 126.

26 D. Packard et al., Feasting, pp. 23-24.

27 See Endnote 2-11, p. 126.

28 See Excursus 6: The Authority and Power of Scripture, p. 531.

29 See Endnote 2-12, p. 126.

FIGURE 2-3. Separation of Light from Darkness, 1511
Michelangelo Buonarroti, 1475-1564

*In the beginning I created the heaven and the earth.... And I, God said, Let there be light; and there was light. And I, God, saw the light; and that light was good. And I, God, divided the light from the darkness.*¹ In Michelangelo's sublime depiction of the first act of Creation, "the Almighty is twisted around in serpentine manner, much like the contorted position the artist himself was assuming to create the fresco."² God runs his fingers through indistinct chaos, separating the brownish obscurity of darkness from the white cloudlike billows of light. While Michelangelo linked the scene typologically to the Last Judgment,³ this masterful imagery is an even more fitting portrayal of the symbolism of the "First Judgment," effected at the moment when Satan's rebellious hosts were cast out of heaven.⁴

In support of arguments for a typological interpretation of the Sistine Chapel ceiling, Anderson writes: "Michelangelo, unlike many of his contemporaries, was not a simple, uneducated artisan. Rather, he was a deeply religious man who frequently attended Mass, pored over scriptural texts and commentaries, and, in his early years, was deeply moved by the infamous religious reformer in Florence, Savonarola. Like many in pre-Reformation Rome, Michelangelo was also deeply impressed with how the beginnings of Creation were not only a witness to the glory of the Creator but also pointed, however mysteriously, to our end or telos within the cosmos."⁵

Though depicting the very beginnings of Creation, the panel was ironically painted "near the end of Buonarroti's sufferings up on the ceiling. He was in a desperate rush to finish, both for his personal health and because there was concern that the pope, who had been very ill, might not live to see the project completed. If Julius had died before it was done, the next pontiff might have cancelled the artist's contract, and perhaps have changed or abandoned the work as well. In creating this panel, Michelangelo worked without... his assistants who would prepare the full-size cartoons to transfer the outlines of the figures to be painted into the wet plaster intonaco."⁶ In fact, this sculptor who had said of himself 'I am no painter' painted this entire panel in one day—totally freehand, something few highly experienced fresco artists would ever dare attempt."⁷

1 Moses 2:1, 3-4.

2 B. Blech et al., Secrets, p. 193. See Endnote 2-13, p. 126.

3 P. De Vecchi et al., Michelangelo, pp. 171, 205.

4 See Commentary 2:4-c, p. 101 and Moses 4:3-4.

5 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 111. See Endnote 2-14, p. 127.

6 I.e., the thin layer of plaster on which the fresco was painted.

7 B. Blech et al., Secrets, pp. 194-195.

How do we recognize... order in the world outside? We might answer in the Old [Testament's] terms: God imposed, at Creation's start, the first of all further distinctions—the separation that brought the first form to chaos—and met the first condition for its sight... There was darkness over the deep: There were no distinctions to be known and no light to know "them" by. For before all else, we need light. It is this that makes all subsequent distinctions "visible," accessible to our eyes or minds. It is not surprising, in turn, that for the proper process and result of right thinking we speak of light. The sun casts light on the world; our reasoning and imagination cast light on its working. The first source is a daily symbol of God's creative work; the second is our finite, fallible copy of that activity. We make distinctions by the sun's light and our mind's together. When are these distinctions of our own secure? Our poet might have answered, when they conform to the distinctions made and illumined together by that first creative blaze.

Light makes it possible to discern differences. To discern differences brings light. To speak of judging, the Greeks used a more general word than ours: They would "distinguish" or "discern" between two things or opinions. It is no accident that [the first chapters of both Genesis and the Gospel of John link] light and the judgment that it makes possible and that brings light in its turn. Judgment and discrimination: of physical objects, of relations, and of the moral world...³⁰

30 R. Griffith-Jones, Witnesses, pp. 296-297.

FIGURES 2-4 TO 2-6. The Second, Third, and Fourth Days of Creation, 1925-1926
M. C. Escher, 1898-1972

The effects of the creation of light and its division from darkness cascade through the rest of the chapter as each of its episodes recounts the successive generation of new and finer-grained distinctions that define created elements through the principle of separation.³¹ We sense important lessons to be grasped in the very way the story is presented to us. For example, Leo Strauss reflects on the beauty and order revealed by the fractal self-similarity in each stage of the account:

[F]rom the principle of separation, light [which allows discernment and distinction]; via something which separates, heaven;³² to something which is separated, earth and sea; to things which are productive of separated things, trees, for example; then things which can separate themselves from their courses, brutes; and finally a being which can separate itself from its way, the right way...³³

Up to the point where Adam is formed, the order of Creation is decidedly hierarchic.³⁴ However, the final creative act, where a rib is separated out from the man to make the woman,³⁵ is portrayed to demonstrate the relationship of Adam and Eve as “equal partners.”³⁶ Other textual clues also set this creative act apart from all the rest. For one thing, we know that the man and the woman are created in the image of God—in other words, that they are both “after his kind.”³⁷ And, just as important, we learn that since the man and the woman are not only of the same kind, but also bone of the same bone and flesh of the same flesh, they are not to separate from one other, but are to become “one” in a perfect unity that approaches identity.³⁸ With the creation of Adam and Eve completed, God can declare His work to be “very good.”³⁹

31 See Endnote 2-15, p. 127.

32 See Endnote 2-16, p. 127.

33 Cited in L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 33. See Endnote 2-17, p. 127.

34 See Endnote 2-18, p. 128.

35 Moses 3:21-22.

36 G. B. Hinckley et al., Proclamation; cf. S. W. Kimball, Teachings 1982, 26 February 1977, p. 315; B. Blech et al., Secrets, p. 202. See Endnote 2-19, p. 128.

37 Moses 2:26-27.

38 Moses 3:23-24, Commentary 2:27-a, p. 115; J. R. Holland, Souls, pp. 17-18; cf. H. W. Nibley, Atonement, p. 568; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 111.

39 Moses 2:31. See Endnote 2-20, p. 128.

FIGURE 2-7. The Creation of Adam, 1510
Michelangelo Buonarroti, 1475-1564

SEE COLOR PLATE 2-7.

*And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.*¹ Of this scene, De Vecchi eloquently writes: “Perhaps the best-known of the scenes in the Sistine Chapel, the Creation of Adam must also have aroused particular admiration among the artist’s contemporaries, who discerned in it the materialization of one of the highest ideals of Renaissance culture: the ‘dignity’ of man, created by God ‘in his own image’... [The] exaltation of the spiritual faculties of man was never separated from that of the beauty of the human body, ‘the mirror of God’ and the culmination of the Creation... Vasari describes Adam as ‘a figure whose beauty, pose, and contours are of such a quality that he seems newly created by his Supreme and First Creator rather [than] by the brush and design of a mere mortal.’ Seen against an indistinct natural background that is only just hinted at, as if it were the dawn of the world, the youthful, athletic figure reclining on a grassy slope, almost on the edge of an abyss, seems as if he is about to rise from the ground. He holds out his arm toward that of the Lord, who, borne aloft amidst a flight of angels,² stands out brightly against the shell of shadow of his huge purple mantle.³ The remarkable invention of the outstretched arm and the forefingers about to meet becomes a metaphor for the vital energy that passes from the Creator to the creature fashioned in his image, awakening his heroic vigor... [Adam’s] adolescent face, seen in profile, still lacking a definite expression, contrasts with the mature, intensely energetic one of the Lord, with his gray hair and long beard streaming in the air.”⁴

Although Adam and the Father are the central figures of this panel, much attention has been given to the beautiful and enigmatic female figure who is intently regarding the creation of the first man while wrapped in the loving embrace of God’s left arm. Her identity has variously been given as the immortal Sophia (Wisdom),⁵ or as the premortal Eve. Relying on the analysis of the structure of the three Sistine Chapel Adam and Eve panels by art historian Leo Steinberg,⁶ Anderson notes: “Just to the right of Eve sits an infant⁷ who is also held by God the Father, though this time with just the thumb and index finger. The extension of his fingers corresponds exactly to the way a priest would grasp the Eucharistic wafer. In other words, this child is Mary’s boy, the Christ child. Strikingly, he is the only figure on the entire ceiling who looks directly down into the gaze of the viewer. And so our question as we ponder the women in these three panels: Are they Eve, the first woman and spouse of Adam, or Mary, the Mother of Jesus and symbol of the Church? Or perhaps more accurately, are these women in truth both Eve and Mary?”⁸ Anderson concludes that just as Christ is portrayed in scripture as the second Adam,⁹ Mary is being depicted here as the second Eve.

1 Moses 2:27.

2 Or the premortal spirits of humanity (B. Blech et al., Secrets, p. 200). See Endnote 2-21, p. 128.

3 See Endnote 2-21, p. 128.

4 P. De Vecchi et al., Michelangelo, p. 163.

5 B. Blech et al., Secrets, pp. 197, 199.

6 L. Steinberg, Who’s Who.

7 See Endnote 2-22, p. 129.

8 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 4.

9 1 Corinthians 15:22, 45-47.

FIGURE 2-8. The Creation of Eve, 1510
Michelangelo Buonarroti, 1475-1564

SEE COLOR PLATE 2-8.

*And I, the Lord God, caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam... And the rib which I, the Lord God, had taken from man, made I a woman.*¹ Vasari describes the overall scene by contrasting the poses of Adam and Eve: “One [is] almost dead from being imprisoned by sleep, while the other comes alive completely reawakened by the benediction of God. The brush of this most ingenious artisan reveals the true difference between sleep and awakening, as well as how stable and firm His Divine Majesty may appear when speaking in human terms.”² In his analysis of the painting, Anderson notes some details that are “highly unusual. Adam lies slumped around a dead tree, an odd sight for a luxuriant garden where death was, as of yet, unknown. The only way to understand this tired figure is to see him as a prefigurement of Christ, the second Adam, who was destined to hang on a barren piece of wood. ‘The sleep of [Adam],’ the fourth-century theologian St. Augustine observed, ‘clearly stood for the death of Christ’...³ If this is how we are to read this image of Adam, perhaps a similar interpretation holds for Eve. To get our bearings on this we must bear in mind two facts. First, Mary as the ‘second Eve’ is she who gives birth to Christ. Second, Mary as the ‘symbol of the church’ is she who emerges from the rib of Christ on the Cross[, symbolized by the blood and water that issued from His side]. In this central panel of the Sistine ceiling, we see both the first and second Eve emerging from the ribs of Adam... Further support for this comes from the history of the chapel itself. It was built on the model of Solomon’s Temple and was dedicated on August 15, 1483, the feast day of the Assumption and Coronation of the Virgin Mary in Heaven. A favored image of Mary in Christian devotional practice was Mary as the ark or tabernacle of God. Like the Ark of the Covenant in the Old Testament, the throne upon which God almighty took his seat, Mary was the seat in which God took human form. Like the Temple itself, she housed the verum corpus or the ‘true body’ of God.”⁴ Significantly, this image is the center point of the entire chapel ceiling.

1 Moses 3:21-22.

2 P. De Vecchi et al., Michelangelo, p. 151.

3 See Augustine, City, 22:17, p. 496.

4 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 5-8.

The Order and Perfection of Creation

The goodness of the completed Creation is beautifully expressed in literary form through the symbolism of numbers, the heptad, representing divine perfection.⁴⁰ “[T]he narrative’s seven literary units feature seven times the formula for the effectuation of the divine will and the statement of divine approval; and the six days of Creation culminate in the climactic seventh.”⁴¹ Other details of the Hebrew text highlight the same theme:⁴²

The first sentence has seven words in Hebrew	7
The second sentence has fourteen words in Hebrew	7 x 2
The account of Creation is given in 56 verses	7 x 8
The name of God (Elohim) appears 35 times	7 x 5
Earth (erets) appears 21 times	7 x 3
Heavens (shamayim, raqia) appears 21 times	7 x 3
Good (tov) seven times	7
The seventh paragraph in Hebrew corresponds to the 7th day ⁴³	7

In order to emphasize the central focus of the chapter, the length of the description of each period of Creation grows longer as the story progresses: “The first two days are briefly recounted (with 31 and 38 words respectively). The next three days (days 3, 4, and 5) are approximately double that length (69, 69, and 57 words, respectively); and the account of the final creative day (day 6) is doubled again (149 words).”⁴⁴

Group I The Resource		Group II The Utilizer
Day	Creative Act	Day	Creative Act
1	Light	4	The luminaries
2	Sky, leaving terrestrial waters	5	Fish and fowl
3	Dry land including plants (makers of fruits) (Lowest form of organic life)	6	Land animals including humankind (Highest form of organic life)

FIGURE 2-9. Schema of the Days of Creation

In the beginning, the earth was “formless and empty”⁴⁵—hence, in apparent consistency with the logic of the KJV translators (though probably not with the original Hebrew), it is fitting that God’s first three creative acts should supply form, and that His final three acts should fill the resultant void.

The order and perfection of Creation is also shown through the division of its steps into “two parallel groups, each of which comprises the four creative acts performed in three days. The third day in each group is distinguished by two productions. In each group the movement is from heaven to terrestrial water to dry land. Moreover, the arrangement is such that each creation in the first group furnishes the resource that is to be utilized by the corresponding creature in the second group.”⁴⁶ Only the Sabbath day remained unpaired. For this reason, the Jewish sages quoted her complaint—to which God’s answer was, “The community of Israel, lo, that is your mate.”⁴⁷ And so it was that when “Israel stood before Mount Sinai, the Holy One, blessed be He, said to them, ‘Remember what I said to the Sabbath: ‘The community of Israel is your mate.’ Now therefore: ‘Remember the Sabbath

40 See Endnote 2-23, p. 129.

41 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 4.

42 M. Kahne, Symbolique. See also U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 14-15.

43 See Endnote 2-24, p. 129.

44 D. A. Dorsey, Structure, p. 48.

45 Moses 2:2; J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 24-25, 27-28; cf. “unarranged [disorganized] and unadorned” (Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 3, p. 7).

46 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 4. See Endnote 2-25, p. 130.

47 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 11:8, p. 117. See Endnote 2-26, p. 130.

day to keep it holy.”⁴⁸ To “keep it holy” is to be the lover or partner of the Sabbath, since the Hebrew term for marriage (kiddushin), comes from the same root as “holy.”⁴⁹

Having prepared a perfect environment in which life and learning could flourish, God blesses the man and the woman, commands them to be “fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth,” and gives them dominion “over every living thing.”⁵⁰ Foreshadowing the additional commandment they will receive in the Garden of Eden,⁵¹ He gives them instructions about what they should and should not eat, and the chapter ends with the close of the sixth day.⁵²

48 Ibid. See Exodus 20:8.

49 See A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, p. 216 and p. 216 n. 26.

50 Moses 2:28.

51 Moses 3:16-17.

52 Moses 2:29-31.

Moses 2: Text and Commentary

CHAPTER 2 (June–October 1830)

PROLOGUE (PP. 93-98)

AND it came to pass that ^athe Lord spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, ^bI reveal unto you concerning this heaven, and this earth; write the words which I speak. ^cI am the Beginning and the End, the Almighty God; ^dby mine Only Begotten I created these things; yea, ^ein the beginning ^fI created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest.

2 And the ^aearth was without form, and void; and ^bI caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep; and ^cmy Spirit moved upon the face of the water; for I am God.

THE FIRST DAY (PP. 99-104)

3 And I, God, said: ^aLet there be light; and ^bthere was light.

4 And ^aI, God, saw the light; and ^bthat light was good. And ^cI, God, divided the light from the darkness.

5 And ^aI, God, called the light Day; and the darkness, I called ^bNight; and ^cthis I did by the word of my power, and ^dit was done as I spake; and the ^eevening and the morning were the first day.

THE SECOND DAY (PP. 104-105)

6 And again, I, God, said: ^aLet there be a firmament in the midst of the water, and it was so, even as I spake; and I said: Let it divide the waters from the waters; and ^bit was done;

7 And ^aI, God, made the firmament and divided the waters, yea, the great waters under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament, and it was so even as I spake.

8 And I, God, called the firmament Heaven; and the evening and the morning were the second day.

THE THIRD DAY (PP. 105-107)

9 And I, God, said: Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and it was so; and I, God, said: ^aLet there be dry land; and it was so.

10 And I, God, called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters, called I the ^aSea; and ^bI, God, saw that all things which I had made were good.

11 And I, God, said: ^aLet the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding ^bseed, the fruit tree yielding fruit, ^cafter his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed should be in itself upon the earth, and it was so even as I spake.

12 And the earth brought forth grass, every herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed should be in itself, after his kind; and I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good;

13 And the evening and the morning were the ^athird day.

THE FOURTH DAY (PP. 107-109)

14 And I, God, said: ^aLet there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, ^bto divide the day from the night, and ^clet them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years;

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven ^ato give light upon the earth; and it was so.

16 And I, God, made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night, and the greater light was the sun, and the ^alesser light was the moon; and the stars also were made even according to my word.

17 And I, God, set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth,

18 And the sun to rule over the day, and the moon to rule over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness; and I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good;

19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

THE FIFTH DAY (PP. 109-110)

20 And I, God, said: ^aLet the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl which may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

21 And I, God, created ^agreat whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the ^bwaters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind; and I, God, saw that all things which I had created were good.

22 And ^aI, God, blessed them, saying: Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the ^bsea; and let fowl multiply in the earth;

23 And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

THE SIXTH DAY (PP. 110-118)

24 And I, God, said: ^aLet the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping things, and beasts of the earth after their kind, and it was so;

25 And I, God, made the beasts of the earth after their kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything which creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and I, God, saw that all these things were good.

26 And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: ^aLet us make ^bman ^cin our image, after our likeness; and it was so. And I, God, said: ^aLet them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

27 And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten ^acreated I him; ^bmale and female created I them.

28 And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them: ^aBe fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and ^bsubdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

29 And I, God, said unto man: Behold, I have given you every ^aherb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree in the which shall be the fruit of a tree yielding seed; ^bto you it shall be for meat.

30 And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein I grant life, there shall be given every ^aclean herb for meat; and it was so, even as I spake.

31 And I, God, saw everything that I had made, and, behold, ^aall things which I had made were very good; and the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

1 And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, I reveal unto you concerning this heaven, and this earth; write the words which I speak. I am the Beginning and the End, the Almighty God; by mine Only Begotten I created these things; yea, in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest.

- 1 a the Lord spake unto Moses. Johnson notes that the JST revisions have produced a parallel between the opening of Genesis and the first verses of Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy: “All these verses begin with the words of God to Moses, then these words are related to the people. There is a progression to the verses as well. Moses, Leviticus and Numbers have the words of God spoken unto Moses, while Deuteronomy 1, the word has passed from God and now resides with Moses and is given to all Israel... The first two events take place in a temple-type surrounding, the high mountain and the Tabernacle. The next time the word is presented, it is down to earth, in the wilderness. This seems to be symbolic of the spiritual attitudes of Israel for the years to come.”⁵³
- b I reveal unto you concerning this heaven and this earth. In other words, the account given to Moses is not all-encompassing in scope. Note that the KJV plural “heavens” is changed to the singular “heaven” in Moses 2:1, 4, presumably “because every earth has its heaven.”⁵⁴
- c I am the Beginning. While the Gospel of John begins its Christological exposition of the opening verses of Genesis with its bold assertion: “In the beginning was the Word,”⁵⁵ the alternative gloss of Genesis 1:1 provided by the Midrash is bibliocentric: “By means of ‘the beginning’ [that is to say, the Torah] did God create.”⁵⁶ In another variation on this theme, the Targum Yerushalmi explicitly connects these words to the Old Testament Wisdom tradition: “In wisdom the Lord created.”⁵⁷ The book of Moses adds its unique voice to the long history of exegesis for this verse, taking the term “Beginning” to refer to the Father, who created all things by His Only Begotten, the living and personal “Word of [His] power.”⁵⁸
- d by mine Only Begotten I created these things. This statement reiterates the central role of the Son in Creation.⁵⁹ The book of Abraham goes even further to describe a plurality of Gods who participated in Creation.⁶⁰ These included Michael (the premortal Adam), as well as others.⁶¹ President Brigham Young said that “the earth was organized by three distinct characters, namely, Elohim, [Je]hovah, and Michael, these three forming a quorum, as in all heavenly bodies, and in organizing element.”⁶²

References to heavenly councils in the Old Testament are sometimes obscured by the KJV translation. For example, Tvedtnes observes that “congregation of the mighty”⁶³ is better rendered “council of God,” and the term “secret”⁶⁴ should be read “council.”⁶⁵ The term is also sometimes translated as “assembly”⁶⁶ or “counsel.”⁶⁷ Nibley likewise saw an allusion to

53 M. J. Johnson, Prologue, pp. 25-26.

54 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 224. See Commentary 2:1-e, p. 94.

55 John 1:1.

56 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 1:1, p. 2.

57 J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos, cf. A. B. S. Ed-Din, Sufism, p. 231. See also P. Borgen, John and Philo, pp. 48-50; J. H. Charlesworth, Lady Wisdom; H. N. Ridderbos, John, pp. 31-36.

58 OT1 Moses 2:5 in S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 86; Moses 1:32; Commentary 1:38-b, p. 67; 2:1-d, p. 93; Excursus 49: The People of the Book, p. 651; N. Birch, Hellenization; J. A. Tvedtnes, Follett.

59 Cf. Moses 1:32-33, Hebrews 1:2.

60 Abraham 4:1ff.

61 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1954, 1:74-75.

62 B. Young, 9 April 1852, p. 51.

63 Psalm 82:1.

64 Job 15:8, 29:4; Psalm 25:14; Proverbs 3:32.

65 J. A. Tvedtnes, Follett.

66 E.g., Psalm 111:1.

67 E.g., Psalm 55:14.

1 And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, I reveal unto you concerning this heaven, and this earth; write the words which I speak. I am the Beginning and the End, the Almighty God; by mine Only Begotten I created these things; yea, in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest.

a heavenly council in John 1:1: “In the beginning was the Word”—taking Word⁶⁸ to connote discussion, council, word, or reason.⁶⁹

Basing his remarks on an emendation of the Hebrew, Joseph Smith offered the following translation of the first verse of Genesis: “In the beginning, the head of the Gods called a council of the Gods; and they came together and concocted a plan to create the world and people it.”⁷⁰ Two months later, he varied the wording: “In the beginning the head of the Gods brought forth the Gods,’ or as others have translated it, ‘The head of the Gods called the Gods together.’”⁷¹ Barney argues that the Hebrew behind “the head one of the Gods” could be equated to the term “God Most High” (El Elyon), the God Melchizedek worshipped.⁷² Compare Nibley’s translation of John 1:1: “In the ruling council was a spokesman and the spokesman was in the godhead, that is among the gods, and the spokesman was himself a god.”⁷³

- e in the beginning. Sailhamer reasons, based on the grammar of this verse and on parallels in other locations in the Bible, that the phrase in the beginning marks, not an absolute origin for the thing described, but rather “the starting point of a period of time” which the ancient reader would expect to be paired with a corresponding end. Hence, by starting the account with these words, “the author has not only commenced a history of God and his people, he has also prepared the way for the consummation of that history at ‘the end of time’” when God will create “a new heaven and a new earth.”⁷⁴
- f I created the heaven, and the earth. This phrase constitutes the “announcement of plot” for Moses 2,⁷⁵ a “title or superscription for the entire chapter”⁷⁶ and, in fact, in a measure for the entire Old Testament.⁷⁷ Sailhamer moreover detects a polemic against idolatry in this verse, citing textual parallels and a similar spirit in the message of Jeremiah 10:10-11 that invites the nations to compare “the true God... the living God” to the “gods who have not made the heavens and the earth.”⁷⁸

Whereas the idea of God organizing the world from preexisting matter was a part of many ancient cosmologies, Jewish scholars began to articulate the alternative doctrine of *creatio ex nihilo*⁷⁹ by the later part of the second temple period.⁸⁰ Ex nihilo Creation subsequently became the prevalent interpretation in the Christian tradition.⁸¹ By way of contrast, Joseph Smith stated that the word “created” should be rendered “formed, or organized.”⁸² This is 68 Greek logos.

69 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 9, p. 110.

70 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 349.

71 Ibid., 16 June 1844, p. 371. See also D&C 121:32.

72 K. L. Barney, Six, p. 114. See K. L. Barney, Emendation and Six for in-depth discussions of the linguistic details and discussions of key concepts relating to the Prophet’s commentary on this verse. See also J. A. Tvedtnes, Follett; Commentary 1:33-b, p. 65; Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

73 Cited in J. F. Hall, Translated Correctly.

74 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 20-23. See Revelation 21:1; Isaiah 65:17. See also Commentary 1:6-g, p. 48; 2:1-c, p. 93; Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537.

75 L. Turner, Announcements.

76 B. T. Arnold, Genesis, p. 25.

77 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 20.

78 Emphasis added. See also Psalm 96:5.

79 I.e., creation from nothing, erroneously inferred from Psalm 33:6, 9 and 2 Esdras 6:38.

80 S. Sandmel et al., 2 Maccabees, 7:28, p. 243.

81 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 5.

82 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 January 1841, p. 181, consistent with Abraham 4:1.

1 And it came to pass that the Lord spake unto Moses, saying: Behold, I reveal unto you concerning this heaven, and this earth; write the words which I speak. I am the Beginning and the End, the Almighty God; by mine Only Begotten I created these things; yea, in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest.

2 And the earth was without form, and void; and I caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep; and my Spirit moved upon the face of the water; for I am God.

because, said he, the term “does not mean to create out of nothing; it means to organize—the same as a man would organize materials and build a ship. Hence we infer that God had materials to organize the world out of... chaotic matter.”⁸³ Barney concludes that historical and scientific evidence “strongly favors Joseph Smith’s rejection of creatio ex nihilo.”⁸⁴

the heaven and the earth. The use of the definite article in such phrases typically signifies a merism, two opposing words that, taken together, are meant to denote a whole—in this case the entirety of the created universe.⁸⁵ The same terms used separately in later verses are taken to refer “to the sky and the dry land in the more restricted and concrete sense.”⁸⁶ Opposing the interpretation of this phrase as a merism, Cassuto argues that the “ancient Hebrew conceived God alone as a unity; what we designate ‘the universe,’ they regarded as two separate entities: the heavens are the Lord’s heavens, but the earth He has given to the sons of men.”⁸⁷ Both an earlier phrase (“this heaven and this earth”) and a subsequent elaboration (“the earth upon which thou standest”) in the book of Moses version of this verse argue in favor of Cassuto’s reading.

2 a earth was without form, and void. Choice of an appropriate translation of the Hebrew corresponding to this phrase depends on the grammatical interpretation of the verb “to be”:

- Friedman finds evidence for its rendering in the past perfect form (“the earth had been shapeless and formless”), with the resulting implication that the earth “had already existed in this shapeless condition prior to the [period of] Creation [described in scripture]” as “an undifferentiated, shapeless fluid”⁸⁸ corresponding to unorganized matter.
- Tvedtnes, interpreting this phrase as describing a condition existing at the moment of the Creation, translated it as “the earth then being [or having become] uninhabited and desolate,” implying “that Elohim’s work with the earth was begun because it was (or had become) unpopulated, covered with the waters of a flood.” He notes that in Moses 2:2 that “God says he caused the darkness to appear;”⁸⁹ and
- Both Abraham 4:2 and direct statements by Joseph Smith⁹⁰ describe the “empty and desolate” state of the earth after its initial creation. The phrase “they had not formed anything but the earth”⁹¹ should not be taken in its absolute sense that nothing else in the universe had yet been made, but rather that no feature of the newly-organized earth had yet appeared.

without form, and void. The term does not imply an “ominous chaos” but rather an “unproductive ‘emptiness.’”⁹² The difficult Hebrew phrase tohu wa-bohu, corresponding to the book 83 Ibid., 7 April 1844, pp. 350-351.

84 K. L. Barney, Six, pp. 108-112. See also H. R. Johnson, Big Bang; K. E. Norman, Ex Nihilo; B. T. Ostler, Nothing; S. D. Ricks, Ex Nihilo. “The primary transition is not from nothingness to being but from chaos to order” (T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 133). See also Commentary 2:2-a, p. 95.

85 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 101.

86 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 5.

87 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 20. See Psalm 115:16. Sacks rightly observes that the phrase “does not present itself with the same unity expressed by the [Greek] word kosmos” (cited in T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 133).

88 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 6, emphasis mine.

89 J. A. Tvedtnes, Science and Genesis, p. 42. See discussion in V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 115-116.

90 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 January 1841, p. 181.

91 Abraham 4:2.

92 B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, p. 37; cf. T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 133.

2 And the earth was without form, and void; and I caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep; and my Spirit moved upon the face of the water; for I am God.

of Abraham's "empty and desolate," is used two other places in scripture: once, as part of Jeremiah's vision of the return of primal desolation as the result of his people's wickedness,⁹³ and again in a similar allusion by Isaiah.⁹⁴ Tohu by itself is likely related to the Ugaritic term for desert. Bohu does not have a Semitic cognate and thus seems to be a nonce term coined specifically to reinforce and rhyme with it—as in the English expressions "hodge-podge" and "helter-skelter."⁹⁵ Alter suggests the translation "welter and waste" in order to partially capture the rhyming effect of the original through alliteration.⁹⁶

- b I caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep. The meaning of darkness in this context is not obvious. The idea of its role as an active element in the events of Creation is strengthened by the causative added in this verse, and also by the corresponding statement in Abraham that the "darkness reigned." These prophetic readings recall ancient creation accounts that portray darkness not merely as the absence of light, but as an entity in its own right.⁹⁷ Starting with the Philo's idea of the Logos as the "shadow of God"⁹⁸ and drawing on a version of the creation story that passed through the hands of the Gnostics,⁹⁹ it is possible to imagine the darkness representing "the Lord himself who passed through veil to... create the world" and who was then enthroned to reign over the waters of chaos.¹⁰⁰

Another way of interpreting the passage is to take the phrases "darkness... upon... the deep" and "Spirit upon the... waters" as being oppositive and temporally successive. A sense consistent with this reading is that God allowed His presence to be withdrawn for a time, bringing darkness (disorder, disorganization) upon the deep, as a precursor to the subsequent moving of His Spirit upon the waters, and the appearance of light (order, organization).

Some commentators see traces of Near Eastern mythology in the description of the subduing of the adversarial powers of watery chaos prior to creation.¹⁰¹ Scattered in fragmentary form throughout the prophetic, poetic, apocalyptic, and wisdom literature of the Bible are other possible allusions to primordial combat scenes.¹⁰² Parallels have also been noted to Jesus' stilling of the storm¹⁰³ and walking on the water,¹⁰⁴ symbolically crushing it beneath his heel.¹⁰⁵ A related idea is found in Orthodox tradition, which holds that the serpent's head was crushed in the River Jordan at the time that Jesus was baptized.¹⁰⁶ D&C 61:17-19 speaks of the cursing of the waters in the last days, and warns that "the destroyer rideth upon the face thereof."¹⁰⁷ Lending credence to an association between this passage in Hebrew and the Babylonian creation account are arguments for an etymological relationship between the term for the god Tiamat in Enuma Elish and the Hebrew tehom, which is translated as "deep" in this verse.¹⁰⁸ On the other hand, in contrast to the view that there is a thematic connection

93 Jeremiah 4:23-27.

94 Isaiah 34:11.

95 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 108.

96 R. Alter, Five Books, p. 17.

97 Cf. Isaiah 45:7 and N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 6.

98 Philo, Interpretation, 3, 96, p. 61.

99 R. A. Bullard et al., Archons, 95, p. 168.

100 M. Barker, Gate, p. 120.

101 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 3, 6; cf. Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60. See Endnote 2-27, p. 130.

102 E.g., Exodus 15; Job 26:13, 38-41; Psalms 18, 19, 24, 33, 68; 74:12-15; 93, 104; Proverbs 8:22-33; Isaiah 27:1, 40-42; Habakkuk 3:8; Revelation 12:1-12. See M. Fishbane, Myth, pp. 37-92.

103 Mark 4:35-41.

104 Mark 6:45-51.

105 N. Wyatt, Space, pp. 95-120. See Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266.

106 V. Nersessian, Treasures, p. 71. See Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42 and 4:31-d, p. 280.

107 Cf. R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 230, fn. 1.

108 See also Genesis 49:25; Deuteronomy 33:13; Habakkuk 3:10; Isaiah 51:10. Note that English translations typically add a definite article to tehom (i.e., "the deep") which does not appear in Hebrew, thus masking its with Babylonian accounts, some have interpreted this verse as a polemic deliberately intended to rule out any such affinities¹⁰⁹—though this view is now in decline.¹¹⁰ Regardless of one's opinion on these possible correspondences, Wenham rightly points out that the “uniqueness and sovereignty of God in Genesis give reports of his deeds quite a different quality from the myths of ancient polytheism.”¹¹¹

2 And the earth was without form, and void; and I caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep; and my Spirit moved upon the face of the water; for I am God.

- c my Spirit moved upon the face of the water. In Deuteronomy 32:11, the Hebrew term behind moved (rachaph) is used to describe an eagle hovering attentively over its young.¹¹² Genesis Rabbah captures the spirit of this interpretation: “The spirit of God hovered like a bird which is flying about and flapping its wings, and the wings barely touch [the nest].”¹¹³ “The basic idea of the [verb] stem is vibration, movement.”¹¹⁴ Hitherto all is static, lifeless, immobile. Motion, which is the essential element in change, originates with God's dynamic presence.¹¹⁵

The book of Abraham employs the term “brooding” rather than “moving.” This change is consistent with Seixas' book of Hebrew Grammar studied by Joseph Smith in Kirtland. Milton interpreted the passage similarly in Paradise Lost, drawing from images such as the dove sent out by Noah,¹¹⁶ the dove at Jesus' baptism¹¹⁷ and a hen protectively covering her young with her wing:¹¹⁸ “[T]hou from the first Wast present, and with mighty wings outspread Dovelike satst brooding on the vast abyss And mad'st it pregnant.”¹¹⁹ “Brooding” enjoys rich connotations, including, as Nibley observes, not only “to sit or incubate [eggs] for the purpose of hatching” but also “to dwell continuously on a subject.” Brooding is just the right word—a quite long quiet period of preparation in which apparently nothing was happening. Something was to come out of the water, incubating, waiting—a long, long time.¹²⁰

Some commentators emphatically deny any connection of the Hebrew term with the concept of brooding.¹²¹ However, the “brooding” interpretation is not only attested by a Syriac cognate¹²² but also has a venerable history, going back at least to Rashi who spoke specifically of the relationship between the dove and its nest. In doing so, he referred to the Old French term acoveter, related both to the modern French *couver*¹²³ and couvrir.¹²⁴ Intriguingly, this latter sense is related to the Hebrew term for the atonement, kippur.¹²⁵

Barker admits the possibility of a subtle wordplay in examining the reversal of consonantal sounds between “brood/hover” and “atone”: “The verb for ‘hover’ is rchp, the middle letter is cheth, and the verb for ‘atone’ is kpr, the initial letter being a kaph, which had a similar character as a proper noun and obscuring the possible allusion to Enuma Elish. “In the New Jerusalem, where evil is vanquished, there is no sea (Revelation 21:1)” (T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 133).

109 For summaries of these arguments, see V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 110-111; C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 104-106.

110 B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, p. 38.

111 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 52; cf. B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, pp. 31-32.

112 F. Brown et al., Lexicon, 7363, p. 934b; U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 25.

113 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 2:4, p. 25.

114 See its use in, e.g., Jeremiah 23:9.

115 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 7.

116 Genesis 8:6-12. See Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; 3:9-g, p. 136.

117 John 1:32. See Moses 5 Gleanings, p. 403.

118 Luke 13:34.

119 J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:19-22, p. 16; cf. Augustine, Literal, 18:36; E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 44.

120 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 69.

121 E.g., U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 24-25.

122 F. Brown et al., Lexicon, 7363, p. 934b.

123 From Latin cubare—to brood and protect.

124 From Latin cooperire—to cover completely.

125 M. Barker, Atonement; A. Rey, Dictionnaire, 1:555.

2 And the earth was without form, and void; and I caused darkness to come up upon the face of the deep; and my Spirit moved upon the face of the water; for I am God.

sound. The same three consonantal sounds could have been word play, rchp/kpr. Such things did happen.”¹²⁶ “There is sound play like this in the temple style.”¹²⁷ The best known example is Isaiah 5:7, where justice and righteousness sound like bloodshed and cry.”¹²⁸ In this admittedly speculative interpretation, one might see an image of God figuratively “hovering/atoning” over the singularity of the inchoate universe, prior to the dividing and separating process that was initiated by the first acts of Creation.¹²⁹ my Spirit. The Hebrew term for Spirit (ruach) has the root meanings of ‘wind’ or ‘breath.’ This brings to mind the role of wind as the agent by which water is separated in two other places in the Bible—at the conclusion of the Flood and at the crossing of the Red Sea.¹³⁰ In a poetic sense, the Spirit can be seen as the light-bearing, life-giving breath of God, blowing away the darkness of the deep. William W. Phelps equated this term to “the life organizing power of the Gods,”¹³¹ seemingly referring to the priesthood.

water. The singular rather than the plural term for “water” appears in OT2.¹³² However “waters,”¹³³ the original term in Genesis, is used in OT1 as well as in the later translation of the book of Abraham. This raises the possibility that the change in OT2 was made erroneously or on John Whitmer’s initiative rather than the Prophet’s.¹³⁴

The most obvious implication of Abraham 4:2 is that the waters corresponded to the terrestrial seas that covered the earth following its initial creation. Some commentators, however, have associated the term “water” in its singular form with unorganized matter—the unexplained unity that existed prior to the creation process of demarcation, distinction, separation, and naming.¹³⁵ Summarizing the opinion of Jewish sages, Zlotowitz writes: “The ‘water’ mentioned in this verse is not the water that is in the ‘seas.’¹³⁶ It is clear that there was a certain common matter which was called ‘water.’ Afterwards, it was divided into three forms; a part of it became ‘seas,’ another part of it became ‘firmament’; a third part became that which is above the ‘firmament’—entirely beyond the earth.”¹³⁷ Perhaps this is why... water is invariably in the plural form—suggestive of this pluralistic division.”¹³⁸ Genesis Rabbah suggests that a watery origin of all things is behind the etymology of the plural term “heavens”: “And God called the firmament heaven (sha).”¹³⁹ Rav said: Shamayim is a composite of esh (‘fire’) and mayim (‘water’). The Holy One took fire and water, and worked them into each other, and out of the two, heaven was made.”¹⁴⁰

Although no explicit blessing of the waters is mentioned in Moses’ account, D&C 61:14 records: “Behold, I, the Lord, in the beginning blessed the waters; but in the last days, by the mouth of my servant John, I cursed the waters.” The mention of John’s cursing may have reference to the events of Revelation 8:8-11 and Revelation 13.¹⁴¹

126 M. Barker, 11 June 2007.

127 See M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 15-17.

128 M. Barker, 11 June 2007.

129 See H. J. Hodges, Dove for a cogent analysis of Milton’s sources and of general Hebrew-to-English translation issues. See also Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42 and 4:5-b, p. 246.

130 JST Genesis 8:47 and Exodus 14:21. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 6.

131 Cited in S. Brown, Paracletes, p. 81.

132 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 595.

133 Hebrew mayim.

134 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 10; cf. Commentary 2:6-a, p. 104 and 2:21-a, p. 110.

135 C. Roy, Liquide.

136 Moses 2:10.

137 See M. Maimonides, Guide, 2:30, 2:352-353.

138 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 38. See D. Kimhi’s commentary on Genesis, excerpted in E. Monk, Hachut.

139 Moses 2:8.

140 H. N. Bialik et al., Legends, 18, p. 9; J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 4:7, p. 43; cf. J. Hirschman, Baraita, p. 6.

141 See Commentary 2:22-a, p. 110.

3 And I, God, said: Let there be light; and there was light.

- 3 a Let there be light. God's words heralding the coming of light constitute His first creative act.¹⁴² This utterance introduces the theme of a God who works in Creation and in history through commands "whose execution must necessarily follow."¹⁴³ Execution is assured as the result of a pattern including not only speech,¹⁴⁴ but also action,¹⁴⁵ inspection,¹⁴⁶ and evaluation¹⁴⁷—a sequence repeated seven times in this chapter.

The formula "Let there be" is expressed three times in the Creation account, each time for celestial phenomena: for light,¹⁴⁸ for the firmament,¹⁴⁹ and for the sun and moon.¹⁵⁰ In the case of the firmament and the sun and moon, the "Let there be" formula is followed with the statement that God "made" them,¹⁵¹ the underlying Hebrew describing a process of formation from preexisting materials rather than through God's utterance alone.¹⁵²

- b there was light. The nature of the light referred to in this verse is not explained. Several possibilities have been suggested. Some interpreters see this event as consonant with the prevailing scientific view that describes the birth of our universe as a sudden burst of light and energy of unimaginable scale. Others see this phrase as referring to a "local" event whereby the natural light of the sun was created.¹⁵³ It is, of course, a given that the sun was created prior to the fourth day, though from the vantage point of earth no light will "appear in the firmament" until that later time.¹⁵⁴

In contrast to such naturalistic readings, Nibley's interpretation seems more consistent with related scriptural passages—namely, that the light referred to was the result of God's presence: "All this time the Gods had been dwelling in light and glory, but the earth was dark... This was not the first creation of light. Wherever light comes into darkness, 'there is light.'"¹⁵⁵ Consistent with this view, President John Taylor wrote that God "caused light to shine upon [the earth] before the sun appeared in the firmament; for God is light, and in him there is no darkness."¹⁵⁶ He is the light of the sun and the power thereof by which it was made; he is also the light of the moon and the power by which it was made; he is the light of the stars and the power by which they are made."¹⁵⁷ D&C 88:12-13 continues this description to make it clear that this light is something over and above mere physical light as generally conceived, since it not only "enlighteneth your eyes" but also "quickeneth your understandings," governs and "giveth life to all things," and "proceedeth forth from the presence of God to fill the immensity of space."¹⁵⁸ As Isaac Watts expressed: "In vain the bright, the burning sun / Scatters his feeble light; / 'Tis Thy sweet beams create my noon; / If Thou withdraw, 'tis night."¹⁵⁹

The idea of God Himself as the source of this special light is consistent with many ancient sources.¹⁶⁰ For example, rabbinical commentators saw the light at the beginning of Creation

142 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 110.

143 Ibid., p. 111.

144 On God's creation through speech, see Jacob 4:9.

145 Moses 2:4, 7, 12, 16, 21, 25, 27.

146 Moses 2:3, 7, 9, 11, 15, 24, 30.

147 Moses 2:4, 10, 12, 18, 21, 25, 31.

148 Moses 2:3.

149 Moses 2:6.

150 Moses 2:14. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 7.

151 Moses 2:7, 16.

152 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, pp. 6-7.

153 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 193.

154 Moses 2:14-19. See F. B. Salisbury, Creation, p. 71.

155 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 69.

156 See 1 John 1:5; cf. Psalm 104:2.

157 J. Taylor, 31 December 1876, p. 327. See D&C 88:7-9.

158 Cf. Psalm 36:9. See Commentary 2:1-e, p. 94 and Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537.

159 I. Watts, Hymns, God, my only Happiness (Psalm 73:25), 2:94, p. 432.

160 See, e.g., J. L. Kugel, Instances, pp. 157-160.

3 And I, God, said: Let there be light; and there was light.

4 And I, God, saw the light; and that light was good. And I, God, divided the light from the darkness.

as the splendor of God Himself, who “cloaked himself in it as a cloak” and it “shone forth from one end of the world to the other.”¹⁶¹ Rabbinic tradition further explained that the wicked are not worthy to enjoy this light of God’s presence, therefore it was stored away after the seventh day of Creation to be enjoyed later by the righteous in the Messianic Age.¹⁶² A corresponding light was said to fill the place of God’s presence in the temple: “The brightness of the Holy of Holies was the light of Day One, before the visible world had been created... Those who entered the Holy of Holies entered this place of light, beyond time and matter, which was the presence of ‘the King of kings and Lord of lords who alone has immortality and dwells in unapproachable light.’¹⁶³ This was the place of glory to which Jesus knew he would return after the crucifixion, ‘the glory which I had with thee before the world was made.’¹⁶⁴ In the Gospel of Thomas, Christians are described as the new high priesthood who enter the light, and Jesus instructed his disciples to say to the guardians (the cherub guardians of Eden?) ‘We came from the light, the place where the light came into being on its own accord and established [itself]...’¹⁶⁵

Related to these concepts is the idea that the heavenly hosts—variously described as including the angels, the sons of God, and the souls of humanity—were part of the light on Day One of Creation.¹⁶⁶ Although a more limited version of this idea is often associated with the fathers of the early Christian church, its origin actually goes back centuries earlier to strands of Jewish tradition. For example, Jubilees reports that on the first day God created various ranks of angels along with “all of the spirits of his creatures which are in heaven and on earth.”¹⁶⁷ Zoroastrian texts also speak of a spiritual creation of all mankind (and also of the spirits who chose to follow the evil Angra Mainyu) prior to the physical creation.¹⁶⁸ In contrast to later Christian thought that characterized the angels as a different race of beings than man, Joseph Smith taught that “there are no angels who minister to this earth but those who do belong or have belonged to it”—i.e., as human mortals.¹⁶⁹ Note that in Hebrew, the same word (malak) is used for “angel” and “messenger.”¹⁷⁰

- 4 a I, God, saw the light. This phrase recalls the idea from quantum theory that certain properties at the atomic scale cannot be said to “be there” until they are revealed to an experimental observer—a notion that can be interpreted as blurring the distinction between reality and information. Nibley muses: “[L]ight itself is relative, a part of the energy spectrum seen by some being with the capacity to be aware of it... Basic chemicals react to light, but are they aware of it—do they comprehend it?”¹⁷¹

John 1:5 and D&C 88:6 could be seen as stressing related themes. Whereas “the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not,” Jesus Christ, by way of contrast, 161 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 3:4, p. 29; cf. Psalm 104:2, J. ben Solomon, Chronicles, 1:4-5, p. 6.

162 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:31b, p. 192; J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 3:6, p. 30; Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 1:4, pp. 5-6. See Excursus 14: The Garden of Eden as a Prototype for the Temple, p. 555.

163 1 Timothy 6:16.

164 John 17:5.

165 M. Barker, Revelation, p. 22; cf. H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 440-441. See H. Koester et al., Thomas, 50, p. 132.

166 M. Barker, Angels, p. 29. See the overview of Moses 3, p. 136. For more on this topic, see Commentary 2:4-c, p. 101; 3:1-b, p. 151; Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540.

167 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 2:2, p. 55.

168 E.g., F. M. Müller, Bundahis, 1:1-14, pp. 3-6.

169 D&C 130:5.

170 See discussion in M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 61-62; M. Barker, Angel Priesthood, pp. 124-126.

171 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 69.

4 And I, God, saw the light; and that light was good. And I, God, divided the light from the darkness.

“ascended up on high, as also he descended below all things, in that he comprehended all things, that he might be in all and through all things, the light of truth.”

C. S. Lewis beautifully expressed the fact that it is possible to learn to distinguish between good and evil without partaking of sin, when in Perelandra he has the King say to Ransom: “We have learned of evil, though not as the Evil One wished us to learn. We have learned better than that, and know it more, for it is waking that understands sleep and not sleep that understands waking.”¹⁷²

- b that light was good. Light makes it possible to discern differences and, in turn, to discern differences brings light.¹⁷³ Both the Hebrew text of Genesis and the English text of the book of Abraham describe an event involving perception, evaluation, and understanding, not passive visual examination: e.g., “that light was good,”¹⁷⁴ “They... comprehended the light, for it was bright.”¹⁷⁵

Note that this judgment of the light’s goodness precedes the separation of light and darkness. Even though the formula expressing God’s approval, repeated seven times in this account, affirms His unqualified acceptance of all the results of Creation,¹⁷⁶ most commentators see this order of events as “an indication of the divine ‘preference’ for the light.”¹⁷⁷

OT1 reads “the light was good.”¹⁷⁸

- c I, God, divided the light from the darkness. The process of Creation involves the making and naming of distinctions. In the beginning, all is unorganized matter; later God divides the light from the darkness, the water above from that below the firmament, and the dry land from the sea. He then differentiates among the different species of plants and animals “after their kind,” between man and the animal kingdom, between man and woman, and finally between the seventh day and the other six days of Creation.¹⁷⁹

The Hebrew root bdl—divide or separate—occurs explicitly five times in the first chapter,¹⁸⁰ and the expression “after his kind” occurs ten more times,¹⁸¹ describing the separation into different kinds of species. Significantly, the same Hebrew root appears in Exodus within temple contexts describing the need for a veil to divide “between the Holy Place and the Most Holy”—the place of light where God dwells.¹⁸² divided the light from the darkness. If the light mentioned previously includes the glory and presence of God, the angels, and the spirits of men and all other creatures, what does it mean to say that this light was divided from the darkness? Assuming that the events of the first day of Creation took place in the spirit world,¹⁸³ it is possible to see an allusion to the premortal separation of the spirits who rebelled (“the darkness”) and were cast out of the presence of God (“the light”).¹⁸⁴ The tenor aria of the archangel Uriel from Haydn’s 1798

172 C. S. Lewis, Perelandra, p. 179.

173 R. Griffith-Jones, Witnesses, pp. 296-297.

174 Moses 2:4.

175 Abraham 4:4. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 7.

176 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 7.

177 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 113.

178 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 86.

179 See R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 7.

180 Moses 2:4, 6, 7, 14, 18.

181 Moses 2:11, 12 (twice), 21 (twice), 24 (twice), 25 (three times).

182 Exodus 26:33; cf. Psalm 104:2; Isaiah 40:22; Jeremiah 10:12; Ezekiel 42:20; 2 Nephi 8:13; D&C 104:14; overview of Moses 3, p. 148.

183 M. Barker, Revelation, p. 22.

184 Moses 4:3-4; cf., e.g., D. MacLagan, Myths, p. 11.

4 And I, God, saw the light; and that light was good. And I, God, divided the light from the darkness.

5 And I, God, called the light Day; and the darkness, I called Night; and this I did by the word of my power, and it was done as I spake; and the evening and the morning were the first day.

Die Schöpfung (“The Creation”) beautifully expresses the idea: “Now vanish before the holy beams / The gloomy shades of ancient night; / The first day appears. / Now chaos ends, and order fair prevails. / Affrighted fly hell’s spirits black in throngs: / Down they sink in the deep abyss / To endless night.”¹⁸⁵ A parallel to this event can be seen in the book of Enoch where rebel angels (in this case, the Watchers,¹⁸⁶ rather than the premortal hosts of Satan) are sent to dwell forever in the abyss.¹⁸⁷

Allusions to similar themes can be traced to Jewish sources. For example, addressing a question about the division of light and darkness on the first day, Rabbi Yannai said that it referred to the day of judgment.¹⁸⁸

Joseph Smith observed that: “wherever light shone, it stirred up darkness. Truth and error, good and evil, cannot be reconciled.”¹⁸⁹

- 5 a I, God, called the light Day. God’s absolute sovereignty over His creations is shown through His naming of Day and Night, the firmament, the sea, and the earth.¹⁹⁰ In similar fashion, having been granted dominion by God,¹⁹¹ man’s sovereignty over all other creatures will be affirmed when he is assigned the task of naming the animals.¹⁹²
- b Night. The phenomenon of darkness at nightfall is not a given everywhere in our galaxy. Our “solar system is located far enough from the galactic center so that there is a phenomenon for us called ‘night’... If we could be transported to a planet orbiting one of the stars in the central regions of the galaxy we would find ourselves overwhelmed with light from all directions. The sky—both day and night—would be packed with a million times more stars than our earthly night sky, and each star would be brighter than the brightest star in our present night sky.”¹⁹³ To look at this another way, the fact that the sky is dark at night in our part of the galaxy tells us that the beginning of the universe was recent enough that “the light from very distant stars has not had time to reach us yet. That [explains] why the sky at night isn’t glowing in every direction.”¹⁹⁴
- c this I did by the word of my power. Two interpretations are possible. On the one hand, this phrase, added in the book of Moses, can be seen as a more or less synonymous parallel to the expression that “it was done as I spake.” On the other hand, it could be taken to indicate that the light and darkness were “made” in a different fashion than the entities created on subsequent days. A similar phrase, “even according to my word,”¹⁹⁵ recurs in the description of the appearance of the sun, moon, and stars.

185 1:2 — Nun schwanden vor dem heiligen Strahle.

186 See Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

187 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 21:7–10, p. 297; cf. D&C 29:38.

188 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 3:8, p. 34; cf. Moses’ comment to Satan: “I can judge between thee and God” (Moses 1:15; cf. 1:18) and Commentary 2:5–f, p. 104. See also Commentary 2:3–b, p. 99; 3:1–a, p. 151; Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540; Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

189 J. Smith, Jr., Minutes, 6 October 1843, p. 331.

190 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 7–8.

191 Moses 2:28.

192 Moses 3:19–20. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 22 and Commentary 3:19–b, p. 177.

193 E. N. Skousen, Earth, pp. 245–246.

194 S. Hawking, Nutshell, p. 72.

195 Moses 2:16.

5 And I, God, called the light Day; and the darkness, I called Night; and this I did by the word of my power, and it was done as I spake; and the evening and the morning were the first day.

An important clue to the interpretation of this passage can be found in JST John 1:1-19, which invokes the language of Genesis to affirm that the Son, by whom “all things were made,” is “the true light, which lighteth every man who cometh into the world.”¹⁹⁶ Moses 1:32 specifically equates “the word of my power” with “my Only Begotten Son,” a reading that is strengthened by the fact that “Word” is capitalized in OT1.¹⁹⁷

- d it was done as I spake. This formula, and its variants (“and it was done,” “and it was so,” and “even as I spake”), have been liberally added throughout the book of Moses. The term “ordered” is used in place of “spake” in the book of Abraham—possibly to avoid the assertion that the Creation was accomplished solely by God’s speech. Rather, the book of Abraham phrase could be seen as expressing the idea that all of the resultant Creation was accomplished in perfect conformance to His will.¹⁹⁸
- e evening and the morning were the first day. A first notion of “time” appears only after the primeval unity was first divided. Note that evening and morning signify respectively, not the earth’s daily sunset and dawning, but rather the suspension and resumption of distinct “times” of divine creativity, corresponding to groups of works performed.¹⁹⁹

The Hebrew term for day, yom, is not only used to refer to a fixed twenty-four-hour period but also to a period of indeterminate length, as in the expression the “day of the Lord”²⁰⁰ or in Moses 3:4 where it is used to signify the entire period of Creation.²⁰¹ Thus we are not limited to supposing that the Creation was accomplished in six solar days or six thousand years but rather can view the ‘week’ of Creation as part of seemingly overlapping periods of potentially long and varying length.²⁰²

Note that like the Egyptian practice (and unlike the system that governs the current Jewish religious calendar) each “day” of Creation begins with the dawn.²⁰³ Thus Cassuto translates: “And there was evening and there was morning, one day,” and then comments: “When day-time had passed, the period allotted to darkness returned (and there was evening), and when night-time came to an end, the light held sway a second time (and there was morning), and this completed the first calendar day (one day), which had begun with the creation of light.”²⁰⁴ Abraham’s account of the Creation follows the same scheme, though with a difference in how it is formulated.

first day. The Hebrew expression means “Day One,” differing from subsequent periods of Creation that are described using cardinal numbers (e.g., second, third). According to Barker, some Jewish sages “remembered this as the Day (or the State) in which the Holy One was one with his universe. Day One was thus the state of unity underlying (rather than preceding) all the visible creation... Those who entered the Holy of Holies[, the place in the temple representing both the state before Creation and the state of oneness that would eventually prevail again,²⁰⁵] understood how that original unity had become the diversity of the visible creation... [where] everything was created distinct, according to its kind.”²⁰⁶

196 JST John 1:3, 9; cf. D&C 88:12-13.

197 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 86.

198 See also Commentary 2:10-b, p. 105.

199 Cf. Abraham 4:5, 8, 13, ff.

200 E.g., Isaiah 2:12; 13:5, 9; Jeremiah 46:10; Ezekiel 13:5; Amos 5:18, 20.

201 See W. Bradley, Why, p. 168.

202 Alma 40:8; B. R. McConkie, Christ and the Creation, p. 11; B. Young, 17 September 1876, p. 231.

203 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 28-30; N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 8.

204 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 28.

205 Ephesians 1:10; D&C 27:13; 128:18.

206 M. Barker, Temple Theology, pp. 24-25. See also P. H. Reardon, Reflections, pp. 32-33.

6 And again, I, God, said: Let there be a firmament in the midst of the water, and it was so, even as I spake; and I said: Let it divide the waters from the waters; and it was done;

7 And I, God, made the firmament and divided the waters, yea, the great waters under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament, and it was so even as I spake.

Genesis Rabbah explains the meaning of Day One: "...for the Holy One, blessed be he, gave him one day, and what is that day? It is the Day of Atonement."²⁰⁷

- 6 a Let there be a firmament in the midst of the water. From the point of view of the Creation, this verse seems to be describing how the waters were "divided" between the surface of the earth and the atmospheric heavens that surround it.²⁰⁸ Figuratively, however, it alludes to the veil that divided off the Holy of Holies in the temple.²⁰⁹

The Prophet's translation of Abraham 4:6 may have been informed by his study of Hebrew in Kirtland, where a more precise rendering of Genesis into English would be: "And Elohim said, Let there be an expanse in the midst of the waters and let it divide the waters and the waters."²¹⁰ Joshua Seixas' Grammar, which was the basis of Joseph Smith's study, notes "expanse" as the meaning of the corresponding Hebrew term for the KJV "firmament." "The verbal form is often used for hammering out metal or flattening out earth, which suggests a basic meaning of 'extending'."²¹¹

As in v. 2, the singular rather than the plural term for "water" appears in OT₂,²¹² though "waters,"²¹³ the original term in Genesis, is used in OT₁ as well as in the later translation of the book of Abraham—raising the possibility that this change was made on John Whitmer's own initiative.²¹⁴

- b it was done. The fact that the phrase "that it was good" is missing in this instance has been variously accounted for in rabbinical writings. One explanation for the omission is that "rain has no value unless there is dry land to be fructified; [and since] the creative acts relating to water are not completed until the third day, [that] account... appropriately records the formula twice."²¹⁵

A simpler explanation for the omission is that the eyes of a scribe copying the manuscript might have inadvertently jumped from the identical letters that would have appeared on this line and the one following.²¹⁶ This argument is supported by the Greek Septuagint text, which includes the missing phrase.²¹⁷

- 7 a I, God, made the firmament and divided the waters. Bradley comments: "The formation of a perfectly balanced water cycle is crucial to life on planet Earth. If there were too much carbon dioxide... or water in the atmosphere, then the temperature of the surface of the earth would rise monotonically, giving off more evaporation and causing a greater increase in temperature by trapping more heat and further increasing the temperature until the oceans were boiled dry. On the other hand, if the earth had insufficient greenhouse gases (e.g., water vapor and carbon dioxide), then the residual water might have condensed out of the atmosphere in the form of ice and snow. Since ice and snow have a high luminescence, 207 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 2:3, p. 23; cf. Commentary 2:4-c, p. 102. For differing explanations of the use of the Hebrew expression "one day" in this context, see J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 28.

208 B. R. McConkie, Christ and the Creation, p. 11.

209 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:51. See the overview of Moses 3, p. 148.

210 P. L. Barlow, Bible, p. 70.

211 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 8.

212 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 595.

213 Hebrew mayim.

214 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 10. Cf. Commentary 2:21-a, p. 110.

215 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 8.

216 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 10.

217 C. Dogniez et al., Pentateuque, p. 135; R. J. V. Hiebert, Septuagint, p. 1.

7 And I, God, made the firmament and divided the waters, yea, the great waters under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament, and it was so even as I spake.

8 And I, God, called the firmament Heaven; and the evening and the morning were the second day.

9 And I, God, said: Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and it was so; and I, God, said: Let there be dry land; and it was so.

10 And I, God, called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters, called I the Sea; and I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good.

the greater reflectivity of the radiant energy from the earth's surface combined with the lower energy-trapping efficiency of the dry atmosphere would have caused all the water on the surface of the earth to be converted to ice and snow. Thus the final product of an earth with just the right balance of water and carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and water in the oceans to maintain a moderate temperature over much of the earth (2°C-40°C) is quite remarkable."²¹⁸

- 9 a Let there be dry land. Creation stories in many ancient cultures begin with the appearance of the "primeval hill"—the first land mass rising out of the receding waters. In ancient Israel, the holiest spot on earth was the Foundation Stone in front of the Ark within the temple at Jerusalem: "it was the first solid material to emerge from the waters of Creation,²¹⁹ and it was upon this stone that the Deity effected Creation."²²⁰ This is one reason why temples are nearly always built upon a high elevation, consistent with the idea of the temple as a sacred mountain.

A rabbinical midrash says that at the time when the dry land was formed, "mountains and hills were lifted up everywhere... and valleys were formed and the waters flowed and collected in them."²²¹ Bradley concludes that the picture of the formation of dry land is "consistent with known earth history. The dry land mass increased monotonically from 0 percent to the current 29 percent in the first four billion years of earth's history through volcanic activity and plate tectonics. During the past five hundred million years, the forces of erosion seem to have been balanced by the dry land-generating forces of volcanic activity and plate tectonics, giving us a relatively constant land mass. Particularly interesting is the recent scientific evidence that the percentage of land mass appears to be crucial to making earth a suitable habitat for life, and we now have just the optimal amount."²²²

- 10 a Sea. The current text renders this term in the singular with the definite article. However, Genesis has "Seas," and OT1 has "the Seas."²²³ A post-1845 change to OT2 gives the reading as the plural "Seas," omitting the definite article.²²⁴
- b I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good. Sailhamer comments: "Throughout the opening chapter, God is depicted as the one who both knows what is 'good' for man and is intent on providing the good for him. In this way the author has prepared the reader for the [story of the Fall]."²²⁵ While mankind's limited ability to discern "good from evil" is the inevitable consequence of his lack of experience, he alone is responsible for his arrogance in the face of this ignorance whereby he exercises his agency to "set... aside" the "counsel of God."²²⁶ It is in light of mankind's propensity to suppose that they know good from evil "of 218 W. Bradley, Why, pp. 172-173.

219 Psalm 104:7-9.

220 J. M. Lundquist, Meeting Place, p. 7. See Figure 3-10, p. 147.

221 M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 5, p.39.

222 W. Bradley, Why, p. 173.

223 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 87.

224 Ibid., p. 595; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 68.

225 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 27.

226 2 Nephi 9:28.

10 And I, God, called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters, called I the Sea; and I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good.

11 And I, God, said: Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, the fruit tree yielding fruit, after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed should be in itself upon the earth, and it was so even as I spake.

themselves” that scripture portrays mankind’s ongoing rebellion “not merely as... sin, but also as the work of fools.”²²⁷

With this in mind, it is interesting to note that in the fourth chapter of Abraham, God’s evaluative appraisals of the goodness of His work are actually replaced by repeated variations of a phrase that describes the unbroken thread of perfect obedience running through the entire process of Creation: “and the Gods saw that they were obeyed.”²²⁸ This theme appears in the account of the creation of the earth and the waters,²²⁹ the plants,²³⁰ the lights in the heavens,²³¹ and the animals.²³² To the rule of obedience that governs the universe, man is portrayed as the sole sad exception.²³³

Nibley sees God’s unfailing respect for the exercise of agency as enabling what he calls “the principle of maximum participation”: “‘They obeyed’²³⁴ is the active voice, introducing a teaching that, in my opinion, is by far the most significant and distinct aspect of Mormonism. It is the principle of ‘maximum participation,’ of the active cooperation of all of God’s creatures in the working out of his plans, which, in fact, are devised for their benefit: “This is my work and my glory...’²³⁵ Everybody gets into the act. Every creature, to the limit of its competence, is given the supreme compliment of being left on its own, so that the word ‘obey’ is correctly applied. ‘We will go down, for there is space there, and we will take of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell.’²³⁶ Why? ‘And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them.’²³⁷ What he commands is what will best fulfill the measure of their existence, but they are not forced to do it—they are not automata. Adam was advised not to eat the fruit but was told at the same time that he was permitted to do it.²³⁸ It was up to him whether he would obey or not. If he did obey, he would qualify for a higher trust.”²³⁹

- 11 a Let the earth bring forth grass. Nibley notes that the corresponding phrase in Abraham: “Let us prepare the earth to bring forth grass” makes it clear that “what they ordered was not the completed product, but the process to bring it about, providing a scheme under which life might expand... Note the future tense: the [earth is] so treated that [it] will have the capacity. The Gods did not make [grass] on the spot but arranged it so that in time they might appear. They created the potential.”²⁴⁰

grass. Though the English text seems to imply four kinds of plant life (grass, herb, two kinds of trees), the underlying Hebrew word rendered grass (deshe) is actually a generic term

227 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 27.

228 See M. Fishbane, Myth, pp. 101-102 for a parallel from the Midrash.

229 Abraham 4:10.

230 Abraham 4:12.

231 Abraham 4:18.

232 Abraham 4:21, 25; cf. P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 19:9, p. 699.

233 Helaman 12:4-26; Jeremiah 5:22-24; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 2:1-5:4, p. 150; Commentary 2:31-a, p. 118.

234 Abraham 4:18.

235 Moses 1:39.

236 Abraham 3:24.

237 Abraham 3:25.

238 Moses 3:17.

239 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 71. See Commentary 4:11-c, p. 254. and the discussion of agency in K. E. Robson, Response, pp. 415-418.

240 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 70.

11 And I, God, said: Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, the fruit tree yielding fruit, after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed should be in itself upon the earth, and it was so even as I spake.

12 And the earth brought forth grass, every herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed should be in itself, after his kind; and I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good;

13 And the evening and the morning were the third day.

14 And I, God, said: Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years;

for vegetation which is subdivided into plants (herbs) and fruit trees in the last part of the verse.²⁴¹ Thus, a plainer translation might read: “Let the earth bring forth vegetation: both the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit.”

b seed... tree... fruit. “[T]he Hebrew words zera, es, and peri mean, respectively, ‘semen or embryos of any plant species,’ ‘any large plant containing woody fiber,’ and ‘the food and/or embryos produced by any living thing.’²⁴²

c after his kind. Elder Boyd K. Packer has written: “No lesson is more manifest in nature than that all living things do as the Lord commanded in the Creation. They reproduce ‘after their own kind.’²⁴³ They follow the pattern of their parentage.”²⁴⁴ The Prophet Joseph Smith said that it is a “fixed and unalterable... decree of the Lord that every tree, fruit, or herb bearing seed should bring forth after its kind, and cannot come forth after any other law or principle”²⁴⁵ This “decree” is expressed within the elegant economy of the laws of genetics.

13 a third day. Starting with this verse, Abraham’s account uses the term “time” rather than “day.”

14 a Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven. Unlike the Genesis account, which describes the appearance of plant life before the sun and moon lighted the earth, the Creation sequence presented in the temple endowment follows a different ordering and division of events.²⁴⁶ Joseph Smith’s teachings support the fact that these heavenly bodies were created prior to the earth: “... the starry hosts were worlds and suns and universes, some of which had being millions of ages before this earth had physical form.”²⁴⁷ Hence, it is clear that vv. 14-15 do not describe the creation of the sun, moon, and stars but rather “the appearance of the sun through the darkness, much the way the sunrise is described in Genesis 44:3, Exodus 10:23, and Nehemiah 8:3.”²⁴⁸ As in several other places in Genesis, the event is phrased in “phenomenal language,” i.e., “wording that represents things as they appear to a casual human observer on the face of the earth.”²⁴⁹ For example, commenting on the term lights as it is used in this verse, Nibley observes that: “From our position that is just what they are—lights, nothing more.”²⁵⁰

Bradley comments: “For God to cause the sun and moon to appear to observers on earth, dust and debris had to first be removed from the atmosphere, then the atmosphere itself had to be “transformed from translucent (light-diffusing) to transparent (light-transmitting). It is generally accepted that the earth’s early atmosphere was rich in carbon dioxide, which 241 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 9; cf. Leviticus 27:30.

242 W. Bradley, Why, p. 173.

243 Moses 2:12, 24.

244 B. K. Packer, Pattern, p. 289.

245 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 20 March 1842, p. 107.

246 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 189; B. R. McConkie, Christ and the Creation, p. 11; F. B. Salisbury, Creation, p. 108.

247 E. W. Tullidge, Women, p. 178.

248 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 26; cf. p. 34.

249 W. Bradley, Why, p. 164; cf. H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, pp. 65-68.

250 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 74.

14 And I, God, said: Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night, and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years;

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth; and it was so.

would have created a greenhouse effect. This greenhouse effect of ‘days’ one through three would have created a more uniform climate over the entire earth (which is consistent with fossil evidence of lush vegetation covering the entire earth in the past), and would have muted seasonal variations in weather. This greenhouse effect was probably the consequence of a high concentration of carbon dioxide. The creation of plant life in ‘day’ three would result in the gradual conversion of the atmosphere from one that was carbon dioxide rich to one that is oxygen rich, since plants consume carbon dioxide and give off oxygen. Beginning with a carbon-dioxide-rich atmosphere would benefit the development of flora, while the transformation to an oxygen-rich atmosphere would help to stimulate the development of more complex animal life.”²⁵¹

The relatively lengthy chiasmic description of the sun, moon, and stars as creations of God, taken with the fact that these celestial bodies are not described by name, has the effect of discrediting the idea of their worship as familiar deities of the ancient world.²⁵² Stars, however, sometimes retain their status as symbols representing the “sons of God” and “angels” elsewhere in the Old Testament and the Book of Mormon.²⁵³

b to divide the day from the night. Nibley wrote: “Such a division had already taken place at the beginning, but this was a new time-system for this earth.”²⁵⁴

c let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years. “A ‘sign’ is a symbol, a mark, an arbitrary indicator, a means of measuring. It is only a sign relative to a particular observer. These lights were not originally created as markers of time, but [now that they were visible to earth] they could be used as such, they could be ‘organized for’ such.”²⁵⁵ This period of Creation marks “the first appearance of the seasons and the first opportunity to be able to use the celestial bodies to make a calendar.”²⁵⁶ The word “seasons” probably is meant to include the functions of the sun and moon within the calendar of religious festivals.²⁵⁷

15 a to give light upon the earth. It is the earth, not the heavens, that require the illumination provided by God’s light.²⁵⁸ Likewise, modern temples are made to brilliantly shine so as to light up their nighttime surroundings, while at the same time being furnished with opaque windows that restrict outside illumination.²⁵⁹ Thus, the temple’s function is symbolically portrayed as giving light, not receiving it from elsewhere.²⁶⁰ “The ancients said: ‘Whoever builds windows in his house, makes them wide outside and narrow inside, that they should bring in the light. Not so in the Temple; because there the light was within, and shone forth onto the whole world.’ ‘As oil gives light—so the Temple gives light to the world.’”²⁶¹

Elder John A. Widtsoe wrote: “Spiritual power is generated within temple walls, and sent out to bless the world. Light from the house of the Lord illumines every home within the Church 251 W. Bradley, Why, p. 165; cf. D. N. Brems, Divine Engineering, pp. 37–39. Contrast the alternative explanations given in M. D. Rhodes et al., Astronomy, pp. 31, 33.

252 C. Westermann, Genesis 1–11, pp. 126–132; cf. Basil, Hexaemeron, 5:1, p. 76; D. Wilkinson, Hawking, pp. 175–176; Commentary 2:21–b, p. 109.

253 E.g., Job 38:7 and 1 Nephi 1:10.

254 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 74.

255 Ibid., p. 74; Abraham 4:14; cf. D&C 88:42–45.

256 W. Bradley, Why, p. 165.

257 The Hebrew term is translated “holy convocations” in Leviticus 23:2ff. (B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, p. 42).

258 Cf. N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 10; S. Shokek, Yashar, p. 41.

259 See D&C 43:15–16; J. E. Talmage, Parables, p. 5.

260 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 3:4, p. 29; cf. Porch of Wisdom, Faith and Reason, p. 70.

261 Z. Vilnay, Sacred Land, p. 82. See 1 Kings 6:4, Jeremiah 11:16.

15 And let them be for lights in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth; and it was so.

16 And I, God, made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night, and the greater light was the sun, and the lesser light was the moon; and the stars also were made even according to my word.

17 And I, God, set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth,

18 And the sun to rule over the day, and the moon to rule over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness; and I, God, saw that all things which I had made were good;

19 And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

20 And I, God, said: Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl which may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven.

21 And I, God, created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind; and I, God, saw that all things which I had created were good.

fitted for its reception by participation in temple privileges. The path from the temple to the home of man is divinely brilliant. Every home penetrated by the temple spirit enlightens, cheers, and comforts every member of the household. The peace we covet is found in such homes. Indeed, when temples are on earth, the whole world shares measurably in the issuing light; when absent, the hearts of men become heavy, as if they said, with the people of Enoch's day, 'Zion is fled.'²⁶²

16 a lesser light was the moon. Writes Nibley: "[F]rom where I stand, [the moon] can be made to serve a number of special purposes. Aside from measuring time, those heavenly bodies do 'give light upon the earth'²⁶³... An astronomer... recently calculated the probability of a planet in the solar system having a moon (just one moon, at that) that subtended exactly the same arc in the sky as does the sun from the surface of some planet. The chances are astronomically remote, so remote, indeed, that there seems to be something deliberate about what is otherwise a stunning coincidence."²⁶⁴

20 a Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl. Sea animals and birds are introduced on the fifth day, while animals who live on land will appear on the sixth.

that hath life. The Hebrew "animate life" is used to distinguish between animals and plants.²⁶⁵ "In Hebrew, as in many other languages, the words for 'life' (chay) and 'animal' (chayah) are cognate."²⁶⁶

The recurrence of the special Hebrew creation term bara in v. 21 suggests to Sailhamer "the beginning of a new stage in the Creation, namely, the creation of 'living beings'.... The choice of the verb... here is also related to the development of the theme of the 'blessing' since there is an alliteration between 'to create' (bara) and 'to bless' (barak) throughout the account."²⁶⁷

21 a great whales. The Hebrew term tannin, which appears in Canaanite myths to describe an opponent to Baal, refers to a kind of giant sea creature, later associated in the Bible with the monsters Rahab²⁶⁸ and Leviathan.²⁶⁹ When Moses and Aaron come to the Egyptian court, 262 Cited in N. P. Olsen, Logan Temple, p. vii; cf. A. K. Parrish, Widtsøe, p. 44. See Moses 7:69.

263 Abraham 4:15.

264 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, pp. 74-75.

265 J. W. Wevers, Notes, p. 10; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 60.

266 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 35; cf. Latin anima, "soul" or "life," and animalia, "animals." See also Endnote 3-9, p. 199.

267 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 35.

268 Isaiah 51:9.

269 Isaiah 27:1.

21 And I, God, created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind; and I, God, saw that all things which I had created were good.

22 And I, God, blessed them, saying: Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the sea; and let fowl multiply in the earth;

23 And the evening and the morning were the fifth day.

24 And I, God, said: Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind, cattle, and creeping things, and beasts of the earth after their kind, and it was so;

25 And I, God, made the beasts of the earth after their kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything which creepeth upon the earth after his kind; and I, God, saw that all these things were good.

the same term is used to describe the creatures into which their staffs (and those of the magicians) were transformed.²⁷⁰

In Mesopotamian creation stories, “in order to create, the Creator has first to subdue sea monsters. [Moses 2] is criticizing this false theological view and asserting that God created everything.”²⁷¹

- b waters. OT1 and all published versions have the plural “waters.”²⁷² OT2 shows a correction from “water” to “waters.”²⁷³

22 a I... blessed them. Following inspection and approval comes benediction. God blesses the fish and fowl to “be fruitful, and multiply.” Neither the plants nor the land animals receive a comparable blessing—the plants because they are not “living creatures” and, according to Rashi, the land animals because of the serpent “which was destined to be cursed.”²⁷⁴ Note that “the divine blessing is reserved for the three most critical junctures in the narrative: the introductory statement;²⁷⁵ the creation of organic life;²⁷⁶ and the creation of human life.”²⁷⁷

- b sea. Genesis and OT1 have “Seas.”²⁷⁸ A change in Sidney Rigdon’s hand in OT2 crosses out the plural indicator “s.”²⁷⁹

24 a Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind. Three kinds of animals are listed: cattle (i.e., livestock), creeping things (i.e., reptiles, insects, and very small animals whose bodies appear to move close to the ground,²⁸⁰ and beasts of the earth (i.e., wild animals).

Though v. 24 states that the animals were brought forth from the earth, v. 25 clarifies that they were made by God. Sailhamer comments: “Apparently the author wanted to show that though the command was the same for the creation of both the vegetation and the living creatures on land, there was a distinction between the origin of the two forms of life. Vegetation was produced from the land, but the living creatures were made by God himself. Life stems from God and is to be distinguished from the rest of the physical world.”²⁸¹

270 Exodus 7:9-12 and R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 11.

271 D. Wilkinson, Hawking, p. 175. See Commentary 2:14-a, p. 107.

272 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 87; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 69.

273 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 596; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 69.

274 Rashi, Genesis Commentary, p. 13.

275 Moses 2:1.

276 Moses 2:20.

277 Moses 2:26. See V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 132 and Commentary 2:2-b, p. 98.

278 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 87.

279 Ibid., p. 596.

280 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 11.

281 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 37.

26 And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so. And I, God, said: Let them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

26 a Let us make. Notably, both other instances of the use of this plural formula in Genesis involve important decisions about the fate of humanity: the expulsion from Eden²⁸² and the dispersal after the destruction of Babel.²⁸³

Despite the fact that Seixas's Grammar, which Joseph Smith studied in Kirtland, describes the Hebrew term Elohim as 'a singular noun with a plural form,'²⁸⁴ the Prophet came to interpret the term as a plural.²⁸⁵

The plural form of this expression has long been an interpretive problem for commentators that look at the Old Testament through the lens of strict monotheism. The phrase is often explained by way of analogy to 'the royal we' used by a king or queen in self-reference, however this does not explain why it occurs only in the early chapters of Genesis and nowhere else.²⁸⁶ Moreover, the point of the verse at hand is to show "the unique correspondence between God and man, not the majesty of God."²⁸⁷

A view consistent with LDS scripture²⁸⁸ is to imagine the setting for the verse as God addressing a heavenly council.²⁸⁹ It is significant, observes Faulconer, that: "Human creation is not a simple act of God's fiat; rather, creation is a subject of consideration and discussion... God creates humanity in response to others, rather than as a mere act of self-will. Even in the beginning there is already relation: there is no absolute beginning, not even in the beginning."²⁹⁰ Describing this scene, the Prophet stated: "The head God called together the Gods and sat in grand council to bring forth the world."²⁹¹ Friedman likewise writes: "In pagan myth, the chief god, when formally speaking for the council of the gods, speaks in the plural."²⁹² Since, for most Christian and Jewish commentators, the idea of a plurality of gods is unacceptable, a court of angels is often imagined in place of a polytheistic council—though one is forced to admit that the concept of many gods is hinted at elsewhere in the Old Testament.²⁹³ Further describing the composition of a council of gods, Barker argues that the ancient religion of Israel, prior to alterations by reforming Deuteronomists, clearly distinguished between the "Most High God" and several Sons of God, the chief of which was Yahweh (Jehovah).²⁹⁴ She marshals evidence to show that the early Jewish converts to Christianity who retained shreds of the ancient belief naturally saw Jesus Christ as the bodily manifestation of Yahweh, the Holy One of Israel.²⁹⁵

The abrupt change of style between the description of the creation of animals ("Let the earth bring forth...") and that of man ("Let us make...") signals the unique status of the man and the woman, created in God's image and likeness as the pinnacle of the "manifestly ascending

282 Moses 4:28; cf. Genesis 3:22.

283 Genesis 11:7; cf. JST Genesis 11:5. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 12.

284 Cited in P. L. Barlow, Bible, p. 70.

285 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 June 1844, pp. 371-372.

286 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 12.

287 K. A. Mathews, New American, p. 161.

288 E.g., D&C 121:32; Abraham 4:26.

289 D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 18-21. See also Commentary 2:27-b, p. 115.

290 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 5; cf. Gregory of Nyssa, On the Origin of Man and Chrysostom, Sermons on Genesis 2:1, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 28.

291 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 348.

292 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 12.

293 See M. S. Heiser et al., Exchange; M. S. Smith, Monotheism; Commentary 1:6-f, p. 48; 4:11-b, p. 253; 4:28-a, p. 276.

294 E.g., M. Barker, Older, pp. 174-176.

295 E.g., M. Barker, Angel, pp. 190-212.

26 And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so. And I, God, said: Let them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

gradational order” of Creation.²⁹⁶ Moreover, the phrasing of Abraham’s account (“Let us go down and form man.... So the Gods went down to organize man”²⁹⁷), together with the additional detail about the creation of Adam and Eve provided in Moses 3, make strikingly clear the increased personal and direct involvement of God in the creation of man. The idea in and of itself does not necessarily conflict with scientific evidence that seems to rule out the concept of a “special creation” for the human body, however, as Jackson comments: “Whatever the process for creating humans may have been, the scriptures are clear in differentiating between that process and the process by which other life was made.”²⁹⁸

Though more often seen as referring to the physical creation, these verses have sometimes been associated with the creation of the spirits of all mankind.²⁹⁹ Some support for these readings has been found in D&C 77:12,³⁰⁰ Abraham 5:2ff., and a statement reportedly made by Joseph Smith that Adam received the First Presidency and its keys³⁰¹ “before the world was formed as in Genesis 1:26-28.”³⁰² The latter statement seems coherent only in light of the Prophet’s interpretation of the term “world” as meaning the spirits of all mankind: “The world and earth are not synonymous terms. The world is the human family.”³⁰³

As for the central message of the set of verses that introduce the creation of mankind, Sarna comments: “The divine intent and purpose are solemnly declared in advance, and the stereotyped formula ‘and it was so’ gives way to a thrice-repeated avowal that God created the man, using the significant verb b-r-’ Human beings are to enjoy a unique relationship to God, who communicates with them alone and who shares with them the custody and administration of the world.”³⁰⁴ At the same time, the pairing of the creation of man... with that of land animals, and their sharing in common a vegetarian diet, focuses attention on the dual nature of mankind, the creatureliness and earthiness as well as the Godlike qualities.”³⁰⁵

- b man. Man, as used in this context, is “sex neutral, like ‘animal.’”³⁰⁶ Sarna elaborates: “Hebrew ‘adam’ is a generic term for humankind; it never appears in Hebrew in the feminine or plural. In the first five chapters of Genesis it is only rarely a proper name, “Adam.” The term encompasses both man and woman, as shown in verses 27-28 and Genesis 5:1-2,³⁰⁷ where it is construed with plural verbs and terminations.”³⁰⁸ President Spencer W. Kimball further explained that man, as used here, was not meant to describe “a separate man, but a complete man, which is husband and wife.”³⁰⁹ By way of contrast, the use of the Hebrew term ‘ish’ to mean “man” in the everyday sense is eventually introduced only after the woman (‘ishah’) is created.³¹⁰

296 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 11.

297 Abraham 4:26-27.

298 K. P. Jackson, Genesis, p. 82. See Commentary 3:7-a, p. 157.

299 J. F. Smith, Jr., Origin, p. 99; B. Young, 18 June 1865, p. 122.

300 See Commentary 3:2-a, p. 151.

301 Meaning the keys to administer all the affairs of the Kingdom of God on the earth.

302 J. Smith, Jr., Words, before 8 August 1839, p. 8.

303 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, p. 60. For more on spiritual creation of mankind, see the overview of Moses 3, pp. 134-139.

304 Cf. Psalm 8:4-7.

305 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 11.

306 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 36.

307 Cf. Moses 6:9.

308 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 12.

309 S. W. Kimball, Blessings, p. 71.

310 See also Commentary 2:27-a, b, p. 115; 3:23-c, p. 183.

26 And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so. And I, God, said: Let them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

- c in our image, after our likeness. Unlike the earlier creatures who were each made “after his kind,”³¹¹ man and woman were made in God’s image and likeness.³¹² The Prophet Joseph Smith made it clear that this phrase applied not only to the physical appearance of Adam and Eve, but also to their spiritual nature which was, in the beginning, “innocent, harmless, and spotless, bearing the same image as the Gods. And when man fell he did not lose His image, but [only] His character, still retaining the image of his Maker... And through the atonement of Christ, and the resurrection and obedience in the Gospel, we shall again be conformed to the [full] image of... Jesus Christ,³¹³ then we shall have attained to the [full] image, glory, and character of God.”³¹⁴ About this “double movement” of image and likeness, Faulconer observes: “humans begin like God and, at the same time, they come to be like him.”³¹⁵ Notice that these phrases are reversed when the birth of Seth is described: “in his [Adam’s] own likeness, after his own image.”³¹⁶

Moses 6:9 is more specific than 2:26 in saying that man was created “in the image of his [God’s] own body.”³¹⁷ Joseph Smith spoke very plainly about the meaning of these words: “God Himself who sits enthroned in yonder heavens is a Man like unto one of yourselves—that is the great secret! If the veil were rent today and... you would see Him in all the person, image, fashion, and very form of a man, like yourselves. For Adam was a man formed in his likeness and created in the very fashion and image of God.”³¹⁸ Munoa concurs, citing Levison who concluded that “The image itself consists of physical similarity to God.”³¹⁹ He then recalls the tradition in Genesis Rabbah 8:10 that “Adam’s likeness to God is so exact that Adam must be put to sleep so that the angels might worship the right person... In [Yalqut Shim’oni] 1:20 on Genesis 2:9 the angels exclaim, when they notice Adam’s resemblance to God, ‘Are there two powers in heaven?’”³²⁰ Neusner finds it “stunning” that the rabbinical commentators took this idea so literally, affirming that even “the angels did not know man from God,” stating, “I cannot imagine a more daring affirmation of humanity.”³²¹

Moses 2:27 equates the image of God to the image of the Only Begotten: “in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten.”³²² This recalls similar teachings in Philo and the Gnostics that “the Logos is the Shadow/Image of God,³²³ [while] the man of [Moses 2:26-7] is the shadow/image of the Logos, a shadow of a shadow, as it were.”³²⁴

311 See Commentary 2:11-c, p. 107.

312 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 37.

313 Romans 8:29.

314 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 July 1843, p. 231, punctuation modernized, bracketed words added for clarification; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings 2007, p. 52 interprets and punctuates the citation differently, and changes “retaining” to “retained” (cf. T. G. Madsen, LDS View, p. 105).

315 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 10; cf. Irenaeus, Heresies, 5:6:1, pp. 531-532; Moses 4:28. See also Origen, On first principles 3:6:1, Diadochus of Photice, On spiritual perfection 4, Gregory of Nyssa, On the Origin of Man—all three cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, pp. 29-30, 33.

316 Moses 6:10.

317 Cf. Targum Yerushalmi: “in the likeness of the presence of the Lord” (J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos).

318 J. Smith, Jr., 7 April 1844, cited in S. Larson, King Follett, p. 200.

319 See also D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 16-17, cited in Moses 2 Gleanings, pp. 123-124.

320 P. B. Munoa, Four Powers, p. 101.

321 J. Neusner, Confronting, p. 63. See E. J. Hamori, Embodied God and D. L. Paulsen, Embodiment for historical overviews of the doctrine of divine embodiment. See also D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 16-17; Introduction, p. 10; Commentary 1:6-g, p. 48; 1:12-c, p. 53; Excursus 7: Time and Eternity, p. 537; Excursus 30: Adam-God Theory and the Heavenly and Earthly Adam, p. 603.

322 Cf. John 14:7-10.

323 E.g., Philo, Interpretation, 3, 96, p. 61.

324 W. Williams, Shadow, citing Philo, De opificio mundi 25 (1:6). Philo, however, did not have in mind a physical

26 And I, God, said unto mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so. And I, God, said: Let them have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

Sarna comments: “The words used here to convey these ideas can be better understood in the light of a phenomenon registered in both Mesopotamia and Egypt where the ruling monarch is described as ‘the image’ or ‘the likeness’ of a god... Without doubt, the terminology employed in [Moses] 2:26 is derived from regal vocabulary, which serves to elevate the king above the ordinary run of men. In the Bible this idea has become democratized. All human beings are created ‘in the image of God’; each person bears the stamp of royalty.”³²⁵

- d Let them have dominion. The Cave of Treasures has God speaking the following words to Adam: “Adam, behold; I have made thee king, and priest, and prophet, and lord, and head, and governor of everything which hath been made and created; and they shall be in subjection unto thee, and they shall be thine, and I have given unto thee power over everything which I have created.”³²⁶

Nibley comments: “A favorite theme of Brigham Young was that the dominion God gives man is designed to test him, to enable him to show to himself, his fellows, and all the heavens just how he would act if entrusted with God’s own power; if he does not act in a godlike manner, he will never be entrusted with a Creation of his own, worlds without end.”³²⁷ Similarly, Faulconer observes that “in ruling over the world, humans are its gods, those through whom Creation is either condemned or destroyed. In this, humans are like God: we and the world are judged through our dominion; God and the world are justified by His.”³²⁸

Nibley writes that the word “dominion” comes from the Latin dominus (“lord”), “specifically ‘the lord of the household,’ in his capacity of generous host... [responsible as] master for the comfort and well-being of his dependents and guests.”³²⁹ The word expresses “the coercive power of the monarch, consonant with the explanation just given for ‘the image of God.’ This power, however, cannot include the license to exploit nature banefully, for the following reasons: the human race is not inherently sovereign, but enjoys its dominion solely by the grace of God. Furthermore, the model of kingship here presupposed is Israelite, according to which... the limits of [the rule of the monarch] are carefully defined and circumscribed by divine law, so that kingship is to be exercised with responsibility and is subject to accountability. Moreover, man, the sovereign of nature, is conceived at this stage to be functioning within the context of a ‘very good’ world in which the interrelationships of organisms with their environment and with each other are entirely harmonious and mutually beneficial, an idyllic situation that is clearly illustrated in Isaiah’s vision of the ideal future king.”³³⁰ Thus, despite the power given him, man still requires special divine sanction to partake of the earth’s vegetation, and although he ‘rules’ the animal world, he is not here permitted to eat flesh.”³³¹ To have “dominion” in the priesthood sense means to have responsibility,³³² specifically as God’s representative on earth.³³³ As Nibley succinctly puts it: “Man’s dominion is a call to service, not a license to exterminate.”³³⁴ resemblance (see J. Gross, Divinization, p. 76, citing De opificio mundi 69 (1:18)). See also Ether 3:15-16.

325 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 12. See also N. M. Sarna, Mists, p. 51; Commentary 6:10-a, p. 482.

326 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 53.

327 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 10.

328 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 7. For LDS-authored collections of statements from secular and religious sources on man’s stewardship for animals and for the earth, see G. E. Jones, Animals; R. D. Stratton, Kindness.

329 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 7.

330 Isaiah 11:1-9.

331 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 12-13. See Moses 2:29-30; cf. Genesis 9:3-4.

332 J. F. Smith, Jr., Way 1945, 1931, p. 221.

333 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, pp. 30-31; Hirsch, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 70.

334 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 18; cf. T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 136.

27 And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.

- 27 a created I him... created I them. In light of the interplay between “him” and “them” in this verse, one strand of rabbinic tradition proposes that “man was originally created male and female in one.” In the creation of woman, it was suggested that “God... separated the one (female) side,”³³⁵ in a fashion that recalls Greek traditions telling of originally androgynous humans who were split because of their rebellion, older Egyptian texts where the male earth god (Geb) and the female heaven (Nut) were separated in the beginning of Creation,³³⁶ and Zoroastrian texts that describe the couple as having been at first “connected together and both alike.”³³⁷ More conventionally, however, we might rather suppose that the three lines of this stately poetic diction are structured as they are in order to successively draw our attention to three things: first, to the creation of man in the Divine image; second, to the fact that this resemblance exactly parallels the one that exists between the Father and the Son; and third, to the essential distinction of gender.³³⁸

With respect to the oneness of man and woman, Elder Erastus Snow expressed that “there can be no God except he is composed of the man and woman united, and there is not in all the eternities that exist, nor ever will be, a God in any other way. There never was a God, and there never will be in all eternities, except they are made of these two component parts: a man and a woman, the male and the female.”³³⁹ Similarly, the Talmud comments that “a man without a wife is not a man, for it is said, ‘male and female He created them... and called their name Man’³⁴⁰ [i.e., only together, as man and wife, is he called ‘Man’].”³⁴¹

- b male and female. Both men and women are created in the divine image and likeness, which has implications not only for human nature but also for the character of God.³⁴² The 1909 and 1925 First Presidency statements commenting on the origin of man both include the assertion that: “All men and women are in the similitude of the universal Father and Mother, and are literally the sons and daughters of Deity.”³⁴³

Though masculine verbs and adjectives are used with God’s name (also masculine), evidence exists that the Ugaritic goddess Asherah was sometimes worshipped as a female consort to Jehovah in preexilic times.³⁴⁴ Allusions to a female deity are also seen by some in biblical references to Wisdom³⁴⁵ and in the texts of mystic Judaism referring to the Shekhinah.³⁴⁶ Jeremiah spoke out against the worship of the “queen of heaven,”³⁴⁷ though, as Peterson points out, such prophetic opposition does not seem to appear before the eighth century BCE.³⁴⁸ From

335 A. Cohen, Chumash, Genesis 2:21, p. 11. See J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 8:1, p. 73. See W. A. Meeks, Androgyne, p. 185 for relevant discussion, including evidence that rabbis had access to a version of the Septuagint with the reading: “male and female created I him.”

336 Plato, Symposium 189d-190a, pp. 85-87; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 7, pp. 88-89.

337 F. M. Müller, Bundahis, 15:2, p. 53. See references to related concepts in additional cultures in J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 916-918.

338 Cf. U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 57-58. See D. N. Freedman, Humanity, p. 23; Commentary 2:27-b, p. 115.

339 E. Snow, 3 March 1878, p. 270.

340 See Moses 6:10.

341 Yevamos 63a, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 167; cf. 1 Corinthians 11:11. See Endnote 2-19, p. 128.

342 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, pp. 16-17.

343 H. J. Grant et al., Evolution, p. 244; J. F. Smith et al., Origin, p. 203. Additional information relating to the LDS concept of a “Mother in Heaven” can be found in K. L. Barney, Mother in Heaven; E. A. Cannon, Mother in Heaven; J. M. Derr et al., Relief Society, pp. 57-58, 449 nn. 129, 131; G. B. Hinckley, Daughters; D. L. Paulsen, Are Christians Mormon, pp. 96-107. See also M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 39-44.

344 D. C. Peterson, Asherah 1998, pp. 202-209. See also e.g., Deuteronomy 16:21; 1 Kings 14:15, 23; 2 Kings 17:15-16.

345 Hokhmah in Hebrew, Sophia in Greek—see, e.g., Proverbs 8:1-31.

346 H. Schwartz, Tree, pp. 45-59.

347 Jeremiah 44:17ff.

348 D. C. Peterson, Asherah 1998, p. 201. See also M. Barker, Wisdom; M. Barker, Revelation, pp. 204-206; M. Barker, Queen; M. Barker, Temple Theology, pp. 75-93; D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 22-25 (cited in Moses 2 Gleanings, pp. 122-123). For a discussion of related themes in the Book of Mormon, see K. Christensen et al., Nephite Feminism. For a brief summary of the role of female deities in Israelite worship, see, e.g., W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, pp. 60-63.

27 And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten created I him; male and female created I them.

28 And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them: Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

his study of this verse, Freedman concludes: “Just as the male God is the model and image for the first man, so some divine or heavenly female figure serves as the model and likeness for the human female, the first woman.”³⁴⁹

The First Presidency’s Proclamation on the Family affirms that gender is an eternal aspect of the spiritual identity of each individual.³⁵⁰ The terms “male and female” used for Adam and Eve “emphasize their sexuality in a way ‘man and woman’ would not.”³⁵¹ Sarna observes: “No... sexual differentiation is noted in regard to animals... The next verse shows [human sexuality] to be a blessed gift of God woven into the fabric of life. As such, it cannot of itself be other than wholesome. By the same token, its abuse is treated in the Bible with particular severity. Its proper regulation is subsumed under the category of the holy, whereas sexual perversion is viewed with abhorrence as an affront to human dignity and as a desecration of the divine image of man.”³⁵²

28 a Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth. The Hebrew phrase for “be fruitful and multiply” (peru urebu) may be a deliberate play on the “without form and void” (tohu va-bohu) of v. 2: “In this case, the living creatures of God’s Creation are hereby empowered to perpetuate God’s life-giving creativity by bringing still more life into the world, by filling up and inhabiting that which was previously empty and uninhabitable.”³⁵³ “The difference between the formulation here and God’s blessing to the fish and fowl in verse 22 is subtle and meaningful. Here God directly addresses man and woman.”³⁵⁴

The word “replenish” can be misleading to modern English speakers. The corresponding Hebrew term male does not mean to “refill” but simply to “fill” or “make full.” Thus, Sarna renders the command in this verse as “Be fertile and increase, fill the earth.”³⁵⁵

Turner observes that although keeping this commandment will not be easy in light of the pain of childbirth,³⁵⁶ the murderous dispositions of some men,³⁵⁷ the threat of famine and floods,³⁵⁸ and the failure of mankind to disperse and “fill the earth” as they were commanded to do,³⁵⁹ the book of Genesis demonstrates that “God intervenes to make sure it is obeyed, willingly or not.”³⁶⁰

Keller notes that the commandment anticipates the departure of Adam and Eve from Eden, since they “were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth, not the Garden.”³⁶¹

349 D. N. Freedman, Humanity, p. 24. Some rabbinical sources see the female figure of Wisdom as assisting God in Creation, while others argue vehemently that God had no help of any kind (J. L. Kugel, Instances, pp. 160-162).

350 G. B. Hinckley et al., Proclamation.

351 B. T. Arnold, Genesis, p. 35.

352 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 13. See also Commentary 2:26-b, p. 112, 3:23-c, p. 183.

353 B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, p. 42.

354 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 13.

355 Ibid., p. 13.

356 Moses 4:22.

357 Moses 5:31-32, 47; 6:15; 8:18.

358 Moses 8:4, 30.

359 Genesis 11:1-9.

360 L. Turner, Announcements, p. 49.

361 R. R. Keller, Teaching, p. 103. Cf. D. H. Oaks, Plan, p. 73; 2 Nephi 2:23.

28 And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them: Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

29 And I, God, said unto man: Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree in the which shall be the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat.

- b subdue it, and have dominion... over every living thing. The commandment to “subdue” the earth conveys the idea of settlement and agriculture, as described in Moses 3:5, 15.³⁶²

In light of subsequent events in Genesis, Turner concludes: “Although humans increasingly dominate the animal creation and eventually rule despotically (an intensification of the original command), there is an ironic sense in which animals, through the serpent, exercise an ongoing dominion over the humans (a reversal of the original command)... Also, the earth becomes increasingly difficult to dominate. It overwhelms most of humanity in the Flood, and all of humanity in death.”³⁶³

- 29 a herb bearing seed... fruit of a tree. In the Garden of Eden, man is to eat fruits from the trees and grain sown by seed, whereas the wild green grasses of the field are given for the food of animals.³⁶⁴

- b to you it shall be for meat. For modern English speakers, the term “meat” would be better translated as “food.” Vegetarianism is given as the rule in the Garden of Eden; man’s use of animals for food will not be explicitly sanctioned until after the Flood.³⁶⁵ Isaiah’s vision of the earth in its paradisiacal glory during the Millennium appears to foresee carnivores and omnivores again becoming herbivorous.³⁶⁶

Stephens et al. summarize the kinds of questions that verses 29-30 pose for science:

If all animals ate plants, the anatomy and physiology of some animals must have changed drastically afterwards. For example, a lion’s intestinal tract is only about ten feet long and is well-suited for digesting and absorbing the high-protein nutrients of meat. By contrast, a cow’s intestinal tract is nearly sixty feet long and is well-suited for the long, slow process of fermenting and digesting the relatively low levels of nutrients in grasses and hay. A lion fed only grass and hay will soon die of starvation.³⁶⁷

That man himself is to some degree responsible for the enmity between humankind and wild beasts is evidenced by a statement from Joseph Smith: “Men must become harmless before the brute creation, and when men lose their vicious dispositions and cease to destroy the animal race, the lion and the lamb can dwell together, and the sucking child can play with the serpent in safety.”³⁶⁸ 2 Enoch teaches that men will be held accountable for their treatment of animals in this life, asserting that “the Lord will not judge a single animal soul for the sake of man but human souls he will judge for the sake of the souls of their animals” and that at the time of the “great judgment... every kind of animal soul will accuse the human beings who have fed them badly.”³⁶⁹

362 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 140; cf. D&C 26:1. On dominion, see Commentary 2:26-d, p. 114.

363 L. Turner, Announcements, pp. 48-49.

364 Moses 2:30. See Commentary 3:5-a, p. 154 and 4:24-b, p. 271.

365 JST Genesis 9:10-11.

366 Isaiah 11:7; 65:25. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 13-14.

367 T. D. Stephens et al., Evolution, p. 173. See the overview of Moses 3, pp. 139-144 for a discussion of different perspectives that bear on this issue.

368 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 26 May 1834, p. 71.

369 F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch 58:4, 6, p. 184.

30 And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein I grant life, there shall be given every clean herb for meat; and it was so, even as I spake.

31 And I, God, saw everything that I had made, and, behold, all things which I had made were very good; and the evening and the morning were the sixth day.

30 a clean herb. In Genesis and Abraham, the term “green herb” is used. The term “clean” in the Old Testament sense meant what was allowed or permitted by God’s law.³⁷⁰ Salisbury creatively interprets this change as perhaps allowing for the eating of non-green edible things (e.g., mushrooms) as well as the avoidance of green plants that are “poisonous or otherwise unsuited for certain animals.”³⁷¹

31 a all things... were very good. Unlike other living things, God did not pronounce mankind good at the time of its creation. Now that man and woman are both created and blessed, God can pronounce the entirety of His Creation very good—meaning beautiful, appropriate, and “that the all or the whole was now complete, lacking in nothing.”³⁷² Mankind is not yet in itself good in the moral sense—being free to choose, it “remains to be seen whether man will become good, whether he will be able to complete himself (or to be completed).”³⁷³ “Always keep in view,” said Brigham Young, “that the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms—the earth and its fulness—will all, except the children of man, abide their creation—the law by which they were made, and will receive their exaltation.”³⁷⁴

Soon after the Fall, Satan exercised dominion over “his” kingdom³⁷⁵ and “the wickedness of men [became] great in the earth.”³⁷⁶ Indeed, as Hendel observes, the story of the Flood eventually inverted the perception of God in Moses 2:31 with the statement that: “God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt.”³⁷⁷ By way of contrast, the stories of Adam, Enoch, Noah, and others of the righteous throughout in Genesis also establish a pattern of hope, showing that God does not forget the obedient but rather sends them messengers who teach them the gospel and give them additional instructions pertinent to their situation.³⁷⁸ “As many commentators have noted, the process begun with the Creation in [Moses 2] concludes only with God’s covenant with Moses and Israel at Sinai, and in particular with the last action at Sinai: the completion of the Tabernacle in Exodus 40, when Yahweh’s divine presence (His kabod) enters the Tabernacle to dwell among the Israelites.”³⁷⁹

370 E.g., Genesis 7:2.

371 F. B. Salisbury, Creation, p. 73. See Commentary 2:29-a, p. 117.

372 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 37; cf. C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 166-167; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, pp. 78-79, 103.

373 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 39.

374 B. Young, 30 September 1860, p. 191; cf. H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 11. See also Commentary 2:10-b, p. 105.

375 Moses 6:15.

376 Moses 8:22.

377 Moses 8:29. See R. S. Hendel, Poetics of Myth, pp. 162-163.

378 Moses 5:4-8; Alma 12:28-35.

379 R. S. Hendel, Poetics of Myth, p. 163.

Gleanings

Table of Contents

Steven Marx: Eternity Unfolding into Time	119
Terryl L. Givens: All We Have is Historical Time	119
Hugh W. Nibley: The Creation as an Open-Ended and Ongoing Process	119
Hugh W. Nibley: The Organization of the Universe	119
Hugh W. Nibley: The Focus of the Creation Story	120
Times and Seasons: Each Creature to Fulfill the Measure of Its Creation	120
Albert Schweitzer: "Father, Bless All Things That Have Breath"	121
Hugh W. Nibley: All Nature Becomes an Enemy to Fallen Man	121
David Noel Freedman: God, Man, and Gender in the Hebrew Bible	122
David Noel Freedman: The Basic Likeness Is in Physical Appearance	123
Leon R. Kass: The Most Godlike and Most Questionable of Creatures	124
Gregory of Nyssa: We Acquire the Likeness By Free Will	124
Diadochus of Photice: The False Glitter of This Life	124

Steven Marx: *Eternity Unfolding into Time*³⁸⁰

In the Bible's last book, where chronicle dissolves into vision, time folds up into eternity. In the Bible's first book, eternity unfolds into time as its stories progress from the opening demarcation of day and night to the Creation...

Terryl L. Givens: *All We Have is Historical Time*³⁸¹

[Wrote] the religious scholar Wilfred Cantwell Smith, "With the relatively recent rise in Western consciousness... of the new sense of history... and the (consequent?) careful and rigorous distinction between history and myth... what happened by and large was that the West opted for history and rejected myth." Regarding a scriptural event like the earth's creation, for example, he writes, "We may recognize now that the problem... [is] the notion that one is dealing here with historical time, rather than mythical time." But with Joseph [Smith], all we have is historical time—but it is transformed into a dimension that extends infinitely in both directions.

Hugh W. Nibley: *The Creation as an Open-Ended and Ongoing Process*³⁸²

The Creation process as described in the Pearl of Great Price is open ended and ongoing, entailing careful planning based on vast experience, long consultations, models, tests, and even trial runs for a complicated system requiring a vast scale of participation by the creatures concerned. The whole operation is dominated by the overriding principle of love.

Hugh W. Nibley: *The Organization of the Universe*³⁸³

"And the Gods organized the lights in the expanse of the heaven"³⁸⁴... The key word is "organized." That means everything arranged from subatomic particles to molecules, to 380 S. Marx, Shakespeare, p. 21.

381 T. L. Givens, Joseph Smith, p. 61.

382 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 69.

383 H. W. Nibley, Drama, pp. 31-32.

384 Abraham 4:14.

organizing the family, an army, a church, or a galaxy. Here we see the mazy motion of the dancers' chorus and semichorus, as they divide the day from the night and organize themselves into groups to take position, "To be for signs and for seasons, and for days and for years."³⁸⁵ Again it says not "to be signs," but to be for signs, and for days, and for seasons and for years; they are taking their places for the benefit of man. "And the Gods organized the two great lights, the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; with the lesser light they set the stars also; And the Gods set them in the expanse of the heavens, to give light upon the earth, and to rule over the day and over the night, and to cause to divide the light from the darkness."³⁸⁶ Is all that repetition necessary? This is not a laborious tale for the simpleminded, but the unfolding of a splendid pageant, the Dance of Life, the ever-popular torch dance.

Not long ago we used to laugh our heads off at the idea that God created the stars and their motions for the benefit of puny man. Today the shoe is on the other foot. Now we are asked to believe how the unimaginable raging forces of the universe, completely uncontrolled and undirected, should zero in on this little planet with nothing but the most benevolent results, adjusting a score of fine-tuned constants to each other with unerring accuracy in defiance of entropy. Not long ago it was believed that such a coincidence was so rare that it could have happened only once in the universe, that is, that this could be the only possible habitable world. But today it seems that the main concern of astronomers is life on other worlds.

Hugh W. Nibley: The Focus of the Creation Story³⁸⁷

Human history is not primarily concerned with the creatures of other ages or of other planets; its proper beginning is placed at that momentous period of transition between the Cretaceous and the Tertiary when the first angiosperms appeared as grass, flowers, shrubs, and trees, supplying sustenance for the elephant, the lion, and other large mammals. The mammoths were the first to appear of those herds of grazing animals, the herd which emerged as soon as the grass was provided—a very sudden event in the course of nature, "an explosion," Loren Eiseley calls it. They supplied a livelihood for the predators—the lion, the tiger, and the bear, which preyed upon the herd. All these were in preparation for man.

Times and Seasons: Each Creature to Fulfill the Measure of Its Creation*³⁸⁸

The world was not made to be annihilated nor the creatures that He has formed; all of them were intended to fulfill the measure of His Creation. The sun, the moon, the stars, the earth, man, beast, bird and fish, all occupy their several spheres, all were made for the glory of God, and all were intended to fill up the measure of their creation, and to bring about His purposes and the beast of the forest, the fish of the sea, or the fowl of the air, all are necessary in the vast works of creation and the chirping sparrow upon the house top fulfills the measure of his creation, in his own sphere, as much as an archangel does in his.... It is true that they move in different spheres and occupy a different glory; but although we cannot now see these various connecting links, the time will come, when we shall hear "every creature in heaven, every creature on the earth, and every creature under the earth, say blessing, and glory, and honour, and might, and majesty, and dominion, be ascribed unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever."³⁸⁹

³⁸⁵ Ibid.

³⁸⁶ Abraham 4:16–17.

³⁸⁷ H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 73. See also H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 546–547.

³⁸⁸ The Gathering, p. 408.

³⁸⁹ See Revelation 5:13.

Albert Schweitzer: “Father, Bless All Things That Have Breath”³⁹⁰

As far back as I can remember I was saddened by the amount of misery I saw in the world around me...

One thing that specially saddened me was that the unfortunate animals had to suffer so much pain and misery. The sight of an old limping horse, tugged forward by one man while another kept beating it with a stick to get it to the knacker’s yard at Colmar, haunted me for weeks.

It was quite incomprehensible to me—this was before I began going to school—why in my evening prayers I should pray for human beings only. So when my mother had prayed with me and had kissed me goodnight, I used to add silently a prayer that I had composed myself for all living creatures. It ran thus: “O, heavenly Father, protect and bless all things that have breath; guard them from all evil, and let them sleep in peace.”...

From experiences like these, which moved my heart and often made me feel ashamed, there slowly grew up in me an unshakable conviction that we have no right to inflict suffering and death on another living creature unless there is some unavoidable necessity for it, and that we ought all of us to feel what a horrible thing it is to cause suffering and death out of mere thoughtlessness. And this conviction has influenced me only more and more strongly with time. I have grown more and more certain that at the bottom of our heart we all think this, and that we fail to acknowledge it and to carry our belief into practice chiefly because we are afraid of being laughed at by other people as sentimentalists, though partly also because we allow our best feelings to get blunted. But I vowed that I would never let my feelings get blunted, and that I would never be afraid of the reproach of sentimentalism.

Hugh W. Nibley: All Nature Becomes an Enemy to Fallen Man³⁹¹

One of the best-known teachings of the Jews is that when man (Israel in particular) falls away from God, all nature becomes his enemy.³⁹² Modern revelation confirms this: when all the people became wicked in Enoch’s day, “the earth trembled, and the mountains fled... and the rivers of water were turned out of their course; and the roar of lions was heard out of the wilderness.”³⁹³ Just so, in the last days “all the growing things will be blighted by the... great lawlessness, and plagues will come over all creatures of all the earth.”³⁹⁴ Where people refuse the gospel, according to Brigham Young, “that land will eventually... become desolate, forlorn, and forsaken”³⁹⁵ as nature refuses her bounties.

The explanation of this all-out hostility is simple. “The animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms abide the law of their Creator; the whole earth and all things pertaining to it, except man, abide the law of their creation,” while “man, who is the offspring of the Gods, will not become subject to the most sensible and self-exalting principles.”³⁹⁶ With all things going in one direction, men, stubbornly going in the opposite direction, naturally find 390 A. Schweitzer, Light, pp. 11-13.

391 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, pp. 16-17.

392 See, e.g., G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 37(10):3-38(11):1, pp. 42E-43E; 44(24):4, p. 66E.

393 Moses 7:13.

394 See R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, 29:14-15, p. 704.

395 B. Young, 28 June 1873, p. 69.

396 B. Young, 23 March 1862, p. 246.

themselves in the position of one going the wrong way on the freeway during rush hour; the struggle to live becomes a fight against nature. Having made himself allergic to almost everything by the Fall, man is given the choice of changing his nature so that the animal and vegetable creation will cease to afflict and torment him,³⁹⁷ or else of waging a truceless war of extermination against all that annoys him until he renders the earth completely uninhabitable.

David Noel Freedman: God, Man, and Gender in the Hebrew Bible³⁹⁸

Even if we cannot entirely probe the mind of P,³⁹⁹ the presumed author of [Moses 2:26-28], we can speak with less hesitation about the editor R (for Redactor) who consciously and deliberately associated these passages as part of a larger corpus and a more detailed picture of the Godhead.

God is speaking to others⁴⁰⁰ when he says, “Let us make man (ʾadam) in our image, according to our likeness.” God will do the making, as is confirmed in verse 27... Humans of both genders are created in the image of God, but that is an image that he already has shared with others, chiefly the bene ʾelohim,⁴⁰¹ who constitute his associates in the heavenly realm. These are presumably the same ones who are addressed in [Moses 4:28], and who share with God in the knowledge of good and evil, and also in eternal life.

Another very important distinction emerges from our text. Speaking generically, God creates humanity (ʾadam) in his image, but humanity includes both male and female. The specific human being actually created first is “the man” (haʾadam), that is, “male,” and shares that maleness with God, in the latter’s image. While it is often said that the God of the Bible is beyond gender, and that may be true in philosophical or theological terms and categories of thought, that is hardly the case with either biblical language or biblical thinking. In the Hebrew Scriptures, he is always clearly male, even patriarchal. Occasionally, he is described as having qualities and emotions associated with women, especially mothers in childbirth or those bereaved, but these are poetic and metaphoric descriptions which are also applied to human males and do not affect their basic and essential masculinity. As can be shown in numerous ways, the God of the Hebrew Bible is undeniably male and masculine. And so is the first human: haʾadam.

It has also been suggested that the God of the Bible is androgynous, having both male and female characteristics, and that the same was the case with the first human being. Later the first man and the first woman were created by dividing the first androgyne into male and female counterparts, which is, to say the least, a very curious and forced reading of the story in [Moses 3]. While the idea continues to have appeal in certain quarters and may find some echoes and evidence in the myths and traditions of various peoples, the Bible shows little awareness of any such possibility, and on any reasonable reading of the Genesis texts such a conclusion cannot be reached or sustained. There is nothing androgynous about the God of the Bible or about the first man.

397 B. Young, 6 April 1852, p. 203.

398 D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 22-25.

399 = the hypothesized Priestly-source behind many portions of the Genesis text.

400 I.e., an assembly of heavenly beings.

401 Hebrew “sons of God.”

What about the first woman? I think the clause “male and female he created them” is to be correlated literally with the phrase “in our image, after our likeness.” Just as the male God is the model and image for the first man, so some divine or heavenly female figure serves as the model and likeness for the human female, the first woman. We know that goddesses figured notably in the religion of historic Israel and Judah, although ultimately they were banished from the official cult. We have convincing if not conclusive evidence for the association of specific goddesses with different shrines and cult centers in Israel and Judah during the monarchic period, and we can identify them as consorts of Yahweh...

If it is objected that by the time that P wrote [Moses 2], the goddesses had been put away and banished from the official religion, which I doubt, then it would still not be difficult to find a divine or heavenly female model or image for female humanity. Such a figure is to be located in a perfectly orthodox biblical context, usually dated in the early post-exilic period, but having roots in the same mythology from which the stories of Creation have their origin. Consider the remarkable passage in Proverbs 8:22-31 in which the status and role of Lady Wisdom (in Hebrew hokmah) are described... According to this and other passages, Lady Wisdom was begotten or created before the general Creation, and in fact served Yahweh as co-worker or agent in the process of creation. Further, she was his close and intimate companion in the heavenly home...

[I]t is quite legitimate to imagine the conversation recorded in [Moses 2:26-28]... as being addressed to a person like Lady Wisdom: “Let us make humanity in our image, according to our likeness...” The man was made in the image of the male God Yahweh, and the woman after the likeness of the female companion of God, Lady Wisdom (hokmah).⁴⁰²

David Noel Freedman: The Basic Likeness Is in Physical Appearance⁴⁰³

[W]e note that humanity occupies a unique status in contrast with all of the other created beings on the earth: being made in the image and according to the likeness of God. The basic likeness is in physical appearance, as study of the etymology and usage of both terms shows: selem [= image] and demut [= likeness]. These terms are used in cognate languages of statues representing gods and humans in contemporary inscriptions, and certainly the intention is to say that God and man share a common physical appearance. If or when God makes himself visible to human beings, they will recognize their own features, and vice versa. The image is the same, and the basic features are comparable. While God is not human and humans are not divine, they share a common appearance, or physique. Whenever God is described in the Hebrew Bible, he has features that human beings also have.⁴⁰⁴ The correspondence is by no means limited to body parts, but extends to the whole makeup of God and humans, including mind and spirit, thoughts and words. We must not press the resemblances too far, as there are constant admonitions that God is different in profound respects,⁴⁰⁵ but these would hardly be necessary if not for the basic similarities. Only human beings, of all earthly creatures, share image and likeness with the Deity.

402 In contrast to Freedman's view, note that God the Father is specifically said to be speaking to His Only Begotten in Moses 2:26.

403 D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 16-17. See Endnote 2-28, p. 130.

404 Cf. Ezekiel 1:26-28.

405 Cf. Isaiah 55:6-11.

Leon R. Kass: The Most Godlike and Most Questionable of Creatures⁴⁰⁶

The Hebrew word translated “image” is tselem, from a root meaning “to cut off,” “to chisel”; tselem, something cut or chiseled out—in the first instance, a statue—becomes, derivatively, any image or likeness or resemblance. Any image, insofar as it is an image, has a most peculiar manner of being: it both is and is not what it resembles. The image of my granddaughter that smiles at me out of the picture frame on my desk is my granddaughter—not yours. But it is not really she—just a mere image. Although being merely a likeness, an image not only resembles but also points to, and is dependent for its very being on, that of which it is an image. Man, like any other creature, is simply what he is. But according to the text, he is—in addition—also something more insofar as he resembles the divine.... But the text does not exaggerate our standing. Man may be, of all the creatures, the most intelligent, resourceful, conscious, and free—and in these respects the most godlike—but he is also the most questionable. In fact, Genesis 1, read with an eye for the fine print, provides this teaching as well. Man may have powers that resemble divinity, but he is also at most merely an image; man, who quite on his own is prone to think of himself as a god on earth and to lord it over the animals, is reminded by the biblical text that he is, like the other creatures, not divine. Though brought into being by a special creative act, man appears on the same day as the terrestrial animals; though in some respects godlike, man belongs emphatically to the world of animals, whose protective ruler he is told to be. As the later verses about food remind us, we are, like the animals, needy and vulnerable. Man is the ambiguous being, in between, more than an animal, less than a god.⁴⁰⁷ This fact—and it is a fact—makes man a problem, as the Bible, even in this celebratory chapter, subtly teaches.

Gregory of Nyssa: We Acquire the Likeness By Free Will⁴⁰⁸

“Let us make man in our image, after our likeness.”⁴⁰⁹ We possess the one by creation; we acquire the other by free will. In the first structure it is given us to be born in the image of God; by free will there is formed in us the being in the likeness of God.... “Let us make man in our image”: Let him possess by creation what is in the image, but let him also become according to the likeness. God has given the power for this. If he had created you also in the likeness, where would your privilege be? Why have you been crowned? And if the Creator had given you everything, how would the kingdom of heaven have opened for you? But it is proper that one part is given you, while the other has been left incomplete: this is so that you might complete it yourself and might be worthy of the reward which comes from God.

Diadochus of Photice: The False Glitter of This Life⁴¹⁰

All men are made in God’s image; but to be in his likeness is granted only to those who through great love have brought their own freedom into subjection to God. For only when we do not belong to ourselves do we become like him who through love has reconciled us to himself. No one achieves this unless he persuades his soul not to be distracted by the false glitter of this life.

406 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, pp. 37-39.

407 See Psalm 8:5.

408 Gregory of Nyssa, On the Origin of Man, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 33.

409 Moses 2:26.

410 Diadochus of Photice, On Spiritual Perfection 4, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 30.

Endnotes

- 2-1 See K. Muhlestein, Flow, pp. 43-44 for a discussion of the dating of Moses 2-5:43 in conjunction with the conference of the Church.

The transcription of Moses 1-5:43 was to be Oliver Cowdery's only direct contribution to the development of the JST manuscript. In August, he went to live with the Whitmers in Fayette, New York. A few weeks later, with Emma's father Isaac Hale now convinced that Joseph was an imposter and with persecution in the area mounting, the Smiths also moved into the Whitmer home. Shortly after moving in with the Whitmers, Oliver wrote a letter criticizing in strong terms the wording of one of the revelations⁴¹¹ and, a little while later, also joined the Whitmer family in giving credence to the purported revelations of Hiram Page. After reconciliation with Joseph, Cowdery was instructed to leave on a mission to Ohio and Missouri at the September 26-27 conference.⁴¹² The work of transcribing and copying the translation then fell exclusively to John Whitmer, Emma Smith, and Sidney Rigdon.

- 2-2 With respect to "certain generalizations shared by Roman, Orthodox, and Protestant Christians," Flake notes two major differences with LDS doctrine: "(1) the world was created from nothing and constituted an expression of God's absolute goodness; hence, (2) humans, as created beings, are ontologically unrelated to God and brought evil into being by their action.... In Smith's redaction of Genesis, people—as uncreated children of God—come first, and the world later."⁴¹³ Flake observes that in LDS thought "God's goodness and sovereignty is measured by the power to redeem human agents in extremis, not the power to create them ex nihilo."⁴¹⁴
- 2-3 In fact, in a few instances Joseph Smith specifically stated that terms used in Abraham, but not in Moses, were better translations.⁴¹⁵ However, it should be remembered that the Prophet's understanding of scripture came by inspiration as well as study. For this reason, Shirts rightly observes that we should be cautious not to overestimate the degree to which his limited instruction in Hebrew may have influenced specific word choices in the book of Abraham.⁴¹⁶
- 2-4 Not only did the Prophet render Elohim as the singular "God" throughout the book of Moses, he also modified the KJV version of Exodus 22:18 to read "God" instead of "gods."⁴¹⁷
- 2-5 Note that Kolob "is not the center of the universe but governs only one class of stars."⁴¹⁸
- 2-6 See Brems⁴¹⁹ and Draper et al.⁴²⁰ for LDS attempts to map the biblical days of Creation to current scientific understanding of periods of geological and biological development. See also Excursus 5: Science and Mormonism, p. 526.
- 2-7 See also Salisbury and Stokes.⁴²¹ Among the most puzzling aspects of Moses' Creation account to moderns is that light and plants appear in the story before the creation of the sun, moon, and stars. One partial response is to note the obvious contrast between this account and the Babylonian recital that portrays these bodies as gods rather than creations—the delayed appearance of heavenly bodies in Genesis emphasizes their demotion in importance. And once the sun, moon, and stars finally make their appearance, the point is made clearly that they are mere luminaries—set in their places to mark the days and seasons as they shine on the earth—while the more significant light of God is that which appeared on the first day "to fill the immensity of space."⁴²² It is also possible, as discussed in the overview of Moses 3, pp. 146-148, that "the apparently temporal order could be an image for the ontological order; the temporal sequence of comings into being could be a vivid literary vehicle for conveying the intelligible and hierarchic order of the beings that have come to be and are."⁴²³ The 411 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, August 1830, 1:104-105.

412 R. L. Anderson, Ohio, pp. 195-198; S. R. Gunn, Cowdery, pp. 71-77; P. R. Legg, Cowdery, pp. 49-53; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, August, 26-27 September 1830, 1:109-111.

413 K. Flake, Translating Time, pp. 510, 511-512.

414 Ibid., p. 514.

415 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 January 1841, p. 181; 17 May 1843, p. 301.

416 K. A. Shirts, Hebrew.

417 L. C. Zucker, Hebrew, p. 51.

418 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 67.

419 D. N. Brems, Divine Engineering, p. 93.

420 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, pp. 194-195, 197-198, 201-202, 205, 207-208, 210, 216-217.

421 F. B. Salisbury, Creation, p. 106; W. L. Stokes, Creation Scriptures, pp. 129-130.

422 D&C 88:12.

423 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, pp. 30-31.

thrust of Moses' account in particular seems intended to establish a parallel between the process of Creation and the building of the Israelite temple, a likeness that may have motivated some of the differences in presentation and in the order of events between Moses' account of Creation and the one given in modern temples.⁴²⁴ This is one of many examples of the unique perspective that Genesis offers on the story of beginnings.

- 2-8 If the past portends the future, the fundamental properties of the universe will eventually turn out to be even stranger than we now imagine. Quantum mechanics has already shown us how spectacularly wrong our common-sense intuitions about the properties of particles have been. As the eminent physicist Richard Feynman said: "I think I can safely say that nobody understands quantum mechanics... Do not keep saying to yourself, if you can possibly avoid it, 'But how can it be like that?' because you will get 'down the drain,' into a blind alley from which nobody has yet escaped. Nobody knows how it can be like that."⁴²⁵

- 2-9 On the importance of perspective in scriptural interpretation, Nibley wrote:

The Latter-day Saints have four basic [Creation] stories, those found in the Bible, the book of Moses, the book of Abraham, and the temple—each seen from a different angle, like the four Gospels, but not conflicting if each is put into its proper context. And what is that context? One vitally important principle that everyone seems to have ignored until now is the consideration that everything is presented to us in these accounts through the eyes or from the point of view of the individual observers who tell the story. Historians long ago came to realize that the boast of German Geschichtswissenschaft—to report what happened at all times "wie es eigentlich geschah," the whole truth, the complete event in holistic perfection as it would be seen by God—is a philosopher's pipe dream.... The rainbow, like the sunrise, is strictly the product of a point of view, for which the beholder must stand in a particular place while it is raining in another particular place and the sun is in a third particular place, if he is to see it at all. It is a lesson in relativity....⁴²⁶

- 2-10 For example, it is possible that some or all of the detailed description of the Garden of Eden found in the book of Moses may have been left out of the book of Abraham because it was a later interpolation.⁴²⁷

- 2-11 For example, each of the four New Testament gospels seems to have been composed to appeal to different audiences.⁴²⁸ Since no single account or rendering of a complex scriptural event or concept will suit every situation, the translator or compositor must determine pragmatically, as Joseph Smith expressed it, whether a particular version "is sufficiently plain to suit [the] purpose as it stands."⁴²⁹ The same principle applies to temple architecture. Though all temples have the same basic layout and function, each may have "a slightly different design, because it performs a different purpose."⁴³⁰

With respect to the careful selection and shaping of the Nativity account, Barker comments:

A basic story was told but not with the mundane detail that modern writers might choose to include. There was no mention of, for example, nappies or whatever was used at the time, although the infant Jesus doubtless needed them. But there was mention of the manger, and so we ask, Why was that detail included? Those elements in the story that could be linked to prophecy, and illuminated by it, were naturally the most emphasized. This is not to say that the story of Jesus' life was simply compiled from prophecies, as some have suggested. Rather, the incidents seen to be significant were emphasized, and the material of interest to modern biographers was not.⁴³¹

- 2-12 The Hebrew term bara' may have as a primary meaning the idea of separation or cutting.⁴³² "God masterfully divides the cosmos by a series of 'cuts' and differentiates its components into 'kinds.'"⁴³³

- 2-13 The "magnificent torso" of God also imitates the central figure of the Greek masterpiece Laocöon,

424 See the overview of Moses 3, p. 146.

425 R. Feynman, Law, p. 123.

426 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, pp. 64, 66.

427 See Commentary 3:10-a, p. 170.

428 B. R. McConkie, NT Commentary, 1:65.

429 D&C 128:18.

430 H. W. Nibley, Meaning of Temple, p. 35. See Excursus 16: The Role of Revelation in Temple Building, p. 561.

431 M. Barker, Christmas, p. 18.

432 F. Brown et al., Lexicon, p. 155; C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 99.

433 B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, p. 37.

discovered just two years prior to the start of the Sistine Chapel project.⁴³⁴

- 2-14 Michelangelo was not only steeped in Christian theology, but also seems to have been very familiar with the texts of Jewish Midrash and medieval mysticism.⁴³⁵
- 2-15 In fact, upon reflection one might easily conclude that “there is a kind of ‘proto-fall’ implicit in the principle of divisiveness that characterizes the Bible’s view of the Creation.”⁴³⁶ The process of division and separation began even before the Creation, when those who kept their first estate were separated from those who did not.⁴³⁷ The theme continues as the focus of the narrative moves from the actions of God to those of Adam and Eve. Exercising the agency that has been granted them, they partake of the forbidden fruit, and are cast out of the Garden, experiencing an immediate separation from the presence of God, and eventually a separation of body and spirit at death. Jewish kabbalists taught that the:

... Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge were bound together in perfect harmony until Adam came and separated them, thereby giving substance to evil, which had been contained within the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil and was now materialized in the evil instinct (yezer ha-ra). It was Adam therefore who activated the potential evil concealed within the Tree of Knowledge by separating the two trees and also by separating the Tree of Knowledge from its fruit, which was now detached from its source. The event is called metaphorically ‘the cutting of the shoots’ (kiz-zuz ha-netivot) and is the archetype of all the great sins mentioned in the Bible, whose common denominator was the introduction of division into the divine unity. The essence of Adam’s sin was that it introduced ‘separation above and below’ into what should have been united, a separation of which every sin is fundamentally a repetition—apart, that is, from sins involving magic and sorcery, which according to the kabbalists joins together what should have remained separate. In actual fact, this view, too, tends to stress the separation of the power of judgment contained within the Tree of Knowledge from the power of lovingkindness contained within the Tree of Life. The latter pours out its influx unstintingly, while the former is a restrictive force with a tendency to become autonomous.⁴³⁸

One way of interpreting the stories of Enoch, Noah, the Tower of Babel, and Abraham and his posterity is as a continuation of the theme of separation. Moreover, as Lieber observes: “Throughout the Torah, we find this emphasis on distinction and separation: sacred and ordinary time, permitted and forbidden foods, ritually pure and impure persons, no mixing of diverse seeds or cross-breeding animal species.”⁴³⁹

- 2-16 “The Midrash⁴⁴⁰ pictures the lower waters weeping at being separated from the upper waters, suggesting that there is something poignant in the creative process when things once united are separated.”⁴⁴¹
- 2-17 Drawing on a long philosophical tradition beginning with Plato, the idea of distinction as a foundational concept in perception and reality was taken up in a diversity of ways by mathematics and psychology in the twentieth century. Three examples will be mentioned here:
1. Personal construct theory originated in the 1950’s from the research of George Kelly, a clinical psychologist who emphasized the psychological role of certain sorts of distinctions (constructs) underlying the processes of perception and reasoning.⁴⁴² Anticipating later versions of constructivism, Kelly held that “reality” does not reveal itself to us directly, but rather is subject to as many different constructions as we are able to invent.⁴⁴³
 2. The concept of distinction is also fundamental to an understanding of the classical formulation of information theory.⁴⁴⁴ Our subjective experiences of uncertainty and astonishment with respect

434 B. Blech et al., Secrets, p. 193; cf. pp. 110-112.

435 Ibid., pp. 46-73.

436 K. Burke, Governance, p. 16.

437 Abraham 3:26-28.

438 G. Scholem, Kabbalah, p. 124.

439 D. L. Lieber, Etz Hayim, p. 5.

440 See J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 5:4, p. 48.

441 D. L. Lieber, Etz Hayim, p. 5; cf. H. N. Bialik et al., Legends, 26 and note 5, p. 10; B. Blech et al., Secrets, p. 193; A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 124-126; A. G. Zornberg, Genesis, p. 5. See also Moses 7:28.

442 G. A. Kelly, Personal Constructs; G. A. Kelly, Mathematical; G. A. Kelly, Introduction.

443 N. M. Agnew et al., Construing reality; N. M. Agnew et al., Fallible but functional.

444 C. E. Shannon et al., Communication.

to events in the world (essentially amounting to prospective and retrospective ignorance) can be formulated quantitatively in three related concepts: probability, information, and surprise. These concepts can be most easily understood in terms of a fourth concept, entropy, a term borrowed from thermodynamics. In a physical system, entropy can be interpreted as uncertainty about which quantum state a system is in. In an information theoretic context, entropy can be defined as the uncertainty of an event, the average amount of information yielded by an event, or the average surprise evoked by that event. Entropy is a measure of disorder; hence information (negentropy) is a measure of order or of organization, since the latter, compared to distribution at random, is an improbable state. Entropy is maximized when all outcomes for an event are equally probable (e.g., for a ‘fair’ coin, $p(\text{head}) = p(\text{tail}) = .5$). Useful distinctions “create” information (or in other words, they reduce entropy) in that they provide a way of grouping events into categories of unequal probability.

3. Another well-known example comes from the work of G. Spencer Brown, a brilliant and controversial philosopher and mathematician who introduced an elegant idiosyncratic calculus based on the idea that “a universe comes into being when a space is severed or taken apart. The skin of a living organism cuts off an outside from an inside. So does the circumference of a circle in a plane. By tracing the way we represent such a severance, we can begin to reconstruct, with an accuracy and coverage that appear almost uncanny, the basic forms underlying linguistic, mathematical, physical, and biological science, and can begin to see how the familiar laws of our own experience follow inexorably from the original act of severance. The act is itself already remembered, even if unconsciously, as our first attempt to distinguish different things in a world where, in the first place, the boundaries can be drawn anywhere we please.”⁴⁴⁵

- 2-18 Genesis Rabbah constructs an argument from the order of creation to justify the conclusion that: “Whatever is created in sequence after its fellow rules over its fellow.”⁴⁴⁶

Gregory of Nyssa commented that “nature makes an ascent as it were by steps... from the lower to the perfect form.”⁴⁴⁷ Elsewhere he writes that “the Deity proceeds by a sort of graduated and ordered advance to the creation of man.”⁴⁴⁸

- 2-19 Hirsch comments: “Unlike man, the material for woman’s body was not taken from the earth. God built one side of man into woman—so that the single human being now became two. Thereby, the complete equality of man and woman was irrefutably demonstrated.”⁴⁴⁹ The Jewish sages recognized “that man is incomplete without woman, as much as woman without man.”⁴⁵⁰ “In this sense,” concludes Neusner, “they see the two as complementary and essential, so they do not maintain that one gender takes priority over another.”⁴⁵¹

In the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan, Satan appears as an angel of light and falsely asserts that Adam was created out of his side.⁴⁵²

- 2-20 Matthew Henry saw woman as the crown of all Creation: “Yet man being made last of the creatures, as the best and most excellent of all, Eve’s being made after Adam, and out of him, puts an honor upon that sex, as the glory of the man.”⁴⁵³ If man is the head, she is the crown, a crown to her husband, the crown of the visible creation. The man was dust refined, but the woman was dust double-refined, one remove further from the earth.”⁴⁵⁴ The First Presidency of Heber J. Grant, J. Reuben Clark, and David O. McKay likewise expressed a related sentiment: “The true spirit of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints gives to woman the highest place of honor in human life.”⁴⁵⁵

- 2-21 Blech and Doliner comment:

In 1975, a Jewish surgeon, Dr. Frank Mershberger became fascinated with the “distinct shape of the cape and the dangling scrap of cloth. He mentally found himself picturing the diagrams he had 445 G. S. Brown, Laws, p. xxix.

446 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 19:4, p. 202.

447 Gregory of Nyssa, On the Creation of Man 8:7, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 28.

448 Gregory of Nyssa, On the Soul and the Resurrection, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, pp. 28-29.

449 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 1:108-109.

450 Cf. 1 Corinthians 11:11.

451 J. Neusner, Confronting, p. 74. See Commentary 2:27-a, p. 115 and 3:22-a, p. 181.

452 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:60, p. 68.

453 1 Corinthians 11:7.

454 M. Henry, Commentary, 2:21-25, p. 10; cf. G. B. Hinckley, Teachings 1997, November 1991, p. 695.

455 J. R. Clark, Messages, 6:5.

studied in his Anatomy 101 textbook back in medical school. The cerebrum, the cerebellum, the occipital lobe, the cortex, the brain stem... of course. They were all there. What Michelangelo had hidden in the painting was a perfect cross-section of the human brain. But—why?

Again, he was showing to others “in the know” what he had learned surreptitiously through illegal dissections. The only people who might have recognized the hidden internal organs in the ceiling would have been other seekers of knowledge who had pursued the same forbidden activities...

Michelangelo concealed this forbidden evidence of anatomical studies to convey the concept of creation rooted in wisdom; the ‘brain’ of God, so to speak, is the source of humankind’s appearance on the earth. It is yet another illustration of an idea stressed in the Kabbalah—the brain is the organ mystically linked to the s’firah of Chochmah/Wisdom.⁴⁵⁶ Incredibly, Michelangelo was aware of an even deeper truth, noted long ago in kabbalistic thought: it is not the entire brain that is linked to Chochmah/Wisdom but only its right hemisphere, exactly the part that Michelangelo painted in this panel. The artist found a way to echo visually the ancient Jewish prayer proclaiming that God created Adam with Chochmah, the right side of the divine brain.

Some experts think that the extra interlocking figures surrounding God are the major brain centers and the ganglia (intersections of the ‘highway’ of the nervous system). However, there is also a far more fascinating mystical explanation. According to Talmud, Midrash, and Kabbalah, the drop of semen that impregnates the womb of the woman does not originate in the male reproductive system but comes from within the man’s brain instead.⁴⁵⁷ According to this interpretation, all those figures surrounding the Creator are us, the future descendants of Adam and Eve, waiting to be conceived. That makes all of us direct descendants of God, awaiting birth from his brain—a powerful universalistic concept....

[Moreover, consistent with the Kabbalah’s concept of Mochah Stima’ah, the hidden brain that inspires the creative will in humans, Michelangelo] painted Wisdom/Chochmah in the female guise of Sophia, flanked by the now-classic figure of the white-bearded God representing Yisrael Saba, and the infant representing Yisrael Zuta, all enclosed inside the right hemisphere of the human brain, blessing the Man’s left hand with the talent and the will to create. Seen in this way, hidden inside this world-famous scene is nothing less than a forbidden anatomy lesson, a journey into the depths of Kabbalah, and a secret self-portrait of Michelangelo as Adam—not by way of the artist’s physical appearance but rather of his very soul.”⁴⁵⁸

- 2-22 Blech and Doliner raise the intriguing possibility that the child is “the soul of Adam, about to be transmitted into Adam. Notice that the infant’s body position is imitating that of Adam. It is about to be infused into Adam through Adam’s left hand. According to tradition, the left hand is the one through which we receive blessings and benedictions, since its blood vessels lead directly to the heart. Even today, countless people around the world wear the red string of the matriarch Rachel’s blessing—on their left wrist. Michelangelo knew that his talents, too, were a blessing received from God. Is it only a coincidence that the artist, who depicted Adam receiving his soul from the Creator through his left hand, was also himself left-handed?”⁴⁵⁹
- 2-23 See Freedman for a discussion of the role of the number eight as an additional “symbol of totality and perfection” in the story of the Creation.⁴⁶⁰
- 2-24 Kahne observes that the story of the Garden of Eden is also characterized by frequent use of the number seven: a. The words for man (ish, adam) appear 28 times; b. The woman, 21 times (isha, ezer, tsela); c. Words from the stem akhal (“to eat”), 21 times; d. Words from the stem laqah (“to take”), seven times; e. Qedem (“east”), seven times; f. Eden, seven times; g. In Hebrew, the section on Eden is seven paragraphs long.

Kahne sees the “same preoccupation with the number seven... in the gospel of John. In chapter 1, John begins his gospel by a kind of Genesis where he takes up the theme of creation again: ‘In the beginning was the Word’ [cf. the ‘God said’ of Genesis]... all things were made by him [cf. In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth]... In him was... the light of men [cf. Moses 2:3: ‘Let there be light’].” John 1:1-28 comprises the first day. The second, third, and fourth days are introduced by 456 See, e.g., L. Schaya, Meaning, p. 35; A. Kaplan, Sefer Yetzirah 1:4, pp. 38-40.

457 See, e.g., A. Green, Guide, p. 115; A. Kalan, Bahir 1:155, pp. 56-57.

458 B. Blech et al., Secrets, pp. 199-201.

459 Ibid., p. 199.

460 D. N. Freedman, Humanity, pp. 13-14.

“the next day.”⁴⁶¹ Then, there are three days,⁴⁶² which makes seven days in all. The three days may symbolize the time between his death and resurrection and the marriage of Cana, the marriage of the son of God with mankind.⁴⁶³

- 2-25 It should be noted that, in contrast to current scholarship, the prevailing custom at that time was to divide the three pairs differently as: 1-2, 3-4, 5-6.⁴⁶⁴

The Church Fathers analyzed the Creation in three parts: the work of creation, the work of separation, and the work of adornment.⁴⁶⁵

- 2-26 “In both the linear and parallel structures, the Sabbath day stands in the position of emphasis: it culminates the linear arrangement; and it stands unique and unmatched (and thus highlighted) in the parallel scheme. Its highlighting foreshadows its future importance.”⁴⁶⁶

- 2-27 Currid calls the relationship between the Hebrew creation story and Egyptian cosmogony “striking” in at least three aspects: “(1) the nature and character of the creator-god; (2) the manner in which the creator-god fashioned the universe; and (3) the sequence and constitution of creation.”⁴⁶⁷

Actually, the biblical account has greater affinity with the Egyptian texts than with the Mesopotamian. For the main Mesopotamian creation myth (Enuma Elish) is oriented toward conflict and violence. The universe came into existence because of a battle between the gods; it was a mere consequence of a war aimed at determining who would be the lord of the gods.... There is no conflict, on the other hand, in either the biblical or Memphite cosmology. Creation did not occur as a result of a contest or a struggle. Thus, while much has been written about the Mesopotamian influences upon or parallels with the biblical text, the Egyptian parallels regarding the means of creation are more substantial.⁴⁶⁸

- 2-28 Truman G. Madsen gave the following anecdote regarding Freedman’s views on man’s being in the “image and likeness” of God:

We are close friends with David Noel Freedman... [He] said to me one day, ...“All my life I’ve been looking for a religion that combined... normative Judaism and first-century Christianity... I think I’ve found it.” I said, “Where?” “You.” He has in mind hard textual analysis ...and when it says in Genesis about “image and likeness” he points out, “That means that, as I can say to you, ‘Here is a statue of you. It has been carved in every detail with your likeness and image. The only difference between the statue and you is that you’re alive.’ But when it says ‘image and likeness’ it means exact similitude.”⁴⁶⁹

Born into a Jewish family and later becoming an ordained Presbyterian clergyman, David Noel Freedman “was a legend among Bible scholars. After all, he had managed to graduate from UCLA when he was only 17 and then went on to get a degree in Hebrew Bible from Princeton Theological Seminary and a doctorate from Johns Hopkins University (a colleague reports that he wrote two dissertations, both of which were later published as books). He was a former president of the Society of Biblical Literature and editor in chief of the massive Anchor Bible Project, which consists of dozens of volumes of commentary and explanation.”⁴⁷⁰

William Blake was also a vigorous advocate of the idea of man’s literal resemblance to God, as related by Chesterton:⁴⁷¹

Let the ordinary modern man, who is, generally speaking, not a materialist and not a mystic, read first these two lines from the poem falsely called “The Auguries of Innocence”:

God appears and God is light
To those poor souls that dwell in night.

461 John 1:29, 35, 43.

462 John 2:1.

463 M. Kahne, Symbolique.

464 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 13.

465 E.g., T. Aquinas, Summa, First Part, Question 74, repl. 1.

466 D. A. Dorsey, Structure, p. 49.

467 J. D. Currid, Egypt, pp. 54-55.

468 Ibid., pp. 63-64.

469 T. G. Madsen, Philosophy and Mormonism.

470 S. Dolbee, Freedman.

471 G. K. Chesterton, William Blake, pp. 147-148, 209-210.

He will not find anything objectionable in that, at any rate; probably he will bow his head slightly to a truism, as if he were in a church. Then he will read the next two lines:

But does a human form display
To those that dwell in realms of day.

And there the modern man will sit down suddenly on the sofa and come finally to the conclusion that William Blake was mad and nothing else. But ...[this] is the point about Blake that must be understood if nothing else is understood. God for him was not more and more vague and diaphonous as one came near to Him. God was more and more solid as one came near. When one was far off one might fancy Him to be impersonal. When one came into personal relation one knew that He was a person... God is merely light to the merely unenlightened. God is a man to the enlightened....

It was a mark of the old eastern initiations... that as a man climbs higher and higher, God becomes to him more and more formless, ethereal, and even thin. And in man of these temples, both ancient and modern, the final reward of serving the god through vigils and purifications, is that one is at last worthy to be told that the god doesn't exist.

Against all this emasculate mysticism Blake like a Titan rears his colossal figure and his earthquake voice. Through all the cloud and chaos of his stubborn symbolism and his perverse theories, through the tempest of exaggeration and the full midnight of madness, he reiterates with passionate precision that only that which is lovable can be adorable, that deity is either a person or a puff of wind, that the more we know of higher things the more palpable and incarnate we shall find them; that the form filling the heavens is the likeness and appearance of a man.

See also Introduction, p. 10 and Figure E2-1, p. 517.

FIGURE 3-1. The Garden of Eden, 1612
Jan Breughel, the Elder, ca. 1568-1625

And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there I put the man whom I had formed (Moses 3:8). Brueghel masterfully fills the foreground of the scene with the abundance, happiness, and beauty of newly-created life, and then from there skillfully draws our eyes toward the two tiny figures in the background ominously reaching for the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge.

MOSES 3

The Garden of Eden

Overview	133
Spiritual Creation.....	134
The Spiritual Creation of Mankind	136
The Spiritual Creation of Eden	139
The Garden of Eden and the Creation as Models for the Temple	146
Moses 3: Text and Commentary	150
Gleanings	187
Endnotes	197

Overview

MOSES 3:4 begins a second creation narrative that differs from Moses 2 in vocabulary, style, and use of the divine name (i.e., God vs. Lord God). Repetitions and seeming contradictions with elements of the previous recital of creation events are also apparent. These observations are long-recognized issues in biblical study and can be seen as providing support for the argument that multiple sources have been incorporated into the scriptural text as we now have it.¹ An impressive array of evidences for the seeming heterogeneity of sources within the first five books of the Bible have converged to form the basis of the Documentary Hypothesis, a broad scholarly consensus whose most able current popular expositor has been Richard Friedman.²

However, even those who find the Documentary Hypothesis compelling have good reason to admire the resulting literary product on its own terms. For example, in the case of the two Creation chapters, Friedman himself writes that in the scriptural version of Genesis we have a text “that is greater than the sum of its parts... [T]he combination of the from-the-sky-down and the from-the-earth-up accounts produces a much richer and much more whole conception of Creation than we would have if there were only one account. Also, placing the cosmic conception first creates the impression of the wide camera view narrowing in. This feeling of narrowing in will continue through the coming stories, contributing to the rich-in-background feeling.”³

A central point made obvious by the juxtaposition of the two creation narratives is that, “in contrast to Mesopotamian thought, ... the emergence of evil [on earth] is subsequent to Creation and not part of the creative process itself... What the... author [of the second account] sets out to explain, using familiar mythic topoi in the manner of the sages, is how evil could be generated in a Creation declared (seven times) to be good. In this sense, therefore, one may say that the [second] narrative contains the reflection generated by the [first] Creation recital.”⁴ Taken together, the accounts preserved in Moses 2-4 describe the 1 See Endnote 3-1, p. 197. See also A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 650-657 for relevant rabbinical arguments.

2 R. E. Friedman, Hidden; R. E. Friedman, Sources; R. E. Friedman, Who. See Endnote 3-2, p. 197.

3 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 16; cf. T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, pp. 123-132. See Endnote 3-3, p. 197.

4 J. Blenkinsopp, P and J, p. 7.

transition of Adam and Eve from a divinely established state of order and sovereignty to a world of inevitable decay and unrighteous dominion.⁵

Following a description of the sanctification of the seventh day⁶—in essence the creation of sacred time—we are given an account of the forming of man’s body from the earth,⁷ the creation of sacred space in the Garden of Eden,⁸ a summary of the commandments concerning its care and use,⁹ the naming episode as a fulfillment of previous instructions relating to man’s dominion,¹⁰ and a culminating lesson about the binding oneness that is meant to characterize the relationship of Adam and Eve.¹¹ A final verse reminds us of the couple’s state of innocence, preparing us for the story of the Fall in Moses 4.¹²

Spiritual Creation

Between the end of the first Creation account and the beginning of the second one is a brief statement meriting special attention: “I, the Lord God, created all things... spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth.”¹³ Notwithstanding the help provided by the clarifying additions given in the JST, this passage has raised many difficulties in interpretation. Joseph Smith must have had his own questions about these verses—which we can infer from the fact that he received a revelation containing further explanation¹⁴ at about the same time the relevant portions of the book of Moses were given:¹⁵

30 But remember that all my judgments are not given unto men; and as the words have gone forth out of my mouth even so shall they be fulfilled, that the first shall be last, and that the last shall be first in all things whatsoever I have created by the word of my power, which is the power of my Spirit.

31 For by the power of my Spirit created I them; yea, all things both spiritual and temporal—

32 First spiritual, secondly temporal, which is the beginning of my work; and again, first temporal, and secondly spiritual, which is the last of my work—¹⁶

33 Speaking unto you that you may naturally understand; but unto myself my works have no end, neither beginning; but it is given unto you that ye may understand, because ye have asked it of me and are agreed.¹⁷

34 Wherefore, verily I say unto you that all things unto me are spiritual,¹⁸ and not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal; neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam, your father, whom I created.

35 Behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him, for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.¹⁹

5 K. Burke, Governance, p. 17.

6 Moses 3:1-3.

7 Moses 3:6-7.

8 Moses 3:8-14.

9 Moses 3:15-17.

10 Moses 3:18-20.

11 Moses 3:21-24.

12 Moses 3:25.

13 Moses 3:5.

14 See Endnote 3-4, p. 197.

15 See K. Muhlestein, Flow, pp. 49-52.

16 See Endnote 3-5, p. 197.

17 See Endnote 3-6, p. 198.

18 See Endnote 3-7, p. 198.

19 D&C 29:30-35.

To a degree, these verses seem a paraphrase and clarifying expansion of ideas and phrases in 1 Corinthians 15:45-48, with “temporal” replacing “natural” in order to better emphasize the contrast the Lord is making between His “time” and ours. In other words, while it is logical from our perspective to speak of the “beginning” and “last” phases of God’s work,²⁰ from His eternal perspective the “works have no end, neither beginning”²¹ but are “one eternal round.”²² The verses make it clear that this applies not only to God’s works, but also to His commandments.²³

By spiritual creation is meant the premortal creation of “all things” in their spiritual state, including the creation of Eden, and everything in it.²⁴ This is consistent with the view of Elder Bruce R. McConkie, who “conceded that the word ‘spiritual’ in Moses 3 has ‘a dual meaning and applies to both the premortal life and the paradisiacal creation.’”²⁵

The statements in the book of Moses tell us much about the universal scope of spiritual creation (“all things,” “all things which I prepared for the use of man”²⁶), but say nothing directly about the process. Later revelation and teachings of Church leaders have made it clear that both humans and animals²⁷ possess individual spirits that predated their physical bodies.²⁸ A First Presidency statement in 1909 on the Origin of Man further stated that “man, as a spirit, was begotten and born of heavenly parents, and reared to maturity in the eternal mansions of the Father... Man is the child of God.”²⁹ Note also Joseph Smith’s teachings affirming that there is some aspect of the spirit’s existence which was not created, although the exact nature of this eternal part of man has not been authoritatively settled.³⁰

Scriptural descriptions of the Garden of Eden not only seem to imply that something about its “time,” but also its “state,” and “sphere,” differed from the postlapsarian environment of Adam and Eve. Lehi explained that had it not been for the Fall, “All things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end.”³¹ Expressing a related idea, Moses 3:9 says that “all things which I prepared for the use of man” were “spiritual” when they were created, for they remained “in the sphere in which I, God, created [them].”

Everything placed in the Garden of Eden was, of course, also considered “spiritual.” We are told in Moses 3 that man, the trees, and the animals became “living souls” when they were formed from a combination of spiritual and natural elements.³² All these things were considered “spiritual” in the sense that they were in a state of relative perfection before the Fall.³³

Below, we discuss the spiritual creation of mankind and of Eden in more detail.

20 D&C 29:32.

21 D&C 29:33.

22 See, e.g., 1 Nephi 10:19.

23 D&C 29:35.

24 See Endnote 3-8, p. 198.

25 Cited in C. R. Harrell, Preexistence, p. 20. See Endnote 3-9, p. 198.

26 D&C 29:5, 9.

27 See Endnote 3-10, p. 199.

28 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 15 February 1941, 1:62.

29 J. F. Smith et al., Origin.

30 K. W. Godfrey, Intelligence; P. N. Hyde, Intelligences; see Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540.

31 2 Nephi 2:22. See Endnote 3-11, p. 199.

32 Moses 3:7, 9, 19. See Endnote 3-12, p. 200.

33 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1954, 1:76.

FIGURE 3-2. The Creation of Light, 1913
Gaetano Previati, 1852-1920

SEE COLOR PLATE 3-2.

*And I, God, said: Let there be light; and there was light.*¹ Some ancient sources assert that the heavenly hosts—variously described as including the angels, the sons of God, and/or the souls of humanity—were part of the light on Day One of creation.² Williams explains: “The pneumatikos or spiritual first Adam, born on the first day, is associated both with the Spirit of God that hovered over the pre-mundane waters³ and, more commonly, the light of [Moses 2:3]. The latter reading is based on a pun on the Greek word phōs, used in the [Septuagint] translation of Genesis 1:3 meaning both ‘light’ and ‘man.’ Thus, the product of God’s command, ‘Let there be light (phōs),’ was a divine Light-Man, an anthropos enveloped within and consisting of light. This interpretation is Jewish and can be found as early as the second century BCE.”⁴

Though the idea is not widely known or appreciated today, the visual depiction of this event has a venerable history, stretching from medieval times to our own, as seen in this magnificent painting by Previati.⁵

1 Moses 2:3.

2 M. Barker, Angels, p. 29.

3 Moses 2:2.

4 W. Williams, Shadow.

5 See Commentary 2:2-b, p. 99; 2:4-c, p. 101; 3:1-b, p. 151; Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540

The Spiritual Creation of Mankind

We are told very little in the book of Moses about the premortal creation of human spirits and the physical creation of the human body. The fact that all mankind existed as spirits in “heaven” before they came to earth is stated in simple terms.³⁴ The formation of man’s physical body from the “dust of the earth” and woman’s from the “rib” of the man are described in figurative terms.³⁵ Additionally, the book of Abraham makes it clear that when God breathed the “breath of life” into man, it meant that He took Adam’s spirit and placed it into his body.³⁶

With respect to the premortal life of man’s spirit, the phrase “and all the host of them” that follows the statement that “the heaven and the earth were finished” has long been a subject of discussion and speculation. The belief that “angels,” “sons of God,” and/or “the souls of humanity” were part of that “host” and that they were created prior to everything else appears in the book of Job,³⁷ in extracanonical books such as Jubilees,³⁸ and in the teachings of Elder Joseph Fielding Smith.³⁹ Barker argues that a similar story was once part of Genesis, but was expurgated during or after the Jewish exile.⁴⁰

34 Moses 3:5. See Endnote 3-14, p. 200.

35 Moses 3:6. See Appendix, pp. 785-802 for a collection of statements on the origin of man.

36 Abraham 5:7; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 17 May 1843, p. 301.

37 Job 38:4, 7.

38 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 2:2, p. 55.

39 J. F. Smith, Jr., Answers, 1966, 5:182-184; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 May 1844, p. 365. See also Commentary 2:2-b, p. 99; 2:4-c, p. 101; 3:1-b, p. 151; Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540. See Endnote 3-15, p. 200.

40 M. Barker, Beyond, pp. 196-198; M. Barker, Timaus, pp. 283-285; M. Barker, Temple Roots, pp. 80-81; M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 20-21. See Endnote 3-16, p. 200.

FIGURE 3-3. The Four and Twenty Elders, ca. 1805
William Blake, 1757-1827

SEE COLOR PLATE 3-3.

*Now the Lord had shown unto me, Abraham, the intelligences that were organized before the world was... And God... stood in the midst of them, and he said: These I will make my rulers.*¹ Though the image is used here to evoke the premortal scene described by Abraham, Blake's pencil and watercolor drawing was originally meant to illustrate John's vision of the heavenly throne: "and one sat upon the throne... and round about the throne were... four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment... And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal... and round about... were four beasts full of eyes... The four and twenty elders fall down before him... and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things."²

1 Abraham 3:22-23.

2 Revelation 4:2, 4, 6, 10-11.

In contrast to the spare account of the spiritual creation of mankind, much more detail is given about relationships and events that subsequently took place in the premortal life.⁴¹ Couched in a revelation about cosmology,⁴² the book of Abraham gives an extended lesson about the relationships that prevailed among "the intelligences that were organized before the world was."⁴³ Summarizes Bushman:

Abraham's astronomy envisioned an ascending order of planetary rule based on slowness of time. Wherever there was one planet or star, "there shall be another planet whose reckoning of time shall be longer still; and thus there shall be the reckoning of the time of one planet above another, until thou come nigh unto Kolob, which Kolob is after the reckoning of the Lord's time; which Kolob is set nigh unto the throne of God, to govern all those planets which belong to the same order of that upon which thou standest."⁴⁴ The series moved from the earth's "order" of planets upward through ever-slowness planets, moons, suns, and stars to Kolob....⁴⁵

This fundamental cosmic order was mirrored in humans' relationship with God. Midway through the text, the Lord compares humans to the stars. The ranking of the planets and stars, the Lord said, carries over to the ranking of spirits: "The Lord said unto me, these two facts do exist, that there are two spirits, one being more intelligent than the other, there shall be another more intelligent than they; I am the Lord thy God, I am more intelligent than they all."⁴⁶ Like the stars, the spirits rise in ascending order to God, echoing the traditional idea of the Great Chain of Being.⁴⁷ The verse suggests that the source of God's authority comes from his being the highest and greatest of the intelligences, "more intelligent than they all." Years earlier, Joseph had written that "the glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth."⁴⁸ Now he showed a universe filled with individual intelligences ruled by a God who was "more intelligent than they all." God's power grew out of his glory and intelligence rather than [the erroneous idea of] his having created everything out of nothing.⁴⁹

41 See Endnote 3-17, p. 200.

42 See Endnote 3-18, p. 201.

43 Abraham 3:22. See Excursus 9: The Premortal Organization of the Human Family, p. 544.

44 Abraham 3:9. See Excursus 18: Kolob, p. 565 and Excursus 19: "If You Could Hie to Kolob", p. 566.

45 See Endnote 3-19, p. 201.

46 Abraham 3:19. See Endnote 3-20, p. 201.

47 A. O. Lovejoy, Great Chain; cf. R. L. Bushman, Mormonism, p. 72. See Excursus 10: The Great Chain of Being, p. 546. See also F. M. Huchel, Cosmic, pp. 10-11.

48 D&C 93:36.

49 R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 455-456.

FIGURE 3-4. The Great Chain of Being, in Rhetorica Christiana, 1579, Didacus Valades

FIGURE 3-5. A Depiction of Ein Sof and the Encircling Angelic Hierarchies

*These two facts do exist, that there are two spirits, one more intelligent than the other; there shall be another more intelligent than they; I am the Lord thy God, I am more intelligent than they all.*¹ The hierarchical structure of the cosmos represented by the depiction of the Great Chain of Being at left starts from the most foundational element (i.e., rock, which merely exists), up through plants and various classes of animals. Man, being composed of both body and spirit, occupies a transitional level “a little lower than the angels.”² God, here conceived as a purely spiritual Prime Mover, reigns supreme over all, while the Devil and his angels languish in the flames of hell below, cut off forever in their exile from the rest of Creation.

Jewish kabbalists refer to the fundamental aspect or absolute essence of God represented in the center of the figure at right as Ein Sof, meaning “without end,” “that which is beyond all limits,” boundless or infinite.³ The concept defies description, embodying “absolute perfection in which there are no distinctions and no differentiations.”⁴ Encircling Ein Sof are a succession of angelic hierarchies (olamot—universes). The pictorial image associated with the inner “rung of being” of the Kabbalah is the crown: Keter—but, writes Matt, “we should also recall that the more primary meaning of the word keter is ‘circle’; it is from this that the notion of the crown is derived. In Sefer Yetsirah we are told that the sefirot are a great circle, ‘their end embedded in their beginning, and their beginning in their end,’⁵ recalling scriptural passages that speak of God’s course as being “one eternal round.”⁶

1 Abraham 3:19.

2 Psalm 8:5. See Endnote 3-21, p. 202.

3 A. Green, Guide, pp. 34-35; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, p. 213; cf. Commentary 1:3-d, p. 45. See Endnote 3-22, p. 202.

4 G. Scholem, Kabbalah, p. 89. See Endnote 3-23, p. 202.

5 D. C. Matt, Zohar I, p. xlvii; cf. A. Green, Guide, p. 39. See D. Blumenthal, Merkabah, 1:7, p. 17; P. Mordell, Sefer Yetsirah, 3:15, p. 44.

6 E.g., 1 Nephi 10:19.

The Prophet summarized: “The organization of the spiritual and heavenly worlds, and of spiritual and heavenly beings, was agreeable to the most perfect order and harmony: their limits and bounds were fixed irrevocably, and voluntarily subscribed to in their heavenly estate by themselves, and were by our first parents subscribed to upon the earth.”⁵⁰ Thus, “Father Adam, the Ancient of Days and father of all, and our glorious Mother Eve,” among the “noble and great ones” who excelled in intelligence in their premortal life, were foreordained to their mortal roles.⁵¹ Having received perfect physical bodies, Adam and

50 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 9 October 1843, p. 325.

51 D&C 138:38-39; Abraham 3:22-23; S. W. Kimball, Righteous Women, p. 102; J. Smith, Jr., Words, 12 May 1844,

FIGURE 3-6. Behold Your Little Ones, 1983
David Lindsley, 1954-

SEE COLOR PLATE 3-6.

*So they brought their little children and set them down upon the ground round about him, and Jesus stood in the midst... And he spake unto the multitude, and said unto them: Behold your little ones... and... angels... came down and encircled those little ones about, and they were encircled about with fire.*¹ Consistent with imagery elsewhere in scripture and rabbinical tradition, this scene from the Book of Mormon is described as a series of concentric circles surrounding the spot where the Savior stood.² Jesus' placement of the children so that they immediately surrounded Him—their proximity exceeding even that of the encircling angels and accompanying fire—conveyed a powerful visual message about their holiness: namely, that “whosoever... shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.”³

1 3 Nephi 17:12, 23-24.

2 See Figure 4-4, p. 219 and Excursus 11: The Sacred Circle, p. 547.

3 Matthew 18:4.

Eve were placed in a specially-prepared proving ground where, until the time of their transgression, they would live in a spiritual state.⁵²

The Spiritual Creation of Eden

What was the nature of the initial proving ground created for Adam and Eve? In the space of a few verses, scripture recounts that God “planted a garden eastward in Eden” containing a river and a variety of beautiful fruit trees—including the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.⁵³ In a single brief enigmatic reference, Moses 3:9 elaborates on the spiritual state of existence that applied to all things in the Garden: “... it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it.” The use of “for” to introduce the dependent clause of this verse seems to imply that the spiritual state of the Garden was due to the fact that it had remained in a particular “sphere.” This raises the question as to what is meant by the term “sphere.”

The first thing to notice is that the Prophet Joseph Smith never used “sphere” in the contemporary English sense of a “globe” or a “celestial body,” preferring the terms “world” or “planet” when that meaning was intended. In his revelations and teachings, “sphere” always refers to one of three things:

1. the orbit or order of a heavenly body;⁵⁴
2. a domain of thought;⁵⁵
3. a realm of activity, power, or influence.⁵⁶

p. 371; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 12 May 1844, p. 365.

52 2 Nephi 2:22-23.

53 Moses 3:8-14.

54 See Endnote 3-24, p. 202.

55 See Endnote 3-25, p. 202.

56 See Endnote 3-26, p. 202.

In the context of Moses 3:9, only the first and third of the senses could reasonably apply. However, since the book of Abraham⁵⁷ strongly correlates increases in proximity of orbit with higher orders of celestial governance, these two senses, in fact, converge. Taken together with Abraham 5:13 and D&C 130:4—which imply that the “reckoning” of time of the Garden in its spiritual state was “after the Lord’s time, which was after the time of Kolob”⁵⁸—the implication seems to be that the prelapsarian Garden of Eden was “nigh unto Kolob,”⁵⁹ with events after the Fall occurring in another sphere—and hence in a different state.⁶⁰

This interpretation immediately raises serious issues. For one thing, a view that the earth was physically transported from one position in space to another is impossible to harmonize with current planetary science unless one makes the very doubtful assumption, as does Andrus,⁶¹ that under the special conditions prevailing at the time of Creation “it may have been possible to move the earth in space at a great speed without the disruption that might otherwise accompany such a move.” For such a view to be plausible, not only would the movement of Earth itself have to be considered, but also the fact that “the solar system is a multiple body system with many complex interactions taking place.”⁶² Equally problematic is the fact that all lines of scientific evidence support the conclusion that both the sun and the earth were created at about the same time from the same source, and that the earth was part of our solar system from its beginning.

A second problem in understanding the spiritual creation of Eden relates to the scriptural account of how death entered the world.⁶³ President Harold B. Lee gave the following description of the effects of Adam and Eve’s transgression on the rest of creation:

Besides the Fall having had to do with Adam and Eve, causing a change to come over them, that change affected all human nature, all of the natural creations, all of the creation of animals, plants—all kinds of life were changed. The earth itself became subject to death.... How it took place no one can explain, and anyone who would attempt to make an explanation would be going far beyond anything the Lord has told us. But a change was wrought over the whole face of the creation, which up to that time had not been subject to death. From that time henceforth all in nature was in a state of gradual dissolution until mortal death was to come, after which there would be required a restoration in a resurrected state.⁶⁴

President Lee’s clear statement about the effects of the Fall is difficult to reconcile with the presence of ancient fossils predating man’s arrival, arranged in progressive complexity in the earth’s strata. Elder James E. Talmage of the Quorum of the Twelve, a geologist by training, expressed the following observations in 1931:

The oldest... rocks thus far identified in land masses reveal the fossilized remains of once living organisms, plant and animal... These lived and died, age after age, while the earth was yet unfit for human habitation.

From the fossilized remains of plants and animals found in the rocks, the scientist points to a very definite order in the sequence of life embodiment, for older rocks, the earlier formations,

57 Abraham 3:9, 16.

58 See also J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 March 1841, pp. 64-65.

59 See Excursus 18: Kolob, p. 565 and Excursus 19: “If You Could Hie to Kolob”, p. 566.

60 See Endnote 3-27, p. 203.

61 H. L. Andrus, God, pp. 314-315.

62 H. K. Hansen, Astronomy, p. 188.

63 See Endnote 3-28, p. 203.

64 H. B. Lee, Teachings 2000, 23 June 1954, p. 20.

reveal to us organisms of simplest structure only, whether of plants or animals. These primitive species were aquatic; land forms were of later development.⁶⁵

Those who, like President Lee, have made statements strongly expressing the view that no death existed on earth before the Fall should not be portrayed as intrinsically unsympathetic to science, but more fundamentally as resisting any views that compromise authoritatively-expressed doctrines relating to the Creation, the Fall, and the Atonement. Likewise, scientifically-minded people of faith such as Elder Talmage are not seeking to subordinate the claims of faith to the program of science, but naturally desire to circumscribe their understanding of truth—the results of learning by “study and also by faith”⁶⁶—into “one great whole.”⁶⁷

In 1910, the First Presidency affirmed that to the extent that demonstrated scientific findings can be harmonized with “divine revelation [and] good common sense,” they are accepted “with joy.”⁶⁸ In this regard, Elder Lee spoke approvingly of a story recounted by LDS scientist Harvey Fletcher about President Joseph F. Smith’s reply to questions posed to him at BYU about the topic of evolution:

After listening patiently he replied: “Brethren, I don’t know very much about science. It has not been my privilege to study... deeply... any of the sciences, but this I do know, that God lives, and that His Son instituted this church here upon the earth for the salvation of men. Now Brethren, you have that testimony, and I’ve heard you bear it. It’s your job to try and see how these seeming difficulties can be overcome.”⁶⁹

While it would be presumptuous to speak of any final solution to the problem of reconciling science and scripture on specifics relating to the Garden of Eden and the nature of life before the Fall, three groups of general possibilities are briefly considered below.⁷⁰

1. Eden located on the earth as a place where special conditions prevailed. This scenario, advocated by Draper et al., posits that Eden existed at a specific location on the earth, and that “spiritual” conditions governed life in the Garden before the Fall while, at the same time, “natural” conditions prevailed elsewhere on the earth.⁷¹ Such a proposal accords well with a common LDS view that attributes a continuous identity of the physical earth from its creation in a spiritual state, to its “Fall” to a telestial one, to its eventual transformation to a paradisiacal millennial state, and ultimately to a glorified celestial status.⁷² It also provides an explanation for ancient fossil remains by allowing for death and disease to have taken place for an indefinite period of time outside the Garden, while deathless conditions are seen as having prevailed before the Fall for Adam and Eve and all else within Eden’s precincts.⁷³ On the other hand, nothing in the scriptural description of the Garden’s four rivers springing from one head seems to correlate easily with the geography of Missouri (or anywhere else on the earth, for that matter), either present or past. Moreover, it seems awkward to speak of a single earth existing in a hybrid state—partly spiritual and partly natural.⁷⁴

65 J. E. Talmage, Earth and Man, p. 242. See Endnote 3-29, p. 203.

66 D&C 88:118.

67 H. W. Hunter, Teachings 1997, 30 August 1984, p. 182.

68 J. F. Smith et al., Words in Season.

69 H. B. Lee, Teachings 1996, 6 June 1953, p. 340. See also H. B. Lee, Place.

70 Cf. Commentary 3:8-b, p. 160. See Endnote 3-30, p. 203.

71 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 227.

72 E.g., J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, October 1928, 1:73-74.

73 See Endnote 3-31, p. 203.

74 See Endnote 3-32, p. 203.

Finally, this proposal offers no guidance about how to reconcile current scientific thinking with statements from scripture and early Church leaders that seem to imply that the earth was moved from one location in the universe to another.

2. Eden situated in a different place or “state” than the earth as we know it. A second possibility is that the events of the Fall did not take place on the earth as we know it. For example, the bodies of Adam and Eve could have been prepared in some manner beforehand on the earth⁷⁵ and afterward the couple could have been temporarily placed in a terrestrial environment to experience the events of the Garden of Eden.⁷⁶ As with the first possibility discussed above, this interpretation of the story would be consistent with the implication of Moses 3:8 that the bodies of Adam and Eve were created outside the Garden (i.e., on the earth?⁷⁷) and only later placed in Paradise (“there I put the man whom I had formed”⁷⁸). Special conditions, perhaps paralleling those that characterize worlds where translated beings dwell,⁷⁹ would be required as part of the design of the Garden of Eden.⁸⁰ An important consequence of this view is that the subsequent Fall would not have required the movement of an entire planet from one place to another, but only the removal of Adam and Eve from the state or place of Eden to the terrestrial earth (a form of “reverse translation”)—an earth where natural conditions (including death and “time”) had already prevailed from the beginning of its creation.⁸¹ A strong point of this proposal is that it allows for an earth consistent with scientific findings of a long and continuous biological, geographical, and planetary history.

Several ancient parallels can be taken as suggesting the idea that the Garden was not on the earth but rather in a place of a higher order or “sphere” to which Adam and Eve were “transplanted” from the earth.⁸² For example, in 4 Ezra God speaks of Eden as “the garden which our right hand had planted before the earth appeared.”⁸³ 2 Enoch gives an interesting variation of the phrase in Moses 4:25 “for dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return”: “You are earth, and into the earth once again you will go, out of which I took you. And I will not destroy you, but I will send you away to what I took you from.”⁸⁴ This can be read as implying that Adam, his body formed out of earthly materials and afterwards placed in the Garden, was sent back again from Eden to Earth to live after the Fall.⁸⁵ Similarly, Anderson reads the Life of Adam and Eve as asserting that “Adam and Eve do not inhabit the earth until after they are cast out of the Garden”⁸⁶ and “fall down to the world.”⁸⁷ Islamic scripture and commentary record a parallel view in the teaching that, although it was the “divine plan” that Adam and Eve (representing all mankind)⁸⁸ should come to the earth to live,⁸⁹

75 See Endnote 3-33, p. 204.

76 Cf. S. D. Ricks, Adam’s Fall, pp. 598-599; S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, p. 141; O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 3:9, p. 59.

77 The fifteenth-century Creation and Fall speaks of Adam having been created from the “common earth” rather than the “earth of Paradise” where he was later placed (M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 3).

78 Cf. R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 94.

79 J. Taylor, Mediation, 1882, pp. 75-78.

80 H. L. Andrus, God, p. 381 n. 88. See Endnote 3-34, p. 204.

81 See Endnote 3-35, p. 204.

82 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:35b, pp. 221-222. See Endnote 3-36, p. 204.

83 B. M. Metzger, Fourth Ezra, 3:6, p. 528, emphasis added; cf. Jerahmeel ben Solomon, Chronicles, 1:2, p. 5; M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 3, p. 30; H. Sperling et al., Zohar, Leviticus 34b, 4:391.

84 F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 32:1, p. 154.

85 Ibid., p. 155 n. 32b.

86 G. A. Anderson, Ezekiel, p. 142.

87 M. E. Stone, Fall of Adam, 19, p. 7; cf. W. L. Lipscomb, Expulsion, 1, p. 135.

88 See Endnote 3-37, p. 205.

89 See Endnote 3-38, p. 205.

FIGURE 3-7. Adam's Peak, 1780
Antoine-François Prévost

*We said: Get down... And there is for you in the earth an abode and a provision for a time.*¹ The widespread tradition that Adam and Eve descended to the earth after the Fall is associated with several geographical spots. One example is the mountain of Sri Pada² or Adam's Peak in Sri Lanka whose top bears an indentation resembling a five-foot-long footprint on a boulder at the summit.

To reach the holy site, pilgrims cross a 30-mile-long chain of limestone shoals³ from India to Sri Lanka and, once arrived, ascend, as shown in this illustration, by pulling themselves up with chains to the top.⁴ Describing his own ascent by this means, the English politician Sir James Emerson Tennent (1804-1869), whose meticulously-researched book on Ceylon remained the standard history of the island until well into the 20th century,⁵ wrote: "As the pillar-like crag rounds away at either side, the eye, if turned downwards, peers into a chasm of unseen depth; and so dizzy is the elevation, that the guides discourage a pause, lest a sudden gust of wind should sweep the adventurous climber from his giddy footing, into the unfathomable gulfs below."⁶

- 1 Qur'an 2:3, as translated in A.at-Tabataba'i, Al-Mizan, 2:36, 1:177.
- 2 = sacred footprint.
- 3 Rama's/Nala's/Adam's bridge.
- 4 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, p. 195. See also Figure 6-14, p. 473.
- 5 K. M. de Silva, Tennent, pp. 24, 25; R. Jones, Tennent.
- 6 J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 2:138-139.

they "begin in a garden not of this world."⁹⁰ According to the Qur'an, they did not stay in this other-worldly Garden forever because:

Satan made them both slip⁹¹ from it, and drove them out of what they were in; and We said: Get down,⁹² some of you being the enemies of others.⁹³ And there is for you in the earth an abode and a provision for a time.⁹⁴

One Islamic tradition records that at the time of their removal from Eden to the earth, Adam and Eve descended respectively upon the Saudi Arabian hills of al-Safā and

- 90 F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, p. 155 n. 32b. See Endnote 3-39, p. 206.
- 91 See Endnote 3-40, p. 206.
- 92 See Endnote 3-41, p. 206.
- 93 See Endnote 3-42, p. 206.
- 94 A.at-Tabataba'i, Al-Mizan, 2:36, 1:177. See Endnote 3-43, p. 206.

al-Marwah⁹⁵ where Adam is said to have “remained in prostration for forty days, weeping for the Garden.”⁹⁶ Other commentators have written that it was not a mountain but rather a valley called *Saràndib*⁹⁷ wherein “Adam descended from... heaven.”⁹⁸

3. Eden as a place whose description includes figurative elements. The blend of figurative elements in the stories of the Creation, the Fall, and the Garden of Eden provides a powerful means to teach complex ideas that would be difficult to comprehend and recall if presented in purely abstract terms. Though affirming the identity of Adam and Eve as historical figures, the reality of the Fall, and the tangible nature of the “sacred space” of Eden, Joseph Fielding McConkie is not troubled by the presence of symbols and metaphors in scriptural accounts:

What, then, do we conclude of the Eden story? Was it figurative or literal? We answer by way of comparison. It, like the temple ceremony, combines a rich blend of both. Our temples are real, the priesthood is real, the covenants we enter into are real, and the blessings we are promised by obedience are real; yet the teaching device may be metaphorical. We are as actors on a stage. We role-play and imagine. We do not actually advance from one world to another in the temple, but rather are taught with figurative representations of what can and will be.... In the story of man’s earthly origin we find the rich blend of figurative and literal that is so typical of the Bible, of the teachings of Christ, and of our daily experience—this that the story might unfold according to the faith and wisdom that we bring to it. Like all scriptural texts, its interpretation becomes a measure of our maturity and our spiritual integrity.⁹⁹

In support of this view, which is not necessarily incompatible with the other interpretations discussed above, it can be easily admitted that the scriptural details of locations and specific events in Moses 3-4 are obscure, and that there is a strong symbolic component of many of the descriptions of the places, characters, props, and events of Eden. In fact, Faulconer explains that reading scripture “typologically, figurally, anagogically, or allegorically” is not what a premodern would have done:

... instead of or in addition to reading literally. Such readings are part and parcel of a literal reading. Premodern understanding does not reduce the biblical story to a reference to or representation of something else, though it also does not deny that there may be an important representative element in scripture.¹⁰⁰ Instead, premoderns believe that to understand the story of Israel is essentially to understand history—actual history, the real events of the world—as incarnation, a continuing incarnation, as types and shadows...¹⁰¹

95 See Endnote 3-45, p. 207.

96 al-Qummi in A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:197. See also M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, pp. 55-57, 65-66; A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 59; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 34-36; Commentary 5:4-c, p. 357; 5:6-a, p. 360.

97 The term is probably derived from Ceylon (Sri Lanka).

98 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:213; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 58; J. C. Reeves, al-Yaqubi; G. Weil, Legends, p. 33. See Endnote 3-46, p. 208.

99 J. F. McConkie, Eden, pp. 29, 35.

100 Cf. H. W. Nibley, Treasures, pp. 179-180; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, p. 203; Excursus 13: Some Perspectives on Historicity, p. 552.

101 J. E. Faulconer, Incarnation, p. 48. See also J. S. Tanner, World and Word, pp. 226-230; M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 29-30. Regarding types and shadows, see, e.g., Mosiah 3:15. See Endnote 3-47, p. 208.

FIGURE 3-8. Court of the Palms Mural at Mari (Tel Hariri), Syria, ca. 1750 BCE

And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there I put the man whom I had formed... And I... planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And I... caused a river to go out of Eden... and from thence it... became into four heads.¹ Writes Porter: "Some of [the mural's] features strikingly recall details of the Genesis description of the Garden of Eden. In particular, the mural depicts two types of tree,² guarded by mythical winged animals or cherubim.³ The lower half of the central panel shows figures holding jars from which flow four streams[, with a seedling growing out of the middle,⁴ in a basement room that might be seen as providing an ideal setting for ritual washings].⁵ The upper scene may depict a king being invested by the Mesopotamian fertility goddess Ishtar: Eve has been associated with such divine figures."⁶ Note the king's right hand raised, perhaps in an oath-related gesture.⁷ His outstretched left hand receives the crown and staff of his office.⁸ In the symmetrical side panels at the far left and right of the mural, two naked men climb each of the two date palms;⁹ the one on the right can clearly be seen as harboring a dove.¹⁰ Like the two goddesses witnessing the investiture, the figures near the trees raise their hands in worship and supplication,¹¹ suggesting a parallel between the tree and the king himself. Like the tree, the king is an "archetypal receiver and distributor of divine blessing."¹² For an extended discussion of this mural, see J. M. Bradshaw et al., Investiture Panel.

1 Moses 3:8-10.

2 Cf. Moses 3:9.

3 Cf. Moses 4:31. See Commentary 4:31-c, p. 280.

4 Alma 32:41-42.

5 Cf. Moses 3:10, 1 Nephi 11:25.

6 J. R. Porter, Guide, p. 28.

7 S. D. Ricks, Oaths, pp. 49-50.

8 Cf. R. Giorgi, Anges, p. 281. See Figure 4-6, p. 224.

9 Associated in some cultures with the idea of heavenly ascent and the attainment of divine vision. See, e.g., E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, p. 213.

10 See Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; 3:9-g, p. 166; 4:5-b, p. 246; Figure 6-14, p. 473; Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654. See Endnote 3-48, p. 209.

11 Y. M. al-Khalesi, Palms, pp. 45, 54, 56; L. M. Hilton, Hand; S. D. Ricks, Oaths, pp. 49-50; D. R. Seely, Raised Hand; cf. Commentary 5:4-a, p. 355. See Endnote 5-65, p. 449. See Endnote 6-30, p. 499.

12 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 101.

FIGURE 3-9. Sacred Topography of Eden and the Temple, 1994

Michael P. Lyon, 1952-

Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a sin offering, and a ram for a burnt offering. He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with a linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall be attired... [he] shall wash his flesh in water, and so put them on... Then shall he kill the goat of the sin offering... and bring his blood within the vail... and sprinkle it upon the mercy seat: And he shall make an atonement for the holy place... because of their transgressions.¹ The Garden of Eden served as a prototype for Israelite temples where atonement was made for the sins of the people. About the journey made within the temple, Nibley comments: "Properly speaking, one did not go 'through' the temple—in one door and out another—for one enters and leaves by the same door, but by moving in opposite directions... The Two Ways of Light and Darkness are but one way after all, as the wise Heraclitus said: 'The up-road and the down-road are one'; which one depends on the way we are facing."²

1 Leviticus 16:3-4, 15-16.

2 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 442-443.

The Garden of Eden and the Creation as Models for the Temple

As additional evidence for mutual dependence between the creation accounts of Moses 2 and of Moses 3, it should be noted that the stories of the Creation and the Garden of Eden are united in the architecture and the ritual of both ancient and modern temples.¹⁰² Indeed, the Garden itself can be seen as a natural "temple," where Adam and Eve lived in God's presence for a time, and mirroring the configuration of the heavenly temple intended as their ultimate destination.¹⁰³ Moses 4 tells of how Adam and Eve were cast out from God's presence after the Fall and, in modern temples, the posterity of Adam and Eve trace the footsteps of their first parents both away from Eden and then in reverse direction.¹⁰⁴ First, they witness the events that led to the expulsion of the man and the woman. Then, starting from the setting of the telestial world in which we now live, they are returned to the paradisiacal glory of the Garden, and ultimately to the presence of God.¹⁰⁵ In conformance with the law of Moses:

102 M. B. Brown, Gate, pp. 26-33, 113-117; D. W. Parry, Garden, pp. 126-127.

103 J. M. Lundquist, Reality; J. A. Parry et al., Temple in Heaven; T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 112-116, 308-309. See Excursus 14: The Garden of Eden as a Prototype for the Temple, p. 555.

104 Cf. John 16:28.

105 G. M. Leonard, Nauvoo, pp. 258-259; J. E. Talmage, House of the Lord, 4, pp. 54, 55; B. Young, 6 April 1853 - B, p. 31. See Excursus 15: Description of the LDS Temple Endowment, p. 557.

FIGURE 3-10. Sacred Stones Emerging from the Waters
John M. Lundquist

And I, God, said: Let the waters under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and it was so; and I, God, said: Let there be dry land; and it was so.¹ In ancient Israel, the holiest spot on earth was believed to be the Foundation Stone in front of the Ark within the temple at Jerusalem: “it was the first solid material to emerge from the waters of Creation,² and it was upon this stone that the Deity effected Creation.”³ Lundquist cites a famous passage in the Midrash Tanhuma to this effect: “Just as the navel is found at the centre of a human being, so the land of Israel is found at the center of the world. Jerusalem is at the center of the land of Israel, and the temple is at the center of Jerusalem, the Holy of Holies is at the center of the temple, the Ark is at the center of the Holy of Holies, and the Foundation Stone is in front of the Ark, which spot is the foundation of the world.”⁴ Ancient temples found in other cultures throughout the world also represent—and are often built upon—elevations that emulate the holy mountain at the starting point of Creation.⁵ Nibley writes that the temple is “the ‘hierocentric point,’ the place where all time, space, and humanity come together. The word templum not only designates the template, the point of cutting between the cardo and decumanus from which the observer of the heavens makes his viewing, it is also the diminutive of the word tempus, denoting that it measures the divisions of time and space in a single pattern. There, all the records of the past are kept and all of the prophecies for the future are divined.”⁶ To the temple are owed the beginnings of culture and civilization.⁷

Often symbolized as a cosmic tree, the temple “originates in the underworld, stands on the earth as a ‘meeting place,’ and yet towers (architecturally) into the heavens and gives access to the heavens through its ritual.”⁸ In this beautiful photograph by Lundquist, a structure of sacred stones emerging from the surrounding waters evokes “tranquility charged with divine force.”⁹

1 Moses 2:9.

2 Psalm 104:7-9.

3 J. M. Lundquist, Meeting Place, p. 7.

4 Ibid., p. 7; cf. E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, pp. 88-89; J. M. Lundquist, Temple of Jerusalem, p. 26; Z. Vilnay, Sacred Land, pp. 5-6; O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 8:19, p. 73; 3:9-14, 27, pp. 59-60; 4:26, p. 63. See Endnote 3-51, p. 209.

5 See E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree.

6 H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 47.

7 H. W. Nibley, What, pp. 379-381.

8 J. M. Lundquist, Fundamentals, p. 675. See Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

9 J. M. Lundquist, Meeting Place, p. 45.

Anciently, once a year on Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, Adam’s eastward expulsion from the garden was reversed when the high priest traveled west past the consuming fire of sacrifice and the purifying water of the laver, through the veil woven with images of cherubim. Thus, he returned to the original point of Creation, where he poured out the atoning blood of the sacrifice, reestablishing the covenant relationship with God.¹⁰⁶

The process of Creation has frequently provided a second model for temple building and ritual.¹⁰⁷ For example, Nibley’s unique reading of the first lines of Enuma Elish associates the Babylonian creation story with temple themes:

At once above when the heavens had not yet received their name and the earth below was not yet named, the Holy of Holies, the most inner sanctuary of the temple... had not yet been built.¹⁰⁸

106 D. W. Parry, Garden, p. 135. See also R. N. Holzapfel et al., Father’s House, pp. 17-19.

107 H. W. Nibley, Return, pp. 71-73.

108 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 10, p. 122; cf. E. A. Speiser, Creation Epic, 1:1ff., pp. 60-61.

Later, explained Nibley:

Marduk progressed through the heavens inspecting their places of various worlds, and there he established a new world, an exact replica of the Apsu, the dwelling of Ea. Remember “like unto the other worlds we have hitherto created.” Same thing here—following the heavenly pattern. As President Joseph F. Smith said, this earth in its natural state is exactly like the world that came from the hand of God, and it’s a duplicate of his own.¹⁰⁹ “The Lord Marduk took its measurements. [They are extremely important here.] He built the famous Midok. He built his own palace, the Eshar, the temple of Eridu, the first temple on earth, representing the earth itself at creation [notice the name of Eridu, eretz, earth...] after its pattern. The palace of Eshar which he built was thus the [model of] heaven itself... He caused Anu, Enlil, and Ea [the three degrees of glory] to come and occupy the temple for its dedication.”¹¹⁰

Likewise, as Barker describes, “the [Israelite] temple represented the Creation and the Creation was the true temple. The Holy of Holies with the divine throne and the angels behind the veil were the invisible creation; the great hall of the temple was the Garden of Eden, the visible creation.”¹¹¹ Nibley called the temple as a “scale-model of the universe,” a place for taking bearings on the cosmos and finding one’s place within it.¹¹²

There is evidence that the creation account of Genesis 1:1-2:4 was used in Israel’s temple liturgy before the Babylonian exile, paralleling the use of other creation accounts in New Year’s rites throughout the Near East.¹¹³ In fact, the very architecture of the Tabernacle and the temple of ancient Israel seems to have been a similitude based on Moses’ vision of the Creation.¹¹⁴ The requirement for such a likeness may have motivated differences between Moses’ creation account and those given in the book of Abraham and in modern temples,¹¹⁵ the form of the Genesis description having been shaped to advantage for teaching the pattern of temple building. Note the following reconstruction by Ginzberg:

God told the angels: On the first day of Creation, I shall make the heavens and stretch them out; so will Israel raise up the Tabernacle as the dwelling place of my Glory.¹¹⁶ On the second day I shall put a division between the terrestrial waters and the heavenly waters, so will [Moses] hang up a veil in the Tabernacle to divide the Holy Place and the Most Holy.¹¹⁷ On the third day I shall make the earth to put forth grass and herbs; so will he, in obedience to my commands, eat herbs on the first night of Passover and prepare shewbread before me.¹¹⁸ On the fourth day I shall make the luminaries; so he will stretch out a golden candlestick before me.¹¹⁹ On the fifth day I shall create the birds; so he will fashion the cherubim with outstretched wings.¹²⁰ On the sixth day I shall create man; so will Israel set aside a man from the sons of Aaron as high priest for my service.¹²¹

109 No source given.

110 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 10, p. 126; cf. E. A. Speiser, Creation Epic, 4, pp. 66-67.

111 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 18; cf. M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 3-4. See Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

112 H. W. Nibley, Meaning of Temple, pp. 14-15; cf. H. W. Nibley, Greatness, p. 301.

113 M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 17-18; S. D. Ricks, Liturgy.

114 M. Barker, Revelation, pp. 24-25. See Excursus 16: The Role of Revelation in Temple Building, p. 561.

115 See Endnote 2-7, p. 125.

116 Exodus 40:17-19.

117 Exodus 40:20-21. See Excursus 17: The Veil of the Temple, p. 564.

118 Exodus 12:8, 25:30.

119 Exodus 25:31-40, 37:17-24. See Endnote 3-49, p. 209.

120 Exodus 25:18-22, 37:6-9.

121 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:51; cf. W. Williams, Shadow; A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 54 n. 18, pp. 65-66 n. 57; Exodus 40:12-15. See Endnote 3-50, p. 209.

FIGURE 3-11. Holy of Holies in Solomon's Temple
Juan Bautista Villalpando, 1594-1605

From the ground unto above the door were cherubims and palm trees made, and on the wall of the temple.¹ The palm trees and pillars in the Holy of Holies in Solomon's temple can be seen as representing "a kind of stylized forest."² The angels on the walls may have represented God's heavenly council,³ or perhaps more generally the promise to the saints of communion with the "general assembly and church of the Firstborn,"⁴ whose presence in heaven is mirrored on earth by those who have attained "angelic" status through being admitted to the presence of the Lord. The same kind of imagery in a Christian setting is suggested by the Chapter House in Worcester Cathedral, England, with "traces of painted drapery and angels in the bays and remains of a Tree of Jesse curling around the central pillar."⁵ Writes Barker: "The outer part of the temple was 'the Holy Place,' meaning that it had been made holy, and it represented the visible world of ordinary human life. The sanctuary behind the curtain, however, was the invisible world of the angels[,] the 'Most Holy Place.'"⁶

Barker further explains: "The Hebrew words translated 'Most Holy' or 'Holy of Holies' do not mean simply a greater degree of holiness. They mean 'actively holy, imparting holiness.' 'The [tabernacle furnishings] shall be most holy' we read in Exodus, 'whatsoever touches them will become holy.'⁷ 'Most holy' was the transforming, consecrating state, the source of power; and 'holiness' was the transformed, consecrated state."⁸ "Most Holy Place" meant "that it was the source of the holiness that made the rest of creation holy. It was the presence of God."⁹

1 Ezekiel 41:20.

2 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 122.

3 M. B. Brown, Gate, p. 113.

4 D&C 107:19.

5 R. Rosewell, Paintings, p. 37, caption to Figure 39. See Endnote E-212, p. 755.

6 M. Barker, Angels, p. 13.

7 Exodus 30:29.

8 M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 21-22.

9 M. Barker, Angels, p. 13.

Exodus 40:33 describes how Moses completed the Tabernacle. The Hebrew text exactly parallels the account of how God finished Creation.¹²² Genesis Rabbah comments: "It is as if, on that day [i.e., the day the Tabernacle was raised in the wilderness], I actually created the world."¹²³

Fittingly, just as the first book of the Bible, Genesis, recounts the story of Adam and Eve being cast out from the Garden, its last book, Revelation, prophesies a permanent return to Eden for the sanctified.¹²⁴ In Eden, "there was no need for a temple—because Adam and Eve enjoyed the continual presence of God"—likewise, in John's vision "there was no temple in the Holy City, 'for its temple is the Lord God.'"¹²⁵ To reenter the Garden is to return to the original spiritual state of immortality and innocence through the atonement, and to know the oneness that existed at the dawn of Creation in an even more perfect manner.¹²⁶

122 Moses 3:1. See Endnote 3-52, p. 209. See also R. S. Hendel, Poetics of Myth, p. 163.

123 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 3:9, p. 35.

124 Revelation 22:1-5. See M. Barker, Revelation, pp. 327-333; R. D. Draper et al., Promises.

125 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, pp. 14-15. See Revelation 21:22.

126 See the overview of Moses 6, pp. 463-472. See Endnote 3-53, p. 209.

Moses 3: Text and Commentary

CHAPTER 3 (June–October 1830) THE SEVENTH DAY (PP. 151-153) THUS the ^aheaven and the earth were finished, and ^ball the host of them. 2 And ^aon the seventh day I, God, ended my work, and all things which I had made; and ^bI rested on the seventh day from all my work, and all things which I had made were finished, and I, God, saw that they were good; 3 And I, God, ^ablessed the seventh day, and ^bsanctified it; because that in it I had ^crested from all my work which I, God, had created and made. CREATED SPIRITUALLY (PP. 153-156) 4 ^aAnd now, behold, I say unto you, that ^bthese are the generations of the heaven and of the earth, when they were created, ^cin the day that I, the ^dLord God, made the heaven and the earth, 5 And ^aevery plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew. For I, the Lord God, ^bcreated all things, of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. For I, the Lord God, ^chad not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth. And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men; and not yet a man to till the ground; for ^din heaven created I them; and ^ethere was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air; CREATION OF ADAM (PP. 156-159) 6 But I, the Lord God, spake, and ^athere went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground. 7 And I, ^athe Lord God, formed man ^bfrom the dust of the ground, and ^cbreathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a ^dliving soul, the ^efirst flesh upon the earth, the ^ffirst man also; nevertheless, all things were before created; but spiritually were they created and made according to my word.	THE GARDEN OF EDEN (PP. 159-172) 8 And I, the Lord God, ^aplanted a garden ^beastward in ^cEden, and there ^dI put the man whom I had formed. 9 And out of the ground ^amade I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is ^bpleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And ^cit became also a living soul. For ^dit was spiritual in the day that I created it; for ^eit remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, ^fplanted the ^gtree of life also ^hin the midst of the garden, and also the ⁱtree of knowledge of good and evil. 10 And I, the Lord God, ^acaused a river to go out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads. 11 And I, the Lord God, called the name of the first ^aPison, and it compasseth the whole land of Havilah, ^bwhere I, the Lord God, created much gold; 12 And the gold of that land was good, and there was ^abdellium and the ^bonyx stone. 13 And the name of the second river was called ^aGihon; the same that compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia. 14 And the name of the third river was ^aHiddekel; that which goeth toward the east of ^bAssyria. And the fourth river was the ^cEuphrates. ONE TREE FORBIDDEN (PP. 173-176) 15 And I, the Lord God, ^atook the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden, ^bto dress it, and to keep it. 16 And I, the Lord God, commanded the man, saying: Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, 17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, ^athou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, ^bthou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but, remember that I forbid it, for ^cin the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.	ADAM NAMES ANIMALS (PP. 176-180) 18 And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten, that ^ait was not good that the man should be alone; wherefore, ^bI will make ^can help meet for him. 19 And ^aout of the ground I, the Lord God, formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and ^bcommanded that they should come unto Adam, to see what he would call them; and they were also ^cliving souls; for I, God, ^dbreathed into them the breath of life, and commanded that whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that should be the name thereof. 20 And ^aAdam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field; but as for Adam, ^bthere was not found an help meet for him. CREATION OF EVE (PP. 180-186) 21 And I, the Lord God, caused a ^adeep sleep to fall upon Adam; and he slept, and I ^btook one of his ribs and closed up the flesh in the stead thereof; 22 And ^athe rib which I, the Lord God, had taken from man, ^bmade I a woman, and ^cbrought her unto the man. 23 And ^aAdam said: This I know now is ^bbone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called ^cWoman, because she was ^dtaken out of man. 24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall ^acleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh. 25 And ^athey were both naked, the man and his wife, and ^bwere not ashamed.
--	---	--

1 Thus the heaven and the earth were finished, and all the host of them.

2 And on the seventh day I, God, ended my work, and all things which I had made; and I rested on the seventh day from all my work, and all things which I had made were finished, and I, God, saw that they were good;

1 a heaven. Note the change from the KJV plural “heavens” here and in v. 4.¹²⁷

b all the host of them. The idea is that the whole of creation is now organized and poised for action—all the actors and props are now in readiness for what will follow. Note the plural “hosts” in Abraham 5:1.

In modern English, the phrase is typically translated “all their array.” This reading preserves the sense of orderly, disciplined, and regimented arrangement conveyed by the underlying Hebrew.¹²⁸ Unfortunately, however, it obscures the military connotations associated with its use in most other Old Testament contexts.¹²⁹ This latter sense is usually still preserved in the KJV and, for example, in modern French and Spanish translations.¹³⁰

Zlotowitz explains that the common Old Testament phrase “host of the heavens” typically “refers to the celestial bodies, and occasionally refers to the angels.”¹³¹ Barker likewise sees an oblique reference in the term “host” to an account of the creation of “angels” or “sons of God” that appears to have been expurgated from some manuscripts of the Creation story during or after the Jewish exile.¹³² The Jewish sage Ramban goes further to specifically include “the souls of humanity” as part of the host of heaven.¹³³ Jolly has documented nine Umbrian-Roman Creation cycles, all suggesting that “Adam and Eve’s souls were made on Day One and stored away until later joined with their bodies in [Moses 3].” In these depictions, “Adam’s and Eve’s souls are shown as nude males and females, red and blue respectively, and in most they are surrounded by red and blue mandorlas [aureoles].”¹³⁴ Elder Joseph Fielding Smith similarly saw the host as including the organization and foreordination of spirits in premortal life.¹³⁵

2 a on the seventh day I, God, ended my work. Sarna notes that this phrase does not necessarily imply any divine action on the seventh day; thus the phrase could alternatively be given as: “by the seventh day I, God, had ended my work” or “on the seventh day I, God, declared my work ended.”¹³⁶ He further observes that: “The human institution of the Sabbath does not appear in the narrative. Indeed, the Hebrew noun Shabbat is absent, and we have only the verbal forms of the root... Nevertheless, there cannot be any doubt that the text provides the unspoken foundation for the future institution of the Sabbath. Not only is vocabulary of the present passage interwoven with other Pentateuchal references to the Sabbath,¹³⁷ but the connection with Creation is made explicit in the first version of the Ten Commandments, given in Exodus 20:8-11.... Through his weekly suspension of normal human activity, man

127 See Commentary 2:1-e, p. 95.

128 J. W. Wevers, Notes, p. 20.

129 F. Brown et al., Lexicon, pp. 838 d-839 a-c.

130 E.g., in French: “armée” = army (R. De Vaux, Bible, p. 18; L. Segond, Bible, p. 10); “milice” = militia (A. Chouraqui, Bible, p. 20). Likewise in Spanish: “huestes” = hosts (LDS book of Moses, 1993 edition).

131 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 80. For an example of the former sense, see Deuteronomy 4:19; for the latter, see 1 Kings 22:19.

132 M. Barker, Beyond, pp. 196-198; M. Barker, Timaeus, pp. 283-285; M. Barker, Temple Roots, pp. 80-81. See also M. Barker, Angel, pp. 4ff; K. Christensen, Paradigms, pp. 23-24; W. L. Lipscomb, Creation, 1, p. 118; LXX Deuteronomy 32:8 (C. Dogniez et al., Pentateuque, p. 844 and n; M. K. H. Peters, Deuteronomy, p. 37).

133 D. Blumenthal, Reading.

134 P. H. Jolly, Eve and Adam, p. 38.

135 J. F. Smith, Jr., Answers, 1966, 5:182-184. See also J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 May 1844, p. 365; Commentary 2:2-b, p. 99, 2:4-c, p. 101; Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540; overview of Moses 3, p. 136.

136 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 15.

137 Exodus 16:5, 22, 26; 23:12; 31:13-17; 34:21; 35:2; Leviticus 23:3.

2 And on the seventh day I, God, ended my work, and all things which I had made; and I rested on the seventh day from all my work, and all things which I had made were finished, and I, God, saw that they were good;

3 And I, God, blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it I had rested from all my work which I, God, had created and made.

imitates the divine pattern.”¹³⁸ Moreover, like other events in the story of Genesis, the scriptural account portrays the past as harbinger of the future. Writes Sailhamer: “At important points along the way, the author will return to the theme of God’s ‘rest’ as a reminder of what yet lies ahead.”¹³⁹ Later biblical writers continued to see a parallel between God’s ‘rest’ in Creation and the future ‘rest’ that awaits the faithful.”¹⁴⁰

In the book of Hebrews, readers are urged to enter into the “Lord’s rest.”¹⁴¹ Writes Thomas: “They had tarried too long in the foothills of spiritual experience. Having ‘tasted of the heavenly gift,... the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come,’¹⁴² they could no longer delay resuming the climb lest they lose the promise.... The promise that Paul refers to repeatedly is that same promise explained in Doctrine and Covenants 88:68-69: ‘Therefore, sanctify yourselves... and the days will come that you shall see [God]; for he will unveil his face unto you.’”¹⁴³

D&C 77:12 seems to imply that it was God’s work thus far, rather than the seventh day itself, that was sanctified. Additionally, the verse can be taken to say that the creation of man’s physical body took place at the beginning of the seventh day rather than the end of the sixth: “... as God made the world in six days, and on the seventh day he finished his work, and sanctified it, and also formed man out of the dust of the earth.” Because the verse seems to contradict the standard interpretation of Moses 2:26-27 as being an account of the physical creation of mankind, some have concluded that there is either a semantic or “grammatical ambiguity” in the revelation,¹⁴⁴ or perhaps some error of transcription, since “early manuscript copies of section 77 have not survived.”¹⁴⁵ Yet others argue for the view that Moses 2:26-27 is an account of the creation of the spirits of mankind.¹⁴⁶

b I rested. The theme of God’s rest recurs three times in this verse. Rather than speaking and working, here He blesses and sanctifies. Moreover, Sailhamer observes: “Unlike the other days of Creation,... the seventh day stands apart from the other six days in not having an account of its conclusion. It is this feature of the narrative that has suggested a picture of an eternal, divine ‘Sabbath’... Consequently, immediately after the narrative of the Fall,¹⁴⁷ ...the verb asah points to an interruption of God’s ‘Sabbath’” when, as a final act of Creation, He made coats of skin for Adam and Eve.”¹⁴⁸

3 a blessed the seventh day. The culmination of the week of divine activity is not an act of creation, but rather the blessing and sanctification of the day when Creation had ceased. Unlike the specific blessings to man and the animals given in Moses 2:22, 28, this blessing “is undefined and pertains to time itself... God, through His creativity, has already established His sovereignty over space; the idea here is that He is sovereign over time as well.”¹⁴⁹

138 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 14, 15.

139 Moses 3:15; 8:9; Genesis 8:4; Exodus 20:11; Deuteronomy 5:14; 12:10; 25:19.

140 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 39. See Psalm 95:11; Hebrews 3:11.

141 Hebrews 4:3, 10.

142 Hebrews 6:4-6.

143 M. C. Thomas, Hebrews, pp. 479-480.

144 S. E. Robinson et al., D&C Commentary, 2:347—e.g., perhaps “finished” should be taken as meaning “ended.”

145 L. W. Cook, Revelations, p. 312.

146 See Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

147 Moses 4:27.

148 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 38-39.

149 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 15.

3 And I, God, blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it I had rested from all my work which I, God, had created and made.

4 And now, behold, I say unto you, that these are the generations of the heaven and of the earth, when they were created, in the day that I, the Lord God, made the heaven and the earth,

- b sanctified it. To “sanctify” something is to declare it not merely good (as was done for the products of the six days of Creation) but rather to make it holy. From this perspective, Madsen explains, “far from [it] being a day of strict injunctions, which are joyless duties imposed on duties of the prior day, the Sabbath is the reward for, the outcome of, indeed the climax of all other preparatory creations. It is not an imposed stoppage. It is what all the preparation was designed for, and therefore it has great value. It was, indeed, made for man.”¹⁵⁰
- c rested from all my work. The term translated as “rested” fundamentally means “cessation,” “and implies... the celebration and completion of an accomplishment.”¹⁵¹
- 4 a And now, behold, I say unto you. This introductory phrase in Moses reinforces the interruption of narrative flow already apparent in KJV Genesis. Though typically seen as a clumsily exposed stitch in a narrative seam joining two separate accounts of Creation, there may be more editorial subtlety and skill shown here than what is immediately apparent. For example, Nibley has explained the apparent discontinuity between the previous narrative and the verses that follow as a purposive shift, regarding the Creation account as stage directions composed to accompany a ritual drama.¹⁵² In such a reading, as the previous verse closes the curtain on the drama’s prologue outlining the seven days of Creation, the narrator pauses to explain that all things were created spiritually prior to their natural appearance on the earth.¹⁵³ Following this interlude, the curtain reopens and we witness a change of scene: we are now viewing the details of the story of the creation of man not from the vantage point of heaven, but instead as it is seen from the Garden.¹⁵⁴

Sarna comments: “This change in perspective is signaled by the inversion [in Genesis and Abraham (though not in Moses)] of the regular sequence ‘heaven and earth’ in the opening sentence. The almost unique expression ‘earth and heaven’ suggests pride of place [in the account that follows] for terrestrial affairs.”¹⁵⁵ Thus, the account of Moses 3, which presupposes a knowledge of the preceding events of Creation, reiterates many of the themes in Moses 2 albeit with a terrestrial perspective—one that sets the context for the crucial events in Eden that will so radically alter the human condition.¹⁵⁶

- b these are the generations of the heaven and of the earth. As in its other occurrences, this formula is meant to introduce the story that follows, not to summarize the preceding account.¹⁵⁷ Moreover, the phrase “And the Gods came down” in Abraham 5:4¹⁵⁸ also seems to signal the beginning of a new narrative unit rather than the end of the former one. Thus, we might alternately punctuate this passage as follows: “... these are the generations of the heaven and the earth, when they were created: At the time that I, the Lord God, made the heaven and the earth...”¹⁵⁹

150 T. G. Madsen, Sabbath, p. 332; cf. R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 82; Mark 2:27.

151 B. T. Arnold, Genesis, p. 24.

152 H. W. Nibley, Myths, p. 42; cf. H. W. Nibley, Drama, p. 36.

153 Moses 3:4-5.

154 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 284; H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 72.

155 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 16.

156 Ibid., p. 16.

157 Ibid., pp. 48-49; V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 4-5, 151.

158 Paralleling the wording of Abraham 4:26-27.

159 Cf. R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 16.

4 And now, behold, I say unto you, that these are the generations of the heaven and of the earth, when they were created, in the day that I, the Lord God, made the heaven and the earth,

5 And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew. For I, the Lord God, created all things, of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. For I, the Lord God, had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth. And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men; and not yet a man to till the ground; for in heaven created I them; and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air;

Wenham observes that this introductory statement “not only links this cycle of narratives with those which follow,¹⁶⁰ but implies that the characters who appear in [Moses 3 and 4] are as real as the patriarchs.”¹⁶¹ generations. Friedman suggests that the term generations, which recurs ten additional times in Genesis as part of the phrase “these are the generations,” is more adequately translated as records: “The word is used both to introduce records of births¹⁶² and to introduce stories of events within a family¹⁶³ ... It thus means historical records, and usually family records.”¹⁶⁴

Using the same technique of “pearling” that is repeated throughout the Hexateuch,¹⁶⁵ the topic of mankind at the end of Moses 2 becomes the focus of the new unit.¹⁶⁶

- c in the day. This expression should not be taken as implying that everything was created in one day, but rather in the sense of “At the time that He made.”¹⁶⁷
- d Lord God. The consensus of most scholars is that the use of the divine name “Lord God” (as opposed to “God” in Moses 2) signals a different source for the text that follows.¹⁶⁸ However, this does not explain why a compound form of the name is used so frequently in this part of Moses/Genesis when all other portions of the book associated with the same source simply use “Lord.” One conjecture is that the two names have been conjoined in order to emphasize “the concept of a God whose sovereign control extends to both the material¹⁶⁹ and the moral¹⁷⁰ world.”¹⁷¹ Similarly, the compound name seems to simultaneously express the conviction that God was both the Creator of the world and the covenant partner of Israel.¹⁷² “YHWH reflects the divine as engaged with humankind.”¹⁷³

The compound name is notably missing in the dialogue between Eve and the serpent, who refers to Deity exclusively as Elohim (God).¹⁷⁴

- 5 a every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew. The passage beginning with this verse might be paraphrased as follows: “Before there were any troublesome weeds, before the cultivated grain was grown, before God caused the rain

160 E.g., Moses 6:8 or Genesis 11:27.

161 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 54.

162 As in Moses 6:8; cf. 6:5, 22 where the term “genealogy” is used.

163 As in Genesis 37:2.

164 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 16.

165 See, e.g., Moses 4:29, 5:1.

166 D. A. Dorsey, Structure, p. 49.

167 U. Cassuto, Documentary, p. 73. See Moses 2:5-e, p. 103.

168 R. E. Friedman, Who, pp. 81-83.

169 Moses 2.

170 Moses 3.

171 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 153. See also U. Cassuto, Documentary, pp. 15-41; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, pp. 87-89.

172 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 57.

173 T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 126; cf. pp. 143-144.

174 See Commentary 4:7-a, p. 251.

5 And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew. For I, the Lord God, created all things, of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. For I, the Lord God, had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth. And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men; and not yet a man to till the ground; for in heaven created I them; and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air; to fall, before man was commanded to till the ground, God made all things spiritually. He made man from the ground, planted a Garden for him, and put him there.” The details of the arrangement of the Garden will be described in the next few verses,¹⁷⁵ highlighting the careful design and planning involved. Once all this has been explained, the story will resume by repeating and elaborating God’s act in placing man in the Garden.¹⁷⁶

It appears that this passage is intended to do more than affirm the spiritual creation of plant life. While the “as not yet” pattern is a common opening to ancient creation accounts,¹⁷⁷ the Genesis/Moses version is unique in that it seems to indicate that the Fall, rather than the first act of Creation, is the principal transforming event with which the account is concerned. Consistent with this suggestion, Cassuto concludes that the primary function of the formula “every... before” is to foreshadow the requirement for human cultivation of the earth after the Fall. In support of this reading, Cassuto cites a connection between the initial absence of the plants (siah = shrub) of the field and herb (eshebh = grain) of the field mentioned here, and the later introduction of the thorns and thistles (interpreted as a particularization of siah) and herb of the field as a consequence of transgression in Moses 4:24.¹⁷⁸ From this perspective, the phrase could be seen as part of the opening bracket to the account that ends in 4:29,¹⁷⁹ serving to highlight the fact that neither the troublesome weeds (that depend on rain) nor the life-sustaining grains (that depend upon human cultivation) were to appear until after the Fall, when Adam and Eve were bereft of the fruit provided by the trees of the Garden.¹⁸⁰ From that point on, they would be obliged to till the ground by their own efforts and to call upon God to provide the rain on which the productivity of their fields would depend.¹⁸¹

- b created all things... spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. This statement affirms that a spiritual creation preceded the natural (physical) creation. By spiritual creation is meant the premortal creation of all things in their spiritual state, including the creation of Eden, and everything in it.¹⁸²
- c had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth... and not yet a man to till the ground. Water in the Garden was to be provided by natural irrigation and not by rain (v. 6). After the Fall, rain was provided to water the grain tilled by Adam and Eve.

Sailhamer senses an allusion to the coming flood narratives in this statement about the withholding of rain.¹⁸³ In Genesis 7:4, God reverses the words of Moses 3:5 when He says: “I will cause it to rain upon the earth.”

Active labor will be required of man within Eden, though not the same kind of labor that will be required when he begins to till the ground after the Fall.¹⁸⁴

175 Moses 3:8-14.

176 Moses 3:15ff.; cf. J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 44.

177 E.g., E. A. Speiser, Creation Epic, 1:1-2, pp. 60-61. See discussion in C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 43-47.

178 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 101-103.

179 See Commentary 4:29-c, p. 279; cf. Moses 5:1, 2 Nephi 2:19

180 Moses 3:9.

181 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, pp. 88-90. See also Commentary 3:5-c, p. 155 and 4:24-b, p. 271.

182 See the overview of Moses 3, pp. 134-135, 139-144; Commentary 3:9-a, p. 162; 3:9-e, p. 162.

183 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 40.

184 See Commentary 4:29-c, p. 279 and Moses 5:1. See also Moses 3:15-b, p. 173.

5 And every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew. For I, the Lord God, created all things, of which I have spoken, spiritually, before they were naturally upon the face of the earth. For I, the Lord God, had not caused it to rain upon the face of the earth. And I, the Lord God, had created all the children of men; and not yet a man to till the ground; for in heaven created I them; and there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air;

6 But I, the Lord God, spake, and there went up a mist from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground.

Gaon sees a distinction between “ground” (adamah) and “earth” (eretz) in that the former “has an agricultural connotation implying ‘soil,’ while... ‘earth’ is a geographical term meaning the world in general or specifically the land of Israel.”¹⁸⁵ Thus, in our verse: “had not caused it to rain upon... the earth” refers to the “world in general” while “not yet a man to till the ground” is speaking of the “cultivable soil” that will become the responsibility of Adam to work after he and Eve are forced to leave the Garden.

d in heaven created I them. Though some see Moses 2:26-27 as a reference to the creation of the spirits of mankind,¹⁸⁶ Elder Joseph Fielding Smith has commented: “There is no account of the creation of man or other forms of life when they were created as spirits. There is just the simple statement that they were so created before the physical creation. The statements in Moses 3:5 and Genesis 2:4 are interpolations thrown into the account of the physical creation, explaining that all things were first created in the spirit existence in heaven before they were placed upon this earth.”¹⁸⁷

e there was not yet flesh upon the earth, neither in the water, neither in the air. See Commentary 3:7-f, p. 159.

6 a there went up a mist from the earth. The English term “mist” seems out of place here, however evidence exists for a connection between the obscure Hebrew ʿed and the Akkadian edu, “flood, waves, swell.”¹⁸⁸ Thus one might translate this phrase alternately as: “a flow [or ‘spring’]¹⁸⁹ would well up from the ground and water the whole surface of the earth.”¹⁹⁰ This is consistent with being told later that “the Lord God caused a river to go out of Eden to water the garden.”¹⁹¹ Unlike the uncertain flows of the desert wadi which swelled when God provided rain and dried up when rain was withheld, the continuous flow of water from the deep assured the garden of unfailing fertility.¹⁹² Moreover, in connection with the account of man’s creation in v. 7, some commentators conclude that the resulting mixture of soil and water figuratively provided “the raw material with the proper consistency for being molded into man.”¹⁹³

185 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 90.

186 See Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

187 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1954, 1:75-76. For summaries of teachings about premortal life and the origin of the human spirit in early LDS thought, see V. Hale, Spirit; C. R. Harrell, Preexistence; B. T. Ostler, Preexistence; B. L. Top, Life Before. See also Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540.

188 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 155.

189 R. J. V. Hiebert, Septuagint, p. 2.

190 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 17.

191 Commentary 3:10-a, p. 170.

192 Cf. JSR Genesis 13:10; U. Cassuto, Documentary, p. 104.

193 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 17; contrast C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 203-207. See also Commentary 3:7-c, p. 157.

7 And I, the Lord God, formed man from the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul, the first flesh upon the earth, the first man also; nevertheless, all things were before created; but spiritually were they created and made according to my word.

- 7 a the Lord God, formed man. The point being made here is that God provided a body made of earthly elements for the preexistent spirits of Adam and Eve.¹⁹⁴ The process by which this was done is left obscure. As Elder Packer wrote: “We are told that [the account of the Creation] is figurative insofar as the man and the woman are concerned.”¹⁹⁵

The wording of the scriptural account implies that God was involved in a more personal way in the forming of man than He was in the rest of the creation.¹⁹⁶ Accordingly, scriptures and statements of Church leaders have frequently been adduced to argue that Adam was born of divine parentage in a very literal sense.¹⁹⁷ However, the scriptures are not consistent on this point. For example, in 1830 the Prophet translated Moses 6:22, which referred to a “genealogy of the sons of Adam, who was the son of God.” However, a little over a year later he modified a similar KJV New Testament genealogical account (“Adam, who was the son of God”) to read “Adam, who was formed of God.”¹⁹⁸ Moreover, Moses 6:8 and 6:68 could be taken as support of the view that 6:22 is meant to describe a covenant relationship rather than only a physical descent. Regarding the manner in which the bodies of Adam and Eve were created, President Spencer W. Kimball said, “We don’t know exactly how their coming into this world happened, and when we’re able to understand it the Lord will tell us.”¹⁹⁹ As Draper concludes: “Genesis, Moses, and Abraham preserve the ‘official’ account of humankind’s entrance into the world as revealed by God. He has not seen fit to reveal more.”²⁰⁰

Like Genesis, the Mandaean Ginza implies that the supreme deity, Manda d-Hiia, was personally required to cast the spirit into Adam, as the seven creators assisting him were unable to do this.²⁰¹

man. See Commentary 2:26-b, p. 112.

- b from the dust of the ground. In simple terms, Elder McConkie took this to mean that “the physical body which [Adam] received was created from the elements of the earth.”²⁰² Moses 6:59 elaborates by saying that man was “born into the world by water, and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul.”

The term “dust” reappears in vv. 20 (“dust shalt thou eat”) and 25 (“dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return”), connoting in all cases weakness and mortality. However, several passages in the Old Testament all “speak of an exaltation from the dust, with the dust representing either pre-royal status,²⁰³ poverty,²⁰⁴ or death.”²⁰⁵

194 H. J. Grant et al., Evolution; J. F. Smith et al., Origin.

195 B. K. Packer, Law and Light, p. 11.

196 See Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

197 E.g., H. L. Andrus, Doctrinal (Rev.), pp. 144-147; R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, pp. 214-216.

198 JST Luke 3:45. See also discussion in R. D. Draper, Allegory, p. 27.

199 S. W. Kimball, Blessings, p. 72.

200 R. D. Draper, Allegory, p. 82. See Appendix for statements regarding the origin of man.

201 GR 3:1. See W. Barnstone et al., Gnostic, pp. 543-548; W. Barnstone, Other, pp. 134-138; W. Foerster, Gnosis, 187-192; E. Lupieri, Mandaeans, pp. 187-191.

202 B. R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, p. 209.

203 1 Kings 16:2.

204 1 Samuel 2:8; Psalm 113:7.

205 Isaiah 26:19; Daniel 12:2. See V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 158.

7 And I, the Lord God, formed man from the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul, the first flesh upon the earth, the first man also; nevertheless, all things were before created; but spiritually were they created and made according to my word.

Note the word play here in the sequence of three Hebrew words: “mist/flow” (‘ed), “man” (‘adam) and “ground” (‘adamah).²⁰⁶ “The verb ‘formed’ (Hebrew va-yitser) is frequently used of the action of a potter (yotser), so that man’s creation is portrayed in terms of God molding the clayey soil into shape and then animating it. This image is widespread in the ancient world [and is explicit in Job 4:19; 33:6].... [It] simultaneously expresses both the glory and the insignificance of man. Man occupies a special place in the hierarchy of Creation and enjoys a unique relationship with God by virtue of being the work of God’s own hands and being directly animated by God’s own breath. At the same time, he is but dust taken from the earth, mere clay in the hands of the divine Potter, who exercises absolute mastery over His Creation.”²⁰⁷ Jewish sages also saw a parallel between the making of man and the making of dough offering (hallāh).²⁰⁸

- c breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Biblical and Egyptian sources associate the receiving of divine breath not merely with an infusion of life, but also with royal status.²⁰⁹ Williams cites texts that compare this action with the process by which idols were “‘incarnated’ by the divine spirit, the so-called mīs pī (= Washing-of-the-mouth) or pit pī (= Opening-of-the-mouth) ritual.”²¹⁰

It is significant that the book of Moses adds a similar phrase to describe the creation of animals.²¹¹ However, man and beast differ in that the former is created in the image of God and is given dominion over the animals.

The Prophet Joseph Smith said that: “The 7th verse of 2nd chapter of Genesis ought to read—God breathed into Adam his spirit [i.e., Adam’s spirit] or breath of life; but when the word ‘ruach’ applies to Eve, it should be translated lives.”²¹² The year previous, a related statement about Adam had been incorporated into the translation of Abraham 5:7: “And the Gods formed man from the dust of the ground, and took his spirit (that is, the man’s spirit), and put it into him; and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.”

In Genesis, two Hebrew words *nishma*²¹³ and *ruach*²¹⁴ are associated with the “breath of life,” although the argument that these terms imply the concept of a distinct spirit entity is by no means universally accepted in Judaism.²¹⁵ While ruach is applied to God, man, and animals, the use of nishma is reserved for God and man alone.²¹⁶ Curiously, “the word ruach does not appear in [Genesis 2:7] nor in Genesis 3:20, where the name Eve (Chavvah, meaning life-giving) appears. It is clear why Joseph Smith used the word ruach in connection with Genesis 2:7, but his use of this word in connection with Genesis 3:20 is not so clear. Possibly he wanted to emphasize Eve’s role as lives-giver, which coincides with the usage of lives [that would]... appear in the revelation on eternal marriage.”²¹⁷

206 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 17.

207 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 17.

208 Numbers 15:20. See J. Neusner, Confronting, 14:1, pp. 70-72.

209 E.g., Lamentations 4:20. See V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 158-159.

210 W. Williams, Shadow.

211 Moses 3:19.

212 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 17 May 1843, p. 301.

213 E.g., Genesis 2:7; 7:22.

214 E.g., Genesis 6:17; 7:15, 22.

215 N. Gillman, Death, pp. 75-78.

216 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 159.

217 J. Smith, Jr., Words, p. 281 n. 4. See D&C 132:22-24.

7 And I, the Lord God, formed man from the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul, the first flesh upon the earth, the first man also; nevertheless, all things were before created; but spiritually were they created and made according to my word.

8 And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there I put the man whom I had formed.

- d living soul. D&C 88:15 explains that “the spirit and the body are the soul of man.” The book of Moses explains that man, the trees,²¹⁸ and the animals²¹⁹ in the Garden became “living souls” once the result of their prior spiritual creation was combined with natural elements. However, the fact that the trees of the garden became “living souls” does not necessarily imply that each tree possessed an individual spirit in the same sense that man and animals do.²²⁰

Consistent with LDS teachings about the resurrection of animals, the Armenian Life of Adam and Eve reports that just as Adam will live again and will be anointed with the “oil of joy,” so “it shall happen in the same fashion to all the wild beasts of the earth, who will arise in resurrection and be worthy of entering the Garden. [God] shall anoint them with that oil.”²²¹

- e first flesh upon the earth. This verse has long been an interpretive problem for LDS readers, since at face value the phrase seems to be saying that man’s appearance on earth preceded that of the animals—and thus implying that man’s body was formed through “special creation.”²²² However, adopting the most common way this verse has been understood in recent times, Draper et al., comment: “‘Flesh’ here, of course, refers to mortality—Adam was the first mortal human being on the earth.”²²³ This interpretation is consistent with the majority of scriptural references to the term “flesh.”²²⁴ Elder Joseph Fielding Smith agreed, arguing that the phrase should not be interpreted to mean that animal life was not present on earth prior to Adam’s coming to live there.²²⁵
- f first man also. The First Presidency stated in 1909: “Adam, our progenitor, ‘the first man,’ was, like Christ, a preexistent spirit, and like Christ he took upon him an appropriate body, the body of a man, and so became a ‘living soul’... The word of the Lord declares that Adam was the ‘first man of all men,’²²⁶ and we are therefore in duty bound to regard him as the primal parent of our race. It was shown to the brother of Jared that all men were created in the beginning after the image of God;²²⁷ and whether we take this to mean the spirit or the body, or both, it commits us to the same conclusion: Man began life as a human being, in the likeness of our heavenly Father.”²²⁸
- 8 a planted a garden. This verse should not be read as a second version of the account of the creation of vegetation found in Moses 2. Westermann explains that this verse “is not a narrative about the creation of plants, but about the provision of nourishment for the human creatures”—specifically, the fruit trees of the Garden of Eden.²²⁹

218 Moses 3:9.

219 Moses 3:19.

220 D&C 77:2; cf. Commentary 3:5-b, p. 155. See Endnote 3-10, p. 199.

221 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 42:4, p. 45E.

222 E.g., O. Pratt, 12 November 1879, pp. 200-201.

223 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 223; cf. Moses 3:5. See Endnote 3-56, p. 210.

224 E.g., 2 Nephi 4:34; 28:31; Jeremiah 17:5; Isaiah 40:6; 1 Nephi 22:23; Galatians 5:19; 1 John 2:16. A notable exception is a mention of the resurrected body of Christ in Luke 24:39. See R. J. Matthews, Fall, pp. 47-48.

225 J. F. Smith, Jr., Origin, p. 328.

226 Moses 1:34.

227 Ether 3:15.

228 J. F. Smith et al., Origin, p. 205. For the full statement, along with other statements of Presidents of the Church and accompanying background information, see Appendix, pp. 785-802.

229 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 208.

8 And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there I put the man whom I had formed.

garden. The Garden of Eden is a prototype for the temple,²³⁰ and appears to be patterned after a heavenly predecessor.²³¹ Thus, scriptural references to “the Garden of the Lord”²³² and “the Garden of God”²³³ may apply in most cases equally well to both Eden and to its heavenly counterpart—a situation that leads to confusion in some sources.²³⁴ As to the Garden of Eden, Hamilton concludes that: “[God] is its planter, but not its occupant.”²³⁵ It was created specifically for Adam and Eve.²³⁶

- b eastward. To an ancient reader in the Mesopotamian milieu, the phrase “eastward in Eden” could be taken as meaning that the garden sits at the dawn horizon—the meeting place of heaven and earth. The pseudepigraphal Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan skillfully paints such a picture: “On the third day, God planted the Garden in the east of the earth, on the border of the world eastward, beyond which, towards the sun-rising, one finds nothing but water, that encompasses the whole world, and reaches unto the borders of heaven.”²³⁷ This idea corresponds to the Egyptian akhet, the specific place where the sun god rose every morning and returned every evening, and also to the Mandaean “ideal world” which was held to hang “between heaven and earth.”²³⁸ The Chinese K'un-lun also “appears as a place not located on the earth, but poised between heaven and earth.”²³⁹ The gardens of Gilgamesh and the Ugaritic Baal and Mot were liminally located at the “edges of the world” or, in other words, “at the borders between the divine and the human world.”²⁴⁰ Similarly, 2 Enoch locates paradise “between the corruptible [earth] and the incorruptible [heaven].”²⁴¹

By its very nature, the horizon is not a final end point, but rather a portal, a place of two-way transition between the heavens and the earth. Writes Nibley: “Egyptians... never... speak of [the land beyond the grave] as an earthly paradise; it is only to be reached by the dead.’ ... [It] is neither heaven nor earth but lies between them... In a Hebrew Enoch apocryphon, the Lord, in visiting the earth, rests in the Garden of Eden and, moving in the reverse direction, passes through ‘the Garden to the firmament’²⁴² ... Every transition must be provided with such a setting, not only from here to heaven, but in the reverse direction in the beginning.”²⁴³ “The passage from world to world and from horizon to horizon is dramatized in the ordinances of the temple, which itself is called the horizon.”²⁴⁴ Situating this concept with respect to the story of Adam and Eve, the idea is that the Garden “was placed between heaven and earth, below the firmament [i.e., the celestial world] and above the earth [i.e., the terrestrial world], and that God placed it there... so that, if [Adam] kept [God’s] commands He might lift him up to heaven, but if he transgressed them, He might cast him down to this earth.”²⁴⁵ Suggestions for physically locating Eden include: “a region [on Earth] where an immortal, paradisiacal condition prevailed in contrast to the rest of the mortal earth,”²⁴⁶ a separate

230 D. W. Parry, Garden,

231 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 65-66; J. H. Walton, Ancient, pp. 124-125; J. F. Smith, 18 June 1882, p. 175.

232 Genesis 13:10; Isaiah 51:3.

233 Ezekiel 28:13, 31:9.

234 E.g., J. Tromp, Literary, pp. 30, 34abe.

235 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 161; cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 298.

236 For more on Eden, see the overview of Moses 3, pp. 139-144.

237 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:1, p. 1.

238 E. S. Drower, Mandaeans, p. 56; E. Lupieri, Mandaeans, p. 128.

239 J. S. Major, Heaven, p. 156.

240 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 285-286.

241 F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 8:5, p. 116; cf. p. 116 n. 1.

242 See P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 5:5, p. 260. See Endnote 3-57, p. 210.

243 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 294-295. See also H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, pp. 198-199.

244 Siegfried Schott, cited in H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, p. 199.

245 Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 15, p. 20.

246 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 227.

8 And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there I put the man whom I had formed.

place of a higher (terrestrial) order, realm or “sphere,” and/or a setting of an indefinite nature blending figurative and physical elements.²⁴⁷

Eastward orientation is not only associated with the rising sun, but also with its passage from east to west as a metaphor for time.²⁴⁸ The Hebrew phrase mi-kedem (‘in the east’) in the Genesis account could also be translated “in the beginning” or “in primeval times.”²⁴⁹ Likewise, for the Egyptians, the West, the direction of sunset, was the land of the dead—hence the many tombs built on the west bank of the Nile.

Eastward may also refer to the Garden of Eden’s position relative to the Creator. The initial separation of Adam and Eve from God occurs when they are removed from His presence to be placed in the Garden “eastward in Eden”²⁵⁰—that is, east of the “mountain” where, in some representations of the sacred geography of Paradise, He is said to dwell. Such an interpretation also seems to be borne out in later events, as eastward movement is repeatedly associated with increasing distance from God.²⁵¹ For example, after God’s voice of judgment visits them “from the west,”²⁵² Adam and Eve experience an additional degree of separation when they are expelled through the Garden’s eastern gate.²⁵³ Cain was “shut out from the presence of the Lord” as he resumed the journey eastward to dwell “in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden,”²⁵⁴ a journey that eventually continued “from the east” to the “land of Shinar” where the Tower of Babel was constructed.²⁵⁵ Finally, Lot traveled east toward Sodom and Gomorrah when he separated himself from Abraham.²⁵⁶ On the other hand, Abraham’s subsequent “return from the east is [a] return to the Promised Land and... the city of ‘Salem,’²⁵⁷ being “directed toward blessing.”²⁵⁸ The Magi of the Nativity likewise came “from the east” to Bethlehem.²⁵⁹

- c Eden. “The name [Eden] has been derived from the Sumerian edinu, ‘a plain,’ but an Aramaic-Akkadian bilingual inscription suggests that the real meaning is ‘luxuriance,’²⁶⁰ or “abundance,” more specifically an abundance of life-enriching water.²⁶¹ “The idea is that man’s food was ever ready at hand. The attractive, nutritious, and delectable qualities of the fruit are stressed with the next episode in mind. The human couple will not be able to plead deprivation as the excuse for eating the forbidden fruit.”²⁶²

The ideas of luxuriance and plenty bring to mind the prominent place-name “Bountiful” in the Book of Mormon²⁶³—in fact, the probable site of the Old World Bountiful was reputed to be a place of such great abundance that its inhabitants were denounced by Islamic Hud traditions for their “attempt to create an earthly replica of paradise.”²⁶⁴ Similarly, the word

247 See the overview of Moses 3, pp. 139-144.

248 N. Wyatt, Space, pp. 35-52; cf. Philo, Questions on Genesis, 1:7, p. 5.

249 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 261-270; cf. Habakkuk 1:12.

250 Moses 3:8.

251 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 41-42; T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 267-268.

252 See Commentary 4:14-c, p. 259.

253 Moses 4:31.

254 Moses 5:41.

255 Genesis 11:2.

256 Genesis 13:11.

257 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 59 and Genesis 14:17-20. For statements attributed to the Prophet Joseph Smith regarding Adam and Eve’s location and movements after the Fall, see Figure 6-2, p. 457.

258 T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 117.

259 Matthew 2:1. See Figure E53-5, p. 673 and Excursus 53: The Cave of Treasures, p. 674.

260 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 18.

261 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 257-261.

262 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 18.

263 E.g., 1 Nephi 17:5; Alma 22:29-31.

264 W. J. Hamblin, Prophets, pp. 137, 146-147, 155 n. 52; G. Potter et al., Lehi, p. 126; Qur’ān 2:25, 26:128, 134, 46:21.

8 And I, the Lord God, planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there I put the man whom I had formed.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

“Nauvoo,” which appeared in Seixas’ Hebrew textbook in a Sephardic transliteration as one form of the verb na’ah, means “to be comely.”²⁶⁵

- d I put the man. The phrase implies that Adam’s creation had taken place somewhere other than the Garden of Eden itself. The location of the temple mount is often mentioned.²⁶⁶ The Pirkei de Rabbi Eliezer explains the symbolism: “The Holy One, blessed be He, showed to the first man a surfeit of love by creating him at a pure place—the location of the Temple—and in introducing him into His palace [i.e., the Garden of Eden].”²⁶⁷ A targum likewise records that “the Lord God took Adam from the mountain of worship, the place whence he had been created, and made him dwell in the Garden of Eden to labor in the law, and to keep its commandments.”²⁶⁸ Jubilees says that Adam and Eve were introduced into the Garden forty (Adam) and eighty (Eve) days after their creation, consistent with temple laws of purity.²⁶⁹
- 9 a made... to grow every tree, naturally. The sense of the additions made by Joseph Smith might be paraphrased as follows: “All the beautiful trees were made to grow naturally so that man could see them and enjoy their fruit. Because they were spiritual at the time they were created and remained in that ‘sphere,’ they also became ‘living souls.’ Similarly, everything else that had been prepared for man’s use originally was spiritual.”²⁷⁰
- b pleasant to the sight of man; and... good for food. These words anticipate the later temptation of Eve.²⁷¹ Elder B. H. Roberts argued that this statement meant to include the Tree of Knowledge among the trees that were good for food.²⁷² However, so far as I have been able to ascertain, he is alone in this view.
- c it became also a living soul. OT1 reads “they became also a living soul.”²⁷³ A substitution of “it” for “they” appears in the hand of Sidney Rigdon in OT2.²⁷⁴
- d it was spiritual in the day that I created it. See the overview of Moses 3, pp. 134-135, 139-144 and Commentary 3:9-e, p. 162.
- e it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it. Lehi explained in similar words that had it not been for the Fall, “All things which were created must have remained in the state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end.”²⁷⁵ However, in the book of Moses, the use of the term “sphere” introduces an additional nuance of meaning to this idea. Inferring the meaning from Joseph Smith’s usage 265 Isaiah 52:7; Song of Solomon 1:10; K. L. Barney, Nauvoo. See also H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, pp. 200-201. Ezekiel 28:13, 31 further describe the beauty of Paradise.

266 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 94; Commentary 4:25-c, p. 273.

267 M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliezer, 12, p. 82.

268 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 2:15, p. 23. See also Commentary 3:15-a, p. 173.

269 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 3:8-12, p. 59. See Leviticus 12:1-6, where the purity laws are applied only to the mother. See M. Barker, Christmas, p. 37.

270 See Commentary 3:5-b, p. 155, 3:7-e, p. 159, and the overview of Moses 3, pp. 134-135.

271 See Commentary 4:12-a, p. 255; cf. D&C 59:18.

272 B. H. Roberts, The Truth, p. 341.

273 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 89.

274 Ibid., p. 598; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 74. See Commentary 3:7-e, p. 159.

275 2 Nephi 2:22. See Endnote 3-11, p. 199.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

elsewhere,²⁷⁶ the term refers either to an orbit of a heavenly body or an area of activity, power, or influence—connotations that may be seen as near synonyms given the cosmology of Abraham 3.²⁷⁷ Taken together with other references in the book of Abraham, an implication of the text seems to be that the location of where the Fall took place was somewhere in the vicinity of Kolob, which signifies, according to the book of Abraham, “the first creation, nearest to the celestial, or the residence of God.”²⁷⁸

f planted. OT1 reads “placed,”²⁷⁹ a closer parallel to the term put used to describe how Adam came into the Garden.²⁸⁰ The change to “planted” is in the script of Sidney Rigdon.²⁸¹

g tree of life. Elder Bruce R. McConkie wrote that the Tree of Life “figuratively refers to eternal life”²⁸²—in whatever degree, of course, those who partake are qualified to receive it.²⁸³ Nephi referred to the Tree of Life as a manifestation of the “love of God,” which is “the most desirable above all things,” to which the angel rejoined, “Yea, and the most joyous to the soul.”²⁸⁴ Regarding the idea of a tree as a representation of life, earth, and heaven, Stordalen writes: “Every green tree would symbolize life, and a large tree—rooted in deep soil and stretching towards the sky—potentially makes a cosmic symbol.”²⁸⁵

It should be emphasized that the Tree of Life does not represent eternal life merely in an abstract sense, but rather as a symbol of embodied deity. Thomas explains that “most often in scripture... the tree is an anthropomorphic symbol. A tree serves well as such a symbol because it has, after all, limbs, a circulatory system, the bearing of fruit, and so forth. Specifically, scriptural trees stand for Christ and his attributes.”²⁸⁶ Wyatt concurs, noting that: “The trees are... messianic symbols. The Menorah is probably what Moses is understood to have seen as the burning bush in Exodus 3.”²⁸⁷ Thus, Jehovah, the premortal Jesus Christ, was represented to Moses as one who dwells in the midst of the burning glory of the Tree of Life.²⁸⁸

Going further, there is a sense that such trees can represent not only Deity but also humans who have, through temple rites of investiture,²⁸⁹ become kings.²⁹⁰ The same concept applies

276 See the overview of Moses 3, p. 139.

277 See especially Abraham 3:9, 16.

278 Book of Abraham Facsimile 2, explanation for Figure 1; cf. Kirtland Egyptian Papers, KEPE 1, Grammar and Alphabet, pp. 27-28—see also pp. 30, 32, 34). See Excursus 18: Kolob, p. 565.

279 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 89.

280 Moses 2:8.

281 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 598; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 74.

282 B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 86; cf. A. Gileadi, Studies, p. 10; B. C. Hafen, Broken, p. 30; Vos, cited in V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 209 n. 6.

283 See D&C 88:28-32; R. J. Matthews, Probationary Nature, p. 56.

284 1 Nephi 11:22-23.

285 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 288-289.

286 M. C. Thomas, Jacob's Allegory, p. 13. See also J. W. Miller, Tree.

287 N. Wyatt, Space, p. 169. Wyatt also makes the intriguing (but seemingly far-fetched) suggestion that the duality of the two trees “fits the late Jewish idea of two messiahs” (ibid., p. 167).

288 See Endnote 3-54, p. 210. Related tree symbology appears in many other cultures. See, e.g., E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree; B. Gardner, Second Witness, 1:153-169; J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 204-221; T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 230ff., 291-294, 429ff., 459ff. for in-depth discussions.

289 See, e.g., the discussion of Psalm 110 in M. Barker, Who was Melchizedek.

290 Cf. Daniel 4:20, 22: “The tree... is thou, O king.” See also Commentary 4:13-b, p. 258; Judges 9:7-21; E. D.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

in a more general way to all the righteous who are ultimately destined to share the same status.²⁹¹ Wyatt writes that “the tree is... a royal symbol... An essential element in royal ideology is the secret knowledge to which the king becomes privy during the royal ascent at his enthronement. The importance of the tree in symbolic geography is particularly clear in this passage: this is a huge structure holding up the sky, as the axis mundi... The king is represented as himself the axis mundi. Although the figure is probably based primarily on biblical conceptions, it also corresponds remarkably closely to Assyrian ones, undoubtedly held in common with Babylonian ideology. An important iconographic motif in Assyria shows the king tending the Tree of Life. The royal palace at Nineveh had panels with reliefs of the cult of the tree surrounding the throne room. The king was thus represented precisely as Adam, who walked in the garden.”²⁹²

The Tree of Life has often been specifically “associated or identified with [the Ugaritic goddess] Asherah, the divine mother of the king” as well as Mary, the mother of Jesus²⁹³—perhaps symbolizing both the mother herself and also, more generally, the “act of divine supply.”²⁹⁴ The figure of the dove, also associated with mother-goddess figures in the ancient Near East,²⁹⁵ is connected to symbol of the date-palm as a Tree of Life (see below). In the Genesis Apocryphon, Abraham dreams of a cedar and a date-palm, respectively symbolizing himself and his wife.²⁹⁶ The Mandaean Book of John the Baptist identifies Mary with a vine or tree which stands at the mouth of the life-giving waters.²⁹⁷ The symbolic association of the Tree of Life with the divine mother may help explain the terminology of Christian traditions that stressed the responsibility of Joseph—the husband of Mary, the mother of Jesus—to “guard/keep” her.²⁹⁸ In this connection, Gallez observes that: “The word virgin, ‘almah, derives from a stem originally meaning ‘guard, keep.’”²⁹⁹

Ancient commentators often identify the Tree of Life with the olive tree.³⁰⁰ Its extremely long life makes it a fitting symbol for eternal life, and the everyday use of the oil as a source of both nourishment for man and fuel for light evokes natural associations when used in Clark, Cedars; T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 89-92, 100-101, 291. Cf. Adam and Eve as “saplings” destined to become “cedars of Lebanon” in D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit, 1:35a-b, pp. 220-222.

291 E.g., Psalm 1:1-3, 92:11-12; Matthew 7:17; D&C 97:9; J. H. Charlesworth, Odes, 11:16-19, p. 745. See also J. H. Charlesworth, Concept of Resurrection, p. 4, commenting on a Qumran text (F. G. Martinez, Hymns, 16:5-6, p. 345).

292 N. Wyatt, Space, p. 170. See also E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, passim.

293 Ibid., p. 170; cf. 1 Nephi 11:8-22; M. Barker, Joseph Smith, p. 76; M. Cazenave, Encyclopédie, p. 44; D. C. Peterson, Asherah 1998; D. C. Peterson, Asherah 2000; H. Schwartz, Tree, p. 50; cf. Qurʾān 19:23-26; A. at-Tabatabaʾi, Al-Mizan, 6:146.

294 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 289; cf. Egyptian tree imagery connected with Hathor, Nut, and Isis (see, e.g., J. O. Ryén, Mandaean Vine, pp. 205-206; A. Roberts, My Heart, pp. 26-27 and passim).

295 K. van der Toorn et al., Dictionary, p. 263.

296 F. G. Martinez, Genesis Apocryphon, p. 232; cf. Psalm 92:12.

297 Here the Euphrates, in other places such vines are placed near the Jordan, evoking the imagery of baptism associated with the latter site (G. R. S. Mead, Mandaean John-Book, 35, pp. 65-67; see also J. J. Buckley, Mandaeanes, pp. 50-53; J. O. Ryén, Mandaean Vine, pp. 58-61, 221).

298 See T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 290-291; M. Barker, Infancy Gospel of James 1:13, p. 156. Cf. the cult of Diana Nemorensis (see, e.g., J. T. Dyson, King).

299 É.-M. Gallez, Le Messie, p. 206; cf. Commentary 3:15-b, p. 173. For more on the symbolism of the Tree of Life, see Figure 3-10, p. 147; overview of Moses 4, pp. 227ff; Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

300 C. W. Griggs, Tree of Life; S. D. Ricks, Olive, pp. 464-466; J. A. Tvedtnes, Olive Oil, pp. 429-430.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

conjunction with the ritual anointing of priests and kings, and the blessing of the sick.³⁰¹ Egyptian texts sometimes describe the ished-tree from which Osiris was freed³⁰² as being an olive tree. According to Nibley: “In early times Ptah, Horus, Seth, and Thoth all enjoyed the epithet, ‘he who possesses life beneath his olive tree.’”³⁰³ Extracanonical literature recounts that on his sickbed Adam requested Eve and Seth to return to the Garden to retrieve oil from the “tree of his mercy.”³⁰⁴ Recalling the story of the dove that returned to Noah’s ark with the olive branch in its mouth, one rabbinical opinion gives it that the “gates of the Garden of Eden opened for the dove, and from there she brought it.”³⁰⁵ Nibley cites a relevant passage from Cyril’s lectures on the mysteries: “Having [like Adam] been cut off from the wild olive tree, you are driven (goaded) toward the good olive tree, that you might become sharers in the fatness of the true olive.”³⁰⁶ Two days after a revelation telling how war was to be “poured out upon all nations,” Joseph Smith designated D&C 88, by way of contrast, as the “olive leaf... plucked from the Tree of Paradise, the Lord’s message of peace to us.”³⁰⁷

Of course, the Tree of Life has been identified with other trees as well.³⁰⁸ For instance, a tall tree with leaves like the carob or the cypress and bearing clusters of fruit like white grapes is sometimes mentioned.³⁰⁹ White grapes seen in a dream (as opposed to black ones) are seen in the Zohar as a “good omen,” signifying “that Judgment has already been softened by compassionate care and tending.”³¹⁰ The “almond tree is the first tree of spring in the Near East, sometimes waking as early as mid-December, when it decks itself in radiant white... an ideal image of life [and] resurrection... whose fruit... has been described as ‘perfect.’”³¹¹ Joseph Smith, Sr. had a vision in which he saw a tree that was “exceedingly handsome,” with “beautiful branches [that] spread themselves somewhat like an umbrella, and [which] bore a kind of fruit, in shape much like a chestnut bur, and as white as snow, or, if possible whiter.”³¹²

The date palm is the sacred tree in Assyrian mythology, and its longevity was a fitting symbol for long life to the Egyptians, being “called ba, like the immortal part of the soul,” which could also be represented by a bird.³¹³ The Old Testament Deborah rendered judgment as she dwelt under a palm tree,³¹⁴ and the temples of Solomon and of Ezekiel’s vision were decorated with palms.³¹⁵ As a sign of victory and kingship, palm fronds were a central 301 T. G. Madsen, Gethsemane; T. G. Madsen, Sacrament, p. 97; J. A. Tvedtnes, Olive Oil, p. 429.

302 Cf. Figure 4-13, p. 231; Commentary 4:14-d, p. 260; Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall,” p. 632; Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663. See Endnote 4-50, p. 312.

303 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 291. The ished is usually identified as the Persea (R. H. Wilkinson, Art, p. 117).

304 Cf. G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Latin 36:2, p. 40E; M. D. Johnson, Life, 36:2, p. 272 & 9:3, p. 273; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 36:1-3, pp. 39-40; overview of Moses 6, p. 462.

305 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 33:6, p. 351; cf. Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42, 2:2-c, p. 97; 4:5-b, p. 246. See Endnote E-204, p. 754.

306 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, 2.3, p. 519; cf. Cyril of Jerusalem, Five, 2:3, p. 147.

307 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 14 January 1833, p. 18.

308 M. E. Stone, Fall of Satan, p. 50.

309 M. Barker, Joseph Smith, p. 76; cf. H.-G. Bethge et al., Origin, 110:15-16, p. 179; R. Milstein, Stories and Illustrations, p. 107; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 32:4, p. 320. See Endnote E-113, p. 729.

310 D. C. Matt, Zohar 3, Va-Yeshev 1:192a, p. 173 and p. 173n. 555.

311 Yarden, cited in M. B. Brown et al., Symbols, pp. 87-88 n. 141.

312 L. M. Smith, Lucy’s Book, pp. 297-298; cf. 1 Nephi 8:11: “white, to exceed all the whiteness that I had ever seen.”

313 J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, p. 205; cf. Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; 4:5-b, p. 246. See Endnote 3-58, p. 211.

314 Judges 4:5.

315 1 Kings 6:29, 32, 35; 7:36; 2 Chronicles 3:5; Ezekiel 40:16, 22, 26, 31, 34, 37; 41:18-20, 25-26; Figure 3-11, p. 149.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

part of the celebration of Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem.³¹⁶ In Islamic tradition, Muhammad built his home from the palm, it being a symbol of rest and hospitality in the Middle East.³¹⁷ The Qur'an also describes the palm as providing shelter and nourishment for Mary, who was said to have borne Jesus in the wilderness beneath such a tree.³¹⁸ The earliest Mandaean sources also see the primeval Tree of Life as a date palm, whose "fertile union with the wellspring" emanates vines that will themselves become Trees of Life.³¹⁹ A single one of these important date palm trees "often yielded more than one hundred pounds of fruit per year over a productive lifetime of one hundred years or more. Akkadian synonyms for date palm included 'tree of abundance' (isu masru) and 'tree of riches' (isu rasu)—appropriate names for the vehicle of agricultural success and richness."³²⁰ Also of relevance is Visotzky's collation of ancient sources that refer to the "conversation of palm trees" by which the pious obtained wisdom and warning.³²¹ In favor of the date palm as a representation of the Tree of Life depicted in Lehi and Nephi's visions, Potter cites sources associating this tree specifically with the motifs of kingship, wisdom, the mother of a divine child, and the cosmos mentioned above.³²² Moreover, Nephi contrasts the fruit of the Tree of Life to the forbidden fruit: "the one being sweet and the other bitter."³²³ The date palm's fruit—often described as "white" in its most desirable varieties, well-known to Lehi's family, and likely available in the Valley of Lemuel where the family was camped at the time—would have provided a more fitting analogue than the olive to the love of God that was "sweet above all that is sweet."³²⁴

Reconciling the competing symbolism of a Tree of Life that bears sweet fruit like the date as opposed to oil-producing fruit like the olive is a Gnostic suggestion that the Garden story was concerned with three special trees rather than two. In addition to the original Tree of Life and Tree of Knowledge, the third tree, an olive tree, is said to have sprouted up only after the transgression of Adam,³²⁵ when a Savior was mercifully provided for him. In Christian imagery a related idea was often visually represented by a cruciform tree flanked by two small identical trees from Paradise.³²⁶ The centrally-depicted "Tree of Mercy," said in other sources to have been planted by Seth over the grave of Adam, would be destined to bear "the fruit of the crucified Christ."³²⁷ Thus, in a sense, there were thought to be two "Trees of Life": the original Edenic eschatological tree with its sweet fruit, and the subsequently-sprouted 316 John 12:12-13; cf. Revelation 7:9, 14.

317 Cf. Leviticus 23:40-43; Nehemiah 8:13-17.

318 Qur'an 19:23-26. See also A. at-Tabataba'i, Al-Mizan, 6:146; M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 125, 140, 144-145, 164. See a depiction of this event in D. Jackson, Marvellous, p. 29 Figure 25.

319 J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 203-204, 246-247. See also E. S. Drower, Thousand, pp. 110, 111, 120, 267. Compare NT and Egyptian imagery described in A. Roberts, Anointing, pp. 90-91, 94.

320 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 82. See also S. Fine, Date Palm.

321 B. L. Visotzky, Conversation; cf. H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 288; Figure 3-8, p. 145; Figure 3-10, p. 147; Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654. See Endnote 3-48, p. 209.

322 G. Potter et al., Lehi, pp. 43-45.

323 2 Nephi 2:15.

324 Alma 32:42.

325 H.-G. Bethge et al., Origin, 111:1-7, p. 179. For the text, see Gleanings, p. 189. See Endnote 3-55, p. 210.

326 J. O'Reilly, Iconography, pp. 176, 178, 186, 188, 192-193. The flanking trees depicted on the Holy Crown of Hungary surrounding an enthroned Christ are identified as heavenly cypresses (E. Tóth, Holy Crown, pp. 23, 28). In imagery going back to pre-Christian times, the paired trees represent "the cypress-tree and life-giving water, the pattern of the two ways, to left or to right" (E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, p. 216). The depiction also recalls the two Menorot that flank the scroll shrine in Palestinian synagogue mosaics (N. Wyatt, Space, p. 169).

327 R. W. Baldwin, Legend. See also W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 73:15-19, p. 153; J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 214-215, 221.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

oil-bearing Tree of Mercy, the latter being a symbol of the Savior, His Atonement, and the Gospel that would be explained to Adam and Eve after the Fall. In a larger sense, the olive tree also was used as a symbol of the whole house of Israel,³²⁸ whose mission it is to help carry out the Savior's work of blessing all the nations of the earth³²⁹—part of the “Messianic calling [appointed to all] those who receive the Messiah.”³³⁰ It was from the olive tree that the oil for an atoning anointing of healing and sanctification was procured, serving the role of a secondary “Tree of Life” in the sense that the Savior's power could reverse the blows of death to which Adam and Eve previously had been subjected.³³¹

While admittedly speculative, this view is attractively coherent. Since every mortal has, like Adam and Eve, taken of the Tree of Knowledge “after the similitude of Adam's transgression,”³³² Jesus Christ, our salvific “Tree of Mercy,” supplies the requisite “oil of gladness”³³³ to all who accept Him as their Redeemer. As the only true “keeper of the gate,”³³⁴ He lovingly welcomes the faithful back into the presence of the Father, where the paradisiacal Tree of Life, bearing the sweet fruit of eternal life and the fulness of the love of God, is found.³³⁵

- h in the midst of the garden. The Hebrew of the phrase “in the midst” literally means “in the center,” and derives from a root with the meaning “inner.”³³⁶ The phrase serves to emphasize the prominent position of the tree—there would have been no need to add it if it was meant to be read “in the garden generally” as with all the other trees.³³⁷ Likewise, in the Zohar, the Tree of Life is said to have been “precisely in the middle of the garden,”³³⁸ where it is the source of the “river of emanation” which “proceeds from the highest sefirot”³³⁹ to the Shekhinah,³⁴⁰ the garden. Below Her, the unity of the divine yields multiplicity.³⁴¹

Although the phrase “in the midst” is specifically applied only to the Tree of Life,³⁴² the Tree of Knowledge is later said by Eve to be located there, too.³⁴³ (The Zohar implausibly resolves this contradiction simply by saying that the Tree of Knowledge was “not precisely in the middle.”³⁴⁴) The subtle conflation of the location of two trees seems intentional, preparing readers for the confusion that later ensues in the dialogue with the serpent.³⁴⁵ The dramatic irony of the story is heightened by the fact that while the reader is informed about both trees, Adam and Eve are only specifically told about the Tree of Knowledge. Satan will exploit their ignorance to his advantage.

328 E.g., Jacob 5; Isaiah 5:1-7; Romans 11:16, 24. See also B. Gardner, Second Witness, 2:520-556.

329 See Genesis 22:18.

330 T. G. Madsen, Chosenness, p. 142.

331 Cf. the overviews of Moses 4, p. 236 and Moses 6, p. 460. See also Commentary 5:47-b, p. 396.

332 Romans 5:14; cf. D&C 93:38; B. L. Top, Life Before, p. 95.

333 Hebrews 1:9.

334 2 Nephi 9:41.

335 See Commentary 4:31-e, p. 282.

336 S. K. Brown, Voices, p. 175.

337 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 110.

338 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:35a, p. 220.

339 I. e., the highest of the ten attributes of God.

340 I. e., the divine presence of God in the world, seen as the feminine aspect of Deity.

341 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:35b, p. 224. See Commentary 3:10-a, p. 170.

342 Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 1:25.

343 Moses 4:9. See U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 111.

344 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:35a, p. 220n. 921.

345 See Commentary 4:9-a, p. 252 and 4:14-e, p. 260. For a full and supportive analysis of this view, see T. N. D. Mettinger, Eden, especially pp. 34-41.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

Elaborate explanations have been advanced as attempts to describe how both the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge could share the center of the Garden.³⁴⁶ For example, it has been suggested that these two trees were in reality different aspects of a single tree,³⁴⁷ that they shared a common trunk,³⁴⁸ or else that they had branches that were intertwined.³⁴⁹ One of the most interesting strands of Jewish tradition holds that the branches of the Tree of Knowledge hid the Tree of Life from direct view, and that “God did not specifically prohibit eating from the Tree of Life because the Tree of Knowledge formed a hedge around it; only after one had partaken of the latter and cleared a path for himself could one come close to the Tree of Life.”³⁵⁰ In this same sense, Ephrem the Syrian calls the Tree of Knowledge “the veil for the sanctuary”³⁵¹—the Tree of Life having been planted in an inner place so holy that Adam and Eve would court mortal danger if they entered unprepared. Though God could minister to them in the Garden, they could not safely enter His world.³⁵² An object lesson reported in a Gnostic story tells of how “Pistis Sophia went beyond her ‘degree’ and, becoming ambitious, ‘looked behind the veil’ [and] fell from glory.”³⁵³ Elder Bruce C. Hafen has explained: “God placed cherubim and a flaming sword to guard the way of the tree of life until Adam and Eve completed, and we, their posterity, complete [the] preparatory schooling [of mortality. God] cannot fully receive us and give us the gift of celestial life—partaking of [His] very nature—until we have learned by our own experience to distinguish good and evil.”³⁵⁴

- i tree of knowledge of good and evil. Much has been written about this tree.³⁵⁵ The idea of a second special tree in the Garden of Eden is generally seen by scholars as unique to the biblical account, though a case can be made for two trees with analogous descriptions in the *Qurʾān*³⁵⁶ and in the Zoroastrian Bundahishn.³⁵⁷ If only a single tree is mentioned in ancient accounts, it is usually an analogue to the Tree of Life,³⁵⁸ though the theme of the protagonist’s search for knowledge or wisdom often appears in such stories in one form or another.³⁵⁹

The Hebrew expression “knowledge of good and evil” can mean knowledge of what is good and bad, or of happiness and misery—or else knowledge of “everything” if “good and evil”

346 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 96.

347 R. Guénon, Symboles, p. 325.

348 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 5:91 n. 50.

349 See Figure 5-3, p. 330; Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591; Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

350 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 101; cf. p. 96. See also L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:70, 5:91 n. 50.

351 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 3:5, p. 92.

352 D&C 76:87, 112; Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 3:13-17, pp. 95-96; Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591; Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

353 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 443; cf. C. Schmidt, Pistis, 1:29-30, pp. 83-91; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 1:29-30, pp. 33-36; Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591ff.

354 B. C. Hafen, Broken, p. 30; cf. L. Schaya, Meaning, p. 16. See Commentary 3:17-c, p. 175; 4:28-b, 276; overview of Moses 4, pp. 227-234.

355 For more on the symbolism of the tree, see the overview of Moses 4, pp. 227-234. See also Commentary 4:11-c, p. 254 and 4:28-a, p. 276.

356 Qurʾān 2:35, 7:19ff. vs. 53:14; cf. J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, p. 220 and Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591—see especially Figure E25-2, p. 593. See also A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 49.

357 F. M. Müller, Bundahis, 9:5-6; 18:1, 9; 27:2-4, pp. 31, 65, 66, 99-100.

358 M. Barker, Creation Theology, p. 8.

359 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 245-248. See T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 294-296, 462-465 for a useful survey of literature on the Tree of Knowledge.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

is taken as a merism. Perhaps the most relevant hint on the meaning of the phrase comes from Deuteronomy 1:39, which speaks of little children “who... have no knowledge of good and evil,” suggesting “that they are not legally responsible for their actions.”³⁶⁰ In this sense, the term aptly refers not to abstract conceptual knowledge but rather to the kind of “knowledge which infancy lacks and experience acquires.”³⁶¹ Thus, Solomon fittingly prayed for the ability “to discern between good and evil” so that he would be able to function in his royal role.³⁶² Consistent with this interpretation, other scriptures refer to the ability to know good from evil,³⁶³ which presupposes “man’s power to choose the sweet even when it is harmful and reject the bitter even when beneficial.”³⁶⁴ What is common to both scriptural and extra-canonical references is that they are “concerned with knowledge (or wisdom) in the general, comprehensive sense. Any limitation of the meaning of ‘the knowledge of good and evil’ is thereby excluded. It can mean neither moral nor sexual nor any other partial knowledge, but only that knowledge which includes and determines human existence as a whole[, the ability to master]... one’s own existence.”³⁶⁵

A final conjecture on the meaning of the phrase comes from Tvedtnes, who sees in the underlying Hebrew the possibility that “good” refers to the Tree of Life and “evil” referred to the Tree of Knowledge. Thus, one might read: “tree of life... tree of knowledge—good and evil.”³⁶⁶ In context, however, the reading is unconvincing.

Jewish and Christian traditions often identify the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil as a fig tree, thus heightening the irony later on when Adam and Eve attempt to cover themselves with its leaves.³⁶⁷ The fruit of the fig tree is known for its abundance of seeds, thus an apron of green fig leaves is an appropriate symbol for Adam and Eve’s ability to “be fruitful and multiply”³⁶⁸ after the Fall. Similarly, in the Zoroastrian Bundahishn, the special tree standing near to the Tree of Life is called the “tree of many seeds.”³⁶⁹ A Coptic text says that the leaves of the Tree of Knowledge “are like fig leaves. Its fruit is like a good appetizing date.”³⁷⁰ The fig tree also is prominent as a symbol in the New Testament, and at a crucial point in Jesus’ ministry became the subject of a curse,³⁷¹ which Ephrem speculates was done “in order to show that there was no longer any need of fig leaves to serve as Adam’s garment.”³⁷² Most likely because “the word for wheat in Hebrew is a homonym with the word for sin,” some rabbinical and Islamic sources identify the tree with a special variety of wheat, with a “fruit... like the kidneys of the cow, softer than butter and sweeter than honey.”³⁷³ Others, seeing a

360 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 166.

361 J. H. Hertz, Pentateuch, p. 8; cf. J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 19-20.

362 1 Kings 3:9; cf. Targum Yerushalmi: “the Tree of Knowledge, of which any one who ate would distinguish between good and evil” (cited in J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos).

363 2 Nephi 2:5, 26; Alma 12:31, 29:5; Helaman 14:31; Moroni 7:15-16, 19; Moses 6:56.

364 A. Cohen, Chumash, p. 10.

365 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 247-248; cf. T. N. D. Mettinger, Eden, pp. 61-63; A. LaCocque, Trial, pp. 77-79.

366 J. A. Tvedtnes, September 26, 2006.

367 E.g., D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:36b, p. 229. See Moses 4:13; Commentary 4:14-d, p. 260.

368 Moses 2:28.

369 F. M. Müller, Bundahis, 9:5, 18:9, 27:2, pp. 31, 66, 99-100.

370 H.-G. Bethge et al., Origin, 110:22-23, p. 179.

371 Matthew 21:18-20; 24:32; Luke 13:6-9; John 1:48; James 3:12; cf. Joel 2:22.

372 Ephrem the Syrian, Diatessaron, cited in M. Barker, Hidden, p. 34.

373 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, pp. 34, 37; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 49; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 31, 45; B. M.

9 And out of the ground made I, the Lord God, to grow every tree, naturally, that is pleasant to the sight of man; and man could behold it. And it became also a living soul. For it was spiritual in the day that I created it; for it remaineth in the sphere in which I, God, created it, yea, even all things which I prepared for the use of man; and man saw that it was good for food. And I, the Lord God, planted the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

10 And I, the Lord God, caused a river to go out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

parallel in the story of Noah's drunkenness after the Flood, suggest that the forbidden fruit was the grape³⁷⁴—though the possibility of polemical motivations for this tradition cannot be ignored.³⁷⁵ The pomegranate and the apple (based on the correspondence between the Latin malus = evil and malum = apple)³⁷⁶ have also been proposed. One rabbinic source asserts that God deliberately “did not reveal the nature of the tree that it might not be said, “Through this tree Adam brought death into the world.”³⁷⁷

- 10 a caused a river to go out of Eden. Sarna comments: “The story of man is abruptly interrupted by a description of the geographical setting of the Garden. This pause functions as a tension-building device, for the reader is left wondering about the role of the two special trees [referred to in verse 9]. The identical literary stratagem is employed in the story of Joseph, where the digression of Genesis 38 heightens the reader's suspense at a critical moment in the development of the plot.”³⁷⁸

The major burden of the passage is to assert that “the ‘life-arteries’ of all lands of the earth have their source in the river that watered paradise.”³⁷⁹ The water is said to originate “opposite the throne of glory.”³⁸⁰ Springing up from the ground,³⁸¹ it flows down the mountain of God.³⁸² Similarly, in Nephi's dream he saw the “fountain of living waters” originating at the “Tree of Life”—both the tree and the waters being a “representation of the love of God.”³⁸³ Outside the Garden (or, less plausibly, within the Garden³⁸⁴), the river “separates into four branches that probably represent the four quarters of the inhabited world.”³⁸⁵ In other words, the river of Eden also nourishes the whole earth with its life-giving waters.”³⁸⁶ The mention of the fact that the river leaves Eden to go out to the rest of the world subtly prepares the reader for Adam and Eve's later departure.³⁸⁷

The bronze sea in Solomon's temple has sometimes been regarded as a representation of the river's subterranean source of water “from which the ancients believed all life and fertility were derived.” If so, . . . the four sets of oxen facing the four cardinal directions [might symbolize] the four rivers of Eden that watered the courtyard of the earth,”³⁸⁸ corresponding to the water that gushed out from underneath the east threshold of Ezekiel's vision of a

Wheeler, Prophets, pp. 27–28; cf. E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 18–19 n. 1; B. Mikael, Mysteries, p. 26

374 See JST Genesis 9:24; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 49; H. E. Gaylord, Jr., 3 Baruch, 6:15–17, p. 669; H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 577–579; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 308; cf. M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 37.

375 N. Koltun-Fromm, Aphrahat. See Endnote E-113, p. 729.

376 Or perhaps: Latin pomum (fruit) = French pomme (apple) (A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 95 n. 47).

377 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 15:7, p. 168.

378 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 19.

379 C. Westermann, Genesis 1–11, p. 216.

380 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 18:19, p. 273; cf. D. W. Parry, Garden, p. 130.

381 See Commentary 3:6–a, p. 156.

382 D. W. Parry, Garden, p. 131.

383 1 Nephi 11:25.

384 R. Giorgi, Anges, p. 25.

385 Cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 275–276.

386 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 19; cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 111.

387 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

388 M. B. Brown, Gate, p. 121.

10 And I, the Lord God, caused a river to go out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads.

11 And I, the Lord God, called the name of the first Pison, and it compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where I, the Lord God, created much gold;

millennial temple.³⁸⁹ Medieval religious iconography sometimes featured a basin containing the waters of life as a representation of the Tree of Life.³⁹⁰

Verses 10-14 (or, alternatively, 11-14) have long been suspected of being either a late interpolation or at least having come from a different source than the rest of the chapter.³⁹¹ Perhaps this explains why verses 11-14 are omitted from the book of Abraham. Through the inclusion of these verses, the editor seems to be insisting on a specific Near Eastern setting. However, discouraged by the seeming lack of geographical consistency in the description of the four rivers going out from Eden, later commentators have had difficulty finding consensus.³⁹² Because of the nature of the Garden of Eden itself,³⁹³ “neither biblical records nor secular history and archaeological research” are likely to ever “identify the dimensions or the location of the garden [of Eden] in terms of the present-day surface of the earth.”³⁹⁴ On the other hand, statements attributed to the Prophet Joseph Smith may be taken as providing an indication of Adam and Eve’s migration after the Fall.³⁹⁵

OT1 reads in the passive voice (“And a river went out of Eden”).³⁹⁶ The current text follows OT2, recorded in the hand of Sidney Rigdon.³⁹⁷

11 a Pison... Havilah... gold. The name Pison, with a possible meaning of something like “Gusher,”³⁹⁸ appears nowhere else in the Old Testament. Havilah, perhaps signifying “sandy land,”³⁹⁹ is mentioned elsewhere as a personal name⁴⁰⁰ and as a region apparently in Arabia.⁴⁰¹ Jewish sages identified the river with the Nile or the Ganges.⁴⁰² After careful analysis, Stordalen concludes that “no river fits the description... unless the Red Sea and the Arabian Ocean are taken together to form a mighty ‘river’”—a view that he thinks conceivable “in the eye of an ancient cosmographer... [looking] from the shores of Southern Arabia.”⁴⁰³

While Eden is described as a place of luxurious growth and abundance of water and fruit, Hamilton notes that gold and other precious metals are associated only with the territories outside of it.⁴⁰⁴ The mines or rivers of Nubia, a region south of Egypt “corresponding roughly to present-day Nilotic Sudan,”⁴⁰⁵ would be a possible source of gold corresponding to a place name for Havilah located in the Egyptian sphere, while in Genesis 10:29, Havilah is stated to be a ‘brother’ of Ophir, a country famous for gold. Note also the mention of gold and precious stones, recalling scriptural descriptions of the temple.⁴⁰⁶

389 See Ezekiel 47:1; cf. Joel 3:18; Zechariah 14:8; 1 Kings 7:39; 2 Chronicles 4:10; Revelation 21:6, 22:1. See also A. LaCocque, Trial, pp. 80-81.

390 R. Giorgi, Anges, pp. 20-22.

391 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 270-271; C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 215-216.

392 See Endnote 3-59, p. 212.

393 See the overview of Moses 3, pp. 139-144.

394 G. W. Doxey, Eden, p. 534.

395 See Figure 6-2, p. 457 and Excursus 39: The Location of Adam-ondi-Ahman, p. 623.

396 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 89.

397 Ibid., p. 598; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 74; cf. Moses 3:11-a, p. 172.

398 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 169.

399 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 19.

400 Genesis 10:7, 29.

401 Genesis 25:18.

402 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, pp. 96-97.

403 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 279.

404 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 169.

405 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20.

406 E.g., Haggai 2:7-8; Revelation 21:18; 2 Nephi 5:15-16.

11 And I, the Lord God, called the name of the first Pison, and it compasseth the whole land of Havilah, where I, the Lord God, created much gold;

12 And the gold of that land was good, and there was bdellium and the onyx stone.

13 And the name of the second river was called Gihon; the same that compasseth the whole land of Ethiopia.

14 And the name of the third river was Hiddekel; that which goeth toward the east of Assyria. And the fourth river was the Euphrates.

- b where I, the Lord God, created. OT1 reads in the passive voice (“where there were created”).⁴⁰⁷ OT2 reads “where I, the Lord, created.”⁴⁰⁸ The current text dates to the 1902 edition of the Pearl of Great Price.⁴⁰⁹
- 12 a bdellium. Sarna writes: “Bdellium is mentioned again only in Numbers 11:7, where it is assumed to be a well-known substance. From ancient times, opinion has been divided as to whether it was a precious stone or a much-valued aromatic resin called bdellion by the Greeks.”⁴¹⁰
- b onyx stone. Writes Sarna: “Hebrew shoham is an oft-mentioned precious stone; its exact identity is uncertain.”⁴¹¹ In Exodus, it is mentioned as one of the stones for the priestly breastplate.⁴¹² An alternative translation might be lapis lazuli.⁴¹³
- 13 a Gihon. Gihon may be connected with a Hebrew verb that means “to break loose.”⁴¹⁴ In a valley at the foot of the Mount of Olives just outside of Jerusalem is a spring by this name.⁴¹⁵ The mention of the “land of Ethiopia” (or Cush) makes identification of the river difficult because there are several candidates for its location.⁴¹⁶ Stordalen resurrects an ancient opinion, generally rejected by modern commentators, that the river was meant to be identified with the Nile.⁴¹⁷
- 14 a Hiddekel. Called the Tigris in Greek and the Dijlah in Arabic. “Hebrew ‘hiddekel’ is mentioned again only in Daniel 10:4.”⁴¹⁸
- b Assyria. “Asshur’ may be either the city of Ashur, which lay west of the Tigris, or the larger region of Assyria, to which it gave its name.”⁴¹⁹
- c Euphrates. The river was so well-known that no further topographical description was required.⁴²⁰ In many places in the Bible it is called simply “the River.” Speaking of the land that was purposed for Abraham’s posterity, God said in one of many references that it would extend from “the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea.”⁴²¹

In Psalms, it is prophesied that Solomon would “have dominion... from the river unto the ends of the earth.”⁴²² Though the wording in Psalms is clearly related to descriptions of the

407 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 89.

408 Ibid., p. 598.

409 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 47.

410 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20.

411 Ibid., p. 20.

412 Exodus 28:13-20; 39:10-13.

413 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20.

414 See Job 38:8; 40:23; V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 169.

415 1 Kings 1:33, 38, 45; 2 Chronicles 32:30; 33:14.

416 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20.

417 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 279-281.

418 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20.

419 Ibid. p. 20. See T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 282-283.

420 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20.

421 Deuteronomy 11:24.

422 Psalm 72:8.

14 And the name of the third river was Hiddekel; that which goeth toward the east of Assyria. And the fourth river was the Euphrates.

15 And I, the Lord God, took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it.

promised land found in the Old Testament, the phrase “ends of the earth” always refers in scripture to the whole world, rather than just to Palestine. Thus, in this larger sense, the passage in Psalms could be seen as a prophecy alluding to the eventual Davidic reign over the whole earth, starting at the place where the world began—namely at the source of the river of Eden (or alternately “rivers,” as seen from a vantage point outside of the Garden)—and extending from thence to the four corners of the earth.

- 15 a took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden. After the digressive description of the rivers, the action of verse 8 is repeated so as to take up the story where it left off.⁴²³ But there is a subtle difference. Instead of merely reiterating the idea of v. 8 that the man was put in the Garden, as one might do with an inanimate object, it is additionally said here that the Lord “took” him. In biblical tradition this implies that the man is now called and given something to do.⁴²⁴

Moreover, Sailhamer sees special significance in the difference between the term underlying the word “put” in v. 8⁴²⁵ and the one behind “put” in v. 15.⁴²⁶ The latter is a term “elsewhere... reserved for two special uses: God’s ‘rest’ or ‘safety,’ which he gives to man in the land,⁴²⁷ and the ‘dedication’ of something in the presence of the Lord⁴²⁸ ...Man was ‘put’ into the garden where he could ‘rest’ and be ‘safe,’ and man was ‘put’ into the garden ‘in God’s presence’ where he could have fellowship with God.”⁴²⁹

- b to dress it, and to keep it. The Hebrew terms for “to dress” (abad) and “to keep” (shamar) respectively connote to “work, serve, till”⁴³⁰ and “keep, watch (guard), preserve.”⁴³¹ Significantly, these are the very words that are used to describe the tabernacle duties of the Levites.⁴³² For example, Numbers 3:8 says that the Levites “shall keep (shamar) all the instruments of the Tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service (abad) of the Tabernacle.” Thus, Wenham’s remark that “if Eden is seen then as an ideal sanctuary, then perhaps Adam should be described as an archetypal Levite.”⁴³³ Sailhamer similarly comments: “Man’s life in the garden was to be characterized by worship and obedience; he was a priest, not merely a worker and keeper of the Garden.... Throughout [Moses 3] the author has consistently and consciously developed the idea of man’s ‘likeness’ to God along the same lines as the major themes of the Pentateuch as a whole, namely, the theme of worship and Sabbath rest. A further confirmation [of this reading] is the fact that in v. 16 we read for the first time that ‘God commanded’... the man whom he had created. Just as in the remainder of the Torah, enjoyment of God’s good land is made contingent on ‘keeping’... God’s commandments.”⁴³⁴ Barker observes: “The sixth day represented the era of human history, in which Adam had to work for the Creator until the Sabbath rest when God saw that everything was very good.”⁴³⁵ Jesus alluded to this belief when he healed on the 423 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 20. For parallel constructions, see Genesis 39:1 = 37:36; 43:24 = 43:17.

424 E. Kastler, Commentaire; cf. 2 Samuel 7:8.

425 Hebrew wayyasem.

426 Hebrew wayyannihehu.

427 E.g., Genesis 19:6; Deuteronomy 3:20; 12:10; 25:19.

428 Exodus 16:33-34; Leviticus 16:23; Numbers 17:4; Deuteronomy 26:4, 10.

429 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 44-45.

430 F. Brown et al., Lexicon, pp. 712b-713c.

431 Ibid., p. 1036b.

432 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 67; cf. U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 122-123; D. W. Parry, Service, p. 45.

433 Cited in M. B. Brown, Gate, p. 33.

434 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 45; cf. Deuteronomy 30:16, 1 Nephi 2:20.

435 Moses 2:31.

15 And I, the Lord God, took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it.

16 And I, the Lord God, commanded the man, saying: Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat,

17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but, remember that I forbid it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

Sabbath and, when criticized, reminded the Jews that he and his father were still working,⁴³⁶ in other words, that the creation was not yet ‘very good.’⁴³⁷

Consistent with a general tendency to downplay or omit temple imagery, Islamic sources do not mention the duty of Adam and Eve to care for the Garden.⁴³⁸

- 17 a thou shalt not eat of it. Whereas the Hebrew text uses the singular “thou,” implying that the commandment was given to Adam alone, the Greek Septuagint uses the plural “you.”⁴³⁹ The idea that both Adam and Eve were both present to hear this command from God was not uncommon in Jewish and early Christian tradition.⁴⁴⁰ Later commentators apportioned blame to Adam and Eve differently, depending on whether they assumed that Adam was alone or that both of them were present to hear the original commandment.

This is the first negative commandment. It requires man to “exercise restraint and self-discipline in the gratification of his appetite,”⁴⁴¹ prefiguring the later dietary instructions given to Noah,⁴⁴² Moses,⁴⁴³ and as part of the modern-day Word of Wisdom.⁴⁴⁴ In a larger sense, the commandment represents the bounds that man must keep on all desires and passions.

In the version of this verse published in the 1835 edition of the Lectures on Faith 2:10, the words “neither shall you touch it” follows this phrase.⁴⁴⁵

- b thou mayest choose for thyself. This added phrase to the book of Moses makes it clear that Adam and Eve are to be placed in a situation where they must exercise their freedom to choose. Elder Joseph Fielding Smith offers the following paraphrase of the command: “The Lord said to Adam, here is the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. If you want to stay here then you cannot eat of that fruit. If you want to stay here, then I forbid you to eat it. But you may act for yourself and you may eat of it if you want to. And if you eat of it you will die.”⁴⁴⁶ Continues Elder Smith: “In no other commandment the Lord ever gave to man, did he say: ‘But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself.’”⁴⁴⁷

436 John 5:17.

437 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 19. See Commentary 3:9-g, p. 164; 4:31-e, p. 282; 5:34-c, p. 382.

438 D. C. Peterson, Qur’anic Tree of Life.

439 L. C. L. Brenton, Septuagint, Genesis 2:17, p. 3; C. Dogniez et al., Pentateuque, Genesis 2:17, pp. 140-141.

440 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 32:1, p. 36E; G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 81-84. See also Figure 4-10, p. 228 and Commentary 4:9-b, p. 252.

441 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 21.

442 JST Genesis 9:9-11.

443 Leviticus 11.

444 D&C 89.

445 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 75. See Commentary 4:9-b, p. 252. Note that this variation is specifically omitted from the enumeration of changes given in the 1990 edition of the Lectures on Faith (L. E. Dahl et al., Lectures, pp. 40, 109).

446 J. F. Smith, Jr., Fall, reprinted in Church Educational System, Charge, p. 124. See also J. F. Smith, Jr., Answers, 1963, 4:81.

447 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 22 April 1939, 1:114. See Moses 3:17.

17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but, remember that I forbid it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

The Prophet Joseph Smith emphasized that “Adam did not commit sin in eating the fruits, for God had decreed that he should eat and fall. But in compliance with the decree he should die. Only he should die was the saying of the Lord; therefore the Lord appointed us to fall and also redeemed us.”⁴⁴⁸

- c in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die. The form of the expression “thou shalt surely die” is “characteristic of divine or royal threats” demonstrating “God’s seriousness in prohibiting access to the tree.”⁴⁴⁹

Spiritual death after the eating of the fruit would be swift, since transgression would require Adam and Eve to be separated from God’s presence.⁴⁵⁰ Physical death would be just as sure, but not so immediate—as seen later, the lives of Adam and Eve will be mercifully “prolonged” so that they can experience a “state of probation.”⁴⁵¹

Mettinger argues that the phrase “in the day” is not necessarily temporal and may, as in some other biblical instances, carry a conditional sense (“for if thou eatest . . .”): “The exact point of time for death is not the issue.”⁴⁵² However, if we do take the phrase as temporal, it seems clear from the context of the corresponding verse in the book of Abraham that the term “day” would have to be interpreted “after the Lord’s time” (i.e., 1,000 years), for “at the time the Lord said this to Adam, there was no mode of counting time by man, as man now counts time.”⁴⁵³ Moses 6:12 records that Adam died at 930 years of age.⁴⁵⁴

Since the Tree of Life is not specifically included in the prohibition, commentators have speculated as to whether Adam and Eve may have eaten from it to prolong their lives so long as they remained in the Garden. For example, Stephens argues that Adam and Eve were inherently mortal at the time they were created but remained immortal in the Garden because they had continual access to the Tree of Life.⁴⁵⁵ If they had hair and skin like ours, he reasons, then their bodies must have contained dead cells, and to a biologist, there is little difference between cell death and organismal death. However, this is a different matter if death is defined as the separation of an individual spirit from the body. Regarding this question, the Prophet Joseph Smith taught: “When God breathed into man’s nostrils he became a living soul, before that he did not live, and when that was taken away his body died.”⁴⁵⁶

In contrast to Stephens’ interpretation, Elder Bruce R. McConkie maintained that the chief idea represented by worthily partaking of the fruit of the Tree of Life was not immortality but rather eternal life⁴⁵⁷—bestowed in the appropriate degree to those who partake of the fruits of Christ’s atonement.⁴⁵⁸ Therefore, in this view, Adam and Eve’s only approach to the Tree of Life will be by way of first taking the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge, then leaving the Garden to pass into mortality, and returning at last to take of the sweet fruit only if and when they are fully qualified—and authoritatively invited—to do so.⁴⁵⁹

448 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 February 1841, p. 63, spelling and punctuation modernized.

449 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 67.

450 Cf. G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 128-129.

451 2 Nephi 2:21.

452 T. N. D. Mettinger, Eden, pp. 22-23; cf. A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 75.

453 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 March 1841, pp. 64-65, spelling and capitalization modernized.

454 See Commentary 6:11-a, p. 482 and 6:12-a, p. 483.

455 T. D. Stephens et al., Evolution, pp. 181-185; T. D. Stephens, Tree of Life.

456 J. Smith, Jr., Spirits, p. 746.

457 B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 86; cf. A. Gileadi, Studies, p. 10; B. C. Hafen, Broken, p. 30.

458 D&C 88:28-32; R. J. Matthews, Probationary Nature, p. 56.

459 See Commentary 3:9-h, p. 167; 3:9-g, p. 163. See also Commentary 4:28-b, p. 276 and Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

17 But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself, for it is given unto thee; but, remember that I forbid it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.

18 And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten, that it was not good that the man should be alone; wherefore, I will make an help meet for him.

Regarding the question of death before the Fall for non-human forms of life, Matthews' article in the Encyclopedia of Mormonism is careful not to overstate what can be said authoritatively: "Various interpretations have been suggested concerning the nature of life on the earth before the Fall and how the Fall physically affected the world, but these go beyond the clearly stated doctrine of the Church. The Church and the scriptures are emphatic, however, that the Fall brought two kinds of death to Adam and his posterity" (i.e., spiritual and physical death).⁴⁶⁰

- 18 a it was not good that the man should be alone. This was the first declaration by God that some aspect of creation was not good.⁴⁶¹ Recall that in Moses 2, God did not declare His handiwork "very good" until after He had created woman.⁴⁶² In the narrative of the creation of Eve, writes Sailhamer, the author "put the final touches on his account of what it means for man to be 'in God's image and likeness'" by making it clear that "man's creation 'in God's image' also entails a 'partnership'... with his wife."⁴⁶³
- b I will make. The book of Abraham and the Septuagint emphasize a connection with Moses 2:26 by their use of the phrase "I will make/Let us make" in the statement of God's intention and in the subsequent use of the special verb bara to describe the creative act itself.⁴⁶⁴
- c an help meet for him. The Hebrew means "a helper or strength corresponding to him"—or, in other words, a completing counterpart. "This term cannot be taken as demeaning because Hebrew ezer, employed here to describe the intended role of the woman, is often used of God in His relation to man."⁴⁶⁵ President Howard W. Hunter said: "The Lord intended that the wife be... a companion equal and necessary in full partnership."⁴⁶⁶ Thus, in Moses 2, both man and woman are created in the image of God, and in Moses 3, they are described as corresponding strengths.⁴⁶⁷

Westermann concludes that there is more intended here than merely "help at work" or "the begetting of descendants": "The man is created by God in such a way that he needs the help of a partner; hence mutual help is an essential part of human existence."⁴⁶⁸ Targum Yerushalmi captures this sense when it refers to the woman as the man's "yoke-fellow."⁴⁶⁹

Note that the book of Abraham, unlike the book of Moses, places the creation of woman before the naming of the animals.⁴⁷⁰ Nibley summarizes this altered sequence: "The man becomes 'the man Adam' in the fullest sense only when he opens his eyes in a new world and, having forgotten what went before, 'sees' and 'knows' as his intellect awakens. But the most important thing he sees and knows is his wife, after which God makes him aware of the rest of the Creation, which he proceeds to investigate and name."⁴⁷¹

460 R. J. Matthews, Fall, p. 486; cf. R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 186; M. D. Rhodes et al., Astronomy, p. 27.

461 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 175.

462 Moses 2:27, 31. See G. B. Hinckley, Women, p. 67.

463 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 46.

464 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 92.

465 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 21.

466 H. W. Hunter, Teachings 1997, November 1994, p. 152.

467 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 19. Brodie contrasts the positive picture of Woman at her creation with the highly negative Greek account of Hesiod (T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 141).

468 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 227; cf. Ecclesiastes 4:10.

469 J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos.

470 Cf. 2 Nephi 2:15.

471 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 284.

19 And out of the ground I, the Lord God, formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and commanded that they should come unto Adam, to see what he would call them; and they were also living souls; for I, God, breathed into them the breath of life, and commanded that whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that should be the name thereof.

19 a out of the ground, I... formed every beast of the field. A beast of the field is a wild animal.⁴⁷² The Hebrew admits a translation of the term behind “formed” as “had formed.” This would allow for a creation sequence consistent with Moses 2, where the animals appeared before man’s creation.⁴⁷³ Sarna and Bradley both argue that the reference to the creation of the animals is incidental, and should not be taken to indicate that Adam was created before they were⁴⁷⁴—unless, perhaps, one takes the animals created in the Garden as being distinct from the ones previously created on Earth.⁴⁷⁵ In any case, here we are made to know that the bodies of the animals were made of the “dust of the earth,” as was the body of Adam.

Westermann notes that the descriptions of the animals are not formulaic, since the narrator is not “concerned with the creation of animals in general... [but rather] is thinking of the animals from the viewpoint of human beings. Can animals be their helpers or companions? And so the fish do not come into consideration.”⁴⁷⁶ In this connection, Cassuto also notes the omission of cattle (an antonym to beasts of the field) which, unlike the “classes of creatures that man can catch only by hunting,” “were already with him in the Garden of Eden.”⁴⁷⁷

b commanded that they should come unto Adam. Sarna comments: “In [Moses 2] God bestows names only on the cosmic phenomena connected with time and space. Here He assigns to man the role of naming terrestrial animates, which... is another way of expressing the bestowal of authority and dominion over them, the idea contained in [2:28].”⁴⁷⁸ Naming the animals is a way of incorporating them into his world and his life.⁴⁷⁹

Whereas Jewish tradition records that the animals subsequently bowed to Adam,⁴⁸⁰ pseudepigraphic and Islamic accounts instead have angels paying homage to him.⁴⁸¹ Recalling Barker’s contention that Genesis passages relating to angels were subject to tampering by second temple scribes,⁴⁸² a substitution of “beasts” for “angels” in the biblical account becomes possible to imagine. Note also that the book of Revelation closely associates beasts and angels who worship together at God’s throne in heaven.⁴⁸³ Moreover the serpent, an accomplice of Satan, is specifically identified as a “beast of the field.”⁴⁸⁴

With these considerations in mind, a parallel tradition from Islamic sources that appears in place of the episode of the naming of animals should be considered.⁴⁸⁵ The story tells of how Adam, before the Fall and after having been given instruction by God, was directed to recite a series of secret names to the angels in order to convince them that he was worthy of the elevated status that had been bestowed upon him.⁴⁸⁶ Zilio-Grandi comments: “While in the

472 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 19.

473 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 176. But see also the discussion in J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 48.

474 W. Bradley, Why, p. 175; N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 21.

475 See discussion in the overview of Moses 3, pp. 139-144.

476 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 227-228.

477 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 129, 131.

478 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 2.

479 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 228-229.

480 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 44 16:2b, p. 49E; M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 11, p. 78.

481 See the overview of Moses 4, p. 225.

482 M. Barker, Beyond, pp. 195-196; M. Barker, Great High Priest, p. 157.

483 Revelation 4:6-9, 19:4; D&C 77:2-4.

484 See Commentary 4:5-a, p. 246 and 4:6-a, p. 249.

485 J.-L. Monneret, Grands, p. 481 n. 12; cf. M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 28; al-Tabari, Creation, 1:94-97, pp. 266-269; G. Weil, Legends, p. 22.

486 Qur’an 2:30-33; cf. the idea of the naming as a test for Adam (vs. Satan) in al-Tabari, Creation, 1:97, p. 269; M. J. B. bin Gorion et al., Mimekor, 3, 1:6-7; L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:62-64, 5:84-86 n. 35; E. G. Mathews, Jr., Armenian, p. 148 and n. 35; J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 17:4:2, p. 183; M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer,

19 And out of the ground I, the Lord God, formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and commanded that they should come unto Adam, to see what he would call them; and they were also living souls; for I, God, breathed into them the breath of life, and commanded that whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that should be the name thereof.

Bible God lets Adam choose the names of things, in the Qur'an it is God who teaches—who reveals therefore—the names to Adam.... Extremely high value is attributed to knowledge... Indeed, it is not by obedience that the ability to represent God in the governance of the world is measured, but by knowledge.”⁴⁸⁷

With respect to this account of Adam’s premortal accomplishment, Qur'an commentators themselves “dispute which particular names were involved; various theories [taking the position that] they were the names of all things animate and inanimate, the names of the angels, the names of his own descendants, or the names of God.”⁴⁸⁸ Al-Mizan asserts that this was not a simple dictionary recital showing off the power of Adam’s memory, but rather “something totally different from what we understand from the knowledge of names.”⁴⁸⁹ Alusi concludes that Adam’s saying of these names is “in the end, like saying the names of God, for power concerns God Himself in His ruling of the world.”⁴⁹⁰

Later, in a separate incident that was said to have occurred after the Fall, Islamic writings recount that “Adam received (some) words from his Lord” that enabled him to repent and return to good standing with God,⁴⁹¹ so he could eventually go back to the Garden of Eden.⁴⁹² Ayoub writes: “Much disagreement has arisen among commentators regarding the words that Adam received from his Lord... Ibn ‘Arabi says that these were ‘lights and states [ahwal] or stations [maqamat] of the realm of dominion and power and the realm of the subtle [mujarradah] spirits... It may also be that Adam received from God gnoses, sciences, and truths.”⁴⁹³ Al-Mizan declines speculation about what specific words were revealed but rather elaborates on their function: “It was this learning of the words that paved the way for the repentance of Adam... Probably, the words received at the time of repentance were related to the names taught to him in the beginning.... There must have been something in those names to wipe out every injustice, to erase every sin and to cure every spiritual and moral disease;... those names were sublime creations hidden from the heavens and the earth; they were intermediaries to convey the grace and bounties of Allāh to His creation; and no creature would be able to attain to its perfection without their assistance.”⁴⁹⁴

In deceptive counterpoint, Islamic legend portrays Satan as persuading his accomplices, the peacock and the serpent,⁴⁹⁵ to help him tempt Adam and Eve by promising them that he would reveal to them “three mysterious words, which shall preserve thee from sickness, age,

13, pp. 87-88; Commentary 3:23-c, p. 183; Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.,

487 I. Zilio-Grandi, Paradise, pp. 84, 87; cf. D&C 107:18-19; 130:18-19; 131:5-6. This is a theme often mentioned in the teachings of Joseph Smith, e.g., J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 October 1840, pp. 166-167; 10 April 1842, p. 217; 8 April 1843, p. 288; 14 May 1843, p. 297; 21 May 1843, pp. 305-306; 11 June 1843, p. 309; 9 October 1843, pp. 324-326; 21 January 1844, pp. 329-331; 7 April 1844, pp. 344-350, 354, 357; 16 June 1844, p. 371; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 17 May 1843, 5:392; 27 August 1843, 5:555.

488 Adam and Eve. Compare Midrash Tanhuma, where Adam’s wisdom is shown not only by reciting the animals’ names, but also by his explanation of his own name and that of Jehovah Himself (J. T. Townsend, Tanhuma, 6:12 on Numbers 19:1ff., 3:171; cf. Tanhuma, 6:17 on Numbers 19:1ff., 3:175).

489 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:163.

490 Cited in I. Zilio-Grandi, Paradise, pp. 86-87. See Endnote E-11, p. 706.

491 Qur'an 2:37.

492 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 59; cf. M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 60.

493 M. M. Ayoub, Qur'an (Vol. 1), pp. 84-85.

494 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:188-189, 211.

495 The peacock was a representative “fowl of the air”—and Satan’s “favorite.” On the other hand, the cock was “the most hateful to him” (M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 71). The serpent was a representative “beast of the field.”

19 And out of the ground I, the Lord God, formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and commanded that they should come unto Adam, to see what he would call them; and they were also living souls; for I, God, breathed into them the breath of life, and commanded that whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that should be the name thereof.

and death.”⁴⁹⁶ The account recalls an incident in the Gospel of Thomas where “Jesus reveals three words” to Thomas “which must have been the three words of the secret Name.”⁴⁹⁷

Among other ancient documents from around the world, the Egyptian Book of the Dead takes up a similar theme as it describes the manner in which initiates were to advance past a series of gatekeepers through his knowledge of certain names.⁴⁹⁸ Writes Nibley: “The importance of knowing the names of things and giving those names when challenged is more than the mere idea of the password; it is, according to Derchain, nothing less than the logical source of ‘the entire mechanism of Egyptian mythology and liturgy’—namely, ‘the law which makes of the name a veritable attribute of the thing named.’”⁴⁹⁹ Hence, the frequent theme of danger for any possessor of the name who revealed it to an unauthorized party.⁵⁰⁰ The Coptic Discourse on Abbaton, which may have been influenced by texts of the same nature, explicitly associates “absolute authority” over the angels with a knowledge of their names,⁵⁰¹ and, elsewhere, Josephus records that the Essenes were under a vow to preserve the names of the angels.⁵⁰² Madsen proposes that the idea that the “proper use of the name YHWH constitutes a covenant between Israel and her God” may be the reason behind the third commandment.⁵⁰³ According to Schimmel, a scholar of Islamic mysticism: “The Hope of discovering the Greatest Name of God has inspired many a Sufi who dreamed of reaching the highest bliss in this world and the next by means of this blessed name.”⁵⁰⁴ The dedicatory prayer for Solomon’s temple stressed that it was not meant to be a residence for God, since He “lived in his ‘dwelling place in heaven’ but that the ‘name of God’ dwelt in the Temple.”⁵⁰⁵ The shout of the people at Christ’s triumphal entry becomes more understandable when translated as “Blessed is he who comes with the Name of the Lord.”⁵⁰⁶

Is it possible that Adam himself received a name as part of this episode? The fact that the first reference to Adam as a proper name is given in v. 20 seems to lend support to such a conjecture. It also seems significant that the final instance of naming in the story of the Garden and the Fall—Adam’s bestowal of a permanent proper name on Eve—occurs in immediate proximity of the account of God’s making coats of skin for the couple.⁵⁰⁷

While Genesis reads, “and brought them,”⁵⁰⁸ OT1 reads “and commanded that they should be brought.”⁵⁰⁹ A change in the handwriting of Sidney Rigdon in OT2 was the source of 496 G. Weil, Legends, p. 26. See Commentary 3:9-h, p. 167; 4:5-b, p. 246; 4:9-a, p. 252; 4:14-e, p. 260; Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, pp. 50-51.

497 H. Koester et al., Thomas, 13, pp. 127-128; M. Barker, Hidden, p. 42.

498 B. T. Ostler, Clothed, pp. 8-10. See Commentary 4:31-c, p. 280.

499 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 451; cf. B. H. Porter et al., Names, pp. 501-504; Commentary 5:31-a, p. 379; J. Assman, Search, pp. 83-110.

500 J. B. Pritchard, Unknown Name; cf. Judges 16:4-20; B. H. Porter et al., Names, pp. 508-513.

501 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 58-59; cf. Judges 13:17-18.

502 F. Josephus, Wars, 2:8:7, p. 477.

503 T. G. Madsen, Putting, p. 459.

504 A. Schimmel, Mystical, p. 25; cf. B. H. Porter et al., Names, pp. 510-512.

505 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 27; cf. p. 182. See also 1 Kings 8:27-30; D&C 110:7.

506 “With” = “in” in Hebrew (M. Barker, Hidden, p. 44; cf. Matthew 21:9). The meaning of being “willing to take upon [us] the name of Jesus Christ” in the sacrament is clear in light of temple ordinances (D. H. Oaks, Taking Upon Us; D. A. Bednar, Name, pp. 98; D&C 20:77; 109:22, 26, 79; Excursus 17: The Veil of the Temple, p. 564).

507 Moses 4:26-27; cf. T. G. Madsen, Putting, pp. 458-459; B. H. Porter et al., Names, pp. 504-507; J. E. Seach, Ancient Texts 1995, p. 668. See D&C 130:11; Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62; 3:23-c, p. 183; 4:26-a, p. 273; overview of Moses 4, p. 238; Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: Jewish and Christian Analogues, p. 679.

508 Genesis 2:19.

509 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 90.

19 And out of the ground I, the Lord God, formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air; and commanded that they should come unto Adam, to see what he would call them; and they were also living souls; for I, God, breathed into them the breath of life, and commanded that whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that should be the name thereof.

20 And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field; but as for Adam, there was not found an help meet for him.

21 And I, the Lord God, caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam; and he slept, and I took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh in the stead thereof;

the current text.⁵¹⁰ In both versions, the JST reading that, unlike Eve, the animals were not brought personally by God to Adam, has the effect of highlighting the special nature of the introduction of the man and the woman in v. 22.⁵¹¹ c living souls. See Commentary 3:7-e, p. 159.

d breathed. See Commentary 3:7-d, 158.

20 a Adam. This is the first reference in Hebrew to Adam as a proper name, “probably because the narrative now speaks of the man as a personality rather than an archetypal human.”⁵¹² For conjectures on the meaning of the name Adam, see Commentary 1:34-a, p. 66.

b There was not found an help meet for him. The account of Adam’s search for “an help meet” assures the reader “that man was not like the other creatures.”⁵¹³ Through the process of naming the animals, Adam observes the universal pairing of male and female in the animal world and becomes aware of his exceptional solitary state.⁵¹⁴ Now, not only God, but also Adam, recognized fully that it was not good to be alone, and he is now ready “to appreciate and cherish the gift that the Lord God was to give him.”⁵¹⁵

Anticipating Moses 4:18, Rashi further comments: “Because God foresaw that [Adam] will complain against her, [Eve] was not given him until he expressly asked God for her.”⁵¹⁶

21 a deep sleep. “Hebrew tardemah is used of abnormally heavy sleep, divinely induced.”⁵¹⁷ The image is one of transition from a former state into a new one, a “sleep and a forgetting,”⁵¹⁸ which, in Egyptian rites, preceded the bestowal of instructions and power, and the appearance of the great wife and mother-goddess.⁵¹⁹ An Islamic legend says that Adam slept after having eaten grapes from Paradise given him by Gabriel.⁵²⁰ In the Gnostic Apocryphon of John, Adam’s sleep is induced by drinking the waters of forgetfulness, recalling the Greek conception of the water of the River Lethe in the underworld that made the souls who drank of it forget their previous lives.⁵²¹ Without remembrance of all that came before, Adam “was simple as a new-born child.”⁵²²

When the sleeping Adam lost the memory of his past, he also became ignorant of other things. The Apocalypse of Adam records Adam saying that “the first knowledge that breathed

510 Ibid., p. 599; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 76.

511 See Commentary 3:22-c, p. 182.

512 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 22. See Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177.

513 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 47.

514 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 22.

515 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 128.

516 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 107; cf. p. 105. See Commentary 4:18-a, p. 263.

517 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 22.

518 William Wordsworth in L. Richards, Marvelous, p. 290.

519 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 245-256; cf. the sleep of Jacob at Beth-El (H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 581).

520 G. Weil, Legends, p. 23.

521 W. Barnstone et al., Gnostic, p. 160; cf. H. Schwartz, Tree, 175, p. 140; C. Schmidt, Pistis, 4:144, pp. 749-753; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 6, 144, 380, p. 315; H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 309; F. Wisse, Apocryphon of John, 22:20-26, p. 117.

522 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 113. See also Commentary 3:23-c, p. 183.

21 And I, the Lord God, caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam; and he slept, and I took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh in the stead thereof;

22 And the rib which I, the Lord God, had taken from man, made I a woman, and brought her unto the man.

within us” left them and that “the eternal knowledge of the God of truth withdrew from me and your mother Eve.”⁵²³ Likewise, we read in the Gnostic Hypostasis of the Archons: “Now the ‘deep sleep that they caused to fall upon [Adam], and he slept’ is Ignorance.”⁵²⁴ The awakening of Adam represents the beginning of his recovery from his state of ignorance and mortality.⁵²⁵ In the Hypostasis, it is Eve, “the spirit-endowed woman,” who says to the sleeping Adam, “Arise,”⁵²⁶ however, in the Apocalypse of Adam this same role is played instead by “three men” of surpassing “glory.” Although in Adam’s new state of ignorance he was at first “unable to recognize” them, they proceeded to reveal knowledge to him about his Creator. This same knowledge is said to have later been revealed to Adam’s son Seth.⁵²⁷ Note that sleep also preceded the establishment of God’s covenants with Abraham⁵²⁸ and Jacob.⁵²⁹

In a related but wider sense, the Book of Mormon speaks of wicked mortals as being captivated by the “deep sleep... of hell”⁵³⁰ wherein one is “encircled about by the bands of death, and the chains of hell,”⁵³¹ and of being “redeemed from hell” by the Lord whereby one is “encircled about eternally in the arms of his love.”⁵³²

b took one of his ribs. Note that the verb “took” is used for the second time in this chapter.⁵³³

22 a the rib. President Spencer W. Kimball taught that: “The story of the rib, of course, is figurative.”⁵³⁴ As Sarna describes: “The mystery of the intimacy between husband and wife and the indispensable role that the woman ideally plays in the life of man are symbolically described in terms of her creation out of his body. The rib taken from man’s side thus connotes physical union and signifies that she is his companion and partner, ever at his side.”⁵³⁵

In Mesopotamian literature, Ea, the god of wisdom, is “described as ‘the ear of [the god] Ninurta’ because the ear was regarded as the seat of intelligence. In Greek mythology, Athena, the goddess of wisdom, sprang from the forehead of Zeus, the seat of the brain.”⁵³⁶ In the Bible, by way of contrast, the use of the word rib “expresses the ultimate in proximity, intimacy, and identity.”⁵³⁷ Writes Nibley: “The rib in Arabic is the urka or silka. It is the expression for anything as close to you as a thing can possibly be.”⁵³⁸ Note that in the Sumerian myth of Enki and Ninhursag, Ninti is the name of a deity who cures Enki’s rib—her name meaning both “the lady of the rib” and “the lady who makes life.”⁵³⁹

523 G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, 64:24-29, 65:10-11, p. 279; cf. S. E. Robinson, Apocalypse of Adam, pp. 10-11.

524 R. A. Bullard et al., Archons, 89:7, p. 164; cf. F. Wisse, Apocryphon of John, 22:20-28, p. 117.

525 Cf. Commentary 5:4-c, p. 357. See also Isaiah 60:1; 1 Corinthians 15:34; Moroni 10:31.

526 R. A. Bullard et al., Archons, 89:11-13, p. 164.

527 See G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, 65:26-67:28, pp. 279-280; S. E. Robinson, Apocalypse of Adam, 65:26-67:28, pp. 11-13. For more on the theme of three heavenly messengers sent to instruct Adam, see Figure 5-9, p. 339 and Figure 5-10, p. 340.

528 Genesis 15:12.

529 Genesis 28:11. See J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 46.

530 2 Nephi 1:13.

531 Alma 5:7.

532 2 Nephi 1:15; cf. Romans 13:11-12; 2 Nephi 4:27-28; Jacob 3:11. See also 1 Thessalonians 5:4-8.

533 See Commentary 3:15-a, p. 173.

534 S. W. Kimball, Blessings, p. 71.

535 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 22.

536 Ibid., p. 22.

537 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, p. 87.

538 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, pp. 229-230.

539 G. Greenberg, Myths, p. 55. See Commentary 4:26-a, p. 273.

22 And the rib which I, the Lord God, had taken from man, made I a woman, and brought her unto the man.

Cassuto suggests that God “did not take the bone alone, as the exegetes usually understand the verse... [T]he Creator took together with the bone also the flesh attached to it, and from the flesh He formed the woman’s flesh, and from the bone her bones.”⁵⁴⁰ Such a reading anticipates Adam’s later declaration that Eve was “bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh”⁵⁴¹—the Hebrew words for ribs and bones exploiting a reversal of consonants in conscious wordplay.⁵⁴²

The eighteenth-century non-conformist preacher Matthew Henry is a frequent source of the oft-quoted but rarely-attributed sentiment that “the woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not made out of his head to rule over him, nor out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be beloved.”⁵⁴³ Poetic versions of the idea found their way into nineteenth-century American ballads such as *Wedlock*⁵⁴⁴ and Adam and Eve’s Wedding Song,⁵⁴⁵ and also frequently appeared in LDS and non-LDS contexts throughout the 20th century.⁵⁴⁶ The general tenor of this theme, however, had been formulated long before Henry’s time in the patristic literature—notably by Hugh of St. Victor (ca. 1134),⁵⁴⁷ Martin of Leon (d. 1203),⁵⁴⁸ the Armenian Nestorian Bishop Shelemon (ca. 1222),⁵⁴⁹ and, most famously, St. Thomas Aquinas (1274).⁵⁵⁰ In the fourteenth century, Chaucer drew on these patristic sources in composing a version of the statement for The Parson’s Tale.⁵⁵¹ Genesis Rabbah had developed a similar idea much earlier, though in a derogatory vein.⁵⁵²

- b made I a woman. The Hebrew term for “made” in this verse, which has the sense of “built,” is used only this once in the Creation narratives. Sarna notes: “In a word play, Genesis Rabbah 18:1 connects the present use of b-n-h, ‘to build,’ with b-y-n, ‘to discern,’ indicating that ‘woman was endowed with intelligence surpassing that of man.’”⁵⁵³
- c brought her unto the man. “As noted in a midrash, the image may well be that of God playing the role of the attendant who leads the bride to the groom. Without doubt, the verse conveys the idea that the institution of marriage is established by God Himself.”⁵⁵⁴ In one source Eve describes her appearance by saying: “I was decked out like a bride, And I reclined in a wedding-chamber of light.”⁵⁵⁵ This is consistent with the Prophet’s teaching that Adam and Eve were sealed as one by God within an eternal covenant of marriage.⁵⁵⁶ Nibley

540 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 134.

541 See Commentary 3:23-b, p. 183.

542 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 47.

543 M. Henry, Commentary, 2:21-25, p. 10.

544 J. A. Lomax et al., Ballads, pp. 567-569.

545 The lyrics are traditionally attributed to Abraham Lincoln. However, this is doubtful since closely-related versions of the song had already appeared in England as early as 1740 (J. Lair, Songs, pp. 23-25).

546 E.g., V. M. Adams, Eve, p. 97; H. L. Andrus, God, p. 354; T. M. Burton, Marriage, pp. 12-13; J. R. Holland et al., Some Things, p. 107; J. F. McConkie, Eden, p. 26; J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, pp. 216-217; R. M. Nelson, Lessons, p. 86; E. G. White, Faith I Live By, p. 251. See also S. Mariella, Head; S. Mariella, Parson’s Tale.

547 Hugh of Saint Victor, De Sacramentis, 1:6:35, p. 117.

548 In J. P. Migne, Patrologiae Latina, Sermo 7 in Septuagesima 2, 208:583.

549 Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 14, pp. 18-19.

550 T. Aquinas, Summa Theologica 1:1, q. 92 a. 3. See R. R. Keller, Adam, p. 161; M. R. Makarewicz, Patristic, p. 61.

551 G. Chaucer, Canterbury, 927-930, pp. 303-304. See M. R. Makarewicz, Patristic, pp. 61-63, 147-184; S. Mariella, Head; S. Mariella, Parson’s Tale.

552 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 18:2:1, p. 191.

553 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 22-23. See Commentary 4:12-e, p. 256 and 5:11-a, p. 364.

554 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 23.

555 M. E. Stone, Adamgirk, 3:1:7, p. 48.

556 J. Smith, Jr., Papers 1989-1992, 24 November 1835, 1:146; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 24 November 1835, 2:320; cf. H. L. Andrus, God, p. 354; J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 26 March 1932, 2:71; O. Pratt, 29 August 1852, pp. 58-59.

22 And the rib which I, the Lord God, had taken from man, made I a woman, and brought her unto the man.

23 And Adam said: This I know now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man.

elaborates: “[W]e learn in the Gospel of Philip and the Apocalypse of Adam how Adam and Eve were united in celestial union before the creation of the world but, upon descending to the earth, became separated, with death entering into the scene.⁵⁵⁷ Christ came to earth, says the Gospel of Philip, ‘for the express purpose of bringing them together in eternal life. Thanks to him those who are united in the Bridal Chamber will never more be separated.’⁵⁵⁸ The ordinances here are symbolic, but the images are important models to be followed.”⁵⁵⁹ Note also that a sacred marriage (hieros gamos) of a royal pair was replayed for millennia all over the world as part of yearly solstice or equinox rituals.⁵⁶⁰

23 a Adam said. “Man’s first recorded speech is a cry of ecstatic elation at seeing the woman.”⁵⁶¹ At last, he had found his own likeness, a companion whose strength corresponded to his own.⁵⁶²

b bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. In the Old Testament, this phrase has not only the obvious meaning, but also is used to signify that two people belong to each other.⁵⁶³ Going further, Hamilton sees in this statement not merely a statement of relationship, but a pledge of covenantal loyalty, serving “as the biblical counterpart to the modern marriage ceremony, ‘in weakness [i.e., flesh] and in strength [i.e., bone]’... Both the man and the woman share the entire spectrum of human characteristics, from strong to weak.”⁵⁶⁴

c Woman... man. “Hebrew ‘ishah... ‘ish, though actually derived from distinct and unrelated stems, are here associated through folk etymology by virtue of assonance.”⁵⁶⁵ Westermann, following Speiser,⁵⁶⁶ observes that the English “woman, derived from ‘wife of man,’ [offers an even] better linguistic foil than the Hebrew noun.”⁵⁶⁷

The book of Moses and Genesis accounts tell the story of the naming of the woman in two parts. In the first part, described in this verse, “the man gives her a generic, not a personal, name, and that designation is understood to be derived from his own, which means he acknowledges woman to be his equal. Moreover, in naming her ‘ishah, he simultaneously names himself. Hitherto he is consistently called ‘adam; he now calls himself ‘ish for the first time. Thus he discovers his own manhood and fulfillment only when he faces the woman, the human being who is to be his partner in life.”⁵⁶⁸

Later, in 4:26, after the couple has partaken of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge, is the second part of the story, where Adam will give her the permanent proper name of Eve.⁵⁶⁹ “Just as the episode reported in 3:19 was considered by Islamic commentators to be a test of Adam’s knowledge of certain names as a measure of worthiness for his exalted role,⁵⁷⁰ so 557 W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 70:10-20, pp. 150-151; G. W. MacRae, Adam 1983, 1:2-5, p. 712; G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, 65:5-28, p. 279.

558 See W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 70:19-20, p. 151; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 528.

559 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, p. 104.

560 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 305-307. See M. Nissinen, Sacred Marriages.

561 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 23.

562 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 47. See Commentary 3:18-c, p. 176.

563 Genesis 29:14; Judges 9:2; 2 Samuel 5:1; 19:12-13; 1 Chronicles 11:1; R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 20.

564 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 180. See also Commentary 3:22-a, p. 181.

565 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 23.

566 E. A. Speiser, Genesis, p. 18.

567 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 232.

568 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 23. See Commentary 2:26-b, p. 112 and 2:27-b, p. 115.

569 See Commentary 4:26-a, p. 273.

570 See Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177.

23 And Adam said: This I know now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man.

24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh.

also was the story of the naming of Eve seen in the same way. Notice the words al-Tha'labi uses to describe the incident: "When Adam awoke from his sleep he saw [Eve] sitting at his head. The angels said to Adam, testing his knowledge: 'What is this, Adam?' He answered: 'A woman.' They asked: 'And what is her name?' he replied: 'Eve (hawwa).'"⁵⁷¹

The presence of what seemed to be two separate accounts of the creation of woman in Moses 2 and 3 led some medieval Jewish commentators to propose that the stories concerned two different women, thus prompting extravagant speculation about the supposed first wife of Adam, known as the sinister Lilith in midrashic literature.⁵⁷²

- d taken out of man. Recalling similar expressions relating man to the "ground from whence he was taken,"⁵⁷³ Cassuto argues that "analogy of expression points to analogy of thought. The man who was taken from the ground must associate with it in his lifetime through his work, and return to it at his demise; similarly, the woman who was taken from the man and brought forth from his body must return to the man and associate with him constantly."⁵⁷⁴

man. The word man is capitalized in the KJV but not in Moses. This is probably because of the fact that in other places in modern scripture "Man" is used exclusively to refer to God the Father.⁵⁷⁵

- 24 a cleave unto his wife... one flesh. This verse contains the central message of the portion of the Creation account contained in this chapter: that man and woman are to learn to live together in oneness, "united by sympathy in their griefs and joys."⁵⁷⁶ Writes Faulconer: "The seemingly parenthetical note of [Moses 3:24] not only shows us that human being is communal, it also prefigures the expulsion of Man and Woman from the garden... Man and Woman will be forced to leave their father and mother—in this case God—and cleave to each other... It is not simply that Man and Woman have the option of remaining immortally in the Garden in ignorance or leaving with knowledge to die. But—if their lives are to be meaningful, if they are to be bound to one another, if they are to be fruitful, if they are to escape the emphatic negative with which God has judged the situation of one alone, in other words, if they are to be human—they must live in community and they must do so estranged from God."⁵⁷⁷

Wenham observes that one flesh "does not denote merely the sexual union that follows marriage, or the children conceived in marriage, or even the spiritual and emotional relationship that it involves, though all are involved in becoming one flesh. Rather it affirms that just as blood relations are one's flesh and bone..., so marriage creates a similar relation between man and wife... The kinships established by marriage are... not terminated by death or divorce."⁵⁷⁸ Likewise, Elder Jeffrey R. Holland writes: "[P]hysical union ordained of God for a married couple, deals with a symbol that demands special sanctity. Such an act of love between a man and a woman is—or certainly was ordained to be—a symbol of total union: union of their hearts, their hopes, their lives, their love, their family, their future, their 571 A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, pp. 48; cf. p. 54; See also al-Tabari, Creation, 1:120, p. 291 and the question and response passages in Egyptian temple ritual (H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 449-452). See Endnote 3-45, p. 207.

572 E.g., R. Graves et al., Myths, pp. 65-69; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 18, p. 229; R. Patai, Goddess, pp. 221-254; cf. M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, pp. 86-87; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:3, pp. 106-108.

573 See Moses 4:25, 29.

574 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 136.

575 E.g., JST Matthew 9:6; D&C 49:22; Moses 6:57, 7:35. See Commentary 1:12-c, p. 53.

576 Philo, Fragments, Extracts from the Parallels of John of Damascus 748:B, p. 883.

577 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 30.

578 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 71.

24 Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh.

25 And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed.

everything. It is a symbol that we try to suggest in the temple with a word like ‘seal’... But such a total, virtually unbreakable union, such an unyielding commitment between a man and a woman, can only come with the proximity and permanence afforded in a marriage covenant, with the union of all that they possess—their very hearts and minds, all their days and all their dreams... And the external symbol of that union, the physical manifestation of what is a far deeper spiritual and metaphysical bonding, is the physical blending that is part of—indeed, a most beautiful and gratifying expression of—that larger, more complete union of eternal purpose and promise.”⁵⁷⁹

“The underlying meaning of the [idea of two distinct entities becoming attached to one another while preserving their separate identities] becomes clear, if it is noted that the verb d-v-k [cleave, cling] is often used to describe human yearning for and devotion to God.⁵⁸⁰ Sexual relations between husband and wife do not rise above the level of animality unless they be informed by and imbued with spiritual, emotional, and mental affinity.”⁵⁸¹ “Cleave’... usually means to unite with, whether speaking of cleaving to one’s wife as above, to the Lord (as R. Akiva insists in the Babylonian Talmud: ‘Cleaving unto the Lord your God—literally cleaving’), or in other contexts⁵⁸²—though the meaning seems to have shifted from ‘union’ to ‘obedience’ after the demise of the ancient temple.”⁵⁸³ Likewise “forsake” is often used in a biblical context to describe Israel’s departure from her covenant with the Lord.⁵⁸⁴ The apostle Paul conferred an allegorical meaning on this verse when, while citing it, he wrote to the members of the church in Ephesus that “we are members of [Christ’s] body, of his flesh, and of his bones... This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church.”⁵⁸⁵

Sailhamer notes the frequent pattern of “using a poetic speech and a short epilogue to conclude a narrative” throughout the Old Testament, but at a “much higher level within the entire Pentateuch, suggesting that the technique was extended as a part of the structure embracing the whole of the book.”⁵⁸⁶ We find this pattern, for example, not only after the end of the account of the Creation,⁵⁸⁷ but also at the close of the story of the Fall⁵⁸⁸ and the end of the narrative about Cain.⁵⁸⁹ his wife. In Hebrew, “his woman.” That the term does not imply possession or domination by the man is evidenced by the reference to “her man” in 3:12.⁵⁹⁰

25 a they were both naked. In the Garden, Adam and Eve were no longer “clothed” with the memory and glory of their earlier state.⁵⁹¹ The verse attests to the couple’s innocence, their lack of awareness of the change that had come over them—and the greater change that was yet to come.

579 J. R. Holland, Souls, pp.17-18.

580 A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 190-193.

581 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 23.

582 2 Kings 5:27; Psalm 102:5, 137:6.

583 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 37. See the overview of Moses 6, pp. 463-469; Figure 5-11, p. 343; Excursus 2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom, p. 516; Excursus 46: The Origin and Meaning of the Term “Atonement”, p. 642.

584 E.g., Jeremiah 1:16. See V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 181.

585 Ephesians 5:30, 32. See Augustine, The City of God 22:17; Jerome, Homilies 66; Quodvultdeus, Book of promises and predictions of God, 1:3, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, pp. 70-71.

586 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 6-7.

587 Moses 3:23, 24.

588 Moses 4:20-25, 26-31.

589 Moses 5:47-48, 49-59.

590 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 20. See also Commentary 4:22-c, p. 268.

591 See Commentary 3:21-a, p. 180; 4:16-b, p. 262; overview of Moses 4, p. 236.

25 And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed.

The verse is meant to prepare us for Moses 4:13.⁵⁹² It “forms the transition to the next episode by means of a word play on ‘naked’ (Hebrew ‘arom, pl. ‘arummim) and ‘shrewd’ (Hebrew ‘arum).⁵⁹³ It also conveys an anticipatory hint at [how the two concepts are going to be related].”⁵⁹⁴ Approximating the Hebrew word-play in English, we might say (with Wenham) that the couple aspired to be “shrewd,” and they ended up “nude.”⁵⁹⁵

While the shame of Adam and Eve’s transgression will be mercifully covered,⁵⁹⁶ the serpent—initially vaunted as the most shrewd of all animals—will become instead the most naked and lowly of creatures—its loss of glory exposed humiliatingly by God.⁵⁹⁷

- b were not ashamed. That the ancient reader would not have regarded the account of the Fall merely as a lesson in naturalistic anthropology is convincingly argued by Anderson: “When the eyes of Adam and Eve were opened [after their transgression], there was indeed something new to see. That newness was not a movement from a prepubescent naïveté to a more mature sense of self. Rather that newness was a state of estrangement from self and from God, an estrangement marked by the loss of a supernatural covering.”⁵⁹⁸ While the couple were as yet free from transgression they could stand “naked” in God’s presence without shame,⁵⁹⁹ being “clothed with purity”⁶⁰⁰ in what early commentators called “garments of light.”⁶⁰¹

592 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 234.

593 See Commentary 4:5-b, p. 246.

594 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 23.

595 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 72; cf. B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, p. 63,

596 Commentary 4:27-a, p. 274.

597 Commentary 4:20a-g, pp. 264-265 and 4:21-a-d, pp. 265-267; cf. Commentary 1:15-d, p. 54; M. Gadd, Naked.

598 G. A. Anderson, Garments, p. 106-107.

599 D&C 121:45.

600 2 Nephi 9:14.

601 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 215. See the overview of Moses 4, p. 236.

Gleanings

Table of Contents

Stefano Levi Della Torre: The Refraction of Heaven Falls on Eden	187
Margaret Barker: The Creator at the Heart of Creation	187
C. S. Lewis: Tending the Garden of Our Natures	188
Jerome: The Tree of Life Represents Wisdom, Christ, and the Righteous	188
On the Origin of the World: The Olive Tree as a Third Special Tree	189
Hugh W. Nibley: The Temple as the Origin of Culture and Civilization	189
Joseph Smith, Jr.: We Are Ready to Embrace All True Principles	190
President Brigham Young: Mormonism Includes All Truth	191
Elder John Taylor: I Believe in Every True Principle	191
C. Terry Warner: Two Aspects of a Single Process	191
Juanita Brooks: Nothing But the Truth Is Good Enough	192
Henry Eyring: In This Church You Only Need to Believe the Truth	192
President Brigham Young: Whether the Bible Is Correct or Not	193
Henry Eyring: The Scriptures Are As Accurate As God Requires	193
James E. Faulconer: On the Hazards of Using Secular Conceptions	194
Hugh W. Nibley: What About Creatures Who Lived Before Adam?	195

Stefano Levi Della Torre: The Refraction of Heaven Falls on Eden⁶⁰²

The Garden has a center and two trees are planted in it, of life and knowledge respectively [Moses 3:9]. As in the case of man, the Garden is the place where the refraction of heaven falls on the earth: vertically, pathways towards the divine prerogatives, immortality and knowledge, like trees growing upwards; horizontally, “a river flows out of Eden to irrigate the garden and from there splits to form four streams”⁶⁰³ to irrigate the world’s regions. The four rivers are the link between Eden and the earth which will be populated by the generations of human beings. Eden is immanent in the history and geography of civilizations: it is the hydraulic heart of the world.

Margaret Barker: The Creator at the Heart of Creation

The Bible begins with the story of Creation. This is the biblical word for environment... But environment can imply that we humans are at the center, and everything happens around us. The biblical idea of the Creation constantly reminds us of the Creator, and in the Bible, the act of Creation is something unique to God. The special verb used in the biblical stories, bara, is never used of human activity. God creates.

Later tradition recorded that both the temple in Jerusalem and the Tabernacle which Moses had built in the desert represented Creation. The Tabernacle had been erected in obedience to the Lord’s command to Moses: “Build me a holy place so that I may ‘dwell’ (in the Greek translation this is ‘be seen’) in your midst.”⁶⁰⁴ In their place of worship, then, they acknowledged that it was the Creator who was at the heart of the Creation, not the human... Adam was the first high priest of the temple, and care of the Creation was his liturgy. The word “liturgy” originally meant a public service performed for a master, or for the state, but in the case of priests, it meant their service for God. The temple was the Creation and, as later interpreters taught, the Creation was the temple.⁶⁰⁵

602 S. L. Della Torre, Anxiety, p. 12.

603 See Moses 3:10.

604 Exodus 25:8.

What the temple structure depicted was the hidden glory of God at the heart of the material world, the eternal within the temporal. Thus Paul, thinking in his temple framework, could write: “God sent forth his Son.”⁶⁰⁶ The Son coming into the world was envisaged as One emerging from the glory into our material world, passing from eternity into time.⁶⁰⁷

C. S. Lewis: Tending the Garden of Our Natures⁶⁰⁸

It is no disparagement to a garden to say that it will not fence and weed itself, nor prune its own fruit trees, nor roll and cut its own lawns. A garden is a good thing, but that is not the sort of goodness it has. It will remain a garden, as distinct from a wilderness, only if someone does all these things to it. Its real glory is of quite a different kind. The very fact that it needs constant weeding and pruning bears witness to that glory. It teems with life. It glows with color and smells like heaven and puts forward at every hour of a summer day beauties which man could never have created and could not even, on his own resources, have imagined. If you want to see the difference between its contribution and the gardener’s, put the commonest weed it grows side by side with his hoes, rakes, shears, and packet of weed killer; you have put beauty, energy and fecundity beside dead, sterile things. Just so, our “decency and common sense” show gray and deathlike beside the geniality of love. And when the garden is in its full glory the gardener’s contributions to that glory will still have been in a sense paltry compared with those of nature. Without life springing from the earth, without rain, light and heat descending from the sky, he could do nothing. When he has done all, he has merely encouraged here and discouraged there, powers and beauties that have a different source. But his share, though small, is indispensable and laborious.

When God planted a garden He set a man over it and set the man under Himself. When He planted the garden of our nature and caused the flowering, fruiting loves to grow there, He set our will to “dress” them. Compared with them it is dry and cold. And unless His grace comes down, like the rain and the sunshine, we shall use this tool to little purpose. But its laborious—and largely negative—services are indispensable. If they were needed when the garden was Paradisiacal, how much more now when the soil has gone sour and the worst weeds seem to thrive on it best?... To liberate that splendor, to let it become fully what it is trying to be, to have tall trees instead of scrubby tangles, and sweet apples instead of crabs, is part of our purpose.

Jerome: The Tree of Life Represents Wisdom, Christ, and the Righteous⁶⁰⁹

Now if wisdom is the Tree of Life, Wisdom itself indeed is Christ. You understand now that the man who is blessed and holy is compared to this tree—that is, he is compared to Wisdom. Consequently, you see too that the just man, that blessed man who has not followed the counsel of the wicked—who has not done that but has done this—is like the tree that is planted near running water.⁶¹⁰ He is, in other words, like Christ, inasmuch as he “raised us

605 M. Barker, Paradise, p. 1.

606 Galatians 4:4; cf. Commentary 4:29-a, p. 278 and 4:30-a, p. 279.

607 M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 3-4.

608 C. S. Lewis, Loves, Charity, pp. 163-165.

609 Jerome, Homilies 1, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 55.

610 Psalm 1:3.

up together and seated us together in heaven.”⁶¹¹ You see then that we shall reign together with Christ in heaven. You see too that because this Tree has been planted in the Garden of Eden, we have all been planted there together with him.

On the Origin of the World: The Olive Tree as a Third Special Tree⁶¹²

Then justice created Paradise. Paradise is beautiful and is outside the circuit of the moon and the circuit of the sun in the land of pleasure,⁶¹³ which is in the east in the rocky region.⁶¹⁴ Desire dwells in the middle of the beautiful, stately trees. The Tree of Life eternal, as it appeared by the will of god, is in the north⁶¹⁵ of paradise to give immortality to the souls of holy people⁶¹⁶ who will leave their poor modeled bodies at the end of the age. The Tree of Life looks like the sun, and its branches are lovely. Its leaves are like the leaves of the cypress, its fruit is like a cluster of white grapes and its height reaches the sky.⁶¹⁷

Next to it is the Tree of Knowledge,⁶¹⁸ which is endowed with the power of God. It is glorious as the moon shining brightly, and its branches are lovely. Its leaves are like fig leaves and its fruit is like a bunch of good, delicious dates. The Tree of Knowledge is in the north of Paradise to arouse the souls from demonic stupor, so that they might come to the Tree of Life, eat its fruit, and condemn the authorities and their angels...⁶¹⁹

After this the olive tree sprouted, and it was to purify kings and high priests of justice⁶²⁰ who were to come in the last days. The olive tree appeared through the light of the first Adam⁶²¹ for the sake of the oil of anointing that kings and high priests would receive.⁶²²

Hugh W. Nibley: The Temple as the Origin of Culture and Civilization⁶²³

The “spin-offs” are things not essential to the temple’s form and function, but the inevitable products of its existence. To begin with, there was an urgent need of accommodations for all those pilgrims from far away; hence those booths, memorialized in the Hebrew Festival of Booths, remains or records of which we find in many parts of the world. Our words “hotel” and “hospital” go back to those charitable organizations which took care of sick and weary pilgrims to the holy places—the Hospitalers of the Crusades offered hospitality also under the name of Templars, for it was travelers to the temple that they were aiding and protecting. Since all who came had to bring food for the festival as well as animals for offerings and sacrifice, those who lived a great distance (more than three days away in Israel⁶²⁴), finding the transport of such items of great difficulty, could instead bring the money value of those offerings to the Temple, which thus became a place of exchange and banking—our word

611 Ephesians 2:6.

612 M. Meyer, Origin, 110:2-111:8, pp. 210-211. See also J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 214-215, 221.

613 I.e., Eden = “luxuriance” (N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 18) or “abundance” (T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 257-261); cf. “Bountiful” (e.g., 1 Nephi 17:5, Alma 22:29-31).

614 Literally, “in the midst of the stones” (H-G. Bethge, Origin, 110:15-16, p. 178).

615 On the significance of “north,” see A. S-M. Ri, Commentaire de la Caverne, pp. 120-121.

616 Literally, “to make eternal the souls of the pure” (ibid., 110:10-11, p. 178).

617 Cf. M. Barker, Joseph Smith, p. 76; R. Milstein, Stories and Illustrations, p. 107; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 32:4, p. 320. See also L. M. Smith, Lucy’s Book, pp. 297-298; 1 Nephi 8:11.

618 I.e., gnosis.

619 I.e., the divine forces who had, in the Gnostic view of things, wickedly forbidden this fruit to Adam and Eve out of envy.

620 I.e., righteousness. See Hebrews 7:2.

621 I.e., the highest God, seen by Gnostics as benevolent.

622 See Endnote 3-55, p. 210. See also Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163.

623 H. W. Nibley, What, pp. 379-381.

624 See Deuteronomy 14:22-27; 26:12-14.

money comes from the temple of Juno Moneta, the holy center of the Roman world. Along with that, the bringing of a variety of different goods and products from widely separated places inevitably gave rise to a lively barter and exchange of goods, and everywhere a fixture of the great year rites was the yearly fair, the market-booths of the merchants added to those of the visiting pilgrims, with artisans, performers, and mountebanks also displaying their wares.

The main action at the temple was the actio, for which the Greek word is drama, with parts played by priestly temple actors and royalty. Creation was celebrated with the Creation Hymn or poema—the word “poem” means, in fact, Creation—sung by a chorus which, as the name shows, formed a circle and danced as they sang. Since nothing goes unchallenged in this world, a central theme of the temple rites was the dramatization (often athletic) of the combat between the powers of life and death which could take many forms—wrestling, boxing, dueling, foot or chariot races, beauty contests to choose a queen, competitions in song and dance. The temple was the original center of learning, beginning with the heavenly instructions received there. It was the Museon or home of the Muses, each representing a branch of study, and the scene of learned discussions among the wise men who from the earliest recorded times would travel from shrine to shrine exchanging wisdom with the wise, as Abraham did in Egypt. For the all-important setting of times and seasons, careful astronomical observations were taken and recorded at the place with mathematical precision, while the measurements of fields and buildings called for sophisticated geometry followed by great architectural and engineering skill that commands the highest respect to this day. The Garden-of-Eden or Golden-Age motif was essential to this ritual paradise, and the temple grounds contained all manner of trees and animals, often collected with great botanical and zoological zeal from distant places. Central to the temple school for the training of priests and nobles was the great library containing both the holy books revealed from on high, whether as divine revelation or as star readings (both declared the glory of God), and the records of human history including the “Books of Life,” the names of all the living and the dead—genealogy. Aside from memorials kept in writing (the art, as we have seen, originating in the economy of the temple) were the ancestral pictures—statues, busts, and paintings giving inspiration to the fine arts. The purpose of the rites being to establish and acknowledge the rule of God on earth through his agent and offspring the King, who represented both the first man and everyman, the temple was the ultimate seat and sanction of government. Our government buildings with their massive columns, domes, marble and bronze, and so forth are copies of classic Greek and Roman temples. The meeting of the people at the holy place made the New Year the time for contracts and covenants, and all of these were recorded and stored in the temple, which was of course the seat of law, both for the handing down of new laws and ordinances by divine authority and for the settling of disputes between mortals. The king was a Solomon sitting as Judge on the occasion, as one who had been tested to the limit and, after calling upon God from the depths, had emerged triumphant, worthy to lead the army of the Lord to spread his rule over the as yet unconquered realms of darkness beyond the holy influence of the temple.

Joseph Smith, Jr.: We Are Ready to Embrace All True Principles

[T]he first and fundamental principle of our holy religion is that we believe we have a right to embrace all and every item of truth, without limitation or without being circumscribed or prohibited by the creeds or superstitious notions of men.⁶²⁵

625 J. Smith, Jr., Writings 2002, 22 March 1839, p. 458.

[T]he Latter-day Saints have no creed, but are ready to believe all true principles that exist, as they are made manifest from time to time.⁶²⁶

The inquiry is frequently made of me. “Wherein do you differ from others in your religious views?” In reality and essence we do not differ so far in our religious views, but that we could all drink into one principle of love. One of the grand fundamental principles of “Mormonism” is to receive truth, let it come from whence it may....

If I esteem mankind to be in error, shall I bear them down? No. I will lift them up, and in their own way too, if I cannot persuade them my way is better; and I will not seek to compel any man to believe as I do, only by the force of reasoning, for truth will cut its own way. Do you believe in Jesus Christ and the Gospel of salvation which He revealed? So do I. Christians should cease wrangling and contending with each other, and cultivate the principles of union and friendship in their midst; and they will do it before the Millennium can be ushered in and Christ takes possession of His kingdom.⁶²⁷

Have the Presbyterians any truth? Yes. Have the Baptists, Methodists, etc. any truth? Yes. They all have a little truth mixed with error. We should gather up all the good and true principles in the world and treasure them up, or we shall not come out true “Mormons.”⁶²⁸

President Brigham Young: Mormonism Includes All Truth⁶²⁹

“Mormonism”... embraces every principle pertaining to life and salvation... no matter who has it. If the [unbeliever] has got truth it belongs to “Mormonism.” The truth and sound doctrine possessed by [other churches], and they have a great deal, all belong to this Church... All that is good, lovely, and praiseworthy belongs to this Church... “Mormonism” includes all truth. There is no truth but what belongs to the Gospel.

Elder John Taylor: I Believe in Every True Principle⁶³⁰

I am a [Universalist], and I am also a Presbyterian, and a Roman Catholic, and a Methodist. In short, I believe in every true principle that is embodied in any person or sect, and reject the false. If there is any truth in heaven, earth, or hell, I want to embrace it, I care not what shape it comes to me, who brings it, or who believes in it, whether it is popular or unpopular. Truth, eternal truth, I wish to float in and enjoy... I believe we have many great and true principles revealed from the heavens... If any man under the heavens can show me one principle of error that I have entertained, I will lay it aside forthwith and be thankful for the information. On the other hand, if any man has any principle of truth, whether moral, religious, philosophical, or of any other kind that is calculated to benefit mankind, I promise him I will embrace it...

C. Terry Warner: Two Aspects of a Single Process⁶³¹

For Latter-day Saints, salvation is a matter of growing in truth, and particularly in knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Joseph Smith taught that “a man is saved no faster ⁶²⁶ J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 1 January 1843, 5:215.

⁶²⁷ J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 9 July 1843, pp. 313-314.

⁶²⁸ Ibid., 23 July 1843, p. 316.

⁶²⁹ B. Young, 8 April 1867, p. 375; B. Young, Discourses, p. 3.

⁶³⁰ J. Taylor, Gospel Kingdom, 12 June 1853, pp. 49-50; J. Taylor, 12 June 1853, p. 155.

⁶³¹ C. T. Warner, Truth, p. 1490.

than he gets knowledge”⁶³² and that “it is impossible for a man to be saved in ignorance.”⁶³³ In context these statements mean that one cannot be saved in ignorance of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Latter-day Saints who recognize that truth is not merely a property of language but is central to a life of obedience to the Savior do not interpret these passages to mean that the learned—the scholars and scientists—have a better chance of being saved. Gaining knowledge and becoming more godlike are two aspects of a single process, which helps explain the Latter-day Saint emphasis on education and personal scripture mastery as well as on righteous living.

Juanita Brooks: Nothing But the Truth Is Good Enough⁶³⁴

I feel sure that nothing but the truth can be good enough for the church to which I belong.

Henry Eyring: In This Church You Only Need to Believe the Truth

I once had the privilege of attending a youth conference and responding to questions of the assembled young people. A young man asked, “In high school we are taught such things as pre-Adamic men, but we hear another thing in Church. What should I do about it?”⁶³⁵

I think I gave the right answer. I said, “In this Church, you only have to believe the truth. Find out what the truth is!”

The Church is not worried about that question or other similar questions because the Church is committed only to the truth. I do not mean to say that individuals in the Church always know the whole truth, but we have the humility sometimes to say we do not know all the answers about these things.

Some have asked me, “Is there any conflict between science and religion?” There is no conflict in the mind of God, but often there is conflict in the minds of men. Through the eternities, we are going to get closer and closer to understanding the mind of God; then the conflicts will disappear...

I have one caution about scholarship as it relates to the Church... We need to be continually reminded that however interesting some... topic might be, it has no relevance to religious faith, one way or the other. You can’t intellectualize your way to a testimony. There will always be another question beyond the one you have just answered. Incidentally, the same is true of science. None of its findings are final. Still, some people seem to stumble when they run into a contradiction...

... I... understand that people who think they have to be as smart as the Lord, understand everything, and have no contradictions in their minds may have trouble. There are all kinds of contradictions I don’t understand, but I find the same kinds of contradictions in science, and I haven’t decided to apostatize from science.

In the long run, the truth is its own most powerful advocate...⁶³⁶

632 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 10 April 1842, p. 217.

633 D&C 131:6.

634 J. Brooks, Mountain, p. xx.

635 See Endnote 3-60, p. 212.

636 H. Eyring, Reflections, pp. 7, 8, 47.

Do we understand everything about science? Of course we don't. A substantial part of what we teach is baloney. But it is part of our religion that we do not understand things completely. The Lord gives us here a little and there a little, and as time goes on, it is going to get better. So I am not going to spend two minutes to try and prove that everybody in the Church always says things exactly correctly because it would not be true, and I am not here to provide any half-baked argument to support the scriptures. They do not need it. If they did, my support would not help much anyway. I think that my religion is on a basis of just looking at how this thing works, of being humble enough to pray and trying to live up to the spirit of the Gospel and actually feeling the Spirit of the Holy Ghost. I think anybody can feel the Spirit of the Holy Ghost if he is humble... So I do not worry in the least about problems like which one of my ancestors was a monkey, if any of them. However the Lord did things suits me just fine. There is nothing I can do about it anyway. It is all over, and I am just exactly like I am however He did it. And so for the life of me I am never able to worry along with the people who think science is a threat to religion. It just is not. It could not be, and if it is, you had better fix your religion or your science, or both.⁶³⁷

I do not know just how soon or when we will know more. I am sure the Lord is not particularly frightened at his clever children. I am sure that He thinks they are pretty dumb. So people who think He is jealous have quite different ideas of how great He is than I do. I think that all of the things that we think are clever, that we might do, must be so trivial to Him that I am sure that He is not jealous. Do not worry about it. I mean, do not hold off on any bright ideas that you have for fear the Lord will be worried about you overtaking Him. I think it will be safe.⁶³⁸

Just how [God] runs the world I'm obliged to leave up to Him. All I can do is to find out how He does it by every means available.⁶³⁹

President Brigham Young: Whether the Bible Is Correct or Not⁶⁴⁰

How long [the earth] has been organized is not for me to say, and I do not care anything about it. As for the Bible account of Creation we may say that the Lord gave it to Moses, or rather Moses obtained the history and traditions of the fathers, and from them picked out what he considered necessary, and that account has been handed down from age to age, and we have got it, no matter whether it is correct or not, and whether the Lord found the earth empty or void, whether he made it out of nothing or out of rude elements; whether he made it in six days or in as many millions of years, is and will remain a matter of speculation in the minds of men unless He gives revelation on the subject.

Henry Eyring: The Scriptures Are As Accurate As God Requires⁶⁴¹

The scriptures record God's dealing with his prophets, and they are as accurate as God, in his wisdom, requires.... God has told us that the scriptures are incomplete. We are promised that we will receive more when we have mastered the lessons of what we have.⁶⁴² Hence, teaching us how to live and treat others and how to obey the rules and laws of the Gospel is the primary purpose of the scriptures; they are spiritual guides to religious questions.

⁶³⁷ H. J. Eyring, Mormon Scientist, pp. 169-170.

⁶³⁸ Ibid., p. 180.

⁶³⁹ Ibid., p. 125.

⁶⁴⁰ B. Young, 14 May 1871, p. 116.

⁶⁴¹ H. Eyring, Reflections, pp. 49, 51.

⁶⁴² See Endnote 3-61, p. 212.

Of course, the scriptures do treat incidentally scientific, historical, and other nonreligious questions. In these areas they should be supplemented by all relevant information. Viewed in this light, most problems disappear. I am obliged, as a Latter-day Saint, to believe whatever is true, regardless of the source. Questions involving the age of the earth, pre-Adamic man, or organic evolution may seem to us to be interesting and important. However, I doubt that God thinks they matter enough to have provided definitive explanations in our current scriptures. They will all receive adequate answers in due course.⁶⁴³ Whatever the ultimate answers are, the Gospel will remain, and new questions will take the place of those we solve. For me, the truth of the Gospel does not hinge on such questions, interesting as they are.

James E. Faulconer: On the Hazards of Using Secular Conceptions⁶⁴⁴

It is common to understand religious Creation accounts as reflections on the origins of the cosmos, answers to the question “why?” that are in some sense parallel to the scientific question “why?” That is a mistake. There may be cases in which myth functions as a kind of primitive science, but the biblical story of Creation is not one of them.⁶⁴⁵ Of course, secularists are not the only ones to assume that the Bible story of Creation is a case of primitive science. Some religious people also make the assumption, especially those who consider themselves literalists. Ironically, when people argue for Creation science or for what is usually called a literal reading of the Bible, they are agreeing with the secular understanding of things. They use conceptual structures taken from secularism, such as the necessity that explanation have a scientific form, to try to understand the Bible. Some give up or metaphorize the Bible when faced with the project of making the Bible and science answer the same questions, but some keep the Bible and insist that its account can be brought within the secular myth, though of course they would not say that is what they are doing. But both those who metaphorize and those who would make the Bible scientific both do essentially the same thing: they begin from a secular understanding of the Bible... Both assume that secularism gives us the basic structure of understanding and that all accounts must be hung on that structure. They disagree about what conclusions that leads one to, but they agree that the secular myth is the one that must be used for understanding.

However, when the Bible tells us how the world was created, it does so with interests, goals, and basic assumptions so different from those of science that we ought to be suspicious of claims that both the Bible and science are answering the same question, “How did the world come to be?” Such claims equivocate, for the question does not mean the same thing in a biblical context that it means in a scientific one. The great temptation is to assume that mythic accounts of Creation are cases of primitive science. Perhaps some are. Surely we do not want to claim that all myth has the same goals. However, it is far from obvious that all creation myths are primitive science. In fact, in the case of the Bible, those who take it to be a scientific or quasi-scientific account have the considerable burden of proof. The interest of the biblical origin stories is much more on things like how the human condition came to be what it is, how evil came into the world, and why the covenant applies to each person than it is on the physical processes involved in Creation. It is not clear that Genesis has any interest in the latter at all.

⁶⁴³ D&C 101:32-34.

⁶⁴⁴ J. E. Faulconer, Dorrien, pp. 426-427.

⁶⁴⁵ See, e.g., N. Frye, Great Code.

Hugh W. Nibley: What About Creatures Who Lived Before Adam?⁶⁴⁶

The philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer, in his Essay on the Christian System, said that the two fatal flaws of Christianity were (1) denying spirit and mind to any other creatures but ourselves and (2) allowing life on no other world but our own....⁶⁴⁷

This... should be no concern [for us]....

The fifth chapter of Genesis begins with a very important episode—the formal establishment of Adam’s family organization. It begins with a book, a book of remembrance or genealogy, entitled “The Book of the Generations of Adam.” It begins, “In the day the Gods set apart [bara—we are being very literal here] Adam in the likeness of the Gods [bi-dmuth elo-him] he made him. Male and female he set them apart, and gave them a blessing, and gave them their names as Adam, in the day he set them apart.”⁶⁴⁸ Next comes Seth in the proper line of Adam, and the patriarchal line follows. The preceding chapter tells of the division into Cainites and Sethites, and it is significant that the line of Cain is omitted from the genealogy of Adam. The book of Moses tells of multitudes of Adam’s children born before Cain and Abel.⁶⁴⁹ They had followed Satan by choice and were disqualified as sons of God...⁶⁵⁰ Those who accepted the covenant were called sons of God and also the sons of Adam: “And this is the genealogy of the sons of Adam, who was the son of God.”⁶⁵¹ Only those qualify as bene-Adam [sons of Adam] who are still in the covenant....

So we might well ask:⁶⁵² What about those people who lived before Cain and Abel?⁶⁵³ What about those who disappeared from sight?⁶⁵⁴ What about those who were not even warned of the Flood?⁶⁵⁵ What about those many, many who visited the earth as resurrected beings?⁶⁵⁶ What about the Watchers?⁶⁵⁷ What about the sons of God who should not marry the daughters of men, and vice versa?⁶⁵⁸ And what about the giants they begot when they did marry?⁶⁵⁹ What about the comings and goings of Enoch’s day between the worlds?⁶⁶⁰ What about his own status as “a wild man,... a strange thing in the land.”⁶⁶¹ Who were his people, living in a distant land of righteousness, who never appear on the scene?⁶⁶² What about the Three Nephites, whose condition so puzzles Moroni, until he is told that they are neither mortal nor immortal?⁶⁶³ What about the creatures we do not see around us? What about the Cainites?⁶⁶⁴ What about the nations among whom Noah will have surviving progeny?⁶⁶⁵

646 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, pp. 50, 51, 78, 79, 82, 83.

647 See Endnote 3-62, p. 212.

648 See Genesis 5:1-3.

649 Moses 5:12, 16.

650 Moses 7:33, 37.

651 Moses 6:22.

652 See Endnote 3-63, p. 212.

653 Moses 5:12.

654 Moses 7:21.

655 Moses 7:12, 22.

656 E.g., Genesis 18:2, 19:1, 32:24.

657 J. L. Kugel, Traditions, pp. 179-185, 194-216; H. Schwartz, Tree, pp. 457-458. See Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

658 Moses 8:13-22.

659 Moses 8:18.

660 Moses 7:27.

661 Moses 6:38.

662 Moses 6:41.

663 Mormon 8:10-11.

664 Moses 8:41-42.

665 Moses 7:51-53.

Speaking of Noah, God promised Enoch “that he [God] would call upon the children of Noah; and he sent forth an unalterable decree, that a remnant of his seed [Enoch’s through Noah] should always be found among all nations, while the earth should stand;⁶⁶⁶ and the Lord said: Blessed is he through whose seed Messiah shall come.”⁶⁶⁷ Methuselah boasted about his line as something special.⁶⁶⁸ Why special if it included the whole human race? These blessings have no meaning if all the people of the earth and all the nations are the seed of Noah and Enoch. What other line could the Messiah come through? Well, there were humans who were not invited by Enoch’s preaching—not included among the residue of the people not entering Enoch’s city. They were “the residue of the people which were the sons of Adam; and they were a mixture of all the seed of Adam save it was the seed of Cain, for the seed of Cain... had not place among them”....⁶⁶⁹

Do not begrudge existence to creatures that looked like men long, long ago, nor deny them a place in God’s affection or even a right to exaltation—for our scriptures allow them such. Nor am I overly concerned as to just when they might have lived, for their world is not our world. They have all gone away long before our people ever appeared. God assigned them their proper times and functions, as He has given me mine—a full-time job that admonishes me to remember His words to the overly eager Moses: “For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom and it remaineth in me.”⁶⁷⁰ It is Adam as my own parent who concerns me. When he walks onto the stage, then and only then the play begins. He opens a book and starts calling out names. They are the sons of Adam, who also qualify as the sons of God, Adam himself being a son of God. This is the book of remembrance from which many have been blotted out. They have fallen away, refused to choose God as their father, and by so doing were registered in Satan’s camp. “Satan shall be their father, and misery shall be their doom.”⁶⁷¹ Can we call them sons of Adam, bene-Adam, human beings proper? The representative Egyptians, Babylonians, Greeks, and Romans, to name only the classic civilizations of old, each fancied themselves to be beings of a higher nature, nearer to gods than others who inhabited the land with them (and before them) or who dwelt in other lands. And yet they did not deny humanity to them.

Adam becomes Adam, a hominid becomes a man, when he starts keeping a record. What kind of record? A record of his ancestors—the family line that sets him off from all other creatures... Whether the former speculation about life on other worlds is now to be upgraded to life from other worlds remains to be seen, but Adam is wonderful enough without that. That gap between the record keeper and all the other creatures we know anything about is so unimaginably enormous and yet so neat and abrupt that we can only be dealing with another sort of being, a quantum leap from one world to another. Here is something not derivative from anything that has gone before on the local scene, even though they all share the same atoms.

666 See Endnote 3-64, p. 212.

667 Moses 7:51-53.

668 Moses 8:2-3.

669 Moses 7:22.

670 Moses 1:31.

671 Moses 7:37.

Endnotes

3-1 Sailhamer aptly summarizes the situation when he writes that “Genesis is characterized by both an easily discernible unity and a noticeable lack of uniformity... The unity of the Book of Genesis... should be seen in its compositional strategy as a whole rather than in an absolutely smooth and uniform narrative... The picture of the narratives of Genesis that emerges... is that of a carefully wrought account of Israel’s history fashioned from the narratives and genealogical tables of Israel’s own ancestral archives.”⁶⁷² Such an idea should not be foreign to readers of the Book of Mormon, where inspired editors have explicitly revealed their weaving of separate overlapping records into the finished scriptural narrative.⁶⁷³ In contrast to the carefully controlled prophetic redaction of the Book of Mormon, however, we do not know how much of the subsequent editing of the Old Testament may have taken place “with less inspiration and authority.”⁶⁷⁴

3-2 The best summary of the diverse range of views and major issues from an LDS point of view is K. L. Barney, Reflections. Other LDS perspectives include P. L. Barlow, Bible, pp. 103-147; S. K. Brown, Approaches; R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, pp. 413-419; A. A. Hutchinson, Midrash; G. Potter, Bible Scholarship; J. L. Sorenson, Brass Plates. See, e.g., T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, pp. 495-501 for a critique of the Documentary Hypothesis.

3-3 Apart from source considerations, arguments from literary analysis have been made to explain the seeming duplication and reversal of Creation events in Moses 3. For example, Rashi insists that such repetition is consistent with the rules of expounding Torah: “In the case of a general statement that is followed by a narrative, [the narrative] is a detailed account of the first, broad statement... One... is under the impression that [the second account of the creation of man] is a different incident than the earlier mention of his creation, yet it is nothing but a detailed account of the first mention.”⁶⁷⁵ Faulconer concludes:

There may be contradictions within the text, but the more obvious those contradictions are, the less likely it is that they are contradictions that undo the text. It is too much to assume that the redaction of Genesis was a product of blindness. A considerable amount of “cut and paste” work was surely involved in the creation of the Genesis story, but unless we can come to no other reasonable conclusion, we should assume that the text is cut and pasted in this way rather than some other for a reason. Thus, it would be a mistake to think that the elements of the narrative merely contradict each other. The story we have before us is one text that calls to be read as such...⁶⁷⁶

For more detailed analyses of literary arguments for the unity of the final form of the records that make up the book of Genesis, see U. Cassuto, Documentary; U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 84-94; and I. M. Kikawada et al., Before Abraham.

3-4 The Prophet’s revelations usually came as a result of wrestling with problems or the need for answers to specific inquiries. In this case, we are specifically told that a revelatory answer was requested because members were “seeing somewhat different[ly] upon the death of Adam (that is his transgression).”⁶⁷⁷

3-5 Robinson and Garrett provide an explanatory summary of this verse:

In the beginning, God spiritually created man—Adam and Eve. This means, on the one hand, that He created their spirits, but it also refers to their physical creation in Paradise or Eden, where they were not yet mortal, and where they were governed by and in communion with Him. With the Fall, humanity became mortal and temporal—physical, or “of the flesh,” in the full sense. Being “in the flesh,” or in mortality, they could also have children, and the great plan was set in motion. Thus, bringing humanity from its celestial, spiritual home down to a telestial, mortal world was the beginning of Christ’s work.

At the end of his work, however, Christ will take fallen and temporal humanity and raise it back up again to glory in the Resurrection. The resurrected body is a spiritual body (not a spirit body) in the sense that it is immortal and is permanently infused with the spirit that governs it. This differs from our mortal condition in which our spirit is only a temporary tenant of our body and is often ignored. The beginning of Christ’s work—Creation—is to get us here, to bring us from the ⁶⁷² J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 5.

⁶⁷³ K. P. Jackson, Genesis, pp. 58-61. For a summary of Jewish sources documenting the idea that Moses used previously extant records in composing Genesis, see A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 650-653.

⁶⁷⁴ Ibid., p. 63.

⁶⁷⁵ Rashi, Genesis Commentary, p. 24. See also U. Cassuto, Documentary, pp. 91-92.

⁶⁷⁶ J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 3.

⁶⁷⁷ John Whitmer’s historical heading for D&C 29, reproduced in J. Smith, Jr., Papers 2008-, Revelations and Translations, Manuscript Revelation Books, BCR 36, p. 43, spelling modernized. For other examples of how revelations came in answer to questions and problems, see, e.g., M. V. Backman, Jr. et al., JS and D&C.

spiritual realm to the temporal; the end of Christ's work—Redemption—is to get us home again, from the temporal realm back to the spiritual. So in this instance, as in many others, the first will be last and the last will be first.⁶⁷⁸

- 3-6 Jason Lundquist observes that the “paradoxical construction” of D&C 29:32 “is a necessary misrepresentation, since God himself does not think of the creation in temporal terms: ‘Unto myself my works have no end, neither beginning.’⁶⁷⁹ He describes his deliberate choice of an inaccurate representation as an effort to ‘[speak] to you that you may naturally understand.’”⁶⁸⁰

- 3-7 Nibley observes:

It's perfectly true that in this world there is the temporal and the spiritual, and yet there is no distinction between them. There is no system that is not spiritual, and there is none that is not material. The spirit itself is composed of matter. We fuse the two in the Gospel; only there can it be done.⁶⁸¹

- 3-8 Some see the planning process for the formation of the heavens and the earth as resulting in a “blueprint” that can be taken as constituting a sort of spiritual creation.⁶⁸² Though advance planning doubtless took place, such a process is never referred to in scripture as a form of spiritual creation.

Note also that some LDS commentators have interpreted the account of Moses 2 as referring to the creation of all things in spirit form.⁶⁸³ In a more limited way, others have associated Moses 2:26-27 with the creation of the spirits of all mankind.⁶⁸⁴ Such ideas, however, have fallen into general disfavor. In any case, LDS teachings seem to be in agreement that the account given in Moses 3:6-7 describes, though in a figurative manner, the creation of a perfect physical body for Adam. Following the creation of his body, Adam was placed in the Garden of Eden, a “spiritual” realm of the terrestrial order.

For additional discussion of approaches to interpreting the term “spiritual creation” as described in the early revelations of Joseph Smith, see Harrell.⁶⁸⁵

- 3-9 The degree to which the premortal, mortal, and postmortal phases of the story of Adam and Eve parallel the experience of every one of God's children raises the question about whether, before taking upon themselves mortality, there would have been an opportunity for these spirits to have disobeyed God's commandment “after the similitude of Adam's transgression.”⁶⁸⁶

The rebellion of Satan and his hosts clearly demonstrates that sin was possible in the premortal life. However, it is a matter of conjecture whether sin and repentance were part of the general experience of all who lived in the spirit world. D&C 93:38 reads: “Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God, having redeemed man from the fall, men become again, in their infant state, innocent before God.” Top interprets the verse as follows: “The key word is ‘again.’ This seems to indicate that men had lost innocence in the premortal world through sin and disobedience, but were once again, through the great plan of Redemption, made innocent before God upon entering mortality ‘in their infant state.’”⁶⁸⁷

Regarding this issue, Skinner writes:

Elder Orson Pratt, writing about the nature of sin in our premortal existence, said that “among the two-third [of God's spirit children] who remained, it is highly probably that, there were many who were not valiant..., but whose sins were of such a nature that they could be forgiven through faith in the future sufferings of the Only Begotten of the Father, and through their sincere repentance and reformation. We see no impropriety in Jesus offering Himself as an acceptable offering and 678 S. E. Robinson et al., D&C Commentary, 1:205. See also J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, p. 239.

679 D&C 29:33.

680 J. H. Lundquist, Keywords, pp. 3-4 n. 3; cf. 2 Nephi 31:3, Ether 12:25.

681 H. W. Nibley, Conversation, p. 64.

682 See Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540.

683 E.g., R. O. Cowan, Answers, p. 94; O. Pratt, 12 November 1879, p. 200; B. H. Roberts, The Truth, pp. 289-296; E. N. Skousen, Earth, pp. 298-302.

684 See Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

685 C. R. Harrell, Preexistence, pp. 5-7.

686 Romans 5:14.

687 B. L. Top, Life Before, p. 95; cf. Moses 6:53. See also Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519.

sacrifice before the Father to atone for the sins of His brethren, committed not only in the second, but also in the first estate.”⁶⁸⁸

Is it possible that the reason one-third of the Father’s children were cast out of his presence for rebellion is that they ultimately and finally refused to accept not just the role of Jesus as our Redeemer but also the means by which their rebellion could have been forgiven, namely the Atonement of Jesus Christ, which was operative in our premortal existence? Perhaps.⁶⁸⁹

- 3-10 D&C 77:2 states that “the spirit of man [is] in the likeness of his person, as also the spirit of the beast, and every other creature which God has created.”⁶⁹⁰ The Gnostic Secret Book of John similarly records the initial creation of a “psychical man... his body composed entirely of animating soul” that contains every feature of the physical body that was subsequently formed.⁶⁹¹ On these matters, there can be little disagreement. However, what constitutes a “creature” in the context of D&C 77:2 has sometimes been debated. For example, Stephens et al. ask whether the fact that everything was created spiritually in the beginning necessarily implies that every form of microscopic life possesses an individual spirit.⁶⁹² Moreover, though some early Church leaders believed that there was a sense in which there is life in all matter “independent of the spirit given of God to undergo this probation,”⁶⁹³ the question of whether each instance of plant life possesses an individual spirit in the likeness of their physical form has not been authoritatively settled.⁶⁹⁴

It should be noted in this connection that while the current meaning of “creature” encompasses animals and people, the archaic sense derived from the Latin is more general, signifying “anything that has been created.” However, with one exception, every usage in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants refers to people (e.g., “preach the gospel to every creature,” “justice claims the creature”). Significantly, the sole exception uses the word in the archaic sense: “that the church may stand independent above all other creatures,” the context implying that the Church itself is a “creature” (i.e., a creation) since it was created by God.⁶⁹⁵ Notably, in Moses and Abraham, the compound term “living creature” is reserved for animals.⁶⁹⁶

- 3-11 Some readers take this verse as an argument that death did not occur before the Fall. However, in this connection, Stephens and Meldrum ask:

What does the term “all things” refer to? Verse 23 appears to refer to Adam and Eve only, and verse 24 uses the term “all things” twice to refer to concepts. Can we be certain that “all things” in verse 22 means Adam, Eve, all the animals, and all the plants? Could the term “things” simply mean conditions? ...If Adam had not transgressed, his condition of immortality in the Garden would have continued indefinitely.⁶⁹⁷

Perhaps more plausibly, Clayton observes:⁶⁹⁸

The meaning of [2 Nephi 2:22-23] must be carefully evaluated. “The state in which they were after they were created” (for plants and animals) is not defined anywhere in scripture. “And had no end” does not necessarily mean eternal life, just a continuation of state. It could mean the creations were mortal and would have continued mortal forever, with no hope of eternal continuance. The word “they” refers to Adam and Eve throughout the chapter, but the meaning of “they” is grammatically unclear in verse 22. Verse 23 picks right back up with “they” referring to Adam and Eve, suggesting that it is Adam and Eve in verse 22 who would have “remained forever and had no end.”

I would punctuate the verses this way:

22 And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the garden of Eden, and all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created.

688 O. Pratt, The Seer, 1:4, p. 54, punctuation standardized.

689 A. C. Skinner, Temple Worship, pp. 51-52. Thanks to Bryce Haymond for pointing out this reference.

690 Cf. J. F. Smith et al., Origin, 4:203-205.

691 W. Barnstone et al., Gnostic, p. 150.

692 T. D. Stephens et al., Evolution, p. 124.

693 B. Young, 23 March 1856, p. 277.

694 See also Commentary 2:20-a, p. 109; 3:7-e, p. 159; Moses 7:48.

695 D&C 78:14.

696 Moses 2:20-25, 3:19; Abraham 4:24-25, 5:20.

697 T. D. Stephens et al., Evolution, p. 135. See D. Boyce, On Science, pp. 200-203 for a rebuttal of this view.

698 R. W. Clayton, Questions.

23 And they must have remained forever, and had no end, and they would have had no children; wherefore they would have remained in a state of innocence.

- 3-12 Consistent with what is found elsewhere in scripture, “natural” has to do with the kinds of things that humans can see⁶⁹⁹ and understand⁷⁰⁰ by means of their physical faculties, without the additional teaching and transforming power of the Spirit.⁷⁰¹

The terms “natural” and “spiritual” are also used by Paul to compare the earthly state of the human body with the glory it will receive in the resurrection.⁷⁰² In modern scripture, the resurrected body is explained to be the result of the process of inseparably connecting a spirit with the elements of a glorified natural body.⁷⁰³

- 3-13 This is consistent with the view of Elder McConkie, who “conceded that the word spiritual in these passages [within Moses 3] has ‘a dual meaning and applies to both the premortal life and the paradisiacal creation,’ ... [while emphasizing] that the ‘more pointed and important meaning’ is that of a ‘paradisiacal creation.’”⁷⁰⁴

- 3-14 Note that Moses 2:26-27 has sometimes been seen as referring to the creation of the spirits of all mankind.⁷⁰⁵

- 3-15 Jubilees reports the creation on the first day of various ranks of angels along with “all of the spirits of his creatures which are in heaven and on earth.”⁷⁰⁶ Barker writes that this belief “seems to have been a controversial matter since later scholars taught that the angels were created on the second day... or on the fifth... This was to emphasize that no angel had been the co-creator”⁷⁰⁷—thus contradicting earlier teachings that God counseled with others in the execution of the Creation.⁷⁰⁸

- 3-16 Summarizes Barker:

The sequence in Jubilees is the same as in Genesis 1, except that Jubilees gives far more detail about Day One, the secrets of the Holy of Holies. There are seven works on Day One: heaven, earth, the waters, the abyss, darkness and light—all of which can be deduced from Genesis—and then the ministering angels [and “all of the spirits of his creatures”], who are not mentioned in Genesis...

It has long been accepted that Genesis 1 is a reworking of older material and is related to other accounts of creation known in the Ancient Near East. One of the main elements to have been removed is any account of the birth of the gods, even though Genesis 2:1-4 retains traces of the older account: ‘Thus the heavens and the earth were finished and all the host of them. These are the generations of the heavens and the earth.’ In Job 38:7, however, we still read of the sons of God who shouted for joy on the first day of creation when the foundations of the earth were laid, and “sons of God” implies that they were begotten, not created. The rest of Job 38 describes the works of Day One: the boundary for the waters, the gates of deep darkness, the storehouses of snow and hail, wind, rain and ice, the pattern of the stars. And the point of all this is to ask Job: “Where were you when all this was done?” a strange question for the Lord to ask Job unless there was a known tradition of someone who witnessed the work of Creation and thus became wise.⁷⁰⁹

- 3-17 For more detail on the events surrounding the grand councils in heaven, see the overview of Moses 4, pp. 220-223.

699 Moses 1:10, 11; 3:9; 6:36.

700 Moses 3:33; Alma 26:21.

701 1 Corinthians 2:14; Mosiah 3:16, 19; Alma 41:11, 12; 42:10; D&C 67:10-12; Moses 1:14.

702 1 Corinthians 15:44: “it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body.”

703 E.g., Alma 41:4; D&C 88:28; 93:33-34.

704 C. R. Harrell, Preexistence, p. 20.

705 See Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

706 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 2:2, p. 55.

707 M. Barker, Great High Priest, p. 157. See J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 3:8, p. 1:34.

708 See Commentary 2:26-a, p. 111.

709 M. Barker, Beyond, pp. 195-196.

- 3-18 Although such an idea seems foreign to the modern mind, science, astronomy, and religion were inseparable fields of study in ancient times.⁷¹⁰ Abraham's study of the "movement of the stars, considering the quality of the affixed time" is mentioned in conjunction with "all appointed souls" in the Chronicle of Symeon Logothetes.⁷¹¹ The relative length of movement of heavenly bodies is also treated extensively, for example, in 1 Enoch.⁷¹² A continued connection between these subjects can also be inferred from modern revelation.⁷¹³
- 3-19 For discussions of parallels and divergences between these ideas and the 19th century theology of Thomas Dick, see Jones⁷¹⁴ and Smith.⁷¹⁵ Rhodes and Moody make the point that Abraham is not describing a heliocentric or a geocentric system of cosmology: "If anything, it would be a Kolob-centric system."⁷¹⁶

Ultimately, however, the account of Abraham reveals that the point of the discussion is not to enlighten the reader about astrophysics, but to describe the orderly hierarchy of intelligences in the universe, moving in "one eternal round":⁷¹⁷

For Lucian, choral movement was primordial since it was of divine origin; the exemplary model of choral dance was the movement in cosmic harmonic concord of the stars and the planets:

With the Creation of the universe, the dance, too, came into being, which signifies the union of the elements. The round dance (choros) of the stars, the constellation of planets in relation to the fixed stars, the beautiful order and harmony in all its movements, is a mirror of the original dance at the time of creation. The dance is the richest gift of the Muses... Because of its divine origin, it has a place in the mysteries and is beloved by the gods and carried out by human beings in their honor.⁷¹⁸

- 3-20 Nibley expands on this topic:

This brings up a theological question to which only the book of Abraham offers a clear solution, namely the problem of hierarchy. This was the secret of Egypt's strength and stability, a strict hierarchical order of everything, which everyone respected. It was hard for Satan to subject himself to any other being,⁷¹⁹ it is still hard for the individual human to recognize his inferiority to another. Again and again, we are reminded of the strangely obvious principle that one thing can be above another. According to Miriam Lichtheim, who supplies us with over seven hundred gems of Egyptian wisdom, every man's ego is constantly threatened by other egos, and none is secure—the weakest can damage the strongest.⁷²⁰ Again and again, Abraham takes the trouble to remind us of what should be obvious...⁷²¹ Why is he so insistent on anything so obvious? And so society throughout history has been locked in a paralyzing round of Thorstein Veblen's 'invidious comparison.'⁷²² We have to live with it; why can't we admit it cheerfully? I have children who can run circles around me brainwise—should that depress me?... Does the Son envy the Father, or is the Father jealous of him?... Abraham removes the mean, invidious element and makes the order of things accessible to all...⁷²³ One cannot plead that he is a latecomer, that others came early and got the jump on him...⁷²⁴ Who is responsible then? It is all in my own hands. Intelligence was not created—it unfolds; no matter how backward I may be I can rejoice in my ignorance, knowing that wonderful things are awaiting my discovery. When I am honest, that is, intelligent enough to search out and dwell upon the things I do not know or in which I have been mistaken, rather than 710 M. Barker, Lost, p. 25; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 5, pp. 53-65; G. de Santillana et al., Hamlet's Mill.

711 Cited in J. A. Tvedtnes et al., Traditions, p. 250.

712 G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch 72-82, pp. 96-116.

713 E.g., D&C 88:5-61; 121:26-32. For an overview of the doctrine of other worlds from pseudepigraphal sources, see H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, pp. 285-295.

714 E. T. Jones, Thomas Dick.

715 W. V. Smith, JS Commentary, pp. 102-104.

716 M. D. Rhodes et al., Astronomy, p. 22.

717 1 Nephi 10:19; Alma 7:20; 37:12; D&C 3:2, 35:1.

718 N. Isar, Dance of Adam, p. 183, citing Lucian, The Dance.

719 See Moses 4:3; Abraham 3:28; N. J. Dawood, Koran, 2:34, 7:11, 15:30-31, 17:61, 18:50, 20:116, 38:73-74; J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:261, p. 22.

720 M. Lichtheim, Wisdom, pp. 16-18.

721 See Abraham 3:6, 8, 16.

722 T. Veblen, Leisure, pp. 21-22. See Endnote 5-71, p. 451.

723 See Abraham 3:18-19.

724 See D&C 93:23, 29.

preening myself on the little I do know, surveying such latent discoveries is like a child waiting to open packages on Christmas morning.⁷²⁵

Elsewhere, Nibley observes:

Pharaoh was the top of the pyramid, Wilson notes in a useful insight, “the only point of contact with the gods.”⁷²⁶ But where does the top, the pyramidion, end and the pyramid begin? They are all one, every level indispensable to the next to make the solidest of structures and to take us all up to heaven along the same celestial ramp and broadening sunbeam.⁷²⁷

- 3-21 In the original, “a little lower than the gods” (Hebrew elohim).
- 3-22 Contrast Christian views of the spheres of the heavens, “with earth at the center and the Prime Mover at the outer edge.”⁷²⁸
- 3-23 Like the complex Christian formulations of the Trinity resulting from post-apostolic church councils, the tortuous descriptions of the emanations of God in medieval Jewish mysticism are due in part to difficulties in reconciling the conception of an absolutely transcendent Deity with His evident participation in the business of mankind and His “readiness to communicate (prophecy and revelation) and be communicated with (prayer and piety).” In this vein, Blumenthal faults Lovejoy’s history of the rise and fall of the idea of the “Great Chain of Being” for overlooking “the dialectic tension between God’s transcendence and God’s accessibility... [and how it] varied from one cultural context to another.”⁷²⁹
- 3-24 For example, the Prophet said on one occasion that the sun, moon, and stars “all move in perfect harmony in their sphere and order,”⁷³⁰ and on another he spoke of “the great God who holds this world in its sphere or its orbit—the planets.”⁷³¹ Eliza R. Snow is thought to have drawn on teachings she received directly from Joseph Smith when she wrote: “For a wise and glorious purpose / Thou has placed me here on earth / And withheld the recollection / Of my former friends and birth. / Yet oftentimes a secret something / Whispered, ‘You’re a stranger here’; / And I felt that I had wandered / From a more exalted sphere.”⁷³² D&C 77:2 (March 1832) says that the four beasts of Revelation 4:6 represented “the glory of the classes of being in their destined order or sphere of creation.” In a discourse about the four beasts in Revelation, the Prophet is similarly quoted as saying that they “were perfect: they were like angels in their sphere,”⁷³³ although it should be noted that there is no mention of the word “sphere” in the extant source manuscripts for this discourse.⁷³⁴
- 3-25 Preparing the minds of the hearers of the King Follett discourse, the Prophet said that he wanted to “get you into a more lofty sphere than what the human being generally understands”⁷³⁵ or, as given in Larson’s amalgamated version of the text, to “lift your minds into a more lofty sphere and exalted standing.”⁷³⁶
- 3-26 D&C 93:30 states that: “All truth is independent in that sphere in which God has placed it, to act for itself, as all intelligence also” (6 May 1833). On another occasion, the Prophet gave “instructions respecting the different offices, and the necessity of every individual acting in the sphere allotted to him or her.”⁷³⁷ He also stated that “the spirits of men... are governed by the same priesthood that Abraham, Melchizedek, and the apostles were, that they are organized according to that priesthood which is everlasting—‘without beginning of days or end of years’⁷³⁸—that they all move in their respective spheres and are governed by the law of God, that when they appear upon the earth they are in a probationary state and are preparing, if righteous, for a future and a greater glory.”⁷³⁹ Finally,

725 H. W. Nibley, Drama, pp. 27-29.

726 J. A. Wilson, Culture, p. 73.

727 H. W. Nibley, Greatness, p. 280.

728 E. Edson et al., Cosmos, p. 10.

729 D. Blumenthal, Great Chain. For an excellent overview of LDS and non-LDS literature on the personal and passible nature of God, see D. L. Paulsen, Are Christians Mormon, pp. 52-62.

730 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 20 March 1842, p. 107.

731 Ibid., 7 April 1844, p. 357.

732 Hymns (1985), #292. For more about the background of this hymn, see J. M. Derr, Personal Journey.

733 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 8 April 1843, p. 292.

734 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 8 April 1843, pp. 182-190.

735 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 7 April 1844, p. 349.

736 J. Smith, Jr., 7 April 1844, in S. Larson, King Follett, p. 199.

737 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 28 April 1842, p. 115.

738 Hebrews 7:3.

739 J. Smith, Jr., Spirits, p. 745.

in the conclusion of a letter to presidential candidate John C. Calhoun, he asserted that the power of Congress “is as almighty in its sphere as Jehovah is in his.”⁷⁴⁰

- 3-27 This statement is corroborated by several other statements made by early members and leaders of the Church.⁷⁴¹ For example, Brigham Young “gave it as his opinion that the Earth did not dwell in the sphere in which it did when it was created, but that it was banished from its more glorious state or orbit of revolution for man’s sake.”⁷⁴² Joseph Smith himself is remembered as having taught that when the earth is ready to be “crowned with celestial glory” it “will be rolled back into the presence of God.”⁷⁴³ Even if the Prophet’s statement is taken to be both accurately reported and prophetically inspired, it is possible that the “movement” of the earth implied was not a physical movement in the ordinary sense, but rather some other kind of change in “sphere” or “state.”⁷⁴⁴
- 3-28 While members of the Church have always been free to express diverse opinions on such questions, they are likewise counseled to avoid overstating what can be said authoritatively. As a model of this kind of restraint, Matthews’ article in the Encyclopedia of Mormonism gives the following conclusion about the issue at hand: “Various interpretations have been suggested concerning the nature of life on the earth before the Fall and how the Fall physically affected the world, but these go beyond the clearly stated doctrine of the Church. The Church and the scriptures are emphatic, however, that the Fall brought two kinds of death to Adam and his posterity.”⁷⁴⁵
- 3-29 Draper et al. summarize the insurmountable difficulties with past efforts to explain these fossilized remains as byproducts of the earth’s purported creation out of other planets.⁷⁴⁶ However, fossils aside, Rhodes and Moody do make the point that McIntire’s account of the sermon of Joseph Smith that is the source of the idea that the earth was composed of disorganized fragments from elsewhere in the universe uses the word “globes” rather than “planets,” which could refer to any celestial body: planet, comet, asteroid, or star. All the elements out of which this earth is formed (with the exception of hydrogen and some helium) were formed inside stars. The elements up to iron are formed in the various stages of fusion a star goes through during its lifetime. Elements heavier than iron are formed primarily in supernova explosions and are then dispersed throughout the galaxy by that same explosion. Thus the elements of this earth did indeed come from other ‘globes’ that were disorganized—a supernova is a fairly substantial disorganization.”⁷⁴⁷
- 3-30 See Stordalen⁷⁴⁸ for a brief summary of the history of non-LDS scholarship regarding the location of Eden.
- 3-31 Jackson has proposed another alternative—namely, that:
- ... during the time the earth was being created, there was death on Earth... [W]hen the Creation had progressed to the point the earth was ready for Adam and Eve, a... dramatic transformation took place that glorified it and transformed it from its developing condition into a state or paradise in which there was no death... Later, the fall of our first parents caused the fall of the earth and of all that was in it. The Fall brought death into our world, and the condition of paradise was withdrawn. Since geological evidence records only death, not life, no trace of Eden would remain once it had ceased to exist, no matter how long it lasted.⁷⁴⁹
- 3-32 Arguing against such a possibility, Joseph Fielding McConkie writes:
- Some have argued that the paradisiacal glory of which we speak was confined to the Garden of Eden while evolutionary processes were taking place through the rest of the earth. The great difficulty with this idea is that it confines the effects of the Atonement to forty acres (or whatever

740 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 2 January 1844, 6:160.

741 J. Taylor, 29 August 1857; J. Smith, Jr., n. d., as reported in C. L. Walker, Diary, 2:505; B. Young, 13 July 1862, p. 317; B. Young, 10 July 1874, p. 143.

742 “Record of Acts of the Apostles,” 1849 Record Book, p. 41, Church Archives, cited in J. Smith, Jr., Words, p. 84 n. 12.

743 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, pp. 60, 84.

744 See H. L. Andrus, God, pp. 312-314 for a discussion of these and similar citations. For different interpretations of the effects of the Fall, see the overview of Moses 3, pp. 140-144.

745 R. J. Matthews, Fall, p. 486; cf. R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 186; M. D. Rhodes et al., Astronomy, p. 27. For more on this question, see Commentary 3:17-c, p. 175.

746 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, pp. 186-187.

747 M. D. Rhodes et al., Astronomy, p. 28.

748 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 250-254.

749 K. P. Jackson, Genesis, p. 77.

the size the Garden of Eden was). The plain testimony of scripture is that the entire earth and all created things were affected by the Fall, and thus recipients of the blessings of the Atonement.⁷⁵⁰

3-33 For relevant statements concerning the origin of man, see Appendix, pp. 785-803.

3-34 Such a view presumes that the bodies of Adam and Eve, having been prepared on earth and later placed in the Garden, were perfect physical bodies, maintained in a state of immortality because of the unique conditions of a terrestrial world that prevailed in the Garden. Likewise, the animals and plants in the Garden would have to be either of special kinds indigenous to Eden or, if of earthly origin, somehow maintained in an immortal (and presumably vegetarian) state until the time of the Fall.⁷⁵¹

Regarding the state of Adam's body at his creation, Robinson summarizes the views of ancient Jewish scholars:

The rabbis were divided on whether Adam was created mortal or immortal. It seems that there were three basic viewpoints. The first was that Adam was created immortal in the Garden but was punished with death, which was hereditary in his posterity. The second view was that Adam was created immortal but that his punishment was personal, not hereditary. That is, men die because of their own sins and not because of Adam's sin. Thus if a man were to live without sin, he would still be immortal. In fact, the rabbis pointed to Enoch and other translated individuals as examples of this kind of man. The third view was that Adam was created mortal and that his eventual death was inevitable; his sin, however, brought about violent, painful, and premature death. Had he not sinned, death would have been, after a long and happy life, a beautiful transition from this life to the next. More recent theologians have pointed out that Adam cannot be considered to have been "immortal" at his creation, at least not in the strict sense, since he had the ability to die in the event of his sinning. In this sense, the state of the first Adam parallels the state of the second Adam, Christ. For in their respective gardens, Eden and Gethsemane, each had the ability to die if they so chose, but neither was under the necessity of dying.⁷⁵²

3-35 This view must, of course, allow for the eventual renewal and sanctification of the earth that is now the home of mankind.⁷⁵³ It should be noted that neither D&C 88:26 nor Article of Faith 10 refer unambiguously to a Fall as a past event involving the physical earth itself. Article of Faith 10 simply asserts that: 1) the earth will be made new again (i.e., brought back again to whatever the earth's original state was—whether that state was celestial or terrestrial) and 2) that additionally it will "receive its paradisiacal glory," which seems most straightforwardly to imply that the earth will attain this status for the first time in the Millennium—the text does not say "again receive." Similarly, although D&C 88:26 speaks of the history and the future of the earth in terms that parallel human death and resurrection, both are referred to as being future rather than past events:⁷⁵⁴ "notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again... and the righteous shall inherit it."

3-36 Cryptic statements by some early church leaders also spoke of a process of transplantation to describe Adam and Eve's coming to earth.⁷⁵⁵ However, the adoption of such a view does not necessarily entail acceptance of Brigham Young's enigmatic teaching that Adam (the premortal Michael) came to earth as an already-resurrected being.⁷⁵⁶

Summarizing teachings from a variety of gnostic sources, Nibley describes the cosmos as:

... an infinity of dwelling-places (topoi), either occupied or awaiting tenants.⁷⁵⁷ These are colonized by migrants from previously established toposes or worlds, all going back ultimately to a single original center.⁷⁵⁸ The colonizing process is called "planting," and those spirits that bring their treasures to a new world are called "Plants," more rarely "seeds," of their father or "planter" in another world.⁷⁵⁹ Every planting goes out from a Treasure House, either as the essential material

750 J. F. McConkie, Answers, p. 161.

751 See also Commentary 2:29-b, p. 117.

752 S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, pp. 138-139.

753 E.g., Revelation 21:1; D&C 63:21, 88:18-19, 130:9.

754 J. F. Smith, Jr., Way 1945, 1931, pp. 349-350.

755 E.g., B. Young, 28 August 1852, p. 275; B. Young, 20 April 1856, p. 319; B. Young, 9 October 1859, pp. 285-286.

See also J. F. Smith, Jr., Origin, pp. 276-277; J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1920, 1:139-140.

756 See Excursus 30: Adam-God Theory and the Heavenly and Earthly Adam, p. 603.

757 See, e.g., F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 49:2, p. 176-177.

758 See, e.g., D. M. Parrott, Eugnostos, 113:14-19, p. 239.

759 See, e.g., E. S. Drower, Prayerbook, 378, p. 283, 286; M. Lidzbarski, Johannesbuch, 14, 2:60 n. 6; cf. H. W. Nibley, elements or as the colonizers themselves, who come from a sort of mustering-area called the “Treasure-house of Souls.”⁷⁶⁰

With its “planting” completed, a new world is in business, a new Treasury has been established from which new Sparks [life-giving emanations from God] may go forth in all directions to start the process anew in ever new spaces;⁷⁶¹ God wants every man to “plant a planting,” nay, “he has promised that those who keep his Law may also become creators of worlds.”⁷⁶² “... and ye shall create for yourselves aeons, worlds, and heavens, so that the intelligible spirits may come and dwell in them. And ye shall be gods, and ye shall know that ye come from God, and ye shall see that He is God in you, and He shall dwell in your aeon.”⁷⁶³ But keeping the law requires following the divine pattern in every point; in taking the Treasure to a new world, the Sent One (who follows hard on the heels of the colonists) seeks nothing so much as complete identity with the One who sent him; hence, from first to last one mind alone dominates the whole boundless complex. Because each planting is completely dependent on its Treasure House or home base, the system never breaks up into independent systems; in this patriarchal order all remains forever identified with the Father from whom all ultimately comes forth.⁷⁶⁴

- 3-37 Comments Al-Mizan: “The story of Adam may have been used by Allāh to represent the rise, fall and rise again of [all] mankind. Adam was the first representative of humanity, and his life was a symbol, a miniature, of the human beings’ life-span in this world.”⁷⁶⁵

- 3-38 Monneret comments: “The sanction will be death, following a temporary stay on the earth. Man is condemned to descend from Paradise where he lived; returning there will become henceforth the goal he will strive to attain through his good works on earth.”⁷⁶⁶ Al-Mizan concurs, explaining:

The context... clearly show[s] that it was for the earth that Adam was created; it was the original plan that he should live and die in the earth. Allāh had temporarily placed the couple in the Garden to test them... so that on eating from [a particular tree] they should become aware of their nakedness and then be sent down to the earth... If their eating of the tree, the uncovering of their private parts and the life of this world were not a confirmed divine plan, an irrevocable predetermined decree, they would have been returned to their place in the Garden as soon as they were forgiven their mistake. In short, it was the divine plan that they should spend some time in the Garden to get them prepared for the life in this world; and their removal from the Garden, according to the causal [relationship] decreed by Allāh, depended on their eating from the tree and becoming aware of their nakedness, and it happened because they listened to the whispering of the Satan.⁷⁶⁷

In another Islamic text, Adam replies to the two angels Harut and Marut⁷⁶⁸ who berated him for his part in the Fall: “Have pity and stop your scolding, for that which has happened to me was fixed and determined by my Lord!”⁷⁶⁹ In another Islamic text, Adam replies to a similar charge by Moses by saying, “Do you rebuke me for something God made incumbent upon me forty years before I was created?”⁷⁷⁰ In this sense, Al-Tha’labi reasons that “God expelled Adam from the Garden before He brought him into it, for that is what He says: ‘I am about to place a viceroy on the earth,’⁷⁷¹ and He did not say: ‘in the Garden.’”⁷⁷²

Sparsiones, pp. 151-164. See also E. S. Drower, Thousand, pp. 110, 111, 120, 267; J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 203-204, 246-247.

760 See, e.g., M. Lidzbarski, Johannesbuch, 63, 2:218; 59, 2:207; 57, 2:203-205. See also H. Schwartz, Tree, 199, p. 165 and Figure 4-10, p. 228.

761 See, e.g., M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GR 10:1, p. 240; C. Schmidt, Bruce Codex, 1 Jeu 5-7, pp. 21-33; C. O’Brien, I Jeu, 5-7, pp. 234-238.

762 See C. Schmidt et al., Altgnostisches Werk, 19:30-35, p. 360.

763 Cf. R. Haardt, Gnosis, GR 3:1, pp. 354-355.

764 H. W. Nibley, Treasures, p. 185. See, e.g., M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, 10:1, p. 241; See H. W. Nibley, Treasures, pp. 208-211 n. 96-102 for a more complete set of references to the ancient literature.

765 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 2:36, 1:187-188.

766 J.-L. Monneret, Grands, p. 482 n. 21,

767 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 2:35, 1:179-181.

768 Corresponding to Harvotat and Amurtat of the Zoroastrian Avesta; cf. Shemhazi and Azael in Jewish legend. See M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 342 n. 32.

769 J. C. Reeves, Harut wa-Marut.

770 Abu Hurayrah in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 30.

771 Qur’an 2:30.

772 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 53.

- 3-39 There are “contradictory hadiths” in Islam about whether the Garden of Eden was earthly, heavenly, or something in between.⁷⁷³ Al-Mizan gives one view of Islamic teachings in this regard: “It follows that Adam had lived a heavenly — and not earthly life in the Garden. This observation gives us a certainty that the Garden of Adam was in the heaven, although it was not the Garden of eternal abode from which one is never turned out.”⁷⁷⁴ “The phrase, ‘a garden of this world,’ has been used in contrast to the Garden of everlasting abode. It indicates a state between this world and the hereafter... The said Garden may be called a Garden of al-Barzakh.”⁷⁷⁵ The Arabic barzakh means a limit or boundary separating two things. Besides being used here to describe the place of the Garden, the term is also employed in the name of the “intermediate realm” constituting the state, place and time between one’s death and the Day of Resurrection.⁷⁷⁶ “The sentences, ‘Adam descended on the (hill of) as-Safā’, and ‘Hawwā’ [Eve] descended on the (hill of) al-Marwah’, indicate that, before it, they were somewhere above this world... Apart from that, many traditions of Ahlu ‘l-bayt (a.s.) show that the Garden of Adam was in the heaven, and that he and his wife descended from the heaven.”⁷⁷⁷
- 3-40 The Arabic seems to simultaneously convey both the idea of a transgression and a fall to a new state: “Azalla (translated as “made them slip”) is derived from zall, to slip (foot or tongue) unintentionally. The result was that they were made to depart from the happy condition in which they were.”⁷⁷⁸
- 3-41 According to the Qur’an, Adam and Eve were twice told to go down:⁷⁷⁹ thus, they “were removed first from the Garden to its courtyard and then from the courtyard to the earth.”⁷⁸⁰ “Habt sometimes means going down a declivity, or descending from a high place to a low one, but its more frequent use in literature is simply in the sense of removing from one place to another... It also signifies simply change in condition. According to LL, habata means he came forth from it and also he became lowered or degraded. And habt further signifies falling into evil; or becoming low or abject; or suffering loss or diminution. This loss or suffering is brought about by means of indulgence in evil.”⁷⁸¹
- 3-42 Dahood translates this as: “be enemies to each other.”⁷⁸² The syntax denotes at least three persons, hence al-Mizan concludes that the statement was addressed to Adam, Eve, and Satan.⁷⁸³ To these three, ibn Ishaq adds the serpent.⁷⁸⁴ It is impossible not to hear in this phrase an echo of the prediction of enmity between the serpent and the seed of the woman in Moses 4:21. Writes al-Tha’labi: “Man is an enemy of the serpent, smashing her head whenever he sees her. The peacock is his enemy and the serpent is his enemy, biting him whenever she can. And Iblis [the Devil] is the enemy of all of them.”⁷⁸⁵
- 3-43 In other words, the change in conditions will not be permanent, but is only a temporary state of probation: “The words ‘an abode and a provision for a time’ refer to man’s span of life on earth, which is limited as compared with the eternal life of the next world.”⁷⁸⁶
- 3-44 For a photo of one of the chains, said to go back to the time of a visit by Alexander the Great in 330 BCE⁷⁸⁷ but probably first put there by an early Sinhalese king,⁷⁸⁸ see M. Akslund, Footprint, plate 25. Nibley writes:

This idea of footprints on the mountains is very common... Remember Adam’s mountain in Ceylon (Sri Lanka)? In the center of the island is this vast sort of Monadnock with a footprint on it, the place where Adam landed when he came to this earth. It’s the oldest pilgrimage there.

773 Porch of Wisdom Cultural Institution, Faith and Reason, p. 161. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

774 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 2:36, 1:192.

775 Ibid., 1:197.

776 M. M. Ali, Qur’an, 23:100, p. 675.

777 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:197-198.

778 M. M. Ali, Qur’an, n. 63, p. 20.

779 Ibid., 2:36, 38, pp. 20-21.

780 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:209. See Commentary 4:31-a, p. 280.

781 M. M. Ali, Qur’an, p. 21 n. 64.

782 N. J. Dawood, Koran, p. 13.

783 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 2:36, 1:187; cf. 7:24; 20:123.

784 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 37; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 53.

785 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 54.

786 M. M. Ali, Qur’an, p. 21 n. 65.

787 See the accounts of the 14th-century Persian voyager Abu Abdullah Muhammad Ibn Battuta and the 15th-century Persian poet Ashraff’s Zaffer Namah Skendari, cited in J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 1:606, 2:139, 788 V. S. Dhammika, Sri Pada; S. S. M. Nanayakkara, Sri Pada.

Pilgrims come from all over. They cross Adam's bridge, which was formerly a land bridge from India to Ceylon. Then the idea is to climb and pull yourself up the mountain... You can still see pictures in the National Geographic with chains, ropes and everything else. Originally, there was a handrail that rotted away. They pulled themselves up....

Anyway, we have... Adam's mountain where Adam came to earth and Adam fell... The [Qur'an] tells us the story...⁷⁸⁹

In recent years, parts of Adam's/Rama's bridge have been threatened by a proposed canal project.⁷⁹⁰

- 3-45 The name Safā is said to have come because Adam was "known as the Chosen [safwa] of God" and the names of Marwa because "womankind [mar'a] sat there."⁷⁹¹ After his descent to earth, Adam was commanded to make a pilgrimage to Mecca and to build a house for God there.⁷⁹² Contemporary hajj pilgrims pass through a stage of prayer in the field of 'Arafat, said to be where Adam and Eve "met after their expulsion from heaven, and it was on the Mount of Mercy (Jabal al-rahman) in this plain that their prayer for forgiveness was accepted."⁷⁹³ Al-Tha'labi precises that when Adam and Eve were rejoined "they recognized each other by questioning on a day of questioning. So the place was named 'Arafat (questions) and the day, 'Irfah."⁷⁹⁴ Here also, all the souls of mankind emerged from Adam and covenanted with God⁷⁹⁵—thus: "To come to 'Arafat is to become fully conscious of that covenant and to remember that 'He' alone is all in all."⁷⁹⁶

The two knolls near Mecca are also important in Islamic tradition for their association with Hagar's frantic search for water to quench the thirst of Ishmael.⁷⁹⁷ Often, pilgrims performing the hajj also follow it by completing the sa'ee (meaning 'running') in commemoration of that event. Women walk and men jog or run the three-kilometer distance back and forth between the hills seven times, starting at al-Safā and ending at al-Marwah. Tradition says that Adam had also been commanded to run in that place, after which "the earth, with God's permission, burst forth with a spring filled with water that was colder than ice, sweeter than honey and more redolent than musk."⁷⁹⁸

Traditions about Adam's descent are also associated with Sri Pada (literally "Sacred Footprint," also known as "Adam's Peak") in Sri Lanka (Ceylon), which rises dramatically from the surrounding plain to a height of 7360 feet. This location is understood throughout the East as being, for Adam and Eve, "the best of all possible worlds after being thrown out of Paradise."⁷⁹⁹ A boulder at the peak containing an indentation resembling a five-foot-long footprint is said by Buddhists to be that of the left foot of the departing Buddha,⁸⁰⁰ and of Shiva by Tamil Hindus.⁸⁰¹ Further tying the location to descriptions of the Garden of Eden, the place is also seen by Buddhists and Hindus as origin of three or four of the most important rivers.⁸⁰² A legend of more recent origin attributes the footprint to the Apostle Thomas, missionary to India or to the Eunuch of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia,⁸⁰³ while a 15th-century Chinese work attributes the footprint to Pan Gu (P'an Ku), the primordial man in some versions of Chinese mythology.⁸⁰⁴ Moreover, there are Muslim, Mandaean, Gnostic and Christian traditions that claim it as "the place where Adam landed when he came to this earth."⁸⁰⁵ Alluvial deposits at the 789 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, pp. 195-196.

790 Hindu groups oppose canal project (September 12).

791 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 65.

792 Ibid., p. 61; cf. 62, 65-66. See also al-Tabari, Creation, 1:123-124, pp. 294-295; Figure 4-4, p. 219.

793 See Excursus 47: Islamic Perspectives Relating to Redemption, p. 645.

794 A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 54; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:120, p. 291. See Commentary 3:23-c, p. 183.

795 Qur'an 7:172, 30:30, 33:7, 53:56; M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, pp. 63-64; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 39-40; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 32-33; Excursus 48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants, p. 649.

796 S. A. Ashraf, Inner, p. 122.

797 Genesis 21:12-21.

798 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 67. For a geographical perspective of hajj events, see R. C. Martin, Encyclopedia, 2:531-532. Other purported locations for the descent of Adam and Eve to earth are given in al-Tabari, Creation, 1:120-121, pp. 290-292 and A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 53.

799 E. Lupieri, Mandaeans, p. 143.

800 M. Akslund, Footprint, pp. 16-55; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, p. 215 n. 22; J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 1:327.

801 M. Akslund, Footprint, pp. 135-139; J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 2:132.

802 M. Akslund, Footprint, pp. 136-137.

803 Ibid., p. 139; J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 2:133. On Candace, see Acts 8:27.

804 V. S. Dhammika, Sri Pada; J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 1:609.

805 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, p. 195; cf. E. S. Drower, Mandaeans, pp. 10, 259; M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, pp. 33, 38; E. Lupieri, Mandaeans, pp. 142-144; J. E. Tennent, Ceylon, 1:583-584; 2:133-136; B. M.

mountain's foot are rich in gems which, according to one Muslim tradition, were formed from the tears that Adam and Eve shed after they were made to leave Eden. Other traditions about the place tell of "trees whose leaves when eaten, restore old age to youth" and "that some of the fig-leaves with which Adam was girt about, having been scattered by the wind in his fall from Paradise, those leaves became the sweet spices for which [Sri Lanka] is celebrated."⁸⁰⁶

"[E]xtending [its] past religious and political glories two hundred years into the future," famed science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke included Adam's Peak in his 1979 book, The Fountains of Paradise. Here, the author transforms the mountain where Adam is said to have descended from heaven "into the only place on earth where an orbital space tower might be constructed. Through Adam's Peak, Sri Lanka is made a port for the entire solar system."⁸⁰⁷ Of note is the fact that Clarke had made Sri Lanka his home in 1956, and died there in 2008.⁸⁰⁸

- 3-46 "Hyde... refutes the etymology of 'Taprobana' from Div (= isle) Rohan—the name for Adam's Peak in the Qur'an, and proposes to bring 'Serandib,' from Selen, or 'Seilan-dib,' island of Seylan [Ceylon = Sri Lanka]—Singhala."⁸⁰⁹

- 3-47 Elaborating more fully on the distinction between premodern and modern concepts of literal truth, Faulconer writes:

... we [moderns] take the literal truth to be the truth that most accurately describes or refers to what happened, independent of any symbolic ordering, and we take the "spiritual sense" to be something beyond the literal, to what we call "merely symbolic." Premoderns, however, do not disjoin the literal and the spiritual. For them, it means, "what the letters, i.e., the words say," rather than, "what an objective report would say." "What x says" and what x describes accurately" do not mean the same, even if the first is a description. Even a careless reading of medieval discussions of scriptural exegesis will show that the medievals' interest was not in deciding what the scriptures portray, but in what they say. They do not take the scriptures to be picturing something for us, but to be telling us the truth of the world, of its things, its events, and its people, a truth that cannot be told apart from its situation in a divine, symbolic ordering.⁸¹⁰

Of course, that is not to deny that the scriptures tell about events that actually happened... However, premodern interpreters do not think it sufficient (or possible) to portray the real events of real history without letting us see them in the light of that which gives them their significance—their reality, the enactment of which they are a part—as history, namely the symbolic order that they incarnate. Without that light, portrayals cannot be accurate. A bare description of the physical movements of certain persons at a certain time is not history (assuming that such bare descriptions are even possible). "Person A raised his left hand, turning it clockwise so that .03 milliliters of a liquid poured from a vial in that hand into a receptacle situated midway between A and B" does not mean the same as "Henry poured poison in to Richard's cup." Only the latter could be a historical claim (and even the former is no bare description).⁸¹¹

Faulconer moreover makes it clear that what some people take to be "literal" interpretations of scripture results in "rob[bing] it of its status as a way of understanding the world."⁸¹² William Blake makes the same point poetically:⁸¹³

This life's dim Windows of the Soul
Distorts the Heavens from Pole to Pole
And leads you to believe a Lie
When you see with, not thro', the Eye.

Wheeler, Prophets, pp. 25-26.

806 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, p. 214 n. 20; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:124-126, pp. 296-297. Hymn lovers will recognize this theme, found in "From Greenland's Icy Mountains": "What though the spicy breezes blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle" (Hymns (1948), #40). These words are omitted in Hymns (1985), #268.

807 C. S. Campbell, Images, p. 296.

808 For another example of where this theme has been absorbed into modern literature, see Excursus 12: Saint Exupéry and Genesis, p. 549.

809 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, p. 215 n. 22.

810 Cf. A. G. Zornberg, Genesis, pp 31-32.

811 J. E. Faulconer, Incarnation, pp. 44-45; cf. J. E. Faulconer, Study, pp. 124-128.

812 J. E. Faulconer, Dorrien, p. 426. See the quotation by Faulconer in Moses 3 Gleanings, p. 194.

813 W. Blake, The Everlasting Gospel, section 5, l, cited in M. Muggeridge, Jesus, p. 25

“Thus,” says Muggeridge, “Blake distinguishes between the fantasy that is seen with the eye and the truth that is seen through it. They are two clearly demarcated kingdoms; and passing from one to the other, from the kingdom of fantasy to the kingdom of reality, gives inexpressible delight.”⁸¹⁴

- 3-48 In the Sumerian myth of Enki and Ninbursag, Enki was cursed because he ate the carefully nurtured plants of Ninbursag, the mother-goddess.⁸¹⁵ Date palms, however, were not only depicted as a source of sweet fruit but also, according to texts from many centuries later, they sometimes were climbed to obtain access to a source of wisdom or warning. Notes Visotzky: “For a period of close to five hundred years, stories from Semitic religious communities preserved (in Palestinian Aramaic, koine Greek, and rabbinic Hebrew) snatches of the conversation of palm trees. The palms speak in dreams to one another and in broad daylight to those who would transgress against them. What seems to bind the dialogues together is that in every case, the ultimate hearer is a towering religious figure.”⁸¹⁶

An example of the theme of warning is illustrated in the Genesis Apocryphon, where we find Abram dreaming of a cedar and a date-palm, representing himself and his wife Sarai. It is only through the pleadings of the palm tree that the cedar is spared from the axes of the woodcutters.⁸¹⁷ A similar theme is found in the biography of Mani, where Elchasai the Baptist climbs a date palm and is apparently warned that he should not cut it down for wood.⁸¹⁸ On the other hand, the function of the trees as a source of wisdom is shown in the Pistis Sophia, which reports that God spoke “mysteries” to Enoch “out of the Tree of Gnosis [Knowledge] and out of the Tree of Life in the paradise of Adam.”⁸¹⁹

See the Persian Shahnama epic,⁸²⁰ where a talking tree rebukes Alexander the Great “for his lust of conquest and prophesies his death in a distant land.”⁸²¹

- 3-49 There is evidence that, in the first temple, the Menorah was placed in the Holy of Holies to represent the tree of life.⁸²²
- 3-50 Rabbinic tradition also saw the human body as a microcosm of creation and of the temple, e.g., “The Temple corresponds to the whole world and to the creation of man who is a small world.”⁸²³
- 3-51 In Muslim tradition, the primordial mound was located at the site of Mecca rather than Jerusalem: “The first part of the Earth to appear on the face of the water was Mecca, and God spread out the Earth below it. Therefore it was called Umm al-Qura, namely the ‘model (= mother) of all towns.’”⁸²⁴
- 3-52 Currid discusses the fact that Exodus 1-15 “owes much of its structure, language, and theology to the Genesis creation account,” providing a fitting prelude to the crowning creation of the temple in subsequent chapters:

The scriptural writer understood and described the exodus as a second creation. It was a new conquest of chaos, another prevailing over the waters of the deep, and a redemptive creation of the people of Israel. This view has found its way into the literature of biblical studies. What has not often been recognized is that the preceding plague account is an ironic undoing or destruction of the creation order in the land of Egypt. God took the creation order of Genesis 1 and reversed it in Exodus 7-12 for the purposes of reducing order to chaos and bringing judgment upon Egypt.”⁸²⁵

- 3-53 Writes Barker:

On Day One there was light, separated from darkness, and this corresponded to the Holy of Holies. This light was the presence of God and the state of the angels, who were both in the light and of the light. Just as light cannot be divided into distinct parts, but is all one, so, too, the angels of Day One are in some sense one.”⁸²⁶

814 M. Muggeridge, Jesus, p. 25.

815 J. B. Pritchard, ANET, 197-219, p. 40.

816 B. L. Visotzky, Conversation, p. 212; cf. H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 288; E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, p. 213. See Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163.

817 F. G. Martinez, Genesis Apocryphon, 19:14-17, p. 232.

818 R. Cameron et al., CMC, pp. 11, 13.

819 C. Schmidt, Pistis, 2:99, p. 495; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 2:246, p. 205.

820 A. Ferdowsi, Shahnama, pp. 517-519.

821 E. Edson et al., Cosmos, p. 55, caption to Figure 29.

822 See Excursus 51: The Five Lost Things of the Temple, p. 658.

823 Midrash Tanhuma-Yelammedenu 3, cited in W. Williams, Shadow.

824 A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 6.

825 J. D. Currid, Egypt, p. 115.

826 M. Barker, Angels, p. 13.

- 3-54 For depictions of Christ appearing in the midst of the burning bush, see D. Jackson, Marvellous, p. 104 Figure 85; p. 105 Figure 86.

Recall also the description in Orson Pratt's remembrance of Joseph Smith's First Vision where, as the light drew nearer:

... it increased in brightness, and magnitude, so that, by the time that it reached the tops of the trees, the whole wilderness, for some distance around, was illuminated in a most glorious and brilliant manner. He expected to have seen the leaves and boughs of the trees consumed, as soon as the light came in contact with them.⁸²⁷

- 3-55 The Gospel of Philip seems to paint a similar picture of the olive tree as a secondary Tree of Life, separate from the original Tree of Life: "... the Tree of Life is in the middle of the garden. However, it is from the olive tree that we get the chrism, and from the chrism, the resurrection."⁸²⁸ While Tvedtnes favors an interpretation that sees only one tree in this passage,⁸²⁹ Ryen's view of two distinct trees seems more consistent with the text, since "it is not... said that the oil comes from the Tree of Life, but from the olive tree." Nevertheless, because the olive tree is seen as the source of resurrection, it "may therefore be correct to say that the olive tree is a Tree of Life as well."⁸³⁰ Aphrahat, the Persian Sage, also distinguished between the sweet fruit of the eschatological Tree of Life—in his case seen as a grape vine—and Christ as the "Light-giving Olive," providing "the gift of healing," and by which "Christians, priests, kings, and prophets are made perfect."⁸³¹
- 3-56 See Jones⁸³² for the view that "the bodies for man and other living things were indeed created or organized from the dust of the earth over eons of time before Adam, but that independent spirits were not placed into the bodies until Adam." In this sense, according to Jones, Adam then became the "first flesh."
- 3-57 Corresponding to the imagery of the Garden of Eden as a "way station," the temple is, as Nibley argues:⁸³³

... best thought of in terms of a tent, ...until the time comes when the saints "will no longer have to use a movable tent,"⁸³⁴ according to the early Fathers, who get the idea from the New Testament...⁸³⁵ It is now fairly certain, moreover, that the great temples of the ancients were not designed to be dwelling-houses of deity but rather stations or landing-places, fitted with inclined ramps, stairways, passageways, waiting-rooms, elaborate systems of gates, and so forth, for the convenience of traveling divinities, whose sacred boats and wagons stood ever ready to take them on their endless junkets from shrine to shrine and from festival to festival through the cosmic spaces. The Great Pyramid itself, we are now assured, is the symbol not of immovable stability but of constant migration and movement between the worlds; and the ziggurats of Mesopotamia, far from being immovable, are reproduced in the seven-stepped throne of the thundering sky-wagon.

Scripture makes a clear distinction between the fixed heavenly temple and its "portable" counterparts. For example, in Psalm 18⁸³⁶ and D&C 121:1, the "pavilion" (i.e., booth or canopy; Hebrew sukkah) of "God's hiding place" should not be equated with the celestial "temple" (i.e., palace; Hebrew hekal) to which the prayers of the oppressed ascend,⁸³⁷ but rather as a representation of a movable "conveyance,"⁸³⁸ here veiled by dark rain clouds, in which God could swiftly descend to rescue His 827 D. C. Jessee, First Vision, p. 21; cf. D. Jones, History, p. 15; William Smith, 1883, in D. Vogel, Early, 1:495.

828 W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 73:15-19, p. 153.

829 J. A. Tvedtnes, Olive Oil, p. 429.

830 J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, p. 214.

831 R. Graffin, Patrologia Syriaca, 2, 8:17-20, cited in R. Murray, Symbols, p. 115.

832 S. E. Jones, Death.

833 H. W. Nibley, Tenting, pp. 42-43.

834 See Origen, John, 10:23, p. 404. "The pitching of the tent outside the camp represents God's remoteness from the impure world" (H. W. Nibley, Tenting, p. 79 n. 40).

835 E.g., "John 1:14 reads literally, 'the logos was made flesh and pitched his tent [eskenosen] among us'; and after the Resurrection the Lord 'camps' with his disciples, Acts 1:4. At the Transfiguration Peter prematurely proposed setting up three tents for taking possession (Matthew 17:4; Mark 9:5; Luke 9:33)" (H. W. Nibley, Tenting, p. 80 n. 41).

836 Cf. 2 Samuel 22.

837 Psalm 18:6; D&C 121:2. J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, p. 945 mistakenly identifies the "pavilion" of D&C 121:1 as God's heavenly residence, while S. E. Robinson et al., D&C Commentary, 4:151 correctly identifies the "pavilion" as a "movable tent."

838 Appropriately translated from the Greek as "Tabernacle" (J. N. Sparks et al., Orthodox Study Bible, Psalm 17(18):12, p. 691). See Endnote E-116, p. 731.

people from mortal danger.⁸³⁹ The sense of the action is succinctly captured by Alter: “The outcry of the beleaguered warrior ascends all the way to the highest heavens, thus launching a downward vertical movement.”⁸⁴⁰

Both Noah’s ark and the Tabernacle of Moses were portable sanctuaries of rescue that paralleled in function God’s heavenly chariot.⁸⁴¹ Significantly, the word used in Genesis for ark (tevah) reappears for the only time in the Bible in the story of the infant Moses, who was placed in a basket in the Nile and saved by Pharaoh’s daughter.⁸⁴² Describing the similar chest-like construction of the ark, Westermann writes that it was “a huge, rectangular box with a roof, divided into rooms.”⁸⁴³ The account thus makes it clear that the ark “was not shaped like a ship and it had no oars,”⁸⁴⁴ “accentuating the fact that Noah’s deliverance was not dependent on navigating skills, [but rather happened] entirely by God’s will.”⁸⁴⁵

The ark and the Tabernacle are the only two structures mentioned in the Bible whose designs were directly revealed by God.⁸⁴⁶ The ark’s three decks suggest the divisions of the Tabernacle. Indeed, each deck of the ark “was the same height as the Tabernacle and three times the area of the Tabernacle court.”⁸⁴⁷ Further strengthening the association between the ark and the Tabernacle is the fact that Mishnaic Hebrew used the Hebrew term tevah for the Ark of the Covenant.⁸⁴⁸ In addition, the Greek term for Noah’s ark “later becomes the standard word” for the Ark of the Covenant.⁸⁴⁹ Westermann concludes: “The place where God allows his glory to appear is the place whence the life of the people is preserved. The ark corresponds to this in the primeval event where the concern is for the preservation of humanity and what is saved is natural creation... The parallel between the ark and the Tabernacle has a profound meaning.”⁸⁵⁰

The sense of the term “gopher wood”—unique to Genesis 6:14—is uncertain. The possibility of conscious wordplay in the juxtaposition of gpr with kpr (“pitch”) cannot be ruled out. Intriguingly, the form and imagery of the latter (i.e., smearing, covering, wiping) suggest the Hebrew word for atonement.⁸⁵¹

Many modern exegetes envisage a resinous timber and take the term “gopher” to mean cypress wood.⁸⁵² Because it is resistant to rot, the wood of the cypress tree was used in ancient times for the building of ships and the construction of coffins. There is an extensive mythology on the cypress tree in cultures throughout the world. It is known for its fragrance and longevity⁸⁵³—qualities that naturally link it with the Garden of Eden. Consistent with this idea, cypress trees were often used to make temple doors—gateways to Paradise.

3-58 Compare the Mandaean masiqta (death rite), where a dove (called bai or ba) is sacrificed and a fragment of

- 839 K. L. Barker, Zondervan, p. 803 n. 18:7-15. Some Christians also came to view this Psalm as foreshadowing the Incarnation (J. N. Sparks et al., Orthodox Study Bible, p. 691 n. 17). Noah’s ark was sometimes seen in a similar fashion: “The ark was a type of the Mother of God with Christ and the Church in her womb (Akath). The floodwaters were a type of baptism, in which we are saved (1 Peter 3:18-22)” (ibid., Genesis 6:14-21, p. 12).
- 840 R. Alter, Psalms, p. 53 n. 8.
- 841 See Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591; J. M. Bradshaw et al., God’s Image 2, pp. 253-259; J. M. Bradshaw, Ark and Tent.
- 842 Exodus 2:3, 5. See U. Cassuto, Noah to Abraham, p. 59.
- 843 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 418.
- 844 By way of contrast, the flood vessel of the Epic of Gilgamesh, was explicitly called a “boat” (A. George, Gilgamesh, 11:24, p. 89). Despite several such differences, significant parallels to Noah’s ark and flood can be made (C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 418-421).
- 845 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 230; cf. U. Cassuto, Noah to Abraham, pp. 60-61. Certain features of the ark’s construction, including its single opening, recall the Jaredite barges (H. W. Nibley, Lehi 1988, pp. 359-379)—and, for that matter, Adam’s Cave of Treasures (see Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, The Cave of Treasures, p. 669).
- 846 See Figure E54-2, p. 696. See also Excursus 16: The Role of Revelation in Temple Building, p. 561.
- 847 J. Dunn et al., Commentary, p. 44.
- 848 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 280.
- 849 J. W. Wevers, Notes, Genesis 6:14, p. 83.
- 850 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 421.
- 851 See Endnote 6-36, p. 502.
- 852 R. Alter, Five Books, Genesis 6:14, p. 41; K. L. Barker, Zondervan, Genesis 6:14, p. 14.
- 853 A 4500-year-old Cypress tree stands on the grounds of the Grand Mosque of Abarqu, near the village Shiraz in Iran’s southeastern province of Yazd. This was formerly the site of a Zoroastrian temple. Indeed, Zoroaster himself is said to have planted a cypress at the temple of Khorasan (M. Boyce, Zoroastrians, p. 158).

its flesh is used to signify the ascent of the departing spirit.⁸⁵⁴

3-59 For example, frustrated by the lack of geographical consistency in the description of the four rivers of vv. 11-14, Stordalen adopts a contrarian view with respect to the direction of flow of the rivers. He adopts a map resembling the Babylonian world map where the rivers are seen as running out of the Garden, into the “Cosmic Sea” surrounding the circular disk of presumed biblical cosmography, and “from the four cosmic corners [of the disk] towards the terrestrial center” of the earth.⁸⁵⁵

3-60 Though he consciously avoided giving the impression that his was his final point of view, Eyring favored prevailing scientific opinions about the origin of man. In 1971, he wrote to a correspondent: “... the evidence seems to me to point to the existence of pre-Adamic man... Our scriptural accounts are brief and don’t seem to me to rule out these possibilities.”⁸⁵⁶ Elsewhere, Eyring stated, albeit with characteristic tentativeness: “Some people object to the slightest hint of being related to the rest of the animal kingdom, particularly the hairy apes... I’ve never had that particular aversion. In fact, I’ve kind of enjoyed what little I’ve seen of them.... I’d be content to discover that I share a common heritage with them, so long as God is at the controls.”⁸⁵⁷

Regarding Eyring’s “unequivocally equivocal position on evolution,” one person recalled discussing the problems of early man with him in his office: “I then asked, ‘How do you believe it was?’ You replied, ‘I believe whichever way it turns out to have actually been.’”⁸⁵⁸

3-61 An excellent discussion of this line-upon-line process can be found in D. B. Parkinson, Received, pp. 262-270.

3-62 Henry Eyring recalled a conversation with Albert Einstein relating to this topic: “On another occasion, Professor Hugh S. Taylor and I were taking Professor Einstein and an Israeli chemistry professor to Professor Einstein’s home in a car. The subject turned to religion and I explained to Professor Einstein our LDS belief in a preexistence. He immediately asked about the preexistence of animals. I explained our belief that everything was created spiritually before its temporal existence. This interested him, but the conversation was terminated at the end of the journey.”⁸⁵⁹

3-63 Results of DNA studies seem to indicate that both the most recent common male and female ancestors of mankind each lived long before the Fall of Adam and Eve⁸⁶⁰—or, for that matter, at a more distant period than Noah, whose sons traditionally have been understood to be the sole male survivors of the Flood.⁸⁶¹ The series of questions Nibley raises here are with an eye to finding scriptural support for surviving non-Noachian lineages that would help explain such scientific findings. These would be neither descendants of Noah nor of Adam but rather contemporaries whose descendants presumably mixed with the Adamic lineage. Of relevance is the argument by Parr that promised blessings from patriarchs such as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are of necessity driven by covenant and lineal descent, not by genetics, since specific “nuclear DNA finding its way from any one of these progenitors to any descendent of today is extremely unlikely from a biological perspective.”⁸⁶² Happily, the promises made to the faithful covenant posterity are not about inheriting fragments of Abrahamic DNA, but rather about receiving a fulness of Abrahamic blessings, assured through faithfulness.

3-64 Note that OT2 reads “from a remnant of his seed should come all nations.”⁸⁶³ It is not known whether this change was made under the direction of the Prophet or made by one of his associates as the record was being prepared for publication.

854 E. S. Drower, Adam, pp. 8, 32.

855 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 284-285, 299. For yet another perspective, see J. S. Major, Heaven, pp. 156-158 for a description of the four cosmic rivers in early Chinese Han thought.

856 H. J. Eyring, Mormon Scientist, p. 125.

857 H. Eyring, Reflections, p. 60.

858 H. J. Eyring, Mormon Scientist, p. 228.

859 H. Eyring, Faith, p. 178. See H. J. Eyring, Mormon Scientist, p. 263 for an alternative account of what must have been the same incident.

860 E.g., D. N. Brems, Divine Engineering, pp. 128-129; F. S. Collins, Language, p. 126.

861 See D. E. Jeffery, Noah’s Flood and C. M. White et al., Noachian Flood Story for considered LDS perspectives on reconciling current scientific findings with the Genesis flood story. See also J. A. Widtsoe, Flood; Morris S. Petersen, Earth, p. 432.

862 R. Parr, Missing, pp. 94-97. See also D. J. Meldrum, Children 2003; D. J. Meldrum et al., Children JBMS; D. J. Meldrum et al., Children 2007; T. D. Stephens, Tree of Life.

863 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 621.

FIGURE 4-1. Expulsion from the Garden of Eden, 1828
Thomas Cole, 1801-1848

So I drove out the man, and I placed at the east of the Garden of Eden, cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life (Moses 4:31). In his characteristic epic style, Thomas Cole depicted Adam and Eve being expelled from the lush garden to live in the relative wilderness of the mortal world. The image of the tiny couple is almost lost in the wide expanse of the landscape, emphasizing the greatness of the power of God and the grandeur of His Creation as compared with the forced humility of fallen mankind. The light emanating from the Garden contrasts with the darkness of the way ahead for Adam and Eve.

MOSES 4

The Fall

Overview	215
The Everlasting Covenant	216
The Grand Councils	220
Rebellion in Heaven	223
Transgression in Eden	227
The Nakedness and the Clothing of Adam and Eve	234
Moses 4: Text and Commentary	242
Gleanings	283
Endnotes	298

Overview

FOLLOWING a rapid sweep across the vast panorama of the Creation and the Garden of Eden in Moses 1-3, the narrative slows to a more measured pace at the beginning of Moses 4—and with good reason, for it is at this point that the whole purpose of Creation begins to unfold. A statement attributed to Cardinal John Henry Newman sums up a message that can be taken from the juxtaposition of the accounts of the Creation and the Fall: “It is better that the whole universe disappear than that one little, little lie be spoken.”¹ In other words, the moral significance of the choice made in Eden—and of similar choices we make on a daily basis—outweighs in importance the entire amoral universe.

The pivotal nature of Adam and Eve’s choice is made clear in the structure of Moses 4 itself. Wenham sees the corresponding chapter in Genesis as a “masterpiece of palistrophic writing, the mirror-image [chiastic] style, whereby the first scene matches the last, the second the penultimate and so on: ABCDC’B’A’... Not only does the literary structure move in and out in this fashion, but so does the action: it commences outside the Garden, the dialogues are conducted within the Garden, and the decisive act of disobedience takes place at its very center.”² In this way, the focal theme of “opposition in all things”³ reveals itself in both the content and the structure of the account.

A modified version of Wenham’s schema, as applied to the book of Moses, follows:

- A. 3:5-17: Adam and Eve are placed in the Garden and are given a commandment
- B. 3:18-25: The spiritual order of relationships before the Fall
- (4:1-4: Digression on Satan’s fall)
- C. 4:5-11: The dialogue between Eve and the serpent
- D. 4:12-14: Adam and Eve transgress the commandment
- C’ 4:15-19: The dialogue between Adam, Eve, and God
- B’ 4:20-27: The temporal order of relationships after the Fall
- A’ 4:28-31: Adam and Eve are driven out of the Garden

1 J. M. Bradshaw, AHK Notes.

2 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 51. See Endnote 4-1, p. 298.

3 2 Nephi 2:11.

Scenes A and A' feature God as the only actor and feature a vocabulary that is unique to this part of Genesis—"in the east" "tree of life" "garden of Eden" "till" and "guard." "In scene [A] man is made from 'the dust of the [ground] and placed in the garden,⁴ whereas in the final scene man is driven from the Garden, by implication back to the dust of the [ground] from which he was taken."⁵ In scenes B and B', God is the principal actor and the scenes are both "concerned with relationships between man and the rest of Creation"—first the ideal situation, then, by way of contrast, the situation after the Fall. "Finally both scenes end with statements about woman's role as wife and mother⁶ and about clothing."⁷ Scenes C and C' are dialogues about the eating of the fruit and its consequences that both take place in the center of the Garden. The three comments about the tree made by the serpent match the three questions God poses to Adam and Eve.⁸ Scene D stands apart—Adam and Eve "are alone: neither God nor the serpent is mentioned... The "crucial words 'and he ate' are... sandwiched between a twofold mention of the desired effects of the fruit: its ability to open eyes and to give knowledge."⁹

The Everlasting Covenant

Similar in function to the digression of Moses 3:5, the narrative aside of Moses 4:1-4 temporarily interrupts the flow of events in order to provide the interpretive framework for the story that follows.¹⁰ We learn that the real beginning of things was not in the first moment of Creation, but rather in a series of preparatory events with a premortal covenant at its crux. The Prophet Joseph Smith explained: "Everlasting covenant was made between three personages before the organization of this earth, and relates to their dispensation of things to men on the earth; these personages, according to Abraham's record, are called God the first, the Creator, God the second, the Redeemer, and God the third, the witness or Testator."¹¹

Textual traces alluding to an everlasting covenant with universal scope have been explored by scholars. According to Murray, the central feature of this "cosmic covenant" was: "... a belief which ancient Israel shared with neighboring cultures... in a divinely willed order harmoniously linking heaven and earth. In Israelite tradition this was established at Creation, when the cosmic elements were fixed and bound to maintain the order... Human collaboration in this task was effected by maintaining justice with mercy and by ritual actions, in which kings played the leading part."¹²

Barker conjectures that a clue to the relationship between "creation" and "covenant" can be found in the etymology of the two terms:

The word bara' is similar in sound and form to the word for covenant, berith, and the Hebrew dictionary suggests that the root meaning of "covenant" is "to bind." This similarity of the words for covenant-and-binding and the uniquely divine creative activity leads me to suspect that is the key to the older Creation story, that the words had been related. [The first or "invisible" creation] was a process of binding into bonds, engraving limits and definitions, and then

4 Moses 3:7-8.

5 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 50. See Moses 4:31; cf. 4:25.

6 Moses 3:24; 4:26.

7 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 50. See Moses 3:25; 4:27.

8 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 51.

9 Ibid., p. 51.

10 See Endnote 4-2, p. 298.

11 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 May 1841, p. 190. See Endnote 4-3, p. 298.

12 R. Murray, Cosmic, p. xx. See Endnote 4-4, p. 298.

FIGURE 4-2. God Creating the Universe, ca. 1794/1824
William Blake, 1757-1827

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-2.

*When he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he engraved a circle upon the face of the deep:... when he set for the sea its engraved mark... when he engraved the foundations of the earth.*¹ Joseph Smith anticipated with great longing the day when he, like the author of Proverbs, would be able to “gaze upon eternal wisdom engraven upon the heavens.”² Themes relating to these primordial “bounds” also appear in the Doctrine and Covenants³ and in other statements by Joseph Smith.⁴

Perhaps the best-known illustration by Blake, this picture often appears with the inaccurate title of “The Ancient of Days.” The solitary posture of the form seems to have been prescribed by Milton, who wrote of the moment when the Almighty “took the golden Compasses prepar’d... to circumscribe This Universe, and all created things: One foot he centred, and the other turn’d Round through the vast profunditie obscure.”⁵

Although the tools of an architect are frequently used in medieval depictions of the Creation to portray the geometry of the heavens, seas, and earth, Blake also may have been attracted to this symbol because of his acquaintance with Freemasonry while he was an apprentice engraver.⁶ An associate of Blake said that the artist saw the vision of this image hovering “at the top of his staircase; and he [was] frequently... heard to say, that it made a more powerful impression upon his mind than all he had ever been visited by.”⁷ He worked and reworked this image continually, reportedly returning to it for a final effort in the last hours before his death.⁸

In the Preludium of Blake’s Europe, for which a version of this image forms the frontispiece, he asks, “And who shall bind the infinite with an eternal band? To compass it with swaddling bands?”⁹ In Blake’s mythology, Urizen—representing the “horizon” or “your reason,” with the emblem of the Eye—was identified with his view of Jehovah as a wrathful, law-giving creator-God. In another one of Blake’s prints, he pictures Isaac Newton using “the compasses in the same sense as a symbol of a defining, limiting creation by the reason unenlightened by the imagination.”¹⁰ Similarly, Urizen was portrayed as “a being who began in light, even though he ended in restriction, privation and dread. He may be able to cast off those States in which he has resided, and thus reclaim his true self, his true glory.”¹¹

1 Proverbs 8:27-29, following the translation of M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 39; cf. Job 26:10.

2 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 27 November 1832, 1:299.

3 E.g., D&C 88:34-38, 42-45; 121:30-32; 132:5, 11.

4 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 October 1843, p. 253; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 20 March 1842, pp. 197-198.

5 J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 7:224-228, p. 145; compare Blake’s Urizen (1794), where he: “... formed golden compasses / And began to explore the Abyss” (W. Blake, Illuminated, 7:8, p. 428); Chesterton called the figure “a monstrously muscular old man, with hair and beard like a snowstorm, but with limbs like young trees” (William Blake, p. 55).

6 P. Ackroyd, Blake, p. 377.

7 Ibid., p. 378.

8 See Endnote 4-82, p. 321.

9 W. Blake, Illuminated, 2:13-14, p. 422.

10 M. Butlin, Blake, pp. 52-53; cf. W. Blake, Illuminated Blake, pp. 155-156.

11 P. Ackroyd, Blake, p. 379. See Excursus 20: The Circle and the Square, p. 571 and Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

using them to order the visible creation. When the Lord spoke to Job from the whirlwind and reminded him that he did not have the wisdom of those who had witnessed the Creation, He said: “Who... shut in the sea... and prescribed bounds [my “engraved thing”] for it... and said, “Thus far shall you come, and no farther...”¹³ “Can you bind the chains of the Pleiades, or loose the cords of Orion?”¹⁴ “Do you know the ordinances [“engraved things”] of the heavens? Can you establish their rule [mstr] on the earth?”¹⁵ a word which does not appear elsewhere in the Hebrew Scriptures. This is significant as it clearly refers to the correspondence between earth and heaven...”¹⁶

13 Job 38:8-11.

14 Job 38:31.

15 Job 38:33. See also G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 69:16-25, pp. 90-91.

16 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 44. See Matthew 6:10.

It is significant that this premortal engraving of bounds, limits, and ordinances not only pervades all of Creation, but also is said to be traced on the very garment of God: “And it is every part engraved from within and from without JHWH JHWH.”¹⁷

Related themes appear in the Doctrine and Covenants¹⁸ and in statements by Joseph Smith. For example, in 1842 the Prophet stated that “God set the sun, the moon, and the stars in the heavens, and gave them their laws, conditions, and bounds, which they cannot pass, except by His commandments; they all move in perfect harmony in their sphere and order; and are as lights, wonders and signs unto us. The sea also has its bounds which it cannot pass.”¹⁹ He also said that knowledge about “the organization of the spiritual and heavenly worlds, and of spiritual and heavenly beings” and the “limits and bounds” that were irrevocably and “voluntarily subscribed to by themselves... can, and may be known, through the revelations of God in the way of his ordinances, and in answer to prayer.”²⁰

Just as the limits and bounds prepared prior to the physical creation were irrevocable, so also these “[o]rdinances instituted in the heavens before the foundation of the world, in the priesthood, for the salvation of men, are not to be altered or changed.”²¹ God said, respecting the obligations that He takes upon Himself conditional on our obedience to covenants: “I... am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.”²²

17 Hekhalot Rabbati 3:4, cited in Testament of Job, p. 866 n. 48h; cf. Isaiah 49:16, Zechariah 13:6. See Endnote 4-6, p. 298.

18 E.g., D&C 88:34-38, 42-45; 121:30-32; 132:5, 11.

19 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 20 March 1842, pp. 197-198.

20 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 October 1843, p. 253.

21 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 11 June 1843, p. 308; cf. D&C 124:33, 40-41; 132:5, 11, 28; J. Smith, Jr., Words, 22 January 1843, p. 159; 11 June 1843, pp. 213, 215; 9 October 1843, p. 254; 12 May 1844, p. 368; B. Young, 8 October 1854, p. 89.

22 D&C 82:10.

FIGURE 4-4. Masjid al-Haram at Night

The photo shows the sacred mosque of Mecca during the Islamic month of Dhu al-Hijjah, the peak period of hajj (= pilgrimage).¹ As part of the ritual of tawaf, hajj pilgrims enact the symbolism of the circle and the square as they form concentric rings around the rectangular Ka'bah (= cube). Their counterclockwise circumambulation is performed seven times to demonstrate “the unity of the believers in the worship of the One God,” and to commemorate similar events in the lives of Muhammad and earlier prophets. Islamic tradition says that near this location Adam had been shown al-Baytu l-Ma'mur (the worship place of angels, sometimes called the “Visited House”), which was directly above the Ka'bah in heaven,² and that he was commanded to build a house for God in Mecca where he could, in likeness of the angels, “circumambulate... and offer prayer...”³ There [God] would offer him

Iblis [= the Devil⁴] to stone as the angels had done when [Iblis had] refused to prostrate himself” before Adam.⁵ Tradition recounts that the first house of God had been built by the angels 2,000 years before Adam,⁶ and that since the time of Adam it was destroyed and rebuilt many times by prophets and other notables,⁷ including Ibrahim (Abraham) and Ishmael. A “diamond of paradise”⁸ that was “whiter than snow”⁹ was said to have been given to Adam after the Fall. Later, however, it turned black because of the misdeeds of mankind.¹⁰ The Black Stone (al-hajar al-aswad) associated with Adam, representing the primordial covenant between God and mankind,¹¹ is now located on the southeast corner of the Ka'bah, thus identifying the instrument of seership with both the foundation stone of creation and of the sacred structure.¹² The sacred rock beneath the Muslim Dome of the Rock (Qubbat al-Sakhra), built on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem, plays a similar role for that monument.¹³

1 See R. C. Martin, Encyclopedia, 2:529-533; G. D. Newby, Encyclopedia, pp. 71-72.

2 G. Weil, Legends, p. 83.

3 S. A. Ashraf, Inner, p. 125. See Endnote 4-7, p. 299.

4 From Greek diabolos (A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 8 n. 12; cf. p. 56 and p. 56 n. 17).

5 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 61; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:123-124, pp. 294-295; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 60; M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 38; I. Ibn Kathir, Stories, pp. 23-27; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, pp. 30-32. See Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540. See Endnote 4-8, p. 299.

6 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, pp. 61, 62, 66.

7 G. Weil, Legends, p. 42; cf. H. W. Nibley, Drama, p. 8. See also B. M. Wheeler, Mecca, pp. 45-46.

8 G. Weil, Legends, p. 83.

9 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:132-133, p. 303; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 61.

10 al-Tabari in G. D. Newby, Encyclopedia, al-hajar al-aswad, p. 71; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 27; cf. H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 196; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 41-42; al-Tabari, Creation, 1:122, p. 293; 1:131, pp. 301-302; Revelation 2:17; D&C 130:10-11; Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62; and 3:19-b, p. 177. See Endnote 4-9, p. 299. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: Jewish and Christian Analogues, p. 679.

11 M. Chebel, Symboles, p. 60.

12 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 195-196. See Matthew 16:16-19, JST John 1:42, and Figure 3-10, p. 146.

13 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, pp. 140-145. See also G. Strathearn et al., Great Mosque.

The annual Day of Atonement was given to ancient Israel in order to renew the everlasting covenant that has been repeatedly broken by man.²³ The power to repair, bind, or seal was vested in the high priest, whose role was to secure the bonds of the covenant. The high priest himself represented the seal or bond which held the covenant in place, the one who wore the Name with power to bind or loose the covenant bond on earth and in heaven.²⁴ The temple rites of the Old Testament anticipated fulfillment in the Atonement of Jesus Christ, the “mediator of the new covenant.”²⁵

The great premortal covenant had as its central purpose to provide the possibility of exaltation to the spirits that then lived in God’s presence. Wrote the Prophet Joseph Smith: “God himself, finding he was in the midst of spirits and glory, because he was more intelligent, saw proper to institute laws whereby the rest could have a privilege to advance like himself. The relationship we have with God places us in a situation to advance in knowledge. He has power to institute laws to instruct the weaker intelligences, that they may be exalted with himself.”²⁶ Bushman comments with the observation that “God did not present himself as sovereign but as teacher and father, offering to help the intelligences grow.”²⁷

Mankind is invited to join in the great collaborative process of salvation and exaltation through what is known in our day as the “New and Everlasting Covenant.”²⁸ In fact, writes Barker: “The great oath, the cosmic covenant and the eternal [i.e., new and everlasting] covenant are all the same thing...”²⁹

The Grand Councils

An unsigned editorial in the Times and Seasons explained that a “council of heaven³⁰ was had among the gods in the eternal world pertaining to... Creation, before ever [God’s creatures] were formed... and by him who comprehends the end from the beginning and before whom, and with whom, the present, the past, and the future are one eternal now.”³¹ Even at that time, God “fully understood... their organization, habits, propensities, the object of their creation, the position they would take in the order of that creation, and how, and by what means they would be made happy, and increase his glory.”³²

As part of the deliberations of the councils, the work to be performed was explained and the premortal spirits were organized and foreordained to help carry it out.³³ “Though the plan from first to last is entirely God’s own,” explains Nibley, “he discusses it with others, ‘consulting the souls of the righteous before deciding to create the world,’³⁴ not because he needs their advice, but because the plan concerns them and requires their maximum 23 Isaiah 24:4-6; D&C 1:11-16; G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 65:10-11, 69:1-25, pp. 85, 90-91. See Endnote 4-10, p. 301.

24 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 50; cf. Matthew 16:19. See Endnote 4-11, p. 302.

25 Hebrews 12:24, D&C 107:19. See also M. Barker, Atonement; M. Barker, Revelation; M. Barker, Great High Priest.

26 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 354.

27 R. L. Bushman, Mormonism, p. 73.

28 See the overview of Moses 5, pp. 340-344 and Excursus 48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants, p. 649.

29 M. Barker, Lost, pp. 80-81. See Endnote 4-12, p. 302.

30 See Endnote 4-13, p. 302.

31 See Endnote 4-14, p. 302.

32 The Gathering, pp. 407-408; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 15 April 1842, p. 220.

33 Abraham 3:22-23; D&C 138:38-39; see the overview of Moses 3, pp. 136-139 and Excursus 9: The Premortal Organization of the Human Family, p. 544.

34 See J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 8:7:1, p. 80.

participation in it.”³⁵ As part of the proceedings of these councils, God “agree[d] to form them tabernacles”³⁶—i.e., physical bodies, and also to effect a physical creation resulting in an earth where these embodied spirits could live as mortal beings. The book of Abraham records that “one among them that was like unto God... said unto those who were with him: We will go down, for there is space there, and we will make of these materials, and we will make an earth whereon these may dwell;³⁷ And we will prove them herewith, to see if they will do all things whatsoever the Lord their God shall command them.”³⁸

It was known in advance not only that Adam and Eve would take the forbidden fruit, but also that each member of the family of man—Jesus Christ excepted—would yield to sin “in similitude of Adam’s transgression.”³⁹ Thus, a Savior was required to bear the weight of an “infinite and eternal” atonement.⁴⁰ Jesus Christ, already known by all to be God’s “Beloved and Chosen from the beginning”⁴¹ and having the “right by inheritance,”⁴² was the only One who could adequately respond to God’s question: “Whom shall I send?” Indeed, Brent Top rightly observes that this question was intended as “an invitation for Jesus to publicly and voluntarily accept the calling and appointment that was his birthright as the Firstborn, the Preeminent One.”⁴³ It was a call for our commitment and common consent rather than a request for résumés.”⁴⁴

Both the nature of the premortal councils and their themes of discussion are witnessed in extracanonical sources. For example, according to Nibley, a major message of Jubilees was to show that the annual assemblies of Israel for great festivals were “the ritual repetition, not merely of the gathering at the foot of Sinai when Moses brought them together to counsel them, but specifically of the great assembly that met above at the Creation of the world.”⁴⁵ Citing the Jewish wisdom writings of Ben Sirach, he argued that while Noah and others participated in a renewal of the eternal covenant, its first establishment was a universal event to which all mankind were eyewitnesses in the beginning, when God “endowed them [i.e., the human race to-be] with the life-giving law. He established a perpetual covenant with them and revealed to them his decrees. Their eyes saw his glorious majesty, and their ears heard the glory of his voice.”⁴⁶

Additional Jewish texts broaden the concept of participation in these premortal councils to include others beyond the more commonly discussed “angels” or “sons of God.” For example, Genesis Rabbah records that God “took counsel with the souls of the righteous before creating the world”⁴⁷ and, again, that it was with the participation of the “souls of the righteous” who dwelt with God that He “decided to create the world.”⁴⁸ “Specifically named 35 H. W. Nibley, Treasures, p. 174.

36 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 28 March 1841, p. 68. See Endnote 4-15, p. 303.

37 See Endnote 4-16, p. 303.

38 Abraham 3:24-25. See Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582. See Endnote 4-17, p. 303.

39 Romans 5:14.

40 Alma 34:10-16, 2 Nephi 9:5-26.

41 Moses 4:2.

42 J. Smith, Jr., 6 April 1843, as reported in E. England, Laub, p. 22. See Endnote 4-18, p. 303.

43 Psalm 89:27; Colossians 1:15; Romans 8:29; Hebrews 1:6; D&C 93:21.

44 B. L. Top, Life Before, p. 109.

45 H. W. Nibley, Expanding 1992, p. 192; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 6, p. 72; cf. H. W. Nibley, Expanding 1992, p. 186. Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60. On the year-rite, see Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60; 5:47-a, p. 395; Excursus 35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”, p. 612; and the overview of Moses 6, p. 458. See Endnote 4-21, p. 304.

46 S Sandmel et al., Ecclesiasticus, 17:11-13, p. 133.

47 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah I, 8:7:1, p. 80.

48 H. Freedman et al., Midrash, Ruth 2:3, 7:28. See Endnote 4-19, p. 303.

as being present are Adam, Noah, Abraham, and Moses.”⁴⁹ Likewise, the Gnostic Second Treatise of the Great Seth represents Christ as speaking about how “the whole multitude of the Assembly came together” “before the foundation of the world.”⁵⁰ In an earlier passage, the text has Christ saying:

“Let us gather an assembly together. Let us visit that creation of his. Let us send someone forth in it, just as he visited [the] Ennoias, the regions below. And I said these things to the whole multitude of the multitudinous assembly of the rejoicing Majesty. The whole house of the Father of Truth rejoiced that I am the one who is from them. I produced thought about the Ennoias which came out of the undefiled Spirit, about the descent upon the water, that is, the regions below. And they all had a single mind, since it is out of one. They charged me since I was willing. I came forth to reveal the glory to my kindred and my fellow spirits.”⁵¹

A significant passage relating to the Savior’s voluntary decision to redeem mankind is found in the early Christian Discourse on Abbaton where He describes the creation of Adam:

[The Father] took the clay from the hand of the angel, and made Adam in Our image and likeness, and He left him lying for forty days and forty nights without putting breath into him. And He sighed over him, saying, “If I put breath into this man he will suffer many pains.” “Put breath into him; and I will be his advocate.” And My Father said to me, “If I put breath into him, Thou must go down into the world and to suffer many pains for him, before Thou shalt have redeemed him and brought him back to his primal state.” And I said: “Put breath into him, and I will be his advocate, and I will go down into the world, and will fulfill Thy Covenant.”⁵²

A similar theme is attested in the Jewish Pesikta Rabbati, where God tells the Messiah what will befall him if he chooses to suffer for the sins of mankind:

“There are souls that have been put away with thee under My throne, and it is their sins which will bend thee down under a yoke of iron and make thee like a calf whose eyes grow dim with suffering, and will choke thy spirit as with a yoke; because of the sins of these souls thy tongue will cleave to the roof of my mouth. Art thou willing to endure such things?...”

The Messiah will say: “Master of the universe, with joy in my soul and gladness in my heart I take this suffering upon myself, provided that not one person in Israel perish;⁵³ that not only those who are alive be saved in my days, but that also those who are dead, who died from the days of Adam up to the time of redemption; and that not only these be saved in my days, but also those who died as abortions [i.e., stillborns, miscarriages, and deliberately aborted fetuses]; and that not only these be saved in my days, but all those whom Thou thoughtest to create [i.e., evidently as mortals] but were not created. Such are the things I desire, and for these I am ready to take upon myself [whatsoever Thou decreest].”⁵⁴

The Plan of Salvation formulated in the premortal councils required voluntary acceptance by all those who would participate in it. The Prophet Joseph Smith stated that: “At the first organization in heaven we were all present and saw the Savior chosen and appointed, and the plan of salvation made, and we sanctioned it.”⁵⁵ Our sanction of the plan seems to have included covenants of obedience and sacrifice relating to its conditions and consequences.⁵⁶

49 J. F. McConkie, Premortal, p. 180, citing a study by Wernick.

50 J. A. Gibbons et al., Great Seth, 65:33-36, p. 369.

51 Ibid.

52 Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, p. 198. See also E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 55; R. M. Nelson, Creation, p. 84; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:91, p. 26.

53 Cf. John 17:12.

54 W. G. Braude, Rabbati, 36:1, 2:678-679.

55 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, p. 60.

56 See Excursus 48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants, p. 649.

FIGURE 4-5. When the Morning Stars Sang Together, 1820
William Blake, 1757-1827

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-5.

*Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?... When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?*¹ Upheld by God's outstretched arms, the stars and angels loudly voice their praises.² Beneath His arms, the sun-god Helios (or, alternatively, Logos, the horseman³) and Selene (or, alternatively, Wisdom, leading away Leviathan) represent day and night⁴—one of the many oppositions to which mankind is constantly subjected.⁵ Shut out from the glorious scenes on high, “Job, his wife and his friends kneel in a distinct, cave-like Earth below.”⁶

The black and white etching of this illustration adds “small sketches of the first six days of creation in the margin (up to but not including the creation of man) and in the center, above God, [Blake] drew the angels which embody seventh-day consciousness.”⁷ In the top margin of this version “is a quotation from Job 38:31: ‘Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades or loose the bands of Orion?’: the two constellations are represented by the angels accompanying the stars in the upper corners. St. Gregory, commenting on this passage, had equated the Pleiades with the Gospel and Orion with the Law. Blake is therefore asking if one can bind the Gospels, [as he saw Job as having] attempted by following the rigid tenets of orthodox religions, or loose the Mosaic Law, as Jesus did to achieve Man's salvation.”⁸

1 Job 38:4, 7.

2 In praise of this depiction, Chesterton writes: “When [Blake] gets the thing right he gets it suddenly and perfectly right... We feel that the sons of God might really shout for joy at the excellence of their own portrait” (G. K. Chesterton, William Blake, p. 21).

3 M. Barker, Temple Theology, pp. 76, 78.

4 M. Barker, Angels, p. 174; M. Butlin, Blake, p. 100.

5 2 Nephi 2:11.

6 M. Butlin, Blake, p. 100. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

7 S. Mitchell, Job, p. xxi.

8 M. Butlin, Blake, p. 102.

The Savior's willingness to undergo all that the atonement required evoked great awe and profound gratitude. “When the plan was announced to the assembled hosts, and the full scope and magnanimity of it dawned upon them, they burst into spontaneous shouts of joy and joined in a hymn of praise and thanksgiving, the Morning-song of Creation, which remains to this day the archetype of hymns, the great acclamatio, the primordial nucleus of all liturgy.”⁵⁷

Rebellion in Heaven

The Father's plan was not accepted by all. Lucifer, “an angel of God who was in authority in the presence of God” and “a son of the morning,” “rebelled against God, and sought to take the kingdom of our God and his Christ.”⁵⁸ The Prophet explained: “The contention in heaven was—Jesus said there would be certain souls that would not be saved; and the Devil said he could save them all, and laid his plans before the grand council, who gave their vote in favor of Jesus Christ. So the Devil rose up in rebellion against God, and was cast down, 57 H. W. Nibley, Treasures, p. 173; cf. H. W. Nibley, Expanding 1992, pp. 191-192. See Endnote 4-20, p. 303.

58 D&C 76:25-26, 28. See also Isaiah 14:4-23, Revelation 12:3-9, D&C 29:36-45, Abraham 3:27-28; cf. Daniel 8:10-12, Ezekiel 28:11-19, Luke 10:18, F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 29:4-5, p. 148; L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:62-64, 5:84-86 n. 35; and Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575. See Endnote 4-23, p. 305.

FIGURE 4-6. Satan in His Original Glory, ca. 1805
William Blake, 1757-1827

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-6.

*Thou wast perfect in thy ways from the day that thou was created, till iniquity was found in thee.*¹ The fall of the king of Tyre in Ezekiel's lamentation is frequently interpreted as having been typed on the rebellion of Satan.² Blake's rendition is derived from a reading of v. 14 of the Latin Vulgate that sees him as the "cherub with extensive wingspan."³ The orb and scepter symbolize the power and authority from God given before his fall from heaven.⁴ He stands on the heavenly mountain, surrounded by "tiny, joyous figures embody[ing] the precious stones and beautifully crafted musical instruments mentioned in the Biblical text."⁵

To highlight Lucifer's perversity, Blake has conspicuously reversed the hands in which the emblems of monarchy are normally held. For example, in British coronation ceremonies, the sword⁶ is held in the right hand so that it may be used "to stop the growth of iniquity, protect the Holy Church of God and defend widows and orphans." The Orb is meant to be held in the left hand in order to signify "the domination of Christ over the whole world."⁷ In another part of the coronation ceremony, the new monarch will hold the Scepter with the Cross in the right hand as an "ensign of power and justice" and the Rod with the Dove in the left as a "symbol of equity and mercy." Prior to all these ceremonies, the monarch is "divested of... robes" and "screened from the general view" in order to be "imbued with grace" through the Archbishop's anointing with holy oil "on hand, breast and forehead."⁸

1 Ezekiel 28:15.

2 G. A. Anderson, Ezekiel, pp. 133-147; cf. Isaiah 14. In some ways, of course, the imagery is typed on Adam also.

3 Latin cherub extensus (R. Weber, Vulgata, Ezekiel 28:14, p. 1306), recalling the stretched out wings of the cherubim above the Ark (Exodus 25:20). See M. Greenberg, Ezekiel 21-37, pp. 583-584; D. I Block, Ezekiel 25-48, pp. 112-113.

4 Cf. E. A. W. Budge, Rebellion, pp. 294-295.

5 Gothic.

6 "The association of swords with royal symbolism is found in many different cultural traditions. Swords are used in various cultures as symbols of investiture. The sword and the rod, for which it is a substitute, is also used as a mark of religious authority" (B. M. Wheeler, Mecca, p. 43).

7 B. Nichols, Coronation, p. 15; contrast L. M. Hilton, Hand; M. von Wellnitz, Liturgy, p. 32, and Figure 3-8, p. 145.

8 B. Nichols, Coronation, pp. 18, 14. About ablutions and anointing of kings in other cultures, see S. D. Ricks et al., King, pp. 241-244, 254-255. See also Excursus 52: Washing, Anointing, and Clothing Among Early Christians, p. 661.

with all who put up their heads for him."⁵⁹ Elder Joseph Fielding Smith explained that as a result of this rebellion a third part of the premortal spirits were "denied the privilege of being born into this world and receiving mortal bodies...."⁶⁰ The Lord cast them out into the earth, where they became the tempters of mankind."⁶¹

Satan's plan for universal salvation was rejected for two reasons. First, he "sought to destroy the agency of man";⁶² and second, being jealous,⁶³ "selfish, ambitious, and striving to excel,"⁶⁴ he sought that God should give him His "own power."⁶⁵

59 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 357. See Endnote 4-24, p. 305.

60 See Endnote 4-25, p. 306.

61 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1916, 1:65. See Endnote 4-26, p. 306.

62 Moses 4:3. See Endnote 4-27, p. 307.

63 B. Young, 29 December 1844, reported in E. England, Laub, p. 28.

64 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 14 May 1843, p. 201.

65 Moses 4:3. See Endnote 4-28, p. 307.

FIGURE 4-7. Adam Enthroned, the Angels Prostrating Themselves before Him, 1576

And when We said to the angels: “Prostrate yourselves before Adam,” they all prostrated themselves except Satan, who in his pride refused and became an unbeliever.¹ A large Jewish, Islamic, and Christian literature describes an ongoing rivalry between the Devil and Adam. This rivalry is said to have begun at the time the newly-created Adam was presented to the hosts of heaven, when Satan refused to pay him homage. One Islamic version of the story “says that seven days after Adam’s creation God sent from Paradise a throne of red gold studded with pearls, silk cloths, and a crown. Seven hundred angels who were with Iblis [the Devil, who at that time was their leader,] arranged themselves in rows, a circle within a circle around Adam.² His throne was placed where the Ka’bah is now,”³ immediately adjacent to the Tree of Life.⁴ Adam is here depicted as a “young man, richly dressed and crowned, seated on a royal throne with legs... kneeling in respect and modesty.”⁵ “The central theme in Islam pertaining to Adam is the gift of prophecy bestowed on him immediately after his creation, and referred to by the theologians as ‘light’... The concept of light, used to symbolize God and his message through prophecy, eventually gave rise to the flame-shaped halo as the prophetic attribute. Iblis ... feels endangered by the introduction of light into the material world. He refuses to submit to the newly created man, thus proclaiming the continuation of the war between Darkness and Light.”⁶

1 N. J. Dawood, Koran 2:34, p. 13; cf. 7:11-18, 15:26-44, 17:61-65, 18:50-51, 38:67-88.

2 See Figure 3-6, p. 139 and Excursus 11: The Sacred Circle, p. 547.

3 R. Milstein, Stories and Illustrations, pp. 106-107.

4 See Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

5 R. Milstein, Stories and Illustrations, p. 107.

6 Ibid., p. 106; cf. Commentary 2:4-c, p. 101.

The heavenly conflict initiated by the Devil and his angels and their resultant expulsion from heaven is described in several extracanonical texts.⁶⁶ Although no direct mention is made of Satan’s counterproposal to the Father’s plan nor of his jealousy of the One who was chosen to redeem mankind, a vast assortment of references describe an ongoing rivalry between Satan and Adam.⁶⁷ This rivalry is said to have begun at the time the newly-created Adam was presented to the hosts of heaven, and to have continued in a series of attempted deceptions by Satan after the couple had been evicted from Eden.⁶⁸ When Adam asked Satan why he had become his adversary, the Devil replied:

“I came to this measure because of you, on the day on which you were created, for I went forth [i.e., was expelled from heaven] on that day. When God breathed his spirit into you, you received the likeness of his image... Then Michael [or God, in some other texts] summoned all the angels, and God said to them, ‘Come bow down to god whom I made [sic].’ Michael bowed first. He called me and said, ‘You, too, bow down to Adam.’ I said ‘Go away, Michael! I shall not bow [down] to him who is posterior [younger, junior] to me, for I am former [older, senior]!’⁶⁹

In an early Christian text, the Savior discusses the results of Lucifer’s intransigence:

66 See Endnote 4-29, p. 307.

67 See Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582. See Endnote 4-30, p. 307.

68 See the overview of Moses 5, pp. 329-338.

69 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Armenian recension, 12:1-14:3, pp. 15-17. See Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540 for a discussion of Satan’s claim that he is “former.” See also Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582 for further discussion of this story.

FIGURE 4-8. The Fall of the Rebel Angels, ca. 1528
Domenico Beccafumi, ca. 1486-1551

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-8.

*How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!*¹ This painting, Beccafumi's second version of a work commissioned by the Carmelite friars of San Niccolo al Carmine, features God presiding, with right arm raised, over the expulsion of Lucifer and his angels from heaven. God "appears as a monumental figure, seated in judgment. The bright red of his voluminous mantle and the golden hemisphere behind him ensure that this figure dominates the composition as a whole. The angelic company is organized into an orderly choir of seated figures surrounding God, with only a few of their companions engaged in expelling the rebel angels. Saint Michael has been placed much lower in the composition and acts as the principal agent between heaven and hell... [H]olding a sword above his head, he... appears in a pale pink and golden yellow tunic, tied across the chest with pale blue ribbons. Beneath him, the fallen angels recline in a series of subterranean vaults lit by sulphurous light. The Devil has been transformed into a snarling monstrous beast that has the appearance of a classical chimaera."²

- 1 Isaiah 14:12.
- 2 Beccafumi.

And when My Father saw [Satan's] pride and arrogance, and knew that his wickedness and evil-doing were as great as his pride, He commanded the hosts of heaven, saying: "Take away the writing from the hand of this arrogant one,"⁷⁰ strip off his armor,⁷¹ and cast him down to the earth, for his time has come. He is chief of the rebels and is like a king to them, and he commands them as a captain commands his troops; and the names of the rebels are written in the list which is in his hand." And the angels gathered themselves together, but they hesitated to take the list from the rebel's hand. Then My Father commanded them to bring a sharp reaping knife, and to thrust it into his sides and through his body, and to sever the bones of his back and shoulders; and he was unable to stand.⁷² Then My Father commanded a mighty angel to smite him and to cast him out of heaven, because of his pride; and the angel crushed in his ribs, and broke his wings,⁷³ and he and those angels who were with him became devils.⁷⁴

1 Enoch, a text highly regarded in the primitive church⁷⁵ and quoted verbatim in Jude 1:14-15, represents the "first rebel angel" who was responsible for "all sins"⁷⁶ as a star that fell from heaven.⁷⁷ When Enoch looked again, he saw "many stars descend and cast themselves from heaven to that first star."⁷⁸ In 1 Enoch, however, these "many stars" are not the angels that fell in primordial rebellion with Lucifer—though they recapitulate in many ways the same pattern. They are, instead, the Watchers—described variously as angels or mortals⁷⁹ who were given a mission to look after the inhabitants of the earth.⁸⁰ Though they were originally commissioned to "teach the sons of man, and perform judgment and uprightness upon the

70 See Endnote 4-32, p. 308.

71 See Endnote 4-33, p. 308.

72 See Endnote 4-34, p. 308.

73 See Endnote 4-35, p. 309.

74 Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, p. 199. See also E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 58-59; E. A. W. Budge, Rebellion, p. 294; H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 557.

75 See Endnote 4-36, p. 310.

76 G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 10:8, pp. 28, 372.

77 Ibid., 86:1, p. 364. See Endnote 4-37, p. 310.

78 Ibid., 86:3, p. 364; cf. Moses 7:26.

79 I.e., covenantal "sons of God" in the patriarchal line of Seth and Noah.

80 J. L. Kugel, Traditions, pp. 179-185, 194-216; H. Schwartz, Tree, pp. 457-458. See Commentary 5:41-b, p. 388, Moses 8:13, and Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

FIGURE 4-9. The Fall of the Rebel Angels, 1562
Pieter Bruegel, the Elder, ca. 1525-1569

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-9.

*And there was a war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon... and his angels... And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.*¹ The violence and fierceness of the battle of the rebel angels as they fall “with hideous ruin and combustion down”² leaps out from Bruegel’s canvas to engulf the viewer in its chaos and confusion.

Lewis notes the steady deterioration in the artistic portrayal of angels over the centuries: “Fra Angelico’s angels carry in their face and gesture the peace and authority of Heaven. Later come the chubby infantile nudes of Raphael; finally the soft, slim, girlish, and consolatory angels of nineteenth-century art, shapes so feminine that they avoid being voluptuous only by their total insipidity... They are a pernicious symbol. In Scripture the visitation of an angel is always alarming; it has to begin by saying ‘Fear not.’ The Victorian angel looks as if it were going to say, ‘There, there.’”³

1 Revelation 12:6, 9.

2 J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:46, p. 17.

3 C. S. Lewis, Screwtape, 1961 Preface, p. 7.

earth,”⁸¹ they were seduced instead by the beauty of the “daughters of men.”⁸² Stories recount how they “corrupted their way and their ordinances... And injustice grew upon the earth and every imagination of the thoughts of all mankind was thus continually evil.”⁸³ From unions between these fallen ones and the women are said to have come a progeny of wicked giants.⁸⁴ In the likeness of Prometheus,⁸⁵ the Watchers were ultimately condemned to eternal punishment for having spread forbidden knowledge among all mankind.⁸⁶ The resultant depravity was a precursor to the Flood from which Noah and his family were saved.⁸⁷

Transgression in Eden

In the premortal world, Satan had sought to achieve the “salvation” of all mankind through the destruction of their agency.⁸⁸ This course of action is entirely consistent with his efforts on earth to encourage the tantalizingly addictive use of coercion among fallen mankind. D&C 121 makes it plain that it is the tendency of “almost all men” to “exercise unrighteous dominion” whereby we undertake “to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion... in... unrighteousness.”⁸⁹ However, the principle of agency was so essential to the Father’s Plan of Salvation⁹⁰ that it was necessary from the beginning to establish strict limits on the power of the adversary to compel men to do evil.⁹¹ Joseph Smith explained that “God would not exert any compulsory means, and the Devil could not,”⁹² the conditions

81 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 4:15, p. 62.

82 M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 22, pp. 134-137; cf. Moses 8:13-22.

83 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 5:2, p. 62. See Endnote 4-38, p. 310.

84 Cf. Moses 7:15, 8:18.

85 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, pp. 191-193; A. T. Wright, Evil Spirits, pp. 115-117.

86 E.g., D. C. Olson, 1 Enoch, pp. 908-911; cf. Moses 5:51-56.

87 See 1 Peter 3:20, 2 Peter 2:5; Moses 8:30. Significantly, the ark itself “was designed as a temple” (C. H. T. Fletcher-Louis, Glory, p. 41).

88 For an extended discussion of Satan’s adversarial role, see J. M. Bradshaw et al., Satan.

89 D&C 121:39, 37.

90 Alma 42:5.

91 See Endnote 4-39, p. 310.

92 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 May 1841, p. 187.

FIGURE 4-10. God Creating Eve, God Instructing Adam and Eve, late twelfth century

*Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it.*¹ Herrad of Hohenbourg was a twelfth-century abbess under whose direction a comprehensive and copiously illustrated compendium of knowledge and salvation history, called Hortus Deliciarum (Garden of Delights), was assembled. Preserved for centuries at the Augustinian monastery of St. Odile at Hohenbourg, it was placed in the municipal library of Strasbourg about the time of the French Revolution. Though it was tragically destroyed during the siege of Strasbourg in 1870, portions of the text and illustrations had been previously copied, enabling the later partial reconstruction and publication of the work.

Anderson points out an interesting divergence between Genesis story and the drawing featured here: “Whereas Genesis 2 recounts that Adam was created first,² given a commandment,³ and only then received a spouse,⁴ the Hortus Deliciarum has it that Adam was created, then Eve was drawn from his rib, and finally both were given a commandment.”⁵ At right, God gestures toward the Tree of Knowledge in warning as He takes Adam by the wrist.⁶ At the same time, Eve raises her arm in what seems a gesture of consent to God’s commandment.⁷

In the middle of the drawing, a Tree of Life has sprouted human faces resembling Adam and Eve, attesting to ancient Jewish and Christian traditions about individual premortal existence.⁸ This “Tree of Souls”⁹ which, in Jewish legend, represented the heavenly Tree of Life, was thought to produce “new souls, which ripen, and then fall from the tree into the Guf, the Treasury of Souls in Paradise. There the soul is stored until the angel Gabriel reaches into the treasury and takes out the first soul that comes into his hand” so it can be born into mortality.¹⁰

1 Moses 3:16-17.

2 Genesis 2:4-7.

3 Genesis 2:16-17.

4 Genesis 2:19-24.

5 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 83; cf. G. A. Anderson, Original Form, n. 6, pp. 216-217; Commentary 4:9-b, p. 252.

6 See Excursus 53: Dexiosis, p. 681.

7 S. D. Ricks, Oaths, pp. 49-50; see Figure 5-3, p. 330.

8 See the overview of Moses 3, pp. 136-139.

9 In support of this idea, Jewish tradition cites Hosea 14:9: “I am like a cypress tree in bloom; your fruit issues forth from Me” (H. Schwartz, Tree, 199, p. 165).

10 See H. Schwartz, Tree, 199, p. 165 and the overview of Moses 3. For a description of similar Gnostic and Mandaean concepts, see J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 217, 223-224. In the New World, Mayans had a similar teaching (A. J. Christenson, Sacred Tree, p. 11). As to the Tree of Life as a symbol of divine motherhood, see Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163; R. Green et al., Hortus, vol. 1, fig. 21, see also 2:31.

of mortality having been set up on the basis of “three independent principles—the Spirit of God, the spirit of man, and the spirit of the Devil.”⁹³ He further observed that “Satan was generally blamed for the evils which we did, but if he was the cause of all our wickedness, men could not be condemned. The Devil could not compel mankind to do evil, all was voluntary.”⁹⁴ Since “[a]ll beings who have bodies have power over those who have not,” the Adversary has “power over us only as we permit him.”⁹⁵ Thus, “[a]ll men have power to resist the Devil.”⁹⁶

Under these conditions, the battle begun by Satan in the premortal councils was waged again in the Garden of Eden. “The serpent’s invitation to rebellion is simply Lucifer pursuing his earlier, failed agenda. This point is impressed upon the reader by the fact that the JST story of the council is inserted into the traditional Genesis narrative immediately after the command to humans not to eat of the fruit and before the serpent makes his entrance.”⁹⁷ The tactics for Satan’s renewed effort to “destroy the agency of man” in the Garden of Eden are laid out clearly in the “announcement of plot” of verse 4.⁹⁸ There, the reader is informed that Lucifer, after his revolt in heaven, became “the father of all lies, to deceive and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto [the Lord’s] voice.” Although Adam and Eve’s subsequent faith in Jesus Christ and obedience to their covenants ultimately will enable them to “escape from the grasp of... death and hell,”⁹⁹ Satan will enjoy temporary success as he carries out his familiar script of lies, deception, blindness, and captivity to the letter in the Garden of Eden.¹⁰⁰

It should be remembered, however, that while the conditions in Paradise were expressly designed to provide a test of obedience, the actual prize at stake was knowledge—the knowledge required for Adam and Eve to be saved and, ultimately, to be exalted. The Prophet taught that the “principle of knowledge is the principle of salvation,”¹⁰¹ therefore “anyone that cannot get knowledge to be saved will be damned.”¹⁰² Since “It is impossible for a man to be saved in ignorance,”¹⁰³ one of the Adversary’s chief activities is to take “away light and knowledge through disobedience,”¹⁰⁴ resulting in “captivity and death... for [the Devil] seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself.”¹⁰⁵

This raises a conundrum: Since salvation was to come through knowledge, why did Satan encourage rather than prevent the eating of the forbidden fruit by Adam and Eve? It is evident that their transgression must have been as much an important part of the Devil’s strategy as it was a central feature of the Father’s plan. The difference in intention between God and Satan was only made apparent, however, when it came time for Adam and Eve to take the next step.¹⁰⁶ In this regard, the scriptures seem to suggest that the Adversary

93 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 May 1841, p. 189. See Endnote 4-40, p. 310.

94 Ibid., 16 May 1841, p. 187.

95 Ibid., 5 January 1841, p. 181.

96 Ibid., 16 May 1841, p. 189.

97 K. Flake, Translating Time, p. 513.

98 L. Turner, Announcements; cf. Commentary 1:1-a, p. 42.

99 2 Nephi 9:10.

100 Commentary 4:4-b, p. 246. See Endnote 4-41, p. 310.

101 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 14 May 1843, p. 331; cf. D&C 130:18-19; Excursus 47: Islamic Perspectives Relating to Redemption, p. 645.

102 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 14 May 1843, p. 200, spelling and punctuation standardized.

103 D&C 131:6. See Endnote 4-42, p. 310.

104 D&C 93:39.

105 2 Nephi 2:26-27; cf. Moses 2:18. See Endnote 4-43, p. 310.

106 Cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 231.

FIGURE 4-11. Anubis Leads Nakht Towards the Entrance to the Other World, ca. 1350-1300 BCE

FIGURE 4-12. Palm Tree Growing over "Adam's Grave" at the Tomb of the Patriarchs in Hebron

May I be like one of you, a friend of the Lord of Eternity, may I walk like you walk, may I stand like you stand, may I sit like you sit, may I speak like you speak before the great God, Lord of the West.¹ The figure at left² is from the hieroglyphic funerary papyrus of the Royal Scribe and Chief Military Officer, Nakht.³ Anubis, the "guardian of the gateway,"⁴ is frequently shown as "leading the deceased into the presence of Osiris and assisting in the ceremony of the weighing of the heart"⁵ in afterlife judgment. Here, they approach a tree that stands before the "false door," representing the entrance to the "Other World."⁶ To reach that door, they must pass by the tree, a symbol that is frequently associated, like the door itself, with the "horizon."⁷

Traditions about Adam's burial in the cave of Machpelah in Hebron are preserved in Jewish sources.⁸ At right above is a palm tree marking the spot of "Adam's Grave" within the edifice built by Herod the Great to commemorate the burial of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebekah, and Jacob and Leah.⁹ In contrast to the liminal symbolism of the tree in the Egyptian figure above, the funerary "Tree of Life" may have represented victory over death and the final reward of the righteous deceased.

1 R. O. Faulkner et al., Book of the Dead, Spell 117, p. 113.

2 BM 10471, in ibid., p. 112.

3 Ibid., p. 9.

4 J. Assman, Death, p. 335.

5 R. H. Wilkinson, Art, p. 65.

6 See Endnote 4-47, p. 311.

7 See Commentary 4:14-e, p. 260 and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663. See also D. E. Wirth, Parallels, p. 154. See Endnote 4-48, p. 312. See also Commentary 3:8-b, p. 160.

8 E.g., M. McNamara, Targum Neofiti, 23:2, p. 120 and p. 120 n. 1; J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 2, 58:4, p. 297; M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 20, pp. 127-128; 36, p. 224; H. Schwartz, Tree, 445, pp. 343-344, 639, pp. 504-506; see Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

9 N. Arnon, Machpela, p. 13. The "Tomb of the Patriarchs" is called Ma'arat HaMachpela in Hebrew, and Haram al-Khalil in Arabic. See Endnote 4-50, p. 312.

wanted Adam and Eve to eat of the fruit of the Tree of Life directly after they took of the Tree of Knowledge—a danger which moved God to take immediate preventive action.¹⁰⁷ For had Adam and Eve eaten of the fruit of the Tree of Life at that time, said Alma, "there would have been no death" and no "space granted unto man in which he might repent"—in other words no "probationary state" to prepare for a final judgment and resurrection.¹⁰⁸ Reiterating the same point in similar words, Alma later explained that had Adam and Eve been allowed to "take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever" he would have had no "time granted... to repent... and serve God," and "no space for repentance... and the great plan of salvation would have been frustrated."¹⁰⁹

107 Moses 4:28-31; Alma 12:23, 42:2-3.

108 Alma 12:23-24.

109 Alma 42:3-5. See Endnote 4-45, p. 311.

FIGURE 4-13. Rameses II in the Ished-tree
13th Century BCE. Photo: Alain Guilleux, 1966-

Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God in the center of the tree of the garden.¹ In contrast to Chouraqui's carefully rendered translation quoted here, the KJV reads "amongst the trees of the garden." However, as the alternate translation demonstrates, the Hebrew for "tree," etz, also may be read as singular—an important subtlety glossed over in nearly every vernacular edition of the Bible. As Kastler observes, "they are not merely touching the [Tree of Knowledge] but they have for all intents and purposes merged with it... The tree has become their refuge—or perhaps their prison."² They have experienced a kind of death.

The image of the guilty parties, Adam and Eve, being figuratively shut up in a tree recalls Egyptian motifs, such as the one evoked by the portrayal of Rameses II as Osiris shown here.³ Nibley also mentions "Book of the Dead vignettes showing the Lady incorporated—all but her upper part, and in many cases all but her arms only—in the fruit-bearing tree [suggesting] that the woman in the tree must actually have been eaten by it; she is the first victim, so to speak, and now invites her male companion to share her condition."⁴ In ancient year-rites in Egypt, the splitting of the tree "both terminates life and liberates it" allowing the captive initiate to be reborn.⁵ The splitting of the tree also is said to represent, "among other things, the 'splitting of 'good' and 'evil,'" or the law of opposites."⁶

An Islamic tradition relates that: "Adam went inside of the tree to hide,"⁷ recalling al-Tha'labi's version of the story of the martyrdom of Isaiah.⁸ As in Egyptian texts, pseudepigraphal accounts report that Isaiah's death in a split tree was immediately followed by his rebirth and ascension to heaven.⁹ A similar motif has been found in the New World.¹⁰

1 Genesis 3:8, after A. Chouraqui, Bible, p. 22; cf. R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 123.

2 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

3 A. Guilleux, Temple de Derr. See Endnote 4-49, p. 312.

4 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 309; cf. Commentary 4:14-e, p. 260, Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar's "Fall", p. 632, and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663. See Endnote 4-50, p. 312.

5 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 289. See also pp. 288-293.

6 Ibid., p. 290.

7 Wahab b. Munabbih in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 25.

8 A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 557 and p. 557 n. 15; cf. M. A. Knibb, Isaiah, 5:1-14, pp. 163-164. See also pp. 146-147.

9 M. A. Knibb, Isaiah, 6:1-11:43, pp. 164-176.

10 V. G. Norman, Izapa Part 2, p. 202. Also cited in B. Gardner, Second Witness, 1:168. See Commentary 4:14-e, p. 260 and Excursus 55: Mesoamerican Stories of Creation and the Original Transgression, p. 697.

The reason why this is so is lucidly explained by Skousen, and is relevant regardless of whether one sees Adam's action of eating as being literal or metaphorical:

There appears to be a very specific reason why it was necessary to have humanity pass through the portals of death so that their spirits could be separated temporarily from their bodies.

First of all, the Lord tells us that man cannot be exalted "in the flesh." "Neither can any natural man abide the presence of God," explained the Lord.¹¹⁰ There is something inherently mundane about the mortal clay which prevents it from being elevated to a celestial glory in and of itself. It can only be elevated by combining it with glorified spirit matter. In other words, a temporal body can only be exalted by becoming "inseparably connected"¹¹¹ with spirit matter after the spirit matter has been glorified or celestialized...

110 D&C 67:12; Moses 1:5.

111 D&C 93:33.

FIGURE 4-14. Eve, After the Transgression, 1869
Eugène Delaplanche, 1836-1890
Photo: Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, 1956-

*The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.*¹ The vacant, tearless eyes and agonized posture of the solitary slumped figure bespeak the depth of Eve's utter hopelessness immediately following her transgression.

1 Moses 4:19.

FIGURE 4-15. The Rebuke of Adam and Eve, 1626
Domenico Zampieri (Domenichino), 1581-1641

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-15.

*And the man said: The woman thou gavest me, and commandest that she should remain with me, she gave me of the fruit of the tree and I did eat.*¹ Of this painting, Conisbee writes: "The Rebuke of Adam and Eve perfectly illustrates Domenichino's classical style at the peak of his career... The group of God and the angels is derived directly from Michelangelo's Creation of Adam... and should be read as an homage by the seventeenth-century painter to his great predecessor... Following Italian tradition, Domenichino shows the Tree of Knowledge as a fig tree, rather than the apple tree which was more usual in northern European art. In a clear narrative sequence, God the Father, borne by cherubim and angels, descends to rebuke Adam, who blames Eve, who in turn points to the serpent as the cause of their fall from grace. Animals still roam freely in their earthly paradise, but the lion at the right is already metamorphosing from a friendly feline to an aggressive beast."²

1 Moses 4:18.

2 P. Conisbee, Art.

Speaking of the process wherein the temporal body is fused with the spirit body at the time of the resurrection, the Lord said: "They who are of celestial spirit shall receive the same body which was a natural body... and your glory [which obviously would have to be the glory of one's spirit] shall be the glory by which your bodies are quickened."¹¹²

In other words, the Lord has to have the opportunity of redeeming and glorifying the spirit first¹¹³—then the glorified spirit is used as the quickening medium to refine the physical body.

From this it becomes obvious why it would have been disastrous for Adam and Eve to have partaken of the fruit of the Tree of Life so that they could not die! Their spirits would have been imprisoned within their temporal bodies forever—incapable of Redemption, incapable of exaltation. The entire plan of salvation would have been annihilated by this single act...

112 D&C 88:28.

113 See Endnote 4-46, p. 311.

FIGURE 4-16. Expulsion of Adam and Eve, 1510
Michelangelo Buonarroti, 1475-1564

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-16.

*So I drove out the man.*¹ With drawn sword, the angel drives Adam and Eve out of the Garden. In striking contrast to their noble, vigorous, and handsome bearing before the Fall, they appear pained, cowering, and much older. With his hands raised and the sword poised at the back of his neck, Adam appears “to be warding off the angel, surrendering, [or] saying that he is going. Could it also be that he is...[depicted as] pushing God away”?²

1 Moses 4:31.

2 R. J. Smith, Sistine.

FIGURE 4-17. Cherubim and the Flaming Sword, 2000
J. Kirk Richards, 1977-

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-17.

*I placed at the east of the Garden of Eden, cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.*¹ In temple contexts, the essential function of the cherubim was analogous to their role at the entrance of the Garden of Eden: they were to be as sentinels guarding the portals of the temple against unauthorized entry, governing subsequent access to secure compartments, and ultimately assisting in the determination of the fitness of temple worshipers to enter God's presence.² The sword is described by Sarna as a “separate, protective instrument, not said to be in the hands of the cherubim.”³ While the function of the cherubim is to selectively admit those authorized to enter, Nibley argues that the fire and steel combined in the sword are specifically meant to repulse the serpent, forever preventing its return to the Garden.⁴

J. Kirk Richards was born “near Brigham Young University, the fourth of eight musical children. He attributes much of his love for the arts to an early emphasis on musical training in the home.”⁵ “Richards studied with nationally acclaimed artists James Christenson, Wulf Barsch, Bruce Smith, and Swiss born symbolist painter, Patrick Denovas.” In addition to crediting the influence of these artists on his painting, he admires the work of masters such as Rembrandt and Michelangelo who “have both abstract and realist figures in their paintings” and who “combine the two extremes in an amazing way.” His own work is noted for its “expressive realism, elegant composition, and brilliant representation of light in primarily Judeo-Christian themes.”⁶

1 Moses 4:31.

2 D&C 132:19; D. W. Parry, Garden, p. 139; B. Young, 6 April 1853 - B, p. 31.

3 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 30.

4 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 319-320.

5 J. K. Richards, Bio.

6 S. Lemon, Richards.

Alma points out that “living forever” or conquering temporal death was not important at this time: “Now behold, it was not expedient that man should be redeemed from this temporal death, for that would destroy the great plan of happiness.”¹¹⁴ It was first “expedient that mankind should be reclaimed from this spiritual death,”¹¹⁵ which means to return to the presence of God. And since the physical body cannot endure the presence of God in its mundane state it was necessary to permit the spirit to be released from the body. When the spirit had been

114 Alma 42:8.

115 Alma 42:9.

“reclaimed from the spiritual death” and, as the Lord says made into a “celestial spirit,”¹¹⁶ then it could be used as a refining element to exalt the elements of the temporal body.¹¹⁷

It is easy to see a parallel between Satan’s initial proposal in the spirit world and his later strategy to “frustrate” the plan of salvation through his actions in Eden. Just as his defeated premortal plan had proposed to provide a limited measure of “salvation” for all by precluding the opportunity for exaltation, so it seems plausible that his unsuccessful scheme in the Garden was intended to impose an inferior form of immortality that would forestall the possibility of eternal life.¹¹⁸ However, because the Devil “knew not the mind of God,” his efforts “to destroy the world”¹¹⁹ were in vain: the result of his deceitful manipulations to get Adam and Eve to eat the forbidden fruit was co-opted by God, and the risk of their partaking immediately of the fruit of the Tree of Life was averted. Elder Bruce C. Hafen explained: “God placed cherubim and a flaming sword to guard the way of the Tree of Life until Adam and Eve completed, and we, their posterity, complete [the] preparatory schooling [of mortality]. Our tutorial is the gospel, a schoolmaster that brings us to Christ.¹²⁰ But He cannot fully receive us and give us the gift of celestial life—partaking of God’s very nature—until we have learned by our own experience to distinguish good and evil.”¹²¹

FIGURE 4-18. The Expulsion of Adam and Eve, 1646

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-18.

*I beheld that I was naked, and I hid myself.*¹ In Orthodox tradition, Adam and Eve are frequently portrayed in regal robes before the Fall, and as naked afterward. Here, the top panel shows God seated in the heavenly council surrounded by angels and the four beasts of the book of Revelation. The second panel depicts, from left to right: Adam and Eve clothed in heavenly robes following their creation; then stripped of their glorious garments and “clothed” only in mortal skin after eating the forbidden fruit; and finally both clad in fig leaf aprons as Eve converses with God. The third panel shows Adam conversing with God, the couple’s expulsion from the walled Garden through a door showing images of cherubim, and their subsequent hardship in the fallen world. Orthodox tradition generally leaves Adam and Eve in their aprons after the Fall and expulsion, seeing them as already having received their “coats of skin” at the time they were clothed in mortal flesh.

1 Moses 4:16.

The Nakedness and the Clothing of Adam and Eve

Moses’ account depicts Adam and Eve as naked and without shame in the Garden,¹²² and clothed by God in coats of skin only later, after the Fall.¹²³ However, many of the earliest artistic depictions of the story show a surprising reversal of the situation, portraying Adam

116 D&C 88:28.

117 W. C. Skousen, First 2,000, pp. 66-68.

118 See Excursus 22: The Nature of Satan’s Premortal Proposal, p. 577.

119 Moses 4:6.

120 See Galatians 3:24.

121 B. C. Hafen, Broken, p. 30; cf. L. Schaya, Meaning, p. 16.

122 Moses 3:25.

123 Moses 4:27.

and Eve clothed in regal glory within Eden, and naked after their expulsion.¹²⁴ How can this be?

Recalling the parallels between the Garden of Eden and Israelite Houses of God, Anderson points out that “the vestments of the priest matched exactly those particular areas of the Temple to which he had access... Each time the high priest moved from one gradient of holiness to another, he had to remove one set of clothes and put on another to mark the change”.¹²⁵

(a) Outside the Tabernacle priests wear ordinary clothes. (b) When on duty in the Tabernacle, they wear four pieces of clothing whose material and quality of workmanship match that of the fabrics found on the outer walls of the courtyard.¹²⁶ (c) The High Priest wears those four pieces plus four additional ones—these added garments match the fabric of the Holy Chamber where he must go daily to tend the incense altar.

In Eden a similar set of vestments is found, again each set suited to its particular space. (a) Adam and Eve were, at creation, vested like priests and granted access to most of Eden. (b) Had they been found worthy, an even more glorious set of garments would have been theirs (and according to St. Ephrem, they would have entered even holier ground). (c) But having [transgressed], they were stripped of their angelic garments and put on mortal flesh. Thus, when their feet met ordinary earth—the realm of the animals—their constitution had become “fleshly,” or mortal.¹²⁷

Consistent with this schema, each stage in the sequence of changes in Adam and Eve’s status in the book of Moses is marked by a change in their appearance.¹²⁸ The imagery of clothing

124 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 119; see a Muslim parallel in R. Milstein et al., Stories, B&W plate 2.

125 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 122. See Endnote 4-51, p. 312.

126 Exodus 28.

127 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 123. See Endnote 4-52, p. 312.

128 See Endnote 4-53, p. 313.

is “a means of linking together in a dynamic fashion the whole of salvation history; it is a means of indicating the interrelatedness between every stage in this continuing working out of divine Providence,” including “the place of each individual Christian’s [ordinances¹²⁹] within the divine economy as a whole.”¹³⁰ Note the chiasmic structure of the sequence, which begins and ends in glory:¹³¹

1. *From glory to nakedness.*¹³² Though “naked” because their knowledge of their premortal state had been taken away by a veil of forgetfulness,¹³³ Adam and Eve had come to Eden nonetheless “trailing clouds of glory.”¹³⁴ While the couple, as yet, were free from transgression, they could stand “naked” in God’s presence without shame,¹³⁵ being “clothed with purity”¹³⁶ in what early commentators called “garments of light”¹³⁷ or “garments of contentment.”¹³⁸ In one source, Eve describes her appearance by saying: “I was decked out like a bride, And I reclined in a wedding-chamber of light.”¹³⁹

In the context of rituals and ordinances based on the experiences of Adam and Eve, Nibley explained: “The garment [of light] represents the preexistent glory of the candidate... When he leaves on his earthly mission, it is laid up for him in heaven to await his return. It thus serves as security and lends urgency and weight to the need for following righteous ways on earth. For if one fails here, one loses not only one’s glorious future in the eternities to come, but also the whole accumulation of past deeds and accomplishments in the long ages of preexistence.”¹⁴⁰

2. *From innocence to transgression.*¹⁴¹ Rabbinical tradition taught that, following his transgression, “Adam... lost his [heavenly] clothing—God stripped it off him...”¹⁴² and similarly that Eve “was stripped of the righteousness in which [she] had been clothed.”¹⁴³ Likewise, the Discourse on Abbaton records that both Adam and Eve “became naked” upon eating the forbidden fruit.¹⁴⁴ According to the Life of Adam and Eve, God then “sent seventy plagues upon us, to our eyes, and to our ears and as far as our feet, plagues and portents laid up in his treasuries.”¹⁴⁵ Anderson takes this to mean that “Adam has exchanged an angelic constitution for a mortal one,” in other words that he has been “clothed with flesh.”¹⁴⁶ Shamed by their loss of glory, Adam and Eve covered their earthly bodies with fig leaf aprons.¹⁴⁷

Rabbinical writings describe how, in likeness of Adam and Eve, each soul descending to earth “divests itself of its heavenly garment, and is clothed in a garment of flesh and blood,”¹⁴⁸ the prior 129 The original reads “Baptism” here.

130 Brock in Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, pp. 66-67; cf. C. Buck, Paradise, pp. 100-104.

131 See Endnote 4-54, p. 313.

132 Moses 3:25.

133 R. A. Bullard et al., Archons, 89:3-7, p. 164; G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, 64:24-29, 65:10-13, p. 279; C. Schmidt, Pistis, 4:144, pp. 749-753; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 6, 144, 380, p. 315; cf. Commentary 3:21-a, p. 180.

134 W. Wordsworth in L. Richards, Marvelous, p. 290. See Endnote 4-56, p. 313.

135 Moses 3:25; cf. D&C 121:45.

136 2 Nephi 9:14; cf. Chrysostom, Homilies on Genesis, 15:14, in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 72. See Endnote 4-57, p. 314.

137 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 215; cf. D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:36b, pp. 229, 230. For an in-depth discussion of this topic, see G. A. Anderson, Garments.

138 M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 61. See Endnote 4-58, p. 314.

139 M. E. Stone, Adamgirk, 3:1:7, p. 48.

140 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 489. See also E. Hennecke et al., Acts of Thomas, 108.9-15, pp. 498-499; B. T. Ostler, Clothed, p. 4. See Endnote 4-59, p. 314.

141 Moses 4:16.

142 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:79; cf. D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:36b, p. 229.

143 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:96; cf. M. E. Stone, Adamgirk, 3:1:9, p. 48 and 3:1:17, p. 50. See Endnote 4-60, p. 314.

144 Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, p. 200. See Endnote 4-61, p. 315.

145 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 127; cf. G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Georgian version, 34(8):2, p. 38. See Endnote 4-62, p. 315.

146 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 127. See Endnote 4-63, p. 315.

147 See Commentary 4:13-b, p. 258.

148 H. Schwartz, Tree, 200, p. 166.

FIGURE 4-20.

Sacred Tree on the Apron of Charlemagne, eighth century

And they sewed fig-leaves together and made themselves aprons.¹ While Adam and Eve's original fig-leaf aprons were made without divine authorization, a similar article has been used in ritual contexts to represent true power and authority. For example, a sacred tree was symbolically represented on an apron worn by the eighth-century Christian king Charlemagne.² Kings in the Middle East were often represented as various sorts of trees. In Egypt and Mesoamerica,³ foliated aprons were used as a sign of authority.

1 Moses 4:13.

2 W. Smith et al., Dictionary, 2:1307. Also included in M. B. Brown, Girded, p. 137. See Commentary 4:13-b, p. 258.

3 See, e.g., D. E. Wirth, Parallels, p. 106 and pp. 109-110, Figures 6.23, 6.24.

glory being, as it were, “veiled... in flesh.”¹⁴⁹ The various “afflictions” of mortality initially given to Adam and now bestowed upon “all... generations”¹⁵⁰ frequently number seven rather than the seventy mentioned above: “They are against the ‘seven natures: the flesh for hearing, the eyes for seeing, the breath to smell, the veins to touch, the blood for taste, and bones for endurance, and the intelligence for joy’;¹⁵¹ or against life, sight, hearing, smell, speech, taste, procreation.”¹⁵² Though Adam and Eve were protected from fatal harm at the time of extremity, ancient texts recount that Satan had been allowed to hurt them, and the “wounds,” foreshadowing the later wounds received by Christ at His crucifixion,¹⁵³ “remained on their bodies.”¹⁵⁴ Nibley sees the wounds of nature and of Satan to various parts of the body as figuratively corresponding to the “blows of death” taught by Satan to Cain.¹⁵⁵ He describes their enactment in Jewish ritual as follows: “The wages of sin is death, and the dead body is chided at an old-fashioned Jewish funeral because its members no longer function, and each one is struck an impatient and accusing blow. This is the chibut ha-keber: ‘On the third day the departed is treated with increased rigor. Blows are struck on his eyes because he would not see, on his ears because he would not hear, on his lips because they uttered profanities, on his tongue because it bore false testimony against his neighbor, on his feet because they ran toward evil doing.’”¹⁵⁶

3. *From transgression to blamelessness.*¹⁵⁷ Except through his eventual death, Adam was powerless to rid himself of the mortal flesh he had now put on. However, while still in this life, he was enabled to “[put] off the natural man and [become] a saint through the atonement of Christ” so that he could be found “blameless in the sight of God.”¹⁵⁸ The book of Moses account is consistent with this sort of symbolism. When Adam asked why “men must repent and be baptized,” the Lord replied: “Behold I have forgiven thee thy transgression in the 149 Hymns (1985), #175. See Endnote 4-64, p. 315.

150 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Latin 34:2, p. 38E.

151 Cf. F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 30:8-9, p. 150.

152 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 178. See H. C. Kee, Testaments, Reuben 2:1-9, p. 782.

153 H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 60. See S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:23, 69, pp. 23, 83-84; cf. J. Cooper et al., Testament, 1:23, pp. 73, 75; W. H. C. Propp, Symbolic Wounds; M. E. Stone, Legend, p. 160.

154 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:46, p. 50. See also 1:59, p. 66.

155 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 253. See also Commentary 5:29-b, p. 377, 5:47-b, p. 396.

156 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 173-174.

157 Moses 4:27, 6:50-53.

158 Mosiah 3:19, 21; cf. Moses 5:5-8.

FIGURE 4-21. The Clothing of Adam and Eve, 1803
William Blake, 1757-1827

SEE COLOR PLATE 4-21.

*Unto Adam, and also unto his wife, did I, the Lord God, make coats of skins, and clothed them.*¹ Blake depicts the exit scene at the gates of Eden as a tender moment of forgiveness and farewell. In childlike submission and gratitude, Adam and Eve bow their heads and, clothed with garments of animal skin made by the Father as a protection and a reminder, prepare to leave God's embrace and prove themselves by overcoming the dangers of the mortal world.

1 Moses 4:27.

Garden of Eden.”¹⁵⁹ The coats of animal skins given to Adam and Eve were a visible sign of God's forgiveness, constituting a tangible witness of the couple's acceptance of the Atonement that would reverse the “blows of death,” cover the shame of nakedness they experienced following their transgression, and “replace sin... with light and healing.”¹⁶⁰ The “second skin” provided by the Lord figuratively replaced their covering of mortal skin with the flesh of Jesus Christ, the “second Adam,”¹⁶¹ through whose power they would experience a “renewing of their bodies.”¹⁶² Indeed, the Hebrew term for atonement exactly fits this situation, meaning “to cover or recover, cover again, to repair a hole, cure a sickness, mend a rift, make good a torn or broken covering.”¹⁶³ Though the leather garment given to Adam and handed down through the patriarchs was foremost a sign of repentance,¹⁶⁴ it was also a sign of authority,¹⁶⁵ and a symbol of “royal rebirth and rejuvenation.”¹⁶⁶ It provided protection,¹⁶⁷ afforded modesty, reminded Adam and Eve of their covenants, and served as an earnest of the glorious celestial robes that awaited them through their faithfulness.¹⁶⁸ It appears that once Adam and Eve had successfully completed their probation on earth, the garment of skins was no longer needed.¹⁶⁹

The putting off of the “natural man” so as to be made a “new creature” in Christ¹⁷⁰ is figuratively enacted in the rites of some Christian traditions relating to the renunciation of Satan and the acceptance of Christ through baptism. In these rites, the candidate “is stripped of the garments inherited from Adam and vested with the token of those garments he or she shall enjoy at the resurrection.”¹⁷¹ In some early Christian traditions, the idea of “reversing the blows of death”

159 Moses 6:53; cf. Commentary 4:24-b, p. 271 and 4:25-a, b, p. 272, See Endnote 4-65, p. 316.

160 T. G. Madsen, Foundations, p. 2.

161 Romans 5:12-21; 1 Corinthians 15:20-22, 45-50.

162 D&C 84:33. See Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519 and Excursus 52: Washing, Anointing, and Clothing Among Early Christians, p. 661.

163 M. Barker, Atonement; cf. T. G. Madsen, Sacrament, p. 13. See Endnote 6-36, p. 502.

164 H. W. Nibley, Evangelium, p. 38 n. 78.

165 H. W. Nibley, Vestments, p. 124.

166 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 425.

167 See Endnote 4-66, p. 316.

168 C. E. Asay, Garment, p. 37; E. T. Marshall, Garments; H. W. Nibley, Vestments, p. 124. See also Commentary 3:25-a, p. 185 and 4:27-a, p. 274.

169 JS-H 1:31; cf. Ephrem the Syrian, Diatessaron, cited in M. Barker, Hidden, p. 34; M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GL 2:19, p. 488; H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 299.

170 Mosiah 3:19, 2 Corinthians 5:17.

171 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 130. See also M. Barker, Gate, pp. 113-114; B. T. Ostler, Clothed, p. 3; S. D. Ricks, Garment, p. 709; M. von Wellnitz, Liturgy, pp. 11-12; Romans 6:3-4; 1 Corinthians 15:53; and Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266. See Endnote 4-67, p. 317.

was also represented by a special anointing with the “oil of mercy” prior to (or sometimes after) baptism or washing, as the candidate is signed upon the brow, the nostrils, the breast, the ears, and so forth.¹⁷² This anointing recalls an incident in the Life of Adam and Eve where Adam, as he lay on his deathbed, requested Eve and Seth to fetch him oil from the Tree of Life in the Garden of Eden.¹⁷³ One may also see these symbols of the Atonement in Christ’s miracles of healing and forgiveness.¹⁷⁴

4. *From blamelessness to celestial glory.*¹⁷⁵ While the coats of skins “covered” the direct effects of Adam and Eve’s transgression (corresponding to the idea of justification), additional clothing worn over the first garment represented their being endowed with glory, holiness, and godliness (i.e., sanctification).¹⁷⁶ In connection with the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel that promise “eternal life... unto all the obedient,”¹⁷⁷ Adam and Eve would, in the resurrection, be “clothed with honour and majesty... [and] covered... with light as with a garment,”¹⁷⁸ in perfect similitude of God’s own glory.¹⁷⁹ Rabbinical writings recount that: “When the time comes for the soul to leave this world, the Angel of Death strips off the worldly garment, and at the same instant the soul is clothed in the holy garment that was stripped away when it descended to this world. Then the soul delights in having been stripped of its worldly body and in having its original garment restored.”¹⁸⁰ Similarly, Nephi describes the worthy dead as “being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness.”¹⁸¹ 1 Enoch says that the “righteous and the chosen will have arisen from the earth... and have put on the garment of glory... the garment of life from the Lord of Spirits; and your garment will not wear out, and your glory will not fade in the presence of the Lord of Spirits.”¹⁸² “For these are those selected by God for an everlasting covenant and to them shall belong the glory of Adam.”¹⁸³

In ancient Israel, the temple clothing of priests symbolized the heavenly clothing that would someday supersede it.¹⁸⁴ Nibley explains that “the white undergarment is the proper preexistent glory of the wearer, while the [outer garment of the high priest] is the priesthood later added to it.”¹⁸⁵ Anderson describes God’s concerted attempt at Sinai to figuratively reverse the effects of the Fall of mankind and then to cover him with glory “by ordaining that Israel wash and then put on new clothes. ‘When you have already been washed and purified through the Law of God,’ Origen declared, ‘then Moses will dress you with a garment of incorruptibility so that 172 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 174; B. T. Ostler, Clothed, p. 2; cf. Cyril of Jerusalem, Five, 21:1-6, 7:149-150; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, 3:1-6, pp. 516-517; M. von Wellnitz, Liturgy, pp. 10-11, 13, 28-29; and Commentary 3:9-g, p. 165. See Endnote 4-68, p. 317.

173 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, pp. 33E-45E; cf. M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 16. See the overview of Moses 6, pp. 460-462. See Endnote 4-69, p. 317.

174 E.g., His driving out of evil spirits and His use of oil in blessing the sick (Mark 6:13), the gesture of touching of the eyes of the blind (Matthew 9:29; Mark 8:23-25) and in His story of the Good Samaritan, where the “half dead” victim was administered to by having oil and wine poured in his wounds (Luke 10:30, 34). See H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 175-77; J. W. Welch, Samaritan (1999); J. W. Welch, Samaritan (2007).

175 Moses 4:27.

176 See Excursus 26: Justification and Sanctification, p. 596. See Endnote 4-70, p. 317. In this connection, Elder Joseph Fielding Smith wrote that temples are “places for sanctification” (“The Los Angeles Temple,” Improvement Era, November 1951, p. 798, cited in T. G. Madsen, Purposes, p. 93).

177 Moses 5:11.

178 Psalm 104:1-2.

179 1 John 3:1-3. See Endnote 4-71, p. 317.

180 H. Schwartz, Tree, 200, p. 166. See also E. Hennecke et al., Acts of Thomas, 111-112:72-80, p. 502; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 496; B. T. Ostler, Clothed, pp. 4-5.

181 2 Nephi 9:14; cf. Revelation 3:4-5, 4:4, 6:11, 7:9, 13-15; 2 Esdras 2:45; Commentary 1:25-b, p. 60.

182 G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch 62:15-16, p. 81.

183 Rule of the Community 4:22-23 in F. G. Martinez, DSS Translated, p. 7; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 467.

184 J. A. Tvedtnes, Clothing, pp. 662-695.

185 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 489-490, citing Hoffman; cf. M. von Wellnitz, Liturgy, pp. 17, 19-20; Abraham 3:26: “added upon.”

‘your shame may never appear’¹⁸⁶ and ‘this mortality may be absorbed by life.’¹⁸⁷ And what was done to Israel in this general way was done to the priesthood in a much more dramatic way. Priests’ clothing anticipated the resurrection body that all would receive at the end of time. There is a Jewish tradition that the high priest was exempted from the power of the angel of death while he wore those robes.”¹⁸⁸

In his Hymns on Paradise, Ephrem the Syrian summarizes the blessings that come to the posterity of Adam and Eve through their faithfulness:

Among the saints none is naked,
 for they have put on glory,
 nor is any clad in those leaves,
 or standing in shame,
 for they have found, through our Lord,
 the robe that belonged to Adam and Eve.¹⁸⁹

The contrast between authentic robes of righteousness and the deceptive trappings of earthly “glory” is so obvious that no one should be fooled; however, history shows that the humans are perennial dupes for vanity’s sake. Kierkegaard warns that we must always remember that the temporary “distinctions of earthly existence are only like an actor’s costume” and that “every individual should watchfully and carefully keep the fastening cords of this outer garment”—our earthly status and distinctions— “loosely tied,” not tightly laced about us, “so that in the moment of transformation” when our true selves are again revealed “the garment can easily be cast off... and the inner glory... [shine] through...”¹⁹⁰

186 Exodus 20:26.

187 Origen, Leviticus 1-16, 6:7, cited in G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 122, 124. See 2 Corinthians 5:4.

188 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 122, 124. See Endnote 4-72, p. 317.

189 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 6:9, p. 112. See Endnote 4-73, p. 318.

190 S. Kierkegaard, Parables, pp. 47-48. See Endnote 4-74, p. 318.

Moses 4: Text and Commentary

CHAPTER 4 (June–October 1830)

REBELLION OF SATAN (PP. 243–246)

AND ^aI, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying: ^bThat Satan, whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning, and he came before me, saying—Behold, ^chere am I, send me, ^dI will be thy son, and ^eI will redeem ^fall mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and ^gsurely I will do it; wherefore ^hgive me thine honor.

2 But, behold, ^amy Beloved Son, ^bwhich was my Beloved and Chosen from the beginning, said unto me—^cFather, thy will be done, and the ^dglory be thine forever.

3 Wherefore, because that ^aSatan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him, and also, ^bthat I should give unto him mine own power; ^cby the power of mine Only Begotten, ^dI caused that he should be cast down;

4 And he ^abecame Satan, yea, even the devil, the ^bfather of all lies, to deceive and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice.

TRANSGRESSION (PP. 246–257)

5 And now the ^aserpent was more ^bsubtle than any beast of the field which I, the Lord God, had made.

6 And Satan put it into the heart of the serpent, (for he ^ahad drawn away many after him,) and he ^bsought also to beguile Eve, for he ^cknew not the mind of God, wherefore he ^dsought to destroy the world.

7 And he said unto the woman: Yea, ^ahath God said—Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? (And he ^bspake by the mouth of the serpent.)

8 ^aAnd the woman said unto the serpent: We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden;

9 But of the fruit of the ^atree which thou beholdest in the midst of the garden, God hath said—Ye shall not eat of it, ^bneither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.

10 And the serpent said unto the woman: ^aYe shall not surely die;

11 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then ^ayour eyes shall be opened, and ^bye shall be as gods, ^cknowing good and evil.

12 And when the ^awoman saw that the tree was good for food, and that ^bit became pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired ^cto make her wise, ^dshe took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and also ^egave unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

APRONS AND HIDING (PP. 258–261)

13 And the ^aeyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they had been naked. And they sewed ^bfig-leaves together and made themselves aprons.

14 And ^athey heard the voice of the Lord God, ^bas they were walking in the garden, ^cin the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife went to ^dhide themselves from the presence of the Lord God ^eamongst the trees of the garden.

CONFESSION (PP. 261–263)

15 And ^aI, the Lord God, called unto Adam, and said unto him: ^bWhere goest thou?

16 And he said: ^aI heard thy voice in the garden, and ^bI was afraid, because I beheld that I was naked, and I hid myself.

17 And I, the Lord God, said unto Adam: ^aWho told thee thou wast naked? ^bHast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat, if so thou shouldst surely die?

18 And the man said: The ^awoman thou gavest me, and ^bcommandest that she should remain with me, she gave me of the fruit of the tree and I did eat.

19 And I, the Lord God, said unto the woman: What is this thing which thou hast done? And the woman said: The ^aserpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

CONSEQUENCES (PP. 264–273)

20 And ^aI, the Lord God, said unto the serpent: ^bBecause thou hast done this ^cthou shalt be cursed above ^dall cattle, and above every beast of the field; ^eupon thy belly shalt thou go, and ^fdust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life;

21 And ^aI will put enmity between thee and the woman, between ^bthy seed and ^cher seed; and ^dhe shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

22 Unto the woman, I, the Lord God, said: ^aI will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. ^bIn sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and ^cthy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

23 And unto Adam, I, the Lord God, said: ^aBecause thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the fruit of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying—Thou shalt not eat of it, ^bcursed shall be the ground ^cfor thy sake; ^din sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life.

24 ^aThorns also, and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and ^bthou shalt eat the herb of the field.

25 ^aBy the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, ^buntil thou shalt return unto the ground—for thou shalt surely die—for out of it wast thou taken: for ^cdust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return.

ADAM NAMES EVE (PP. 273–276)

26 And ^aAdam called his wife's name Eve, because she was the ^bmother of all living; for thus have I, the Lord God, called the ^cfirst of all women, which are many.

27 Unto Adam, and also unto his wife, did I, the Lord God, make ^acoats of skins, and ^bclothed them.

EXPULSION FROM EDEN (PP. 276–282)

28 And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the ^aman is become as one of us to know good and evil; and now ^bblest he put forth his hand and partake also of the tree of life, and ^ceat and live forever,

29 Therefore I, the Lord God, ^awill send him forth from the Garden of Eden, ^bto till the ground from whence he was taken;

30 For as I, the Lord God, liveth, even so ^amy words cannot return void, for as they go forth out of my mouth they must be fulfilled.

31 So ^aI drove out the man, and I placed ^bat the east of the Garden of Eden, ^ccherubim and a ^dflaming sword, which turned every way ^eto keep the way of the tree of life.

EPILOGUE (PP. 282–282)

32 (And these are the words which I spake unto my servant Moses, and they are true even as I will; and I have spoken them unto you. ^aSee thou show them unto no man, until I command you, except to them that believe. Amen.)

1 And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying: That Satan, whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning, and he came before me, saying—Behold, here am I, send me, I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore give me thine honor.

1 a I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses. The JST transforms the narrative into a direct, first-person form, as it did in the Creation account of Moses 2-3.

b That Satan, whom thou hast commanded... is the same which was from the beginning. “Satan” is a word of Hebrew origin, meaning an accuser or adversary. The qualifier (“whom thou hast commanded”) refers to 1:21, where Moses commanded Satan “in the name of the Only Begotten” to depart. Here, in verses 1-4, the Lord digresses from the story of the Fall in order to give the background needed to understand the roles of Satan and the Savior.

In the Qurʾān and in the book of Moses—in contrast to Genesis—the corresponding accounts of Satan’s rebellion and Adam and Eve’s Fall form “a single, continuous story.”¹⁹¹

c here am I, send me. Draper et al. note that this statement carries the intrinsic claim “that the speaker is in the right path, ready to do the Lord’s bidding.”¹⁹² Likewise, Auerbach observes that the phrase is meant to indicate “a moral position in respect to God.”¹⁹³ The fact that Satan’s intentions were already in direct opposition to God’s plan falsifies his claim of moral readiness, substantiating the scriptural assertion that the Devil is “a liar from the beginning.”¹⁹⁴

Since Jesus Christ was already known by all to be God’s “Beloved and Chosen from the beginning,”¹⁹⁵ the very fact that Satan sought to answer the call was in itself a direct affront to the Father. Top correctly concludes that there was only One who could rightly reply to God, observing: “In light of the premortal stature of Christ, it appears more likely that the Father’s question ‘Whom shall I send?’ was an invitation for Jesus to publicly and voluntarily accept the calling and appointment that was his birthright as the Firstborn, the Preeminent One. It was a call for our commitment and common consent rather than a request for résumés.”¹⁹⁶

Satan’s self-centeredness is fittingly reflected in the wording of his proposal. With passionate rapid-fire delivery, he narcissistically repeats the terms “I” and “me” six times in the short span of half a verse. OT1 and OT2 reinforce the stylistic egoism of the phrase “Behold, here am I” with their briefer reading: “Behold I”¹⁹⁷—the latter rendering in all likelihood being closer to the phrase would have been worded by an ancient speaker.¹⁹⁸ The current wording first appeared in the 1902 edition of the Pearl of Great Price.¹⁹⁹

d I will be thy son. Compare Moses 1:19 where, in a rage, Satan claimed the role he was here denied—namely, the right to become the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh.²⁰⁰

e I will redeem. Whatever Satan exactly meant by his proposal to become the “redeemer” of all mankind, it was doubtless very different from what the Savior offered. Elder Spencer J. Condie observed: “Because [the Devil’s] plan... required no Atonement for sin, ... he could save his own satanic skin from any suffering.”²⁰¹

191 A. at-Tabatabaʿi, Al-Mizan, 2:35, 1:179.

192 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 38; cf. Genesis 22:1; Isaiah 6:8; Acts 9:10; Abraham 3:27.

193 E. Auerbach, Mimesis, p. 8; cf. H. Fisch, Presence, p. 307.

194 D&C 93:25.

195 Moses 4:2.

196 B. L. Top, Life Before, p. 109. See Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582.

197 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 90, 599.

198 E. Auerbach, Mimesis, p. 8.

199 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 79.

200 See also Commentary 1:13-c, p. 53; Moses 5:13.

201 S. J. Condie, Agency, p. 6.

1 And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying: That Satan, whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning, and he came before me, saying—Behold, here am I, send me, I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore give me thine honor.

2 But, behold, my Beloved Son, which was my Beloved and Chosen from the beginning, said unto me—Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever.

- f all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost. Joseph Smith summarized the competing claims and the result of Satan's rebellion: "The contention in heaven was—Jesus said there would be certain souls that would not be saved; and the Devil said he could save them all, and laid his plans before the grand council, who gave their vote in favor of Jesus Christ. So the Devil rose up in rebellion against God, and was cast down, with all who put up their heads for him."²⁰² George Laub's retrospective summary of what appears to be the same discourse more specifically indicates that the only ones that Jesus said he could not save (i.e., save in one of the three kingdoms of glory) were those who sinned against the Holy Ghost—in other words, the sons of perdition.²⁰³ President Brigham Young affirmed: "None are condemned except those who have the privilege of receiving the words of eternal life and refuse to receive them."²⁰⁴ "God will save all who are determined to be saved."²⁰⁵

Ironically, Satan, the one who proposed a plan whereby no soul would be lost, became himself a soul who Jesus could not save. Indeed, upon him was conferred the name of "perdition"—loss itself.²⁰⁶ In poignant parallel, Satan became a type for Judas Iscariot, of whom Jesus Christ said in his prayer at the Last Supper: "those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition."²⁰⁷

- g surely I will do it. Satan seems not merely to be claiming that he will surely redeem all mankind, but also that he alone can do it and—even more arrogantly—that he can do it alone.
- h give me thine honor. Note that D&C 29:36 equates God's power with His honor.
- 2 a my Beloved Son. The phrase "my Beloved" is repeated twice in the verse, emphasizing the deep and personal regard of the Father for his Son. Contrast this with the distancing third-person reference that introduces the Adversary in verse 1: "That Satan..."
- b which was my Beloved and Chosen from the beginning. Elder Neal A. Maxwell eloquently enumerated the reasons why Jesus was so uniquely honored: He was "utterly incomparable in what He is, what He knows, what He has accomplished, and what He has experienced.... In intelligence and performance, He far surpasses the individual and composite capacities and achievements of all who have lived, live now, and will yet live!... He rejoices in our genuine goodness and achievement, but any assessment of where we stand in relation to Him tells us that we do not stand at all! We kneel!"²⁰⁸
- c Father, thy will be done. Elder Maxwell described the nature of the premortal council, affirming that it "was not an unstructured meeting, nor was it a discussion between plans, nor an idea-producing session, as to how to formulate the plan for salvation and carry it out. Our Father's plan was known, and the actual question put was who the Father should send to carry out the plan."²⁰⁹ Abraham 3:27 makes it clear that it was actually Jesus Christ who was the first to answer the Father's request.

202 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 357.

203 J. Smith, Jr., 7 April 1844, as reported in E. England, Laub, p. 22. See D&C 76:43-44, the overview of Moses 4, p. 223, and Excursus 22: The Nature of Satan's Premortal Proposal, p. 577.

204 B. Young, 12 June 1860-b, p. 294.

205 B. Young, 9 November 1856, p. 111; cf. B. Young, 17 February 1861, p. 125; C. S. Lewis, Divorce, p. 72.

206 J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, p. 217. See D&C 76:37-39.

207 John 17:12. See Commentary 5:24-b, p. 375.

208 N. A. Maxwell, Redeemer, p. 8.

209 N. A. Maxwell, Deposition, p. 11.

2 But, behold, my Beloved Son, which was my Beloved and Chosen from the beginning, said unto me—Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever.

3 Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him, and also, that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten, I caused that he should be cast down;

In stark contrast to Satan's speech, the Redeemer never once mentions the words "I" or "me," being wholly focused on the will and the glory of the Father.

- d glory be thine forever. Jesus later contrasted His position to the one adopted by Satan: "He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory: but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him."²¹⁰

- 3 a Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man. D&C 29:36 underscores the irony of Satan's efforts to destroy man's agency by pointing out that it was "because of their agency" that a "third part of the hosts of heaven" were permitted to follow him in rebellion.

Although the exercise of agency was surely a condition of the premortal existence, Moses 7:32 seems to imply, erroneously, that it did not exist until Adam and Eve came into the Garden: "I gave unto them their knowledge, in the day I created them; and in the Garden of Eden, gave I unto man his agency." OT2, however, renders this verse differently: "I gave unto them their intelligence and in the Garden of Eden man had agency."²¹¹ Whether this emendation took place at the initiative of a scribe or under the direction of the Prophet, its purpose is obvious: to make it clear that agency was not something "given" for the first time to mankind in the Garden, but rather that it was something they already had. The modification also forestalls a possible implication that Adam and Eve had already been given "knowledge" at the time of their creation. Significantly, OT2 states that they were given "intelligence" rather than "knowledge" at that time. Thus, the change leads us to infer that Adam and Eve began to obtain the "knowledge" they lacked only later, after their transgression.

- b that I should give unto him mine own power. Commented Elder Maxwell: "[Satan] wanted glory, not growth; control, not salvation. His ascendancy meant more to him than our agency. The Devil is a despot."²¹²
- c by the power of mine Only Begotten. Moses had seen the power of the Only Begotten used in a similar way when, in His name, he commanded Satan to depart.²¹³
- d I caused that he should be cast down. Lehi records that an "angel of God... had fallen from heaven; wherefore he became a devil, having sought that which was evil before God."²¹⁴ Although Moses 4:6 and Abraham 3:28 say only that "many" followed Satan, the Doctrine and Covenants is more specific. The Lord, speaking of Satan's rebellion said that it was "a third part of the hosts of heaven" that he "turned... away from me because of their agency."²¹⁵

It is possible to see an allusion to this event in the separation of light and darkness in Day One of creation.²¹⁶ A parallel can also be seen in the account of how God "drove out the man" from the Garden²¹⁷—though, in Adam's case, God held out the joyous possibility for his return.

²¹⁰ John 7:18.

²¹¹ S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 618; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 25. See Excursus 47: Islamic Perspectives Relating to Redemption, p. 645.

²¹² N. A. Maxwell, Deposition, p. 81. See Commentary 4:1g, p. 244.

²¹³ Commentary 1:21-c, p. 58.

²¹⁴ 2 Nephi 2:17; cf. Revelation 12:7-9; 2 Peter 2:4; Jude 1:6; Isaiah 14:12-17; D&C 29:36-38; Abraham 3:28.

²¹⁵ D&C 29:36; cf. Revelation 12:14.

²¹⁶ See Commentary 2:4-c, p. 101.

²¹⁷ See Commentary 4:31-a, p. 280.

4 And he became Satan, yea, even the devil, the father of all lies, to deceive and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice.

5 And now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which I, the Lord God, had made.

- 4 a became Satan. From this moment, Satan is no more a mere rebel but rather a hostile and perpetual adversary.²¹⁸ Only little children²¹⁹ and the righteous²²⁰ fully escape some measure of his power. “During the millennium he will be bound, and then loosed at the end of that period...²²¹ At the end, he will be vanquished... and banished to his hell.”²²²
- b father of all lies, to deceive and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice. Verse 4, and especially this phrase, should be read as an “announcement of plot” for what will follow in the rest of Moses 4.²²³ Satan will lie to Eve in order to deceive her; her eyes will not suddenly be opened with the wisdom he promised, but rather she will become blind with regard to her true situation, and she and Adam will be figuratively led captive into the tree in a vain effort to hide their transgression from God. All this came as a consequence of the fact that they did not hearken to the voice of the Lord.²²⁴ Later, after having violated the “first commandments” and entered mortality, God “made known unto them the plan of redemption” and “gave unto them [other] commandments”²²⁵ so that through their faith and obedience they could “escape from the grasp of... death and hell.”²²⁶
- 5 a serpent. Nephi and John both identify Satan by referring to him figuratively as “that old serpent.”²²⁷ However, the latter part of this verse leads the reader to a literal interpretation when it refers to the serpent as a simple “beast of the field.”²²⁸ The portrayal of the serpent as a “beast of the field” rather than as one of the “creeping things”²²⁹ is consistent with the ancient imagery that portrays the serpent as a legged animal before the Fall.²³⁰
- b subtle. The Hebrew term behind “subtle” depicts the serpent as shrewd, cunning, and crafty, but not as wise.²³¹ “Subtle,” in this context, also has to do with the ability to make something appear one way when it is actually another.²³² Thus, it will not be in the least out of character later for Satan or his accomplices to disguise their identity in order to deceive.²³³

In explaining how Satan deceived Eve through the serpent, the Cave of Treasures cites the example of teaching parrots to speak through the use of a mirror. Their trainer “bringeth a large mirror and placeth between himself and the bird. He then beginneth to talk to the bird, and immediately the parrot heareth the voice of the man, it turneth round, and when it seeth its own form reflected in the mirror; it becometh pleased straightway, because it imagineth that a fellow parrot is talking to it... In this manner... did Satan enter in and dwell

218 See Commentary 4:1-b, p. 243.

219 D&C 29:47; Moroni 8:8.

220 1 Nephi 22:26; J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, p. 60; G. Weil, Legends, p. 38.

221 See Revelation 20:2-3, 7. See also D&C 43:31; 45:55; 88:110-111.

222 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 40. See D&C 88:110-115.

223 L. Turner, Announcements.

224 See Commentary 4:16-a, p. 262; Moses 4:23; 2 Nephi 9:28-29.

225 Alma 12:31-32.

226 2 Nephi 9:10. See Commentary 5:24-a, p. 375.

227 2 Nephi 2:18; Revelation 12:9.

228 See Commentary 3:19-a, p. 177 and 4:6-a, p. 249.

229 Moses 2:24.

230 See Commentary 4:20-e, p. 265.

231 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 187-188; R. W. L. Moberly, Serpent, p. 25. See Commentary 3:25-a, p. 185.

232 See Commentary 4:13-b, p. 258.

233 See below. Also Moses 1:19; D&C 50:2-3; 52:14; 128:20; 129:8; G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 44:1-2a, p. 51E; R. Giorgi, Anges, pp. 85-88.

5 And now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which I, the Lord God, had made.

in the serpent, ... and when he saw Eve by herself, he called her by her name. And when she turned round towards him, she saw her own form reflected in him, and she talked to him.”²³⁴ Hence, the common visual portrayal of a serpent with features of a human female was not designed to assert that the woman was devilish, but rather to depict the Devil as trying to allay Eve’s fears, deceptively appealing to her by appearing in a form that resembled her own.²³⁵ Compare Ephrem the Syrian’s On the Fall,²³⁶ where Satan makes himself a dove to resemble Eve, who is also portrayed as a dove.²³⁷

Of significance here is the idea of the serpent as a symbol of Christ and his life-giving power.²³⁸ In the Garden of Eden, Satan appears in the form of a serpent, yet deceptively brings death. In other OT references, the serpent also has “a strangely ambivalent significance... As it was by a serpent that the children of Israel were smitten in the desert, so it was by a serpent that they were healed.”²³⁹ It is the serpent who defeats the serpent... The Caduceus, the sign of the two interlaced serpents [which is used today as a symbol of the medical profession], was the sign of Aesculapius, who healed the dead, one signifying death, the other life...²⁴⁰ More generally, the Caduceus signifies “that all things have their opposites.”²⁴¹

The serpent is not only a symbol of life, but also of revealed wisdom. Jesus instructed his disciples to be “wise as serpents, and harmless as doves”²⁴² and there is archaeological evidence from iron age temples that these two motifs had been associated for centuries.²⁴³ Biblical or mythological trees of immortality²⁴⁴ are not infrequently depicted with a serpent or dragon at the bottom and one or two birds at the top. Sometimes the bird is a dove,²⁴⁵ but often it is a hawk, falcon, or eagle—occasionally described as the serpent’s adversary.²⁴⁶ As mentioned above, Ephrem the Syrian portrays Eve in the Garden of Eden as a dove that is deceived by Satan’s appearance as a dove.²⁴⁷ In the Gnostic Apocryphon of John, Christ-Sophia, “the other side of the serpent, personified in an eagle,” is made to say: “I appeared in the form of an eagle on the Tree of Knowledge... that I might teach them and awaken them out of the depth of sleep.”²⁴⁸ In connection with a portrait of an eagle—the symbol of Zeus—positioned behind a head of Orpheus in the Jewish synagogue at Dura Europos, Goodenough gives the bird the same meaning “that it frequently had in the east, when it symbolized divine inspiration, just as it continues to do in Christianity when connected with John the Evangelist, and when used on the lectern for the Bible in Christian Churches.”²⁴⁹ In Joseph Smith-Matthew 1:27 the gathered elect are likened to eagles, and in the parable of the mustard seed, birds are portrayed as lodging in the branches of the full grown tree of the 234 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 63-64.

235 J. O’Reilly, Iconography, p. 168.

236 Ephrem the Syrian, Fall, 4, p. 101.

237 See below and Commentary 1:1-a, p. 42.

238 Numbers 21:8-9; John 3:14-15; 2 Nephi 25:20; Alma 33:19; Helaman 8:14-15.

239 Numbers 21:4-9; cf. Exodus 7:8-12; John 3:14-15. See Endnote 4-75, p. 319. For a comprehensive study of the ambivalent symbolism of the serpent, see J. H. Charlesworth, Serpent.

240 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 314. See also A. C. Skinner, Serpent.

241 H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 74. See Endnote E-107, p. 727.

242 Matthew 10:16. See also Alma 18:22, D&C 111:11, J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 29 January 1843, p. 276.

243 A. C. Skinner, Serpent, pp. 381-382.

244 See, e.g., D. E. Wirth, Decoding, pp. 80-83.

245 See Figure 3-8, p. 145 and Figure 6-14, p. 473.

246 See, e.g., P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 2:1, p. 257; E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, 9:91-92; E. Isaac, 1 Enoch, 96:2, p. 76; G. R. S. Mead, Mandaean John-Book, 35, pp. 65-67; J. Priest, Moses, 10:8-10, p. 932; M. D. Rhodes, Hor, p. 20; E. A. Speiser, Etana; F. Wisse, Apocryphon of John, 20:26-35, p. 118; book of Abraham Facsimile 2, figure 7; Deuteronomy 32:11; Isaiah 40:31; Revelation 4:7, 8:13, 12:14.

247 Ephrem the Syrian, Fall, 4, p. 101.

248 F. Wisse, Apocryphon of John, 23:26-31, p. 118. See G. Lettieri, Ambiguity, p. 47.

249 E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, 9:92.

5 And now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which I, the Lord God, had made.

kingdom of God.²⁵⁰ Significantly, Daniel 4:20-22 makes it clear that such a tree can represent, not only the kingdom of God, but also an individual who has grown to full perfection.²⁵¹ The birds, representing “powers, gifts and angels,”²⁵² mediate access to divine knowledge and healing power by such a person, either bringing it down from heaven or carrying the visionary upward on their wings.²⁵³ Just as Noah was informed by the dove who brought an olive branch from “beyond the gates of the Garden of Eden” to the ark,²⁵⁴ so the Prophet Joseph Smith compared one of his revelations to an “olive leaf... plucked from the Tree of Paradise.”²⁵⁵

In the context of this verse, Draper et al. conclude that Satan “has effectively come as the Messiah, offering a promise that only the Messiah can offer, for it is the Messiah who will control the powers of life and death and can promise life, not Satan.”²⁵⁶ Not only has the Devil come in guise of the Holy One, he seems to have deliberately appeared, without authorization, in a most sacred place.²⁵⁷ If it is true, as Ephrem the Syrian believed, that the Tree of Knowledge was, among other things, a figure for “the veil for the sanctuary,”²⁵⁸ then Satan has positioned himself, in an extreme of sacrilegious effrontery, as the very “keeper of the gate.”²⁵⁹ This, then, becomes a type for the scene to which Paul alludes in his description of events that were to precede the second coming of Christ: “for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.”²⁶⁰

What was the nature of the forbidden fruit? Recalling an Egyptian version of the story, which revolves around the presumption of the hero, Setne, “in taking the book of Knowledge, which was guarded by the endless serpent,”²⁶¹ Nibley comments that “a book of knowledge is certainly more logical” as the object of temptation than would be a piece of actual fruit.²⁶² In this vein, Islamic legend insists on the idea that Satan was condemned for his claims that he would reveal a knowledge of certain things to Adam and Eve. He is portrayed as recruiting his accomplices (the “vain” peacock and the “fair and prudent” serpent, “the queen of all beasts... [who] was created a thousand years before Adam”²⁶³) by deceptively promising them that he would reveal to them “three mysterious words” which would “preserve [them] from sickness, age, and death.”²⁶⁴ Having by this means won over the serpent, Satan then directly equates the effect of knowing these secret words with the eating of the forbidden fruit by promising the same protection from death to Eve if she will but partake.²⁶⁵ Nibley elaborates: “Satan disobeyed orders when he revealed certain secrets to Adam and Eve, not 250 Matthew 13:32; Mark 4:32; Luke 13:19; H. Koester et al., Thomas, 20, p. 128.

251 Cf. G. R. S. Mead, Mandaean John-Book, 35, pp. 65-67; Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163.

252 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, December 1835, p. 98.

253 Cf. Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; Figure 3-8, p. 145; Figure 6-14, p. 473; Figure E53-13, p. 684; M. E. Lewis, Early, pp. 191-192; G. R. S. Mead, Mandaean John-Book, 35, pp. 65-67. See Endnote E-204, p. 754.

254 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 33:6, p. 351, Genesis 8:11.

255 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 14 January 1833, p. 18; cf. Commentary 3:9-g, p. 165.

256 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 43; see John 5:25-26; 2 Nephi 9:3-26

257 Ibid., pp. 42, 150-151.

258 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 3:5, p. 92.

259 2 Nephi 9:41.

260 2 Thessalonians 2:3-4, emphasis added. See also Commentary 1:15-d, p. 54.

261 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 310.

262 Ibid., p. 311. For a Jewish story of a book of knowledge given to Adam in Eden, see S. Savedow, Rezial, pp. 2-4.

263 See the overview of Moses 4, pp. 225-225 and Excursus 8: The Origin and Premortal Existence of Human Spirits, p. 540.

264 G. Weil, Legends, p. 26.

265 Ibid., p. 30. For a similar theme in the story of the Watchers, see Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

5 And now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which I, the Lord God, had made.

6 And Satan put it into the heart of the serpent, (for he had drawn away many after him,) and he sought also to beguile Eve, for he knew not the mind of God, wherefore he sought to destroy the world.

because they were not known and done in other worlds, but because he was not authorized in that time and place to convey them.”²⁶⁶ Although Satan had “given the fruit to Adam and Eve, it was not his prerogative to do so—regardless of what had been done in other worlds. (When the time comes for such fruit, it will be given us legitimately.)”²⁶⁷

- 6 a had drawn away many after him. This JST change reemphasizes the point that the serpent is not to be identified with Satan himself, but is rather a subsequently-recruited accomplice. Verse 5 mentioned it simply as a “beast of the field which I, the Lord God, had made.”²⁶⁸ The phrase in v. 7, “And he [Satan] spake by the mouth of the serpent,” further reinforces this same idea. Such an interpretation, however, should be considered in light of what is presented in the LDS temple endowment.

In an effort to explain the role of the serpent, the Fathers of the Ethiopian Church stressed the idea that Satan “could not carry out his plan... if he entered Paradise in his own form.”²⁶⁹ The Cave of Treasures says that “he knew his appearance was foul, and that if Eve saw his form, she would betake herself to fly straightway before him.”²⁷⁰ Having failed to enlist any of the other animals as his helper,²⁷¹ the Devil “covered himself with the serpent” or, in other words, “he took the serpent as a garment.”²⁷²

The Greek, Armenian, and Georgian versions of the Life of Adam and Eve attempt to explain how the serpent was “drawn away” by Satan. The accounts imply that the serpent received food inferior to that given to the other animals (i.e., the thistles growing outside the Garden rather than the paradisiacal fruit found within it) and, inexplicably, that the serpent had been previously expelled from the Garden, just as Satan had been.²⁷³ Moreover, Satan argued that the serpent should not allow himself to bow down to Adam: “You came into being before him: why is it that you, who are the former one, worship the later? Rather should the younger worship the older.”²⁷⁴ Explains Stone, “These oddities may be taken to be the result of words of the great Deceiver. Satan lies... for the purpose of inciting the serpent to rebellion. One way he does this is rhetorical, by likening the serpent to himself. He implies that, like him, the serpent has been expelled; like him, the serpent has been deprived of the benefits of paradise.” Whether or not this assertion is true of the serpent, “all of this clearly implies that Satan was expelled and Satan was deprived of benefits.”²⁷⁵

- b sought also to beguile Eve. Nibley explains: “The perfect and beautiful union of Adam and Eve excited the envy and jealousy of the Evil One, who made it his prime objective to break it up... His first step (or wedge) [was] to get one of them to make an important decision without consulting the other. He approached Adam in the absence of Eve with a proposition

266 H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 63.

267 H. W. Nibley, Gifts, p. 92. See also Commentary 3:9-h, p. 167; 3:19-b, p. 177; 4:9-a, p. 252; 4:14-e, p. 260. See Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591. See Endnote 4-76, p. 319.

268 See the discussion in U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 139-142. See also Commentary 3:19-a, p. 177.

269 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 65. See also W. L. Lipscomb, Creation, 10-11, pp. 120, 262.

270 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 63.

271 B. Mikael, Mysteries, pp. 24-25.

272 H. E. Gaylord, Jr., 3 Baruch, 9:7, pp. 672-673.

273 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 44(16):2-3, pp. 18E, 49E-50E; cf. Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, p. 200 and Commentary 4:6-b, p. 249.

274 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Armenian, 44(16):2b, p. 49E; cf. M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, pp. 3-4. See Commentary 6:2-d, p. 476 and Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575.

275 M. E. Stone, Fall of Satan, p. 56.

6 And Satan put it into the heart of the serpent, (for he had drawn away many after him,) and he sought also to beguile Eve, for he knew not the mind of God, wherefore he sought to destroy the world.

to make him wise, and being turned down he sought out the woman to find her alone and thus undermine her resistance more easily. It is important that he was able to find them both alone.”²⁷⁶

Christian traditions recount that Adam and Eve were each given responsibilities to care for different areas of the Garden and to feed particular kinds of animals.²⁷⁷ Eve was said to have been approached by the Tempter at an hour when the angels charged to guard her were called away to prayer.²⁷⁸ According to the Discourse on Abbaton, when she “came forth, and passing northwards through Paradise, she came to the wall to fetch food for the beasts [according to the Father’s command]... Now the Devil lived nigh unto Paradise, and he lay in wait for Adam and Eve by day and by night. And when he saw Eve by herself he entered into the serpent, saying: I will whisper in her ear, I will make her to eat of the tree, and I will cause them to be turned out from Paradise, for I myself was turned out.”²⁷⁹ Although most traditions say that Satan recruited the serpent because he could find no way to personally enter the Garden, the Greek version of the Life of Adam and Eve implies that Satan entered Paradise by means of Eve, who expressly let him through its gate: “And I [i.e., Eve] opened [it for him] and he entered the Garden and went before me. He walked a little way, then turned and said to me: ‘I have changed my mind, and I will not give you [something] to eat.’ [These things he said wishing to trap me in the end. And he said to me: I will not give you something to eat] unless you swear to me that you will give also to your husband.”²⁸⁰

- c knew not the mind of God. Similarly, Satan lacks the power to directly discern the mind of man. D&C 6:16 states that “there is none else save God that knowest thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart.” President Joseph F. Smith explained: “There is a difference between knowledge and pure intelligence. Satan possesses knowledge, far more than we have, but he has not intelligence or he would render obedience to the principles of truth and right.”²⁸¹ Indeed, disobedience of itself leads to increased darkness and ignorance.²⁸²

Nibley calls Moses 4:6 “the most encouraging verse in all the scriptures. Satan seems to be getting the upper hand all the time, but he doesn’t know the mind of God. There are a lot of things he doesn’t know.” “Mephistopheles[, the “Satan” character in Faust,] is the one... who always wants to do evil and only succeeds in doing good. Of course, it drives him wild. He can’t win.”²⁸³

- d sought to destroy the world. The statement makes more sense if “the world” is interpreted to signify not the material earth, but more specifically its inhabitants.²⁸⁴ In support of this reading, Joseph Smith said: “The world and earth are not synonymous terms. The world is the human family.”²⁸⁵ In a similar vein, he equated “the end of the world” not with the physical calamities that the earth would undergo, but rather with “the destruction of the wicked.”²⁸⁶

276 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, p. 88; cf. Moses 3:18; G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 33:2, p. 37E; D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, 1:36a, pp. 226-227.

277 See, e.g., G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 32:2-3, p. 36E.

278 G. A. Anderson, Original Form, n. 7, p. 217. Compare M. Barker, Infancy Gospel of James 1:13, p. 156.

279 Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, pp. 199-200; cf. G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 15:3-17:2, pp. 49E-51E; Commentary 4:6-a, p. 249.

280 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 19:1a-19:1d, pp. 56E-57E. On the gate, see M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 5.

281 J. F. Smith, Gospel Doctrine, 1919, p. 58.

282 Alma 12:11; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, p. 67.

283 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 17, p. 208.

284 See 2 Nephi 2:18; 9:8-9.

285 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, p. 60.

286 Ibid., before 8 August 1839, p. 13, see also p. 25.

6 And Satan put it into the heart of the serpent, (for he had drawn away many after him,) and he sought also to beguile Eve, for he knew not the mind of God, wherefore he sought to destroy the world.

7 And he said unto the woman: Yea, hath God said—Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? (And he spake by the mouth of the serpent.)

OT1 reads “he thought to destroy.”²⁸⁷ The term “sought” first appeared in OT2.²⁸⁸

- 7 a hath God said. Hamilton views this difficult Hebrew phrase as a “feigned expression of surprise” and indignation: “Indeed! To think that God said you are not to eat of any tree of the Garden!”²⁸⁹ “The serpent’s obvious inaccuracy in his rendition of God’s prohibition sounds like... lack of subtlety” but is actually a “well-known trick of the con-man to appear stupid to put others in a position of sham superiority.”²⁹⁰ The serpent “grossly exaggerates God’s prohibition” and attempts to move Eve’s perception of God “from beneficent provider to cruel oppressor.”²⁹¹ Moreover, the “serpent subtly softens the severity of the prohibition by using [the word ‘said’] in place of the original ‘command.’ Then it deliberately misquotes God so that the woman cannot give a one-word reply but is drawn into conversation that forces her to focus upon the forbidden tree that he had not mentioned.”²⁹² A similar tactic to misrepresent God’s commandments as deliberately repressive was used by Koriher in the Book of Mormon.²⁹³

In contrast to the name used by others in the rest of this chapter, Satan uses the term “God” rather than “Lord God.”²⁹⁴ Explains Wenham: “The god they are talking about is malevolent, secretive, and concerned to restrict man: his character is so different from that of Yahweh Elohim that the narrative pointedly avoids the name.”²⁹⁵ Alternatively, the narrator may simply be reflecting the idea that the name of the Lord is so sacred that it cannot be uttered by the serpent.

- b spake by the mouth of the serpent. An Islamic tradition imagines that Satan seated himself “in the hollow part of [the serpent’s] front teeth, poisoned them to all eternity,” and spoke to Eve from the mouth of the beast itself.²⁹⁶

The serpent consistently uses plural verbs in his dialogue with Eve. Some commentators take this fact, in connection with the implication that her companion was “with her.”²⁹⁷ to indicate that Adam was within earshot of the whole conversation. However, given the specific mention that the serpent “sought... to beguile Eve”²⁹⁸ and the fact of Adam’s silence throughout the episode, it seems more likely that Eve was alone, and that Satan’s speech was meant to include Adam only indirectly. Note, however, a tradition preserved in a twelfth-century Christian source that has the scene beginning “with an unsuccessful attempt to lead Adam astray” before Satan approaches Eve.²⁹⁹

287 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 90.

288 Ibid., p. 600.

289 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 186. Compare U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 144. See also 4QGen^k 3:1: [“Has God] really [said, ‘You shall not eat of any tree of] the garden?’” (M. Abegg, Jr. et al., Scrolls Bible, p. 7 n. 8, emphasis mine. See also 1QGen 3:11-14). The interrogative particle translated “really” is neither found in the Masoretic text nor the Septuagint.

290 A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 145.

291 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 188-189.

292 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 24.

293 Alma 30:13, 23-27.

294 See Commentary 3:4-e, p. 154.

295 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 57.

296 G. Weil, Legends, pp. 25-29; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 51.

297 Moses 4:12.

298 Moses 4:6.

299 E. Auerbach, Mimesis, p. 146; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:104, p. 275. See Commentary 4:6-a, p. 249.

8 And the woman said unto the serpent: We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden;
 9 But of the fruit of the tree which thou beholdest in the midst of the garden, God hath said—Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die.
 10 And the serpent said unto the woman: Ye shall not surely die;

8 a And the woman... garden. This entire verse was omitted, no doubt inadvertently, in OT1.³⁰⁰ A note in OT2 in the handwriting of Sidney Rigdon restored the missing text.³⁰¹

9 a tree... in the midst of the garden. The indefinite reference to “the tree” paves the way for later confusion about its identity and purpose.³⁰² Whereas the previous narrative explicitly disclosed to the reader only that the Tree of Life was in the middle of the Garden,³⁰³ Eve’s statement now makes it clear that the Tree of Knowledge must have been located there as well—or at least in the same general direction.³⁰⁴ Satan will exploit the ambiguity to further his purpose.³⁰⁵ Explains Barker: “When the serpent tempted Eve, he made the two trees seem identical: the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil would open her eyes, and she would be like God, knowing both good and evil. Almost the same was true of the Tree of Life, for Wisdom opened the eyes of those who ate her fruit, and as they became wise, they became divine.”³⁰⁶

The plausibility of the theme of confusion between the two trees in the record of Moses is strengthened by its appearance in related non-Biblical accounts. For example, in the Qurʾān Satan does more than simply say that Eve will not suffer death if she eats the forbidden fruit. Instead, he goes beyond mere denial to make the false claim that it is “the tree of immortality.”³⁰⁷ However, in reality the tree was just the opposite of what the Devil stated it to be: “It was the tree of death, the spiritual death of man.”³⁰⁸

b neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die. Some interpreters have concluded that Eve is herself “[exaggerating] the stringency of the divine prohibition, [thus introducing] into her own mind the suggestion of an unreasonably strict God.”³⁰⁹ Rabbinical commentators used this story to draw a lesson about the principle of not adding to the commandments of God.³¹⁰

However, pointing to parallels that evidence “a graver connotation than mere touching,”³¹¹ Cassuto sees the clause neither shall ye touch it as “simply synonymous with the preceding clause”: “Ye shall not eat of it.”³¹² Thus, it is possible that Eve was simply relating details of what she had been told, consistent with the Qurʾān which says the tree was not even to be approached.³¹³ Also supporting this view is an 1835 LDS publication of the verse which added the words “neither shall you touch it” to the Lord’s original commandment.³¹⁴

10 a Ye shall not surely die. A tone of sarcasm and derision can be discerned in the serpent’s contradiction of God’s words, doubtless intended to make Eve appear foolish and naïve

300 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 90-91.

301 Ibid., p. 600.

302 See Commentary 3:9-h, p. 167 and 4:14-e, p. 260.

303 Moses 3:9.

304 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

305 Moses 4:9-11.

306 M. Barker, Wisdom, p. 2.

307 M. M. Ali, Qurʾān, 20:120, p. 624; cf. A. al-Thaʿlabi, Lives, pp. 50-51.

308 M. M. Ali, Qurʾān, p. 20 n. 62. See also Commentary 4:5-b, p. 246.

309 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 24.

310 Deuteronomy 4:2, 13:1. See G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 77-78; J. Goldin, Fathers, 1, pp. 8-10; Commentary 3:17-a, p. 174.

311 E.g., Genesis 20:6, 26:11.

312 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 145.

313 M. M. Ali, Qurʾān, 2:35, p. 19.

314 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 75.

10 And the serpent said unto the woman: Ye shall not surely die;

11 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

in her credulity. A similar tone can be heard in the words of Nehor, who “testified unto the people that... they need not fear nor tremble.”³¹⁵ The Zohar has Satan saying, “Look, I touched this tree and did not die. You, too, come and touch it with your hand; you won’t die.”³¹⁶

The serpent had now successfully initiated the first part of a threefold attack, subtly mixing truth with deception. He first sought to eliminate Eve’s fears through emphatically contradicting the very words God spoke in 3:17. Next, the serpent attempted to undermine God’s credibility by ascribing self-serving motives to Him.³¹⁷ Finally, it appealed to “an attractive standard of utility”³¹⁸ in promising that eating of the fruit would bring knowledge.³¹⁹

One Christian account gives Satan as the one who “picked the apple, and gave it to Eve.”³²⁰ Another source imagines the Tempter’s words: “How sweet does it smell! How good does it taste! How beautiful is its color!” Eve, in turn, later uses these words to persuade Adam.³²¹

This entire verse was omitted, no doubt inadvertently, in OT1.³²²

11 a your eyes shall be opened. This biblical expression is used to describe a sudden vision of something that was previously hidden.³²³ Here, however, the serpent’s statement is but a half-truth. It is true that Adam and Eve’s eyes will be opened to a glimpse of the divine, but what will they know? At first, only that they are naked.³²⁴ Later, they will begin to further exercise their capacity for discernment—for example, in recognizing Satan for who he is.³²⁵

b ye shall be as gods. Elder Brigham Young said that Satan told Eve “many truths and some lies.”³²⁶ The truths include Satan’s statement that through the fruit Adam and Eve would begin to acquire an attribute of discernment possessed by God Himself.³²⁷ However, the Devil’s claim also misleads because it implies that the couple would attain to godhood through the mere act of eating.³²⁸ “Partaking of the forbidden fruit is only the beginning of [the learning] process.”³²⁹ Ultimately, “deification comes through obedience to God, not through disobedience.”³³⁰

Shakespeare’s Macbeth parallels the drama of this verse when Lady Macbeth expresses hope that their ungodly act “shall to all our nights and days to come / Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.”³³¹ Thus, she sets aside the warning of Banquo: “And oftentimes, to win us to our harm, / The instruments of darkness tell us truths, / Win us with honest trifles, to betray ’s / In deepest consequence.”³³²

315 Alma 1:4.

316 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:36a, p. 227; cf. M. A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Eliézer, 13, p. 90; J. Goldin, Fathers, 1, pp. 8-9.

317 See Commentary 4:11-b, p. 253.

318 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 25.

319 See Commentary 4:11-c, p. 254.

320 M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 5.

321 Wahb bin Munabbi, cited in al-Tabari, Creation, 1:106, p. 277.

322 S. H. Faulring, et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 91. The missing text was inserted into OT2 (ibid., p. 600).

323 See Commentary 4:13-a, p. 258; cf. Commentary 1:10-b, p. 51.

324 Moses 4:13. See Commentary 3:25-a, p. 185.

325 Cf. Commentary 1:18-b, p. 56, 5:10-e, p. 363.

326 B. Young, December 1844, reported in E. England, Laub, p. 28.

327 B. Young, 23 June 1867, p. 70. See also J. L. Kugel, Instances, pp. 163-165.

328 See Commentary 4:28-a, p. 276.

329 B. C. Hafen, Broken, p. 30.

330 J. N. Sparks et al., Orthodox Study Bible, p. 6 n. 3:1-7.

331 W. Shakespeare, Macbeth, 1:5:69-70, p. 1317.

332 Ibid., 1:3:123-126, p. 1315. See L. A. Cormican, Idiom, pp. 25-26.

11 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

The serpent's statement presupposes the possibility of many gods.³³³ Sarna points out that "any possible ambiguity inherent in the use of the same word for 'God' and for ['gods'] is here removed by the plural form of the verb 'know' (yode'ei) and by verse [28] ('one of us')."³³⁴

In an Armenian text, the serpent implies that God obtained the knowledge that made Him Divine by the same means being proffered to Eve: "God was a man like you, when He ate of this fruit He became God of all. Because of this matter He said, 'Do not eat!' Lest you become god."³³⁵ This exaggeration contains the cunning insinuation that God forbade the eating of the fruit out of jealousy: "The serpent's deception is... his equation of godliness with defiance... The serpent implies that God... wishes them to be without likeness to Him, that He does not want them to become as He is."³³⁶ This sense is also well captured in a midrash: "The snake began to slander his Creator, saying, 'From this tree did God eat, and then He created the world. Then He told you, 'You shall not eat of it,'³³⁷ so that you should not create other worlds. For everyone hates the competition."³³⁸ The serpent intended to shake Eve's confidence in God's generosity and goodness by making Him out to be a selfish rival.³³⁹

A Zoroastrian text has Satan proposing that both he and Eve partake of the fruit together: "Let us eat of the gathering from this tree, and let us give it to Adam."³⁴⁰ An Islamic story implies that Satan sought to persuade Eve by attributing his own immortality to the effects of eating the fruit. When Eve saw Satan near the tree and inquired who he was, he is said to have replied: "I was man, but have become an angel." "By what means?" "By eating of this blessed fruit, which an envious God had forbidden me to taste on pain of death. I long submitted to His command, until I became old and frail... I then longed for death, and expecting to meet it by eating of this fruit, I stretched out my hands and took of it; but lo! it had scarcely touched my lips, when I became strong and beautiful as at first; and though many thousand years have since elapsed, I am not sensible of the slightest change either in my appearance or in my energies."³⁴¹ "If you eat from this tree," al-Qummi cites Satan as saying to Adam and Eve, "you shall be two angels and dwell in the Garden forever."³⁴²

- c knowing good and evil. In the Discourse on Abbaton, Satan says: "ye shall know the good and the evil, and ye shall [be able] to separate the sweet from the bitter."³⁴³ D&C 29:39 affirms that "if they never should have bitter they could not know the sweet," implying that the "forbidden tree offers an experience that is both pleasant and painful; it awakens those who partake of it to the higher knowledge and to the pain that both come with moral choice."³⁴⁴

333 See Commentary 1:6-f, p. 48 and 2:26-a, p. 111.

334 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 25. For historical and LDS views on deification, see Brock's comments in Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, pp. 72-74; M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 23-24; M. Barker et al., Seeking; E. Benz, Imago Dei (1978); E. Benz, Imago Dei (1969); B. R. Bickmore, Restoring, pp. 149-159; C. L. Blomberg et al., Divide, pp. 77-110; M. J. Christensen et al., Partakers; J. Gross, Divinization; J. B. Haws, Deification; F. Luz, Orthodoxie, pp. 82-91; J. F. McConkie, Sons; S. Nes, Uncreated Light; K. E. Norman, Deification; K. E. Norman, Deification; B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 321-426; D. L. Paulsen, Are Christians Mormon, pp. 73-96; D. C. Peterson et al., Offenders, pp. 75-92; D. C. Peterson, Ye Are Gods; S. E. Robinson, Are Mormons Christians?, pp. 60-70; N. Russell, Deification; J. Vajda, Partakers.

335 Or, in another recension, "become a god, his equal." M. E. Stone, Armenian Apocrypha 1996, 4, p. 25. See also W. L. Lipscomb, Creation, 16-17, pp. 120-121, 262.

336 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 34.

337 Moses 3:17.

338 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 19:4, p. 202; cf. M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:24-25, pp. 25-26; D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit, 1:36a, p. 225.

339 E. Kastler, Commentaire. See Excursus 10: The Great Chain of Being, p. 546.

340 F. M. Müller, Sikand-Gumanik Vigar, 13, p. 210.

341 G. Weil, Legends, pp. 30-31.

342 M. M. Ayoub, Qur'an (Vol. 1), p. 88; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:108-109, pp. 279-280; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 51.

343 Timothy of Alexandria, Discourse, p. 485. This phrase is omitted in Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, p. 200.

344 A. Berlin et al., Jewish, p. 16.

11 For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.

12 And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it became pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make her wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and also gave unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

Sarna expands the serpent's words as follows: "You will be endowed with new mental powers, with the capacity for reflection that allows one to make decisions independently of God."³⁴⁵ In other words, the choice will be open to Adam and Eve to exercise moral autonomy, to walk solely in the light of their own limited reason and experience without reference to divine instruction.³⁴⁶ Dauber calls this as a "substitution of knowledge for relationship"—what LaCocque describes as a "perverted knowledge that ponders the pro and con, the positive and the negative, the advantage and the disadvantage, outside of and as a shield against commitment... [thus] objectifying partnership and partner alike."³⁴⁷ Describing the situation of those who are similarly deceived, Jacob lamented: "wo unto him that has the law given... and that transgresseth... for awful is his state! O that cunning plan of the evil one! O the vainness, and the frailties, and the foolishness of men! When they are learned, they think they are wise, and they hearken not unto the counsel of God."³⁴⁸ By way of contrast, knowledge leads to wisdom for those who "hearken unto the counsels of God."³⁴⁹

- 12 a woman saw that the tree was good for food. While Eve makes no reply, the narrator makes it clear that the tree has become the exclusive object in her imagination's view.³⁵⁰ Note the "undertone of irony in the formulation that she 'saw that it was good,' for it echoes God's recurring judgment about His creation in [Moses 2]. Now, however, good has become debased in the woman's mind. Its definition is no longer God's verdict but is rooted in the appeal to the senses and in utilitarian value."³⁵¹
- b it became pleasant to the eyes. The Hebrew expresses a strong intensity of desire fueled by appetite—which Alter renders in his translation as "lust to the eyes."³⁵² Significantly, while the KJV says that "it was pleasant," the JST says "it became pleasant." It seems that the more Eve looked, the more attractive the fruit appeared. Origen comments: "The eyes of sense were... opened, which they had done well to keep shut, that they might not be distracted and hindered from seeing with the eyes of the mind."³⁵³
- c to make her wise. The Hebrew term "le-haskil is the capacity for making decisions that lead to success. The targums as well as the Septuagint, Latin, and Syriac versions all derive the verb from the stem s-k-l, 'to see, contemplate'" which accords with the visual nature of the temptation.³⁵⁴ The desire to obtain the clear vision promised by wisdom is a good thing, but Eve's choice is mistakenly founded on a base of confusions and half-truths, and will not achieve the desired result.³⁵⁵ Though eating the forbidden fruit will bring Adam and Eve to the threshold of knowledge, it will not automatically confer wisdom.³⁵⁶

345 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 25; cf. B. C. Hafen, Broken, pp. 38-39.

346 D&C 1:16, 88:35; J. D. G. Dunn et al., Commentary, p. 40; L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 44; G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, pp. 63-64; R. W. L. Moberly, Serpent, p. 24. "Man... is always distressed to feel that what is good seems bitter to him and what is evil seems delightful." The commandments of God are designed "precisely to overcome man's inclination to decree what [is] good or bad for him according to his desires and tastes," helping him learn "from experience to recognize... authentic good and evil" (R. Barthélemy, God, p. 24).

347 A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 143.

348 2 Nephi 9:27-28; cf. Mosiah 3:19. Jeremiah describes such individuals as those who "walk... after the imagination of their evil heart" (Jeremiah 3:17; cf. Deuteronomy 29:19). See also Commentary 4:28-a, p. 276.

349 2 Nephi 9:29. See Excursus 27: Diligence, Obedience, and Friendship, p. 597.

350 E. Kastler, Commentaire; cf. U. Cassuto, Documentary, p. 147.

351 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 25; cf. J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 26-27.

352 R. Alter, Five Books, p. 24.

353 Origen, Against Celsus 7:39, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, pp. 80-81. See John 5:39.

354 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 25.

355 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

356 See also Commentary 1:31-d, p. 65, 4:11-b, p. 253, and Excursus 2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom, p. 516.

12 And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it became pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make her wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and also gave unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

The threefold description of Eve's temptation corresponds to the three parts of Satan's argument: 1. The fruit will not bring death, but rather is "good for food"; 2. It will open their eyes to "pleasant" things; and 3. It will bring knowledge of good and evil, thus making her "wise." Moreover, the temptation involves three aspects of mankind's powers of sense and discernment: "the mouth for food, the eyes for sight, and the heart... for understanding."³⁵⁷ Finally, as Hendel observes: "In this ascending scale of sensation—from bodily appetite to visual aesthetics to intellectual desire—we follow an internal, subjective progression of desire... In this turning moment the woman's desire ascends from the belly to the eyes to the mind, coloring her desire as at once animal, human, and quasi-divine (or at least drawn towards it)."³⁵⁸

- d she... did eat. The Hebrew contains six instances of doubled consonants, the "extremely difficult pronunciation... [forcing] a merciless concentration on each word"³⁵⁹ that amounts to a chewing of the phrase. Thus, the difficulties of diction simulate the excruciation of transgression.

Elder Talmage describes Eve's action as "indulgence in food unsuited to [her] nature."³⁶⁰ However, Elder McConkie leaves the door open for a figurative interpretation: "What is meant by partaking of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil is that our first parents complied with whatever laws were involved so that their bodies would change from their state of paradisiacal immortality to a state of natural mortality."³⁶¹

Whatever else we might infer about the nature of the event, the text does seem to justify the rejection of at least one popular idea about the specifics of the transgression. "Against the interpretation that [the fruit represented carnal knowledge] is the fact... that sexual differentiation is made by God Himself,³⁶² that the institution of marriage is looked upon... as part of the divinely ordained order,³⁶³ and that... 'knowledge of good and bad' is a divine characteristic."³⁶⁴ Butterworth observes: "Adam does not say 'I was ashamed before Eve, because I was naked."³⁶⁵ Westermann concurs, concluding that the opening of the eyes experienced by Adam and Eve in v. 13 "does not mean that they become conscious of sexuality."³⁶⁶ It is later, immediately following the account of their expulsion from Eden, that we are given the significant detail that "Adam knew his wife, and she bare unto him sons and daughters."³⁶⁷

Through the Fall, "death [came] upon mankind... which is the temporal death."³⁶⁸

- e gave unto her husband with her, and he did eat. Whereas Eve was beguiled by the serpent,³⁶⁹ having mistakenly taken the forbidden fruit "from the wrong hand,"³⁷⁰ "there was

357 J. W. Wevers, Notes, p. 39.

358 R. S. Hendel, Poetics of Myth, p. 160; cf. R. S. Hendel, Tangled Plots, p. 40.

359 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 190.

360 J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, 3, p. 18.

361 B. R. McConkie, Sermons, p. 189.

362 Moses 2:27.

363 Moses 2:25.

364 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 19; see Moses 4:11, 28.

365 E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, p. 73, emphasis added.

366 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 251.

367 Moses 5:2. See J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, p. 30.

368 Alma 12:24. On the relationship between death and the Fall, see the overview of Moses 3, pp. 140-144.

369 J. E. Talmage, Articles (1984), p. 63.

370 M. C. Thomas, Women, p. 53.

12 And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it became pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make her wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and also gave unto her husband with her, and he did eat.

no deception involved when Adam partook... It appears that Adam purposely fell that he might remain with Eve, according to the commandment of the Lord.³⁷¹ Note, however, that the scriptures usually refer to the incident generically as Adam's transgression.³⁷²

Nibley elaborates on the scene and its implications. He observes that while Eve was the one deceived, she also became the first to correctly understand what must be done as a result of her transgression: "After Eve had eaten the fruit and Satan had won his round, the two were now drastically separated, for they were of different natures. But Eve, who in ancient lore is the one who outwits the serpent and trips him up with his own smartness, defeated this trick by a clever argument. First, she asked Adam if he intended to keep all of God's commandments. Of course he did! All of them? Naturally! And what, pray, was the first and foremost of those commandments? Was it not to multiply and replenish the earth, the universal commandment given to all God's creatures? And how could they keep that commandment if they were separated? It had undeniable priority over the commandment not to eat the fruit. So Adam could only admit that she was right and go along: 'I see that it must be so,' he said, but it was she who made him see it. This is much more than a smart way of winning her point, however. It is the clear declaration that man and woman were put on the earth to stay together and have a family—that is their first obligation and must supersede everything else."³⁷³ Eve's perspicacity, augmented by the experience she has gained in the taking of the fruit, is recognized by a diversity of traditions that associate her with Wisdom (Sophia). The wisdom she had begun to acquire was later demonstrated through her insightful psalm of gratitude.³⁷⁴

The Greek Life recounts that Satan had refused to give Eve the fruit unless she swore an oath that she would also give it to her husband.³⁷⁵ Tvedtnes³⁷⁶ cites an Armenian text that has Eve trying to persuade Adam as follows: "'This fruit is extremely sweet and tasty...' Adam said, 'I cannot taste it and become like you...' But Eve cried and begged him and said, 'Eat and do not separate me from you. If we live, let us live together, and if we die, let us die together.'"³⁷⁷ her husband. In Hebrew, "her man." See Commentary 3:24-a, p. 184.

he did eat. Whether one takes the nature of the fruit to be literal or figurative, the insightful comments of Kass on the aptness of the "metaphor that lets prohibited eating stand for prohibited knowing" are pertinent: "Eating is the incorporation of 'other' and its transformation into 'same.' Eating the proper food maintains oneself and one's own wholeness. But eating improper food, food that cannot be assimilated, means taking in material that remains indigestible, that remains separate and alien. Taking in wrong food thus produces a certain duality and negativity within; it invites self-attention and judgmental self-consciousness, precisely the result (in our story) of the act of transgressive eating."³⁷⁸

371 J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, p. 221 and Moses 4:18; cf. 1 Timothy 2:14; V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 182-184; B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 86; S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, p. 133; J. E. Talmage, Articles (1984), pp. 59, 63; O. Pratt, 18 July 1880, pp. 288-289; O. F. Whitney, Thoughts, 12, pp. 284-285. See Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

372 Moses 6:9; Alma 12:22; D&C 29:36, 40; Article of Faith 2.

373 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, pp. 88-89.

374 Moses 5:10-11; cf. Commentary 3:22-b, p. 182 and 5:11-a, p. 364.

375 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 19:1d, p. 57E.

376 J. A. Tvedtnes, Follett.

377 W. L. Lipscomb, Creation, 20, 23, 26, pp. 121-122, 263. See also M. Roper, Adam; M. E. Stone, Armenian Apocrypha 1996, 6-9, pp. 27-33.

378 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, pp. 65-66.

13 And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they had been naked. And they sewed fig-leaves together and made themselves aprons.

- 13 a eyes of them both were opened. In other Old Testament instances, this phrase connotes a sudden vision of hidden things.³⁷⁹ By this they know that they are naked.³⁸⁰ Jacob equates a “perfect knowledge” of “nakedness” with “guilt” and “uncleanness” while associating the perfect knowledge of the “righteous” with “enjoyment” and “being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness.”³⁸¹ Partaking of the fruit of the tree allowed Adam and Eve to begin to experience and distinguish good from evil—the “opposition in all things” described in 2 Nephi 2:11. In demonstration of her new capacity for discernment, Eve immediately “sees through Satan’s disguise of clever hypocrisy, identifies him, and exposes him for what he is.”³⁸²

Unlike the richly-described, finely-nuanced account of the temptation dialogue, the tightly-coupled chain of verbs that follow it (“took,” “eat,” “gave,” “eat”) “indicate rapid, single-minded action”—nothing more is said, seen, or felt until this verse, when the eyes of Adam and Eve are opened.³⁸³ Then, at once, the action starts again (“sewed,” “made”)—all the frantic movements proclaiming loudly, by their silent execution, the anguished undertone of shame and fear—“the physical act... as an expression of an inner state of an alarm.”³⁸⁴ The desired effect of this economical yet artful mode of narrative construction is to help the perceptive reader understand that the Lord God, Adam and Eve’s benevolent provider who has been absent from their minds throughout the previous episode, has now reentered their thoughts with painful effect.

- b fig-leaves... aprons. The derivation of the Hebrew term for apron (‘agorah), sometimes translated as “girdle,” confirms that this was an article of clothing intended to “enclose and cover the area of [the] lap or loins.”³⁸⁵ “The fig tree has unusually large and strong leaves. Incidentally, it is indigenous to the Land of Israel, where it was cultivated very early, but it was not known in Babylon; hence this detail reflects a West Semitic, not a Mesopotamian, cultural background.”³⁸⁶ The fruit of the fig tree is known for its abundance of seeds, thus an apron of green fig leaves is an appropriate symbol for Adam and Eve’s ability to procreate, to “be fruitful and multiply”³⁸⁷ after the Fall.

In v. 27, God Himself will be the One to clothe Adam and Eve, whereas in v. 13 we were told that Adam and Eve “made themselves aprons.” Like their tasting of the forbidden fruit,³⁸⁸ the endeavor of Nimrod to build a tower to “reach unto heaven,”³⁸⁹ Sarah’s essay to realize the blessing of posterity through her handmaiden Hagar,³⁹⁰ and Rebekah’s disguising of Jacob to assure that he would receive the birthright blessing,³⁹¹ this action exemplifies the “recurring theme... of the attempt and failure of human effort in obtaining a blessing that only God can give.”³⁹²

It is perfectly in character for Satan to have planted the suggestion of making aprons, since he often appropriates false signs of power and authority for himself in order to deceive.³⁹³ In this 379 E. A. S. Butterworth, Tree, pp. 74-75; cf. Genesis 21:19; Numbers 24:3-4; 2 Kings 6:17-20. See Endnote 1-27, p. 80. See also Butterworth’s discussion of 1 Samuel 14:24-30 in ibid., p. 78 where the honey is compared to the “secret knowledge” of the seer.

380 See Commentary 3:25-a, p. 185, 4:11-a, p. 253, and 4:16-b, p. 262.

381 2 Nephi 9:14; cf. Mormon 9:4-5. See also D. E. Bokovoy et al., Testaments, pp. 61-65; J. R. Holland, Christ, pp. 244-245; and the overview of Moses. 4, pp. 236-240.

382 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, pp. 92-93; cf. Commentary 1:10-b, p. 51, 1:18-b, p. 56; and 5:10-e, p. 363.

383 R. Alter, David, p. 251; cf. G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 75.

384 R. Coles, Secular Mind, p. 12.

385 M. B. Brown, Girded, p. 130.

386 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 26. See Excursus 28: Ritual Aprons in Ancient Times, p. 600.

387 Moses 2:28.

388 Moses 4:12.

389 Genesis 11:1-9.

390 Genesis 16:1-4.

391 Genesis 27:1-40.

392 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 61.

393 2 Corinthians 11:12-15; 2 Nephi 9:9; D&C 128:20, 129:4-7; R. Giorgi, Anges, pp. 85-88, see also p. 234; B. T. Ostler,

13 And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they had been naked. And they sewed fig-leaves together and made themselves aprons.

14 And they heard the voice of the Lord God, as they were walking in the garden, in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife went to hide themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden.

sense, perhaps, there is an affinity with the Zohar's association of Adam and Eve's fig leaves with a knowledge of "sorcery and magic," false forms of "protection" and counterfeits of the true priesthood.³⁹⁴ Moreover, it is consistent with the plan of the Adversary to encourage sinners to flee from the presence of God rather than to reconcile and return to Him.³⁹⁵ In this instance, the contrast between the false clothing made from leaves and the true clothing made from the skins of animals seems paralleled in the story of Cain and Abel, where the former makes an unacceptable offering from the fruits of the ground while the latter follows the God-given pattern of animal sacrifice.³⁹⁶ Citing another scriptural passage, Brown discusses the lambskin aprons of the warring Lamanites in the Book of Mormon, bringing to mind the Lord's warning about "false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing."³⁹⁷

Note that this is Satan's third attempt to mislead Adam and Eve by false appearances. First, he appeared as a serpent, deceptively employing a symbol of Christ.³⁹⁸ Second, he made claims that confused the identities of Tree of Knowledge and the Tree of Life.³⁹⁹ Finally, in the episode of the fig-leaf aprons, he suggested a course of action to Adam and Eve that substituted a self-made emblem of power and authority for the true article.

- 14 a they heard the voice. The last time God had spoken to the couple was when He gave them instructions about the trees. The account of the Lord's dramatic reappearance makes it clear that Adam and Eve had been left to themselves during their temptation, allowing them to make their choice without feeling that God was constantly looking over their shoulder.⁴⁰⁰

There is irony in the fact that the narrative of judgment opens "with a subtle but painful reminder of the single requirement for obtaining God's blessing: 'to hear/obey the voice of the Lord God.'"⁴⁰¹ This scene in Eden foreshadows the coming of the Lord to Sinai⁴⁰² and the frightened response of the people: "Let not God speak with us, lest we die."⁴⁰³ As we hear the verdict pronounced, we recognize that the actors "are not depicted [merely] as individuals involved in a personal crisis; rather they are representatives. We are left with the impression that this is not their story so much as it is our story, the story of mankind."⁴⁰⁴

- b as they were walking. In contrast to the Genesis account of this incident, the book of Moses makes it clear that it was Adam and Eve that were walking, not the Lord.⁴⁰⁵ The change in OT1 from "as he was" to "as they were" appears to be in the hand of Joseph Smith.⁴⁰⁶
- c in the cool of the day. The phrase can be translated as "in the wind, breeze, spirit, or direction" of the day—in other words, the voice is coming from the west, the place where the sun sinks.⁴⁰⁷ Since the voice is coming from the west, some commentators infer that Adam and Eve were then located on the east side—the end of the Garden furthest removed Clothed, p. 6; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 1 April 1842, pp. 204-205.

394 D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:36b, p. 229; 1:53b, pp. 296-297, p. 229 nn. 990-991; and p. 297 n. 1433.

395 Cf. 2 Nephi 32:8.

396 Commentary 5:19-b, p. 371.

397 M. B. Brown, Girded, p. 145. See Matthew 7:15; 3 Nephi 14:15; cf. Zechariah 13:4.

398 Commentary 4:5-b, p. 246.

399 Commentary 4:9-a, p. 252.

400 See Endnote 4-77, p. 320.

401 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 52.

402 Exodus 20:18-21; Deuteronomy 5:25, 18:16.

403 Exodus 20:18-19.

404 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 52, 54-55.

405 Cf. Abravanel, cited in U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 152.

406 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 91; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, pp. 80-81.

407 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, pp. 122-123.

14 And they heard the voice of the Lord God, as they were walking in the garden, in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife went to hide themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden.

from the presence of the Lord—and possibly related to what Islamic commentary calls “the courtyard.”⁴⁰⁸ In other words, they seem to have one foot outside the Garden already.⁴⁰⁹ Thus, God’s question to Adam in the Genesis account—“Where art thou?”—might be taken as deeply ironic. In the view of Didymus, it is really not a question but rather “a statement of judgment as to what Adam has lost.”⁴¹⁰

The idea of Adam and Eve being in the “courtyard” of Eden is an appropriate fit to the function of the outermost of the three divisions of the Israelite temple, a place of confession as the first step of reconciliation.⁴¹¹

- d hide themselves from the presence of the Lord God. Hearing the Lord’s voice, Adam and Eve quickly return from the place of their wandering at the edge of the Garden. Their flimsy covering of fig leaves, coupled with their choice of hiding place “by the tree of which [they] had eaten,” trumpets the nature of their transgression.⁴¹²
- e amongst the trees of the garden. The Hebrew for tree, etz, can be read as singular or plural. Though translators typically avoid a difficult interpretive problem by understanding the word in this context to have a collective sense, Chouraqui intensifies the irony of the situation by his careful rendering of the key phrase describing Adam and Eve’s place of concealment: “in the center of [i.e., within] the tree of the garden.”⁴¹³ A similar Islamic tradition relates that: “Adam went inside of the tree to hide,”⁴¹⁴ recalling al-Tha’labi’s version of the story of the martyrdom of Isaiah: “When their prophet Isaiah finished his speech, they came after him to kill him and he fled from them. A tree met him and split itself open for him and he entered it. The Devil came upon him and seized a fringe of his garment and showed it to them, so they took saws in its middle and sawed it until they cut it and cut him while he was in the midst.”⁴¹⁵ Isaiah’s death in the split tree was immediately followed by his rebirth and ascension to heaven.⁴¹⁶

Regarding the appearance of this motif in the New World, Norman notes the “‘broken tree trunk’ symbol” connected with the explanation of the origin of some tribes, including the Mixtecas. This idea can be seen in a “Tamoanchan pictograph or hieroglyph depicting a man emerging from a split tree trunk in symbolic birth.” The “tree of the Mixtec codices is a Tree of Life or World Tree extending above and below this earth, but principally a ‘tree of the heavens’ in Omeyocan guarded by the creator couple where it gives birth to humanity. It can be stated simply that in ancient Mexico the broken tree represents a birth, death, or migratory transition for man.”⁴¹⁷

408 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:209; cf. Commentary 3:8-b, p. 160. See Endnote 3-41, p. 206.

409 See Commentary 4:15-b, p. 261 and 4:31-b, p. 280.

410 Cited in G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 215-216.

411 J. L. Carroll, Reconciliation, pp. 96-99. See Commentary 4:15-b, p. 261.

412 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 44:5a, p. 58E. See U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 154-155; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:36, p. 40 and 1:38, p. 42.

413 = “au milieu de l’arbre du jardin” (A. Chouraqui, Bible, Genesis 3:8, p. 22); “within the tree in the middle of the garden” (J. N. Sparks et al., Orthodox Study Bible, Genesis 3:8, p. 8). Cf. R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 123.

414 Wahab b. Munabbih in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 25.

415 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 557 and p. 557 n. 15; cf. M. A. Knibb, Isaiah, 5:1-14, pp. 163-164 and pp. 146-147.

416 M. A. Knibb, Isaiah, 6:1-11:43, pp. 164-176. See also the story of Nebuchadnezzar (Daniel 4:10-28). For literary parallels to the motif of a soul being shut up in a tree, see, e.g., Ariel in The Tempest (W. Shakespeare, Tempest, 1:2:275-293, p. 1615), Fradubio in The Faerie Queene (E. Spenser, Faerie Queene, 1:2:42, see n. to Stanza 42, 8-9, p. 52), Polydorus in the Aeneid (Virgil, Aeneid, 3, pp. 70-71), and Pier delle Vigne in the forest of suicides in the Divine Comedy (D. Alighieri, Commedia, 13). Similar themes appear in stories about Osiris, Adonis, Attis, and Dionysus—see convenient summaries in e.g., J. G. Frazer, Golden Bough, though Frazer’s inferences are not always to be trusted. See also D. E. Wirth, Parallels, p. 105.

417 V. G. Norman, Izapa Part 2, p. 202; also cited in B. Gardner, Second Witness, 1:168. See also Excursus 55:

14 And they heard the voice of the Lord God, as they were walking in the garden, in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife went to hide themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden.

15 And I, the Lord God, called unto Adam, and said unto him: Where goest thou?

The image of the guilty parties, Adam and Eve, being figuratively shut up in a tree recalls Egyptian motifs, as in the legend of Osiris, who was “shut up in the cedar tree”⁴¹⁸ and had to be liberated from it in order to be resurrected.⁴¹⁹ Nibley mentions “Book of the Dead vignettes showing the Lady incorporated—all but her upper part, and in many cases all but her arms only—in the fruit-bearing tree [suggesting] that the woman in the tree must actually have been eaten by it; she is the first victim, so to speak, and now invites her male companion to share her condition.”⁴²⁰ Thus, in ancient year-rites in Egypt, the splitting of the tree “both terminates life and liberates it” allowing the captive initiate to be reborn.⁴²¹ The splitting of the tree also is said to represent, “among other things, the ‘splitting of ‘good’ and ‘evil,’” or the law of opposites set forth in the Shabaka creation text.”⁴²² Perhaps the symbolism of death and rebirth is behind an enigmatic assertion in the Sepher Rezial. After stating that “Adam and his wife are concealed in the middle of the tree in the garden,” the text adds: “It is not a cemetery.”⁴²³

Comments Kastler: “[N]ow they are not merely touching the tree but they have for all intents and purposes merged with it... The tree has become their refuge—or perhaps their prison... Despite it all, the Lord God will not abandon them.”⁴²⁴

- 15 a I, the Lord God, called unto Adam. Though Adam makes the Tree of Knowledge his hiding place, Jewish pseudepigraphal sources tell how, when the moment of judgment arrived, God’s “chariot throne [descends and] rests at the Tree of Life and all the flowers come into bloom.”⁴²⁵ An Islamic source likewise reports that God’s voice of judgment came “from the tree,” meaning the Tree of Life.⁴²⁶ Cassuto points out examples from elsewhere in the Bible where the verb “call” “is used in the sense of to summon a person to give an account of his actions.”⁴²⁷
- b Where goest thou? The change from the KJV “Where art thou?” to the JST “Where goest thou?” emphasizes the fact that the Lord is not assessing Adam’s location but rather requesting him to reflect openly on his intentions—in view of the fact that his feet are now pointed toward the exit of the Garden.⁴²⁸ Rasmussen observes: “From man God does not need information. Man’s response must be man’s own self.”⁴²⁹ Cassuto further explains: “The commentators who consider the question to be aimed at discovering where the man was hiding have overlooked the words ‘[and said unto] him’... The query... resembles the question the Lord God asks Cain,⁴³⁰ ‘Where is Abel your brother?’ when Abel’s body is lying on the ground beneath the open sky, and no attempt is made to conceal it... We may compare the case

Mesoamerican Stories of Creation and the Original Transgression, p. 697.

418 Others usually identify the tree with the willow (e.g., R. H. Wilkinson, Art, p. 117).

419 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 290; cf. Figure 4-13, p. 231, Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall”, p. 632, and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663. See Endnote 4-50, p. 312.

420 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 309. For the standard symbolism of the Lady, see R. H. Wilkinson, Art, p. 117.

421 Ibid., p. 289; cf. pp. 288-293. See Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266, Figure 4-11, p. 230, and Figure 4-13, p. 231.

422 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 290.

423 S. Savedow, Rezial, In the beginning, para. 7, p. 63.

424 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

425 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 89 and G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 44(22):3-4, p. 62E. See also Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

426 G. Weil, Legends, p. 32.

427 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 155 and, e.g., Genesis 12:18, 20:9, 26:9-10; Deuteronomy 25:8.

428 See Commentary 4:14-c, p. 259.

429 D. Rasmussen, Question, p. 7.

430 Moses 5:34.

15 And I, the Lord God, called unto Adam, and said unto him: Where goest thou?

16 And he said: I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I beheld that I was naked, and I hid myself.

17 And I, the Lord God, said unto Adam: Who told thee thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat, if so thou shouldst surely die?

to that of a man who comes to chide his little son who misbehaved himself and then hid himself behind the door in order to avoid looking at his father's angry face; the father who is well aware of the child's hiding-place, calls out to him, 'Where are you?', meaning: Why are you there? Is that where you should be? Come out and face me! The man's answer is in keeping with this interpretation; he does not reply, 'I am in such-and-such a place,' but he explains why he is concealing himself.⁴³¹ Rashi draws additional parallels to the Lord's dialogues with Hagar,⁴³² Balaam,⁴³³ and Hezekiah.⁴³⁴

God's call, of course, is not issued as an angry threat, but rather as an invitation for Adam to return and report on his stewardship of the Garden.⁴³⁵ To accomplish His objective, God seeks to "draw rather than drive him out of hiding."⁴³⁶ Elder David A. Bednar comments: "There was no one-way lecture to a disobedient child, as perhaps many of us might be inclined to deliver. Rather, the Father helped Adam as a learner to act as an agent and appropriately exercise his agency."⁴³⁷ By this act, God "demonstrate[s] his own loving kindness, and... invites them to make admission of their faults."⁴³⁸

16 a I heard thy voice. These words can also be translated "I hearkened to thy voice"—the irony of the reply, of course, is evidenced in the fact that this is precisely what Adam did not do previously.⁴³⁹ Instead, both of them had hearkened to the voice of the serpent in making fig-leaf aprons and going into hiding.

b I was afraid, because I beheld that I was naked. The JST rendering ("because I beheld that I was naked" vs. "because I was naked") poignantly underscores Adam's heightened self-awareness after his eyes had been opened. Note that while Adam speaks of his fear of appearing naked, he says nothing about his transgression. However, it was, of course, a recognition of his fallen state that caused Adam, like Isaiah, to fear in the presence of the Lord.⁴⁴⁰

Of relevance to this incident is Sarna's observation that, in contrast to the practice of priests in some Near East cultures, the Israelite ethos specified that it was improper for a man to appear naked before God; indeed the law described in great detail the particular dress that was suitable for the act of worship.⁴⁴¹

17 a Who told thee thou wast naked? Though Adam and Eve had discovered their own nakedness after their eyes were opened, God knew that it was Satan who had drawn attention to their shame, and who had incited them to make aprons and hide.⁴⁴² Hence Rashi's reading: "From where are you to know what shame there is in standing naked?"⁴⁴³

431 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 155-156.

432 Genesis 16:8.

433 Numbers 22:9.

434 Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 1:34; Isaiah 39. See also Commentary 5:34-a, p. 382; Ether 3:7: "Arise, why hast thou fallen?"

435 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

436 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 193.

437 D. A. Bednar, Seek, p. 63.

438 Chrysostom, Homilies on Genesis, 17:22, cited in A. Louth et al., Genesis 1-11, p. 85.

439 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 26.

440 Isaiah 6:5; contrast Ether 3:6-8.

441 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 26; Exodus 20:26; 28:42-43. See also Commentary 3:25-a, p. 185; 4:27-a, p. 274; and the overview of Moses 4, p. 234.

442 See Commentary 4:13-b, p. 258 and T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 463.

443 Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 1:34; cf. Mizrahi "Who told you of the implication of your nakedness?"

17 And I, the Lord God, said unto Adam: Who told thee thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat, if so thou shouldst surely die?

18 And the man said: The woman thou gavest me, and commandest that she should remain with me, she gave me of the fruit of the tree and I did eat.

19 And I, the Lord God, said unto the woman: What is this thing which thou hast done? And the woman said: The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

- b Hast thou eaten of the tree... ? God poses a third interrogative to Adam. Again, the “question urges confession rather than condemnation.”⁴⁴⁴

According to Anderson, the reason Satan is not interrogated is because he “was not and never will be afforded any chance at repentance,” having committed the unpardonable sin.⁴⁴⁵ “Human beings, on the other hand,” continues Anderson, “are offered the opportunity to mend their ways from the age of majority until the close of their lives. For men and women, God’s mercy has no bounds.”⁴⁴⁶

- 18 a woman thou gavest me. Summarizing Adam’s reply in the book of Genesis, Stordalen writes: “Out of ten Hebrew words, three are designed to censure YHWH God, six to put the blame on the woman, and only one admits that he has in fact done what YHWH God accuses him of.”⁴⁴⁷

Regarding Adam’s reference to Eve, midrash says that Adam “hurled against God the very kindness which God had shown him, the gift of Eve, by implying that God had caused him to sin by giving him that woman.”⁴⁴⁸ The irony of Adam’s reply is even more evident in light of the tradition that God deferred creating the woman until Adam felt compelled to ask for her.⁴⁴⁹ Observes Faulconer: “Though they must... cleave to one another, we do not see Man and Woman cleaving to anyone yet... Instead we see them denying their community with each other, just as, in their defiance, they denied their community with God.”⁴⁵⁰

- b commandest that she should remain with me. This phrase, added to Adam’s reply in the book of Moses, provides a defensible rationale for his transgression: he took the forbidden fruit in order to remain with Eve, thus breaking one commandment in order to keep a prior and more important one.⁴⁵¹

OT1 employs the past tense of the verb, i.e., “commanded.” Beginning with the 1878 edition of the Pearl of Great Price, it was changed to read “commandedst.” In the 1981 edition, another change was made: “commandest.” Jackson observes that the “deletion of the second letter ‘d’ avoids a difficult consonant cluster, yet it changes the tense of the clause from the past to the present.”⁴⁵² Non-English translations of this verse, however, retain the past tense.

- 19 a serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. While Eve, like Adam, points blame elsewhere, Hamilton observes that “her answer lacks some of the less attractive parts of her spouse’s... She does not say ‘the serpent whom you made.’ Nor does she say ‘the man to whom you gave me.’”⁴⁵³ Wordplay in Eve’s statement is evident with the juxtaposition of the Hebrew words for serpent (= nachash) and “beguiled” (= nasha).

444 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 194.

445 Cf. Jubilees: “the Lord cursed the serpent and he was angry with it forever” (O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 3:23, p. 60).

446 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 138. See Commentary 4:15-b, p. 261.

447 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 237.

448 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 125.

449 Commentary 3:20-b, p. 180.

450 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 40.

451 See Commentary 4:12-e, p. 256.

452 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 52.

453 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 194.

19 And I, the Lord God, said unto the woman: What is this thing which thou hast done? And the woman said: The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat.

20 And I, the Lord God, said unto the serpent: Because thou hast done this thou shalt be cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life;

20 a I, the Lord God, said unto the serpent. “Of the three parties to the transgression, the serpent alone is summarily sentenced without prior interrogation—a token of God’s withering disdain for it.... In each [of the three cases], the judgment is of a twofold nature: it affects what is of central concern in the life of each entity, and it regulates a basic relationship.”⁴⁵⁴ As for the serpent, it is henceforth restricted to a humiliating diet and form of locomotion, and will be crushed under the heel of the seed of the woman; the woman will suffer in childbearing and in the challenges of a marriage relationship undertaken in the conditions of a fallen world;⁴⁵⁵ and the man is consigned to hard labor and to strict obedience to the commandments of the Lord.⁴⁵⁶

In the case of the man and the woman, Cassuto notes that what may seem solely as punishments should be regarded instead as “measures taken for the good of the human species in its new situation.”⁴⁵⁷ Exposed in nakedness, God will clothe them;⁴⁵⁸ subject to temporal and spiritual death, God will bless them with posterity and the eventual possibility of eternal life;⁴⁵⁹ and bereft of the food of the Garden, God will provide Adam and Eve with the seeds of life-sustaining grains.⁴⁶⁰

b Because thou hast done this. This phrase, repeated with variation as part of the sentence of Adam in v. 23, indicates that the repercussions mentioned are the natural consequences of transgression, rather than arbitrary penalties imposed by God.⁴⁶¹ No similar phrase appears in the words spoken to Eve.

c thou shalt be cursed above. That is, “thou shalt be cursed more than.” “Hebrew ‘arur mi-kol’ evokes the description in verse [5], ...‘arum mi-kol, ‘more shrewd than,’ in a kind of literary framework expressing the idea of measure for measure.”⁴⁶²

The serpent, whose blessing seems to have been anticipatorily omitted at Creation, is now cursed.⁴⁶³ However, the man and the woman, previously blessed,⁴⁶⁴ receive no curse.

d all cattle, and above every beast of the field. This penalty, placed upon the serpent, symbolizes the curse placed upon those that followed Lucifer in the premortal life: “Throughout eternity [those who followed Lucifer in premortal life] will remain lower than the cattle or the beasts of the field, for even the beasts have bodies of flesh and bone and enjoy the privilege of resurrection, whereas the Devil and his angels remain unembodied spirits forever.”⁴⁶⁵ Even in the millennial day, when all the rest of Creation will enjoy peace and plenty, “dust [still] shall be the serpent’s meat.”⁴⁶⁶ In cultures where the serpent was worshipped, this curse

454 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 24, 27.

455 See Commentary 4:22-c, p. 268.

456 See Commentary 5:5-c, p. 359.

457 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 163.

458 Moses 4:27.

459 Moses 4:22 and Commentary 4:31-e, p. 282.

460 Moses 4:25.

461 E. Kastler, Commentaire.

462 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 27.

463 See Commentary 2:22-a, p. 110.

464 Moses 2:28.

465 J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, p. 271.

466 Isaiah 65:25.

20 And I, the Lord God, said unto the serpent: Because thou hast done this thou shalt be cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life;

21 And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between thy seed and her seed; and he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

also proclaimed the eventual humiliation of all false gods, and the firm requirement of submission to the Lord as the only object of worship.⁴⁶⁷

- e upon thy belly shalt thou go. In the art of the ancient Near East, the serpent is often shown as originally walking erect, sometimes with legs.⁴⁶⁸ For example, a legged serpent appears in illustrated form in the Joseph Smith Papyrus V.⁴⁶⁹ Several Middle Eastern traditions speak of the serpent's magnificent "camel-like" appearance before its cursing.⁴⁷⁰ Nibley elucidates the symbolic meaning of the figurative indignity imposed on the serpent: "The loss of limbs and organs guarantees that the rebel will never rise anew in his full powers, which he will never possess again... He may never more progress, being bound forever in one place."⁴⁷¹

Correspondingly, the Mosaic law will declare that what goes along on its belly is an abomination to Israel.⁴⁷²

- f dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. "The idea of eating dust, in a metaphorical sense of course, occurs several times in Scripture with reference to the plight of conquered foes."⁴⁷³ Here, this constitutes an apt punishment, since the transgression itself had involved eating.⁴⁷⁴ Corresponding words are found in the judgment against the man in v. 23 ("in sorrow shalt thou eat of it [i.e., the ground] all the days of thy life") but not in that of the woman.⁴⁷⁵

- 21 a I will put enmity between thee and the woman. The serpent appeared to Eve in the guise of friendship; now that her eyes have been opened, she will recognize him as an enemy to be regarded with revulsion.⁴⁷⁶ The theme of "opposition in all things"⁴⁷⁷ now has been introduced in a broader sense.

The Qur'an records a passionate exchange of words following Lucifer's expulsion from heaven. Here Satan unleashes a tirade of threats, followed by a summary dismissal by God: "Because... [Thou hast adjudged me to be erring], [the Devil] declared, 'I will waylay Your servants as they walk on Your straight path, then spring upon them from the front and the rear, from their right and from their left....' 'Begone!' [God] said."⁴⁷⁸

Nibley elaborates on the scene: "[Satan,] nettled by this rebuke and the curse, ...flares up in his pride and announces what his program for the economic and political order of the new world is going to be. He will take the resources of the earth, and with precious metals as a medium of exchange he will buy up military and naval might,⁴⁷⁹ or rather those who control it, and so will govern the earth—for he is the prince of this world. He does rule: he is king. Here at the outset is the clearest possible statement of a military-industrial complex

467 Cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 470.

468 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 27.

469 H. L. Andrus, God, p. 371; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 318; J. M. Todd, Fragment, p. 40E.

470 E.g., al-Tabari, Creation, 1:104-110, pp. 275-281; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, p. 214 n. 20; p. 217 nn. 27-29.

471 H. W. Nibley, Abraham 1981, p. 180. See also H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 315-318.

472 Leviticus 11:42.

473 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 160. See e.g., Psalm 72:9; Isaiah 49:23, 65:25; Micah 7:17.

474 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 27.

475 See also Commentary 4:23-d, p. 270.

476 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 27.

477 See 2 Nephi 2:11.

478 N. J. Dawood, Koran, 7:11-18, pp. 109-110; cf. 15:32-44; 17:61-63; 38:74-85. See also M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 11.

479 See S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:57, p. 65.

21 And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between thy seed and her seed; and he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

ruling the earth with violence and ruin. But as we are told, this cannot lead to anything but war, because it has been programmed to do that. It was conceived in the mind of Satan in his determination ‘to destroy the world.’⁴⁸⁰ The whole purpose of the program is to produce blood and horror on this earth.⁴⁸¹

- b thy seed. This phrase no doubt is meant to include both a reference to Cain, who later virtually shared identity with Satan⁴⁸² and became a hated fugitive,⁴⁸³ and also to his unrighteous descendants, who lived out their generations in a state of “enmity” with the posterity of Seth.⁴⁸⁴ More generally, the “seed” of the serpent comprises all the wicked, of whom the Lord said: “Satan shall be their father, and misery shall be their doom.”⁴⁸⁵
- c her seed. It is significant that the statement refers not to the couple, but to Eve alone. Elder James E. Talmage explains this as a reference is to Jesus Christ, who is the “only instance of offspring from woman dissociated from mortal fatherhood.”⁴⁸⁶
- d he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel. The change from the KJV “it” to the book of Moses “he”⁴⁸⁷ emphasizes the Messianic implication of the verse: although the serpent (Satan), in its weakened condition, may afflict and torment man, his power will ultimately be destroyed by the seed of the woman (Christ). The Targum Yerushalmi preserves a unique reading when it has God saying: “For them [i.e., the posterity of Adam and Eve]... there will be a remedy, but for you [i.e., the serpent] there will be no remedy; and they are to make peace in the end, in the days of the King Messiah.”⁴⁸⁸

The first occurrence of “bruise” is better rendered as “crush,” since the Savior’s blow to the serpent will be fatal.⁴⁸⁹ Indeed, the Redeemer “shall crush the head of the serpent (Satan and his kingdom) with the very heel that was bruised (the [heel of Christ, who performed the] atoning sacrifice).”⁴⁹⁰ Historically, Christians have called this prophecy the protoevangelium, the first explicit Biblical allusion to the good news of the Gospel. A related theme also appears in the Egyptian Book of the Dead, where “the cat who split the ished-tree and released the god also beheads the god’s mortal enemy, the Apophis serpent, beneath the same ished-tree,” its paw resting heavily on the head of the serpent in accompanying illustrations.⁴⁹¹

Just as Jesus Christ will put all enemies beneath his feet,⁴⁹² so the Prophet Joseph Smith taught that each person who would be saved must also, with His help, gain the power needed to “triumph over all [their] enemies and put them under [their] feet,”⁴⁹³ possessing the “glory, authority, majesty, power and dominion which Jehovah possesses.”⁴⁹⁴

480 Moses 4:6.

481 H. W. Nibley, Gifts, p. 92.

482 See Commentary 5:24-a, p. 375 and 5:24-b, p. 375.

483 Moses 5:39.

484 See Commentary 5:41-b, p. 388.

485 Moses 7:37; cf. John 8:44; Acts 13:10; 1 John 3:10-12; Alma 30:60.

486 J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, p. 41.

487 “He” first appeared in or2 (S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 601; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 83).

488 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:15, pp. 27-28; cf. the Targum Yerushalmi (J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos).

489 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 161. See also B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, pp. 68-69.

490 Old Testament Student Manual, Religion 301, p. 41.

491 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 311-312. See Commentary 4:14-e, p. 260.

492 1 Corinthians 15:25-26.

493 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 14 May 1843, p. 297. See also 17 May 1843, p. 301; 21 May 1843, p. 305.

494 L. E. Dahl et al., Lectures, 7:9, p. 98. See also 7:16, p. 101. Note that authorship of the Lectures is uncertain.

21 And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between thy seed and her seed; and he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

In Orthodox tradition, the prophecy about the trampling of the serpent's head was fulfilled when Jesus was baptized: "the first Adam, deceived by the serpent, was expelled from Paradise, and by providence the second Adam crushed the head of the dragon in the river Jordan."⁴⁹⁵ During liturgical enactment of the rite of baptism, the following words are recited in an allusion to Psalm 74:13-14: "Thou also didst hallow the Jordan's currents, sending from Heaven the Holy Spirit. And thou didst bruise the head of the serpent that lurketh therein."⁴⁹⁶ Moreover, in the Jordan, "the Divine Word who 'put on the body,' deposits humanity's lost Robe of Glory..., and at each Christian baptism it is received in potential from the Font (often described both as the Jordan and as a womb...); finally, at the Last Judgment, it becomes the clothing of the Righteous in reality."⁴⁹⁷ Of the "drama of baptism," Anderson writes: "When Satan hears of the pending enrollment of the catechumen,⁴⁹⁸ he shows the same hostility he had formerly shown towards the exaltation of Adam and the resurrection of Christ... [Theodore writes that Satan ']tries and endeavors to bring us to the judgment hall as if we had no right to be outside his ownership. He pleads that from ancient times and from the creation of the head of our race we belong to him by right[...]. Having pledged to resist Satan, the candidates were urged to 'stand with outstretched arms in the posture of one who prays, and look downwards and remain in that state in order to move the judge to mercy."⁴⁹⁹ In some contexts, the candidates "stood [barefoot] on animal skins while they prayed, symbolizing the taking off of the garments of skin they had inherited from Adam"⁵⁰⁰ as well as figuratively enacting the putting off the serpent, the representative of death and sin, under one's heel.⁵⁰¹ Thus the serpent, his head crushed by the heel of the penitent relying on the mercies of Christ's atonement, is by a single act renounced, defeated, and banished.⁵⁰²

The Midrash ha Ne'elam records the valuable instruction that "the serpent can slay a man only through the heel when he transgresses and tramples God's commandments under his heel... The Evil Inclination slays man by inducing him to trample the commandments."⁵⁰³ Thus, using the same Hebrew term, Cain's downfall is portrayed as his failure to quickly crush Satan, who craves to wound him.⁵⁰⁴ Similarly, the same imagery is employed in Genesis 25:26, where Jacob's seizing of the ineffectual Esau's heel is a portent that he will ultimately prevail in his ongoing rivalry with his elder brother.⁵⁰⁵

495 V. Nersessian, Treasures, p. 71. See Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42.

496 V. Nersessian, Treasures, p. 71. See Commentary 2:2-c, p. 96.

497 Ephrem the Syrian, Poems, p. 51 n. 3.

498 = candidate for baptism.

499 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 183-184.

500 Ibid., p. 184. See Gospel of Thomas (H. Koester et al., Thomas, 37, p. 130); J. Z. Smith, cited in J. Dart, Decoding, pp. 104-105. Anderson adds: "By stripping themselves of this mortal skin, they were preparing to put on those heavenly garments with which humanity was first clothed."

501 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 131. See Commentary 1:20-a, p. 57; 1:24-a, p. 59; 4:31-a, p. 280; 5:23-c, p. 374,

502 For additional discussion, see V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 197-200. See also Commentary 2:2-c, p. 96 and Excursus 52: Washing, Anointing, and Clothing Among Early Christians, p. 661.

503 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 129; cf. Matthew 7:6; 1 Nephi 19:7; Mosiah 29:21-22; Alma 5:53, 60:33; Helaman 4:21-22, 6:31, 12:2; 3 Nephi 14:6, 28:35; D&C 3:15.

504 See Commentary 5:23-c, p. 374 and 4:22-c, p. 268.

505 "Since Esau was drawn after that serpent, Jacob dealt with him tortuously like a serpent... laying his hand on that heel to subdue it" (D. C. Matt, Zohar 2, Toledot 1:138a, p. 269; cf. H. Sperling et al., Zohar, Mishpatim, Saba (The Old Sage), 3:309-316).

22 Unto the woman, I, the Lord God, said: I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

22 a I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. Before the Fall, Adam and Eve could not bear children.⁵⁰⁶ Now Eve is told that as part of the repeated blessings of motherhood she must also undergo the recurrent pain incident to each childbirth.⁵⁰⁷ Sailhamer reminds us, however, that these birth pangs “are not merely a reminder of the... Fall; they are as well a sign of impending joy: ‘We know that the whole creation has been groaning as in the pains of childbirth right up to the present time. Not only so, but we ourselves, who have the firstfruits of the Spirit, groan inwardly as we wait eagerly for our adoption as sons, the redemption of our bodies. For in this hope we were saved.’”⁵⁰⁸ These blessings of Redemption will come through the “seed of the woman,” namely Jesus Christ.⁵⁰⁹

b In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children. President Spencer W. Kimball wrote: “I wonder if those who translated the Bible might have used the term ‘distress’ instead of ‘sorrow.’ It would mean much the same, except I think there is great gladness in most Latter-day Saint homes when there is to be a child there.”⁵¹⁰ In fact, the Hebrew verb used here and in verse 23 “means pain or hurt rather than grief.”⁵¹¹ According to Sarna: “Intense pain in childbearing is unique to the human species and generally unknown to other female mammals.”⁵¹² Faulconer observes: “Knowledge, the knowledge of good and evil, the knowledge that brings mortality, makes pain possible. Pain naturally accompanies all creation and is at least possible in all relation.”⁵¹³

Of the terms chosen to represent Adam and Eve’s suffering, Cassuto further observes: “Apparently we have here a play upon words with reference to es [= tree]: it was with respect to es that the man and woman sinned, and it was with esebb [= pain] and issabbon [= toil, suffering] that they were punished... The very fact that Scripture does not employ here the usual phrases found in connection with the suffering of childbirth... proves that it was some specific intention... that these words were selected.”⁵¹⁴ The same term for sorrow recurs when Noah is “pained that the Lord had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at the heart.”⁵¹⁵

Unlike the consequences described for the serpent and the man, no “curse” is mentioned in connection with what is said to the woman.

c thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. In interpreting this verse, it is important to realize that the Hebrew term translated here as “desire” does not denote physical attraction, but rather a wish to “overcome or defeat another.”⁵¹⁶ This sense is captured in a Christian phrasing of Adam’s punishment: “your family will be forever contending against you.”⁵¹⁷ Comments Sarna: “It is quite clear from the description of woman...⁵¹⁸ that the ideal situation, which hitherto existed, was the absolute equality of the sexes. The new state of male dominance is regarded as an aspect of the deterioration in the human condition

506 Moses 5:11; 2 Nephi 2:23.

507 See Commentary 4:23-d, p. 270.

508 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 26. See Romans 8:22; cf. Matthew 24:8.

509 See Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266.

510 S. W. Kimball, Blessings, p. 72.

511 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 48.

512 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28.

513 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 44.

514 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 165.

515 Moses 8:25.

516 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 58; cf. B. T. Arnold, Genesis 2009, pp. 70-71. See Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266, 5:23-c, p. 374, and 5:23-e, p. 374.

517 M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 6.

518 Moses 3:18, 23.

22 *Unto the woman, I, the Lord God, said: I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

that resulted from the defiance of divine will.”⁵¹⁹ Hamilton sees here a desire of sin “to break the relationship of equality and turn it into a relationship of servitude and domination... Far from being a reign of co-equals over the remainder of God’s creation, the relationship now becomes a fierce dispute, with each party trying to rule the other. The two who once reigned as one attempt to rule each other.”⁵²⁰ Summarizing the unfortunate new state of affairs described in this verse, McKinlay observed that “the Fall of man and the continual source of degeneration in this world have resulted in the estrangement of parents from God, from each other, and from their children.” On the other hand, “the healing of this broken harmony is the essence of eternal life.”⁵²¹

Martin Luther aptly describes God’s design of marriage as a “school of love.”⁵²² As couples and families learn to live together in intimacy, affection, and oneness, they experience the finest kind of preparation for eternal life that mortality can provide.⁵²³ President Spencer W. Kimball emphasized that in celestial marriage the “man and the wife are equals” and that the designation of “authority” to man “does not mean that he is superior.”⁵²⁴ He explained that the role of the husband is to “preside” rather than to “rule”⁵²⁵ and stressed the need for women to be “contributing and full” partners in marriage.⁵²⁶ As Nibley points out: “There is no patriarchy or matriarchy in the Garden; the two supervise each other. Adam is given no arbitrary power; Eve is to heed him only insofar as he obeys their Father—and who decides that? She must keep check on him as much as he does on her. It is, if you will, a system of checks and balances in which each party is as distinct and independent in its sphere as are the departments of government under the Constitution—and just as dependent on each other.”⁵²⁷ In fact, Thomas observes, a primary objective of mortality seems to have been precisely “to foster the conditions in which the man and the woman may achieve interdependence,” thus affording us an opportunity to rise to “the challenge of not only perfecting ourselves individually but also perfecting ourselves in relationships.... Relationships were given to us to develop us in love.”⁵²⁸

Like the blessing of childbirth, the experience of married love holds out a promise of happiness, yet its practice, in a fallen world, will be frequently mixed with sorrow “till God make men of some other mettle than earth.”⁵²⁹ Unfortunately, “[t]here has been no change in the constitution of man since he fell.”⁵³⁰ “Sad experience” has shown “that it is the nature and disposition of almost all men, as soon as they get a little authority, as they suppose, [to] immediately exercise unrighteous dominion,”⁵³¹ a tendency which modern prophets have repeatedly condemned.⁵³² Of the great blessings that await all generations of women who

- 519 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 131. See also J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, 27, pp. 441-442, 450 n. 5.
- 520 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 202; cf. H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy; G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, pp. 81-82. Contrast the implausible suggestion that “rule over” be translated “rule with” (V. M. Hudson et al., Response, p. 332 n. 62).
- 521 L. A. McKinlay, Patriarchal Order.
- 522 Cited in E. England, Church, p. 4.
- 523 J. R. Holland, Souls.
- 524 S. W. Kimball, Teachings 1982, 26 February 1977, p. 315.
- 525 S. W. Kimball, Blessings, p. 72.
- 526 S. W. Kimball, Teachings 1982, May 1976, p. 315.
- 527 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, p. 93.
- 528 M. C. Thomas, Women, pp. 54, 55, 56.
- 529 W. Shakespeare, Much Ado, 2:1:59, p. 338.
- 530 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, p. 60.
- 531 D&C 121:39.
- 532 E.g., G. B. Hinckley, Teachings 1997, November 1991 and 29 January 1984, pp. 1-2, 322-323, 326; G. B. Hinckley, 6 October 1996, pp. 100-101; G. B. Hinckley, 4 October 1998, pp. 211-212; G. B. Hinckley, 6 April

22 *Unto the woman, I, the Lord God, said: I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

23 *And unto Adam, I, the Lord God, said: Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the fruit of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying—Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed shall be the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life.

have thus suffered, Elder James E. Talmage has written: “When the frailties and imperfections of mortality are left behind, in the glorified state of the blessed hereafter, husband and wife will administer in their respective stations, seeing and understanding alike, and cooperating to the full in the government of their family kingdom. Then shall woman be recompensed in rich measure for all the injustice that womanhood has endured in mortality. Then shall woman reign by Divine right, a queen in the resplendent realm of her glorified state, even as exalted man shall stand, priest and king unto the Most High God.”⁵³³

23 a Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife. The phrase “hearkened unto the voice of” is an idiom meaning “obeyed.”⁵³⁴

b cursed shall be the ground. In contrast to the personal nature of the judgment pronounced on the serpent, Adam himself is not cursed. Instead it is the soil, from which his own body was formed, that will now oppose him, disturbing the original harmony between man and nature. Barker notes: “This notion of moral ecology is a major biblical theme; it is explicitly formulated in Leviticus 18:24-28 and 20:22, and it underlies the great exhortations of Leviticus 26 and Deuteronomy 28.”⁵³⁵

D&C 61:17 implies that the curse has been reversed “in the last days”: “And, as I, the Lord, in the beginning cursed the land, even so in the last days have I blessed it, in its time, for the use of my saints, that they may partake the fatness thereof.”

c for thy sake. In contemporary commonsense interpretation, this phrase is often taken to mean that the cursing of the ground was done for the personal benefit or advantage of Adam. However, a more accurate rendering in modern English of “for thy sake” is simply “because of thee.”⁵³⁶ In other words, the Lord is merely saying that the cursing of the ground is an inevitable consequence of Adam’s transgression.

d in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Sailhamer reminds us that this phrase should be associated with the theme of “eating” throughout the scriptures: e.g., “the Torah’s teaching regarding clean and unclean food⁵³⁷ and the regulations for annual ‘feasts’ to celebrate God’s gift of the ‘good land’ in the covenant.”⁵³⁸ To this could be added the larger context of the role of ‘feasts’ and ‘eating’ in the biblical eschaton.⁵³⁹

The judgments on the serpent and on the man are linked by the theme of eating of the dust or ground all the days of their life.⁵⁴⁰ Similarly, through the repetition of the term “sorrow,”⁵⁴¹ there is a deliberate correspondence implied between a woman’s labor of childbearing and 2002, pp. 127-131; G. B. Hinckley, 3 October 2004, pp. 260-263.

533 J. E. Talmage, Eternity of Sex.

534 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 82. See Commentary 4:16-a, p. 262.

535 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28. See also Commentary 5:37-a, p. 384 and Moses 5:56.

536 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28. The Greek reads “in your labors” (J. W. Wevers, Notes, p. 46).

537 Leviticus 11; Deuteronomy 14.

538 Leviticus 23.

539 I.e., accounts of the end of the world. See J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 57; Revelation 19:9; D&C 27:5-14, 59:13-21.

540 See Commentary 4:20-f, p. 265.

541 Hebrew itsavon.

23 And unto Adam, I, the Lord God, said: Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the fruit of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying—Thou shalt not eat of it, cursed shall be the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life.

24 Thorns also, and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat the herb of the field.

the male equivalent of arduous physical labor.⁵⁴² Thus, as Hamilton notes, both divine consequences “are directed to a point of highest fulfillment in the life of the female and the male.”⁵⁴³ Sarna concludes that the phrase “all the days of your life” is missing from the judgment of the woman “because childbearing does not occur all the days of a woman’s life.”⁵⁴⁴

24 a Thorns also, and thistles. Adam’s first source of sorrow will come from the troublesome weeds that the earth will bring forth in abundance. “Says the Lord: As you have eaten the fruit, thus knowing good and evil, likewise you will have to distinguish good in what you eat (gramineous plants) from evil (thorns).”⁵⁴⁵

b thou shalt eat the herb of the field. A second source of sorrow is the loss of the fruit trees of Eden as the source of man’s food. Rabbinical and early Christian literature and commentary formulated a reading of vv. 24-25 that saw in this phrase the consignment of Adam and Eve to a period of humiliating penance, to a degree in the likeness of Nebuchadnezzar’s abasement to a beastlike state.⁵⁴⁶ The Gospel of Philip says: “There are two trees growing in Paradise. The one bears [animals], the other bears men. Adam [ate] from the tree which bore animals. [He] became an animal.”⁵⁴⁷ Philip uses, as Barker points out, “the usual apocalyptists’ code of mortal = animal and angel = man. The text is broken, but the sense is clear enough.”⁵⁴⁸ Ephrem the Syrian reasoned that since Adam “went astray through [an animal] he became like the [animals]: He ate, together with them as a result of the curse, grass and roots.”⁵⁴⁹ Playing on the double meaning of veirdu in 2:28, Rashi comments that instead of “having dominion” over the beasts he now would “fall down” below with them.⁵⁵⁰ His nature would become that of “animal flesh.”⁵⁵¹

The Targum Yerushalmi says that after hearing the consequences of his transgression, Adam pleaded that he might be spared: “I beseech by the mercy before you, O Lord, let me not be reckoned before you as cattle, that I should eat the grass of the surface of the field. I will arise and labor... and I will eat the food of the earth; and thus let there be a distinction before you between the children of men and the offspring of cattle.”⁵⁵² Tradition records that God answered his prayer, making it clear that this curse was not meant as an arbitrary “punishment” but rather as a temporary ascetic “discipline for spiritual renewal.”⁵⁵³ To a group of spurned penitents in the Book of Mormon, Alma said: “... it is well that ye are cast out, that ye may be humble, and that ye may learn wisdom.”⁵⁵⁴

542 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28.

543 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 203.

544 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28.

545 S. L. Della Torre, Anxiety, p. 7. See Commentary 3:5-a, p. 154.

546 Daniel 4. See H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 289 and Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall,” p. 632.

547 W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 71:21-72:4, p. 152.

548 M. Barker, June 11 2007. See M. Barker, Hidden, pp. 45-47; C. H. T. Fletcher-Lewis, Glory, p. 33.

549 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 13:5, p. 170. See Commentary 2:29-a, p. 117; cf. G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 4:2, p. 5E; G. A. Anderson, Penitence, pp. 13-19; G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 141-147; W. W. Isenberg, Philip, 55:10-11, p. 143; M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, pp. 8, 11.

550 S. L. Della Torre, Anxiety, p. 7.

551 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:55, p. 61.

552 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:18, p. 28.

553 G. A. Anderson, Original Form, p. 229. See also Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

554 Alma 32:12.

25 By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, until thou shalt return unto the ground—for thou shalt surely die—for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return.

- 25 a By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread. Unlike his life before the Fall, Adam was consigned to work hard for his food. The importance of this labor is underscored when the language about tilling of the earth⁵⁵⁵ and eating of bread by the sweat of his brow⁵⁵⁶ is repeated in Moses 5. “The curse lies not in the work itself, which is decreed for man even in Eden,⁵⁵⁷ but in the uncooperative nature of the soil, so that henceforth the wresting of subsistence from it entails unremitting drudgery.”⁵⁵⁸ In this regard, temporal death will contribute “something positive here” to man, since it ultimately provides “the term of his toilsome work.”⁵⁵⁹ Despite such hardships, the subsequent news of the coming Redeemer will enable Adam to exclaim: “... in this life I shall have joy.”⁵⁶⁰

As part of the reading noted in v. 24, this phrase was seen by some early interpreters as God’s promise to provide a less humiliating form of sustenance once Adam’s penance was complete. At its conclusion, “God rescinds [His] initial decree and offers [him] seed-bearing grain from which he can make bread... [thus fulfilling] a prophecy made at the end of the sixth day of creation.”⁵⁶¹ A Coptic Christian tradition specifically mentions wheat (along with instructions for sowing and reaping) as having been divinely provided in answer to Adam’s cries of hunger, and recounts that “his descendants have lived on wheat ever since.”⁵⁶² Similar themes are found in Islamic sources.⁵⁶³ In addition, the Sumerian text Ewe and Wheat recounts how wool and wheat were divinely provided in primeval times: “The people in those distant days, They knew not bread to eat; They knew not cloth to wear; They went about with naked limbs in the Land, And like sheep they ate grass with their mouth... Then Enki spoke to Enlil: ‘Father Enlil, Ewe and Wheat... Let us now send them down from the Holy Hill.’”⁵⁶⁴

Linking the situations of Adam and Nebuchadnezzar to that of each penitent Christian, Ephrem the Syrian wrote that “only when [Nebuchadnezzar] repented did he return to his former abode and kingship. Blessed is He who has thus taught us to repent so that we too may return to Paradise.”⁵⁶⁵ The bread promised to Adam on conditions of repentance and baptism by water can be seen as a type of Christ, the “bread of life.”⁵⁶⁶ Christ’s advent was, of course, preceded by John, dressed in the rough clothes of a penitent, eating what he could find in the wild, and baptizing “unto repentance.”⁵⁶⁷

The change from “In” to “By” reflects the text of OT1 rather than OT2.⁵⁶⁸

555 Moses 5:1, 3.

556 Moses 5:1.

557 Moses 3:15.

558 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 28.

559 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 267.

560 Moses 5:10.

561 G. A. Anderson, Penitence, p. 19. See Moses 2:29.

562 Coptic Apocrypha, cited in E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 18-19 n. 1. See also M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, pp. 68-70; al-Tabari, Creation, 1:127-130, pp. 298-300; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:66-68, pp.78-83; D&C 89:17; and the overview of Moses 5, p. 341.

563 G. Weil, Legends, pp. 31, 45. See also M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, pp. 34, 37; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 63-65; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 31, 45; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, pp. 27-28.

564 R. J. Clifford, Ewe, 20-24, 37-38, 40, pp. 45-46. See also Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163; 3:9-i, p. 168; and 5:2-a, p. 354.

565 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 13:6, p. 171. See Excursus 43: Adam and Eve in Mozart’s “Magic Flute”, p. 634.

566 John 6:35.

567 Matthew 3:11. See T. G. Madsen, Sacrament, p. 85.

568 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 92, 601; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 84.

25 By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, until thou shalt return unto the ground—for thou shalt surely die—for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return.

26 And Adam called his wife's name Eve, because she was the mother of all living; for thus have I, the Lord God, called the first of all women, which are many.

- b until thou shalt return unto the ground. Adam is sharply reminded of his new mortal condition. He and Eve have not yet fully become “as gods,” but instead have become subject to temporal and spiritual death.

Later, the conditions for Redemption and an eventual return to God's presence will be given to Adam and Eve, with an emphasis on the need for obedience and sacrifice as the first steps on the way back to Paradise.⁵⁶⁹ Evidence of God's intent to reverse this curse can also be seen in the blessing brought to “all the families of the earth”⁵⁷⁰ through the Abrahamic covenant, which “was once more to unite the divided families, and change the curse, pronounced on the ground on account of sin, into a blessing for the whole human race.”⁵⁷¹

- c dust thou wast, and unto dust shalt thou return. 2 Enoch gives a unique reading of this verse: “You are earth, and into the earth once again you will go, out of which I took you. And I will not destroy you, but I will send you away to what I took you from. Then I can take you once again at my second coming.”⁵⁷² This reading implies that Adam, his body created out of earthly materials and then placed in Eden, was sent back from Eden to Earth to live after the Fall. At the second coming, he would again be “taken” from the earth to live with God.⁵⁷³

- 26 a Adam called his wife's name Eve. The previous name given to Eve [ishah = woman] was provisional,⁵⁷⁴ Adam's full understanding having been obscured by his deep sleep during the creation of his companion.⁵⁷⁵ The eating of the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge had increased their understanding and had also enabled the possibility of childbirth. Now, in connection with God's making of coats of skins for the couple,⁵⁷⁶ Adam could at last bestow a fitting personal name on Eve, one “that expresses her nature and destiny positively and sympathetically.”⁵⁷⁷ “Her first name pointed to her origin (‘out of man’), whereas her second name pointed to her destiny (‘the mother of all living’).”⁵⁷⁸ Writes Hirsch: “Though through her sin, death first came upon mankind, she became “the dispenser of life... She is not only the physical but the spiritual and intellectual perpetrator of mankind's higher calling.”⁵⁷⁹

- b mother of all living. Adam rejoiced in the promise of motherhood given to Eve.⁵⁸⁰ Though they were now subject to death, human life would continue afterwards through the fulfillment of God's command to multiply and replenish the earth.⁵⁸¹ Since she had not yet given birth, Hamilton takes the form of the statement as being a “prophetic perfect,” emphasizing that the event foretold is as good as done.⁵⁸²

569 Commentary 5:4-b, p. 357.

570 ha'admah, Genesis 12:3.

571 Keil and Delitsch, Commentary on the Old Testament, 1:193, cited in J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 665-668 n. 65; cf. Galatians 3:28-29.

572 F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 32:1, p. 154.

573 Cf. F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, p. 155 n. 32b. Compare this with the rendering from the Samaritan Pentateuch: “To your dust you shall return” (M. Barker, 11 June 2007, emphasis mine). See also Commentary 3:8-d, p. 162, and the overview of Moses 3, pp. 141-144.

574 Commentary 3:23-c, p. 183.

575 Commentary 3:21-a, p. 180.

576 Moses 4:27.

577 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 29; cf. R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 135. See also Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177.

578 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 57.

579 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 136.

580 Moses 4:22.

581 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 206-207.

582 Ibid., p. 205. See also D. W. Parry et al., Isaiah, pp. 601-602.

26 And Adam called his wife's name Eve, because she was the mother of all living; for thus have I, the Lord God, called the first of all women, which are many.

27 Unto Adam, and also unto his wife, did I, the Lord God, make coats of skins, and clothed them.

The name “Eve” corresponds to the Hebrew havvah, whose vocalization suggests the possible meaning of “propagator of life.”⁵⁸³ Faulconer comments: “Eve is the mother of all living. Through her, life has come to the world—to her, to Man, to everything. In that sense, though Eve is created from the flesh of Man, she is also the creator of Man as fully human. To ask who was created from whom would be pointless. Standing ‘across from’ one another, they each create the other, and through their labor together they create the world.”⁵⁸⁴

In early Christian tradition, Eve and Mary are often associated with the imagery of weaving, since it is due to the former that garments of flesh are “woven” for each child, and through the birth of Christ from the latter that the effects of the Fall were undone—thus eventually enabling mankind’s garments of flesh to be replaced with robes of glory. Anderson notes that newly-married women in thirteenth-century Venice were given gifts of distaffs and spindles, their wombs being compared to that of the Mother of God: “The children they were to bear were none other than the ‘image and likeness’ God had intended at the very inception of the world. It would be hard to give a higher valuation of connubial love.”⁵⁸⁵

c first of all women, which are many. Cf. Commentary 1:34-a, p. 66. See also Moses 6:9.

27 a coats of skins. Because of their transgression, Adam and Eve are no longer “naked... and not ashamed,”⁵⁸⁶ thus God will mercifully clothe them with coats of animal skins. As a replacement for their flimsy apron of fig leaves⁵⁸⁷ and in partial compensation for the loss of their “garment of light,” the Lord’s “garments of skin”⁵⁸⁸ are intended to protect Adam and Eve in their exposed and fallen state, to remind them of their covenants, and to serve as a token of the glorious celestial robes that awaited them through their faithfulness.⁵⁸⁹ Thus, Targum Pseudo-Jonathan translates “coats of skin” as “garments of glory.”⁵⁹⁰ Writes Nibley: “...a garment is a sign of protection, of dignity, of modesty; it is not just a sign of those things, it actually does impart them.”⁵⁹¹

Faulconer points out that “clothing is the only cultural artifact whose creation is ascribed to God. All other artifactual creations are attributed to human beings[—specifically to the descendants of Cain].”⁵⁹² God’s creation of clothing for Man and Woman stands out from the text, perhaps to show that they are unable to remove their shame themselves, to show that their exposure can be covered only by the Divine.⁵⁹³

Later echoes of this event in scripture, tradition, and ordinances leave no doubt that the account of the clothing of Adam and Eve, immediately following the mention of the naming of Eve, was meant to be understood in a ritual context. For example, Brown sees Jacob’s 583 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 205-206; J. H. Hertz, Pentateuch, p. 12; N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 29.

584 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 47.

585 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 89. See also Commentary 4:27-a, p. 274; A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, pp. 62-63; P. H. Jolly, Eve and Adam, p. 60-61; and the Protoevangelium of James, where Mary is described as weaving the temple veil at the time of the annunciation (E. Hennecke et al., Protoevangelium, 10-12, pp. 379-380. See M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 142-143).

586 Moses 3:25.

587 Moses 4:13.

588 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 58.

589 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:79, 96; H. W. Nibley, Vestments, p. 124. See also Commentary 3:25-a, p. 185 and the overview of Moses 4, pp. 237-239.

590 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:21, p. 29 and p. 29 n. 43.

591 H. W. Nibley, Vestments, p. 116. “This is no fig-leaf Band-Aid. This is genuine protection” (T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 152).

592 Cf. Moses 5:42-46.

593 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 48, n. 24.

27 Unto Adam, and also unto his wife, did I, the Lord God, make coats of skins, and clothed them.

manner of dress in receiving his birthright blessing as an “investiture with sacrificial goatskins” and mentions Hebrew traditions that “on this occasion Jacob was dressed in the priestly robes of Adam.”⁵⁹⁴ The Hebrew term for coats is the same one used to describe the knee- or ankle-length garment Jacob made for Joseph,⁵⁹⁵ as well as one of the garments worn by priests that was intended “to cover their nakedness.”⁵⁹⁶ Tradition recounts both how the garment of Adam was preserved and passed down through the line of righteous patriarchs, and also how various intrigues were undertaken to steal and copy them.⁵⁹⁷

The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan tells how an angel made the garments with palm thorns: “And the angel said to Adam, ‘Go forth, and bring some palm thorns.’ Then Adam went out, and brought some, as the angel had commanded him. Then the angel began before them to work out the skins, after the manner of one who prepares a shirt. And he took the thorns and stuck them into the skins, before their eyes. Then the angel again stood up and prayed to God that the thorns in those skins should be hidden, so as to be, as it were, sewn with one thread.”⁵⁹⁸ And so it was by God’s order; they became garments for Adam and Eve, and He clothed them withal.”⁵⁹⁹ Moreover, Islamic tradition records that “Eve spun and wove under the angel’s direction, making a veil for herself and a garment for Adam, and both Adam and Eve imparted the information which they had received from Gabriel to their grandchildren and great-grandchildren.”⁶⁰⁰

The Targum Pseudo-Jonathan says that God made the clothing “from the skin which the serpent had cast off.”⁶⁰¹ At least one tradition speaks of the clothing as being made from tree bark.⁶⁰² Islamic texts speak of Adam as being commanded to sacrifice a ram, and Eve spinning and weaving its wool to provide the clothing that they would wear on their journey to build the House of Allāh in Mecca.⁶⁰³ More plausible ancient traditions hold that Adam and Eve’s coats of skin were made of sheepskin,⁶⁰⁴ God Himself having shown Adam and Eve how animal sacrifice was to be performed.⁶⁰⁵ As a reminder of the ritual significance of the clothing, al-Tha’labi cites the idea that “You must wear wool, for then you will be recognized in the Hereafter.”⁶⁰⁶ McConkie notes a symbolism in the selection of a lamb whose death by the shedding of blood was required by the law of sacrifice, and whose skins were presumably used to provide the garments: “The garments constituted a constant reminder of the protection they would enjoy (through the blood of the Lamb, even the Son of God) from all the effects of the Fall.”⁶⁰⁷ Thus, the skin garments embody both “a token of death”⁶⁰⁸ and a promise of life.

V. 27 is missing from OT₁, but was inserted in OT₂.⁶⁰⁹ The OT₂ term “skin” was changed to “skins.”⁶¹⁰

594 M. B. Brown, Girded, p. 145.

595 Genesis 37:3.

596 Exodus 28:42; V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 207.

597 H. W. Nibley, Lehi 1988, pp. 168-170; H. W. Nibley, Vestments, pp. 128-131; H. Schwartz, Tree, pp. 437-438. See L. Wilson, Joseph Wise, pp. 231-232 for an overview of parallels between Joseph and Adam.

598 Cf. the garment worn by the high priest and by Jesus (J. A. Tvedtnes, Clothing, p. 692; D. Wilson, Conflict, p. 40).

599 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 52, p. 57.

600 G. Weil, Legends, p. 46.

601 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:21, p. 29.

602 Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 17, p. 24.

603 M. al-Kisā’i, Tales, p. 68; al-Tabari, Creation, 1:123, p. 294; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 31.

604 M. B. Brown, Girded, pp. 143-144; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:50, p. 55.

605 Cf. J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 58; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 45-46. See Commentary 5:5-b, p. 359.

606 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 63.

607 J. F. McConkie et al., Revelations, p. 223.

608 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:52, p. 57.

609 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 92, 602.

610 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 84.

27 Unto Adam, and also unto his wife, did I, the Lord God, make coats of skins, and clothed them.

28 And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and partake also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever,

- b clothed them. The Genesis mosaics in San Marco, Venice shows God helping Eve put on a garment,⁶¹¹ thus emphasizing that He did not merely provide the coats of skin for them but also actually performed the act of clothing them personally.

- 28 a man is become as one of us to know good and evil. Verses 28-31 provide God's summary about what has just happened and give a rationale for His removal of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden. While the serpent had painted a picture of wrathful punishment by a jealous God, the Lord's actions will instead further bless the couple. Through partaking of the forbidden fruit, Adam and Eve have begun to know good and evil—in that respect becoming “as gods.”⁶¹² Now that the couple has made their free choice of mortality as the way forward, God will enable them to gain further experience by sending them out of the Garden under conditions that He had expressly designed to meet that purpose.⁶¹³ He will provide a Savior for them, and will make the Gospel with its covenants and ordinances available so that, through their faithfulness, they might be sanctified and return to His presence.⁶¹⁴

In contrast to the Bible, which exclusively employs the term “good and evil,”⁶¹⁵ the Book of Mormon and the book of Moses contain nine instances of the similar phrase “good from evil.”⁶¹⁶ Though, admittedly, the difference in connotation between these terms is not entirely consistent across all scriptural references to them,⁶¹⁷ one might still argue for a distinction between the knowledge Adam and Eve initially acquired when they determined to eat the forbidden fruit, and that which they gained later through the experience of repeated choice in a fallen world. Unlike the former knowledge that had come in response to Satan's deception and as the result of moral autonomy exercised in transgression of divine instruction,⁶¹⁸ the essential knowledge attained gradually by Adam and Eve during their later period of mortal probation would depend on their hearkening to the “Spirit of Christ,”⁶¹⁹ mercifully made available to them through the power of Redemption,⁶²⁰ and enabling them to “know good from evil... with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night.”⁶²¹

- b lest he... partake also of the tree of life. Though no explicit prohibition occurs prior to this verse, several lines of evidence converge to suggest that Adam and Eve had never taken of the fruit of the Tree of Life while they lived in Eden. For example, a unique Samaritan exegesis of Moses 3:16 excludes the Tree of Life from the original permission given to Adam and Eve to eat from the trees of the Garden.⁶²² Here, in addition, the use of the term “also” (Hebrew gam) suggests that Adam and Eve had not yet partaken of its fruit at the time these

611 P. H. Jolly, Eve and Adam, p. 56

612 Commentary 4:11-b, p. 253.

613 Moses 4:22-25; D&C 122:7.

614 E.g., Moses 4:27; 5:5-9; 6:64-65. See also Hafen in Moses 4 Gleanings, pp. 294-296.

615 Genesis 2:9, 17; Genesis 3:5, 22; Deuteronomy 1:39; 2 Samuel 19:35; Proverbs 31:12; Isaiah 5:20; Jeremiah 24:3; Amos 5:14; Matthew 12:35; Luke 6:45; Hebrews 5:14. The phrase is also used in the Book of Mormon and the Pearl of Great Price: 2 Nephi 2:18, 15:20; Alma 29:5, 42:3; Moses 3:9, 17; Moses 4:11, 28; Moses 5:11; Abraham 5:9, 13; JS-H 1:33.

616 2 Nephi 2:5, 26; Alma 12:31, 29:5; Helaman 14:31; Moroni 7:15-16, 19; Moses 6:56.

617 E.g., The reference to “good from evil” in Alma 12:31 equates to the use of the term “good and evil” in Genesis 3:22 and Moses 4:28.

618 D&C 1:16; J. D. G. Dunn et al., Commentary, p. 40; L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 44; G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, pp. 63-64. See Commentary 4:11-c, p. 254.

619 Moroni 7:16, 19.

620 2 Nephi 2:26.

621 Moroni 7:15.

622 S. Lowy, Principles, p. 403.

28 And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and partake also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever,

words were spoken. Evidence for the use of gam in the sense of “new and additional activity” is provided in 4:12 (“and also gave to her husband”).⁶²³ Moreover, Barr studied 131 cases of “lest” (Hebrew pen) in the Bible “and found none which means ‘lest someone continue to do what they are already doing.’”⁶²⁴ Finally, the case for such a reading is strengthened conclusively if eating of the fruit of the Tree of Life is taken not merely as the means of ensuring immortality, but as representing the “gift of eternal life”⁶²⁵—bestowed in the appropriate degree to those who partake of the fruits of Christ’s atonement.⁶²⁶ Vos concurs with this reading, concluding that “the tree was associated with the higher, the unchangeable, the eternal life to be secured by obedience throughout the probation.”⁶²⁷ According to this view, Adam and Eve never would have been permitted to partake of the fruit of the Tree of Life at their own discretion. Rather, their only approach to the Tree of Life will be by way of leaving the Garden to pass into mortality, and then returning at last to take of the sweet fruit only when they have completed their probation and are authoritatively invited to do so.⁶²⁸ In this way, their lives, their knowledge, and their exercise of divine power would be wisely limited until they have completed the process of sanctification.⁶²⁹

C. S. Lewis succinctly expressed the reason for this essential prerequisite of sanctification by a question: “How can [God] meet us face to face till we have faces?”⁶³⁰—meaning that before we can expect to really know God we must become “clean mirrors filled with the image of a face that is not ours.”⁶³¹ In other words, we must become new creatures in Christ, having cast off all pretense and competing personae. Only then will God become “wholly beautiful” to us—or we at last will be shown how beautiful He always was—and that same beauty will be in some smaller measure ours.⁶³² In the words of John: “Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.”⁶³³

- c eat and live forever. During their sojourn in the Garden of Eden, Adam and Eve had enjoyed immortality, but their partaking of the forbidden fruit now made them subject to death. As a result of their choice, “the new situation to be avoided is... the eating from the [Tree of Life] after having taken from the Tree of Knowledge.”⁶³⁴ The Targum Pseudo-Jonathan summarizes the situation, asserting that if Adam had kept the commandments: “he would have lived and endured like the Tree of Life forever. But now, since he has not observed what I commanded him, ... let us banish him from the Garden of Eden, before he puts forth his hand and takes (also) of the fruit from the Tree of Life, ...and endure forever.”⁶³⁵

623 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 209. See also T. N. D. Mettinger, Eden, p. 20.

624 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 230-231. However, contrary to Barr, see exceptions in Exodus 1:9; 2 Samuel 12:27.

625 D&C 14:7.

626 D&C 88:28-32; R. J. Matthews, Probationary Nature, p. 56. See Commentary 3:17-c, p. 175. Note, however, that in the vision of Lehi there is not the same sense of ultimacy in the taking of the fruit, since some, “after they had tasted of the fruit... were ashamed... and... fell away” (1 Nephi 8:28). “If the Tree of Life in Lehi’s vision represented the love of God, then the Tree of Life in the Garden represents a fulness of that love” (M. A. Shields, Your Endowment, p. 45).

627 Cited in V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 209 n. 6.

628 D&C 88:68.

629 See C. C. Riddle, New, p. 228; Commentary 1:5-c, p. 46, 4:11-c, p. 254; the overview of Moses 5, pp. 338-350.

630 C. S. Lewis, Faces, p. 294.

631 C. S. Lewis, Literature, p. 416; cf. Alma 5:14-19: “having the image of God engraven upon your countenances.” Note accounts in Second Temple Jewish pseudepigrapha where visionaries are transformed and “encounter their heavenly counterparts and... behold the divine Face like their own reflection in a mirror” (A. A. Orlov, Mirror, p. 151).

632 C. S. Lewis, Faces, pp. 304-308. See also C. S. Lewis, Malcolm, pp. 20-22; P. J. Schakel, Reason, pp. 78-86, and C. S. Lewis to Rose Macaulay, cited in W. Hooper, Lewis Companion, p. 252.

633 1 John 3:2-3; cf. Moroni 7:48; D&C 130:1-3.

634 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 231; cf. H. W. Nibley, Atonement, p. 555.

635 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:22, p. 30.

28 And I, the Lord God, said unto mine Only Begotten: Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and partake also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever,

29 Therefore I, the Lord God, will send him forth from the Garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken;

Death is an essential part of the plan of salvation. In preparation for eternal life, mankind must have their days “prolonged” and undergo a “state of probation.”⁶³⁶ Otherwise “the great plan of salvation would be frustrated” because there would be “no space for repentance”⁶³⁷ or, in other words, “no probationary time”⁶³⁸ before the spirits of Adam and Eve would be forever united with an immortal resurrected body.⁶³⁹ Only they “who are of a celestial spirit” can receive a body quickened with celestial glory,⁶⁴⁰ thus it is essential that each person be given sufficient opportunity to “repent while in the flesh”⁶⁴¹—and also, possibly with more difficulty,⁶⁴² for a limited time in the spirit world⁶⁴³—before the final judgment and resurrection. If Adam and Eve had taken the fruit of the Tree of Life immediately after having eaten from the Tree of Knowledge, they would have been “forever miserable,”⁶⁴⁴ having become “immortal in their fallen state,”⁶⁴⁵ living forever in their sins.⁶⁴⁶

Applying the lesson that was taught by the Levitical laws of rigorous purity for those who served in ancient temples to the situation of Adam and Eve, Anderson observes: “Exile [from the Garden] was not simply punishment; it was a form of protection. For to remain before God in Eden, while defiled by sin, was to court unnecessary danger, perhaps even death.”⁶⁴⁷ To prevent such catastrophe, concludes Anderson, the Lord immediately restricted their access to the Tree of Life.⁶⁴⁸

29 a will send him forth. The phrase in Hebrew reads “put him forth,”⁶⁴⁹ paralleling the language of verse 28. Thus, the sense is that rather than allow man to “put forth” his hand,⁶⁵⁰ man is “put forth” from the Garden.⁶⁵¹

Exegetes have long puzzled over the significance of the double reference to Adam and Eve’s expulsion in vv. 29 and 31. A change from the Genesis and OT1 “sent” to “will send” in OT2 was made in the handwriting of Sidney Rigdon.⁶⁵² This rendering allows this description of the “first” expulsion of Adam and Eve to be seen simply as an anticipatory statement of the Lord’s intention, corresponding to the actual event later described in v. 31. By way of contrast, some traditions see the couple’s exit from the Garden of Eden as having occurred in two stages. For example, the Qur’an explicitly records that Adam and Eve were twice told to go down,⁶⁵³ explaining that they “were removed first from the Garden to its courtyard and

636 2 Nephi 2:21.

637 Alma 42:5. See also Alma 34:33.

638 Alma 42:4.

639 See also Alma 12:21–27; D&C 132:19; W. C. Skousen, First 2,000, pp. 42–44, 66–68.

640 D&C 88:28.

641 2 Nephi 2:21.

642 M. J. Ballard, Three Degrees 1949, p. 241.

643 1 Peter 4:6; Alma 42:10.

644 Alma 12:26.

645 W. C. Skousen, First 2,000, p. 68.

646 Cf. Alma 42:3–5; Helaman 5:10–11. See also Commentary 3:9–h, p. 167 and the overview of Moses 4, pp. 227–234.

647 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 129.

648 See Commentary 3:17–c, p. 175.

649 Hebrew shillah.

650 Moses 4:28.

651 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 25. See Commentary 4:31–a, p. 280.

652 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 602; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 85.

653 M. M. Ali, Qur’an, 2:36, 38, pp. 20–21.

29 Therefore I, the Lord God, will send him forth from the Garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken;

30 For as I, the Lord God, liveth, even so my words cannot return void, for as they go forth out of my mouth they must be fulfilled.

then from the courtyard to the earth.”⁶⁵⁴ A somewhat different view of a two-stage removal would be consistent with Ephrem’s idea of an attempted intrusion into the celestial regions of the Garden, followed by an expulsion from the terrestrial paradise to the telestial earth.⁶⁵⁵

- b to till the ground. The fact that man is now required to till the ground is “to be seen as an ironic reversal of man’s original purpose” to worship and to obey in the spirit of rest originally ordained for the unending paradisiacal Sabbath.⁶⁵⁶ A Hebrew wordplay underscores the change of situation for Adam and Eve: instead of worship (le-obdah) they will till the ground (la-abod); and their failure of obedience (le-somrah) has caused them to be kept (lismor) from the Tree of Life.⁶⁵⁷

Earlier, Moses 3:5 had recorded that the earth and the heavens and the plants had been made, but there was not yet “a man to till the ground.”⁶⁵⁸ However, now that knowledge of good and evil has been given to mankind, that Eve has become capable of bearing children, and that labor has been introduced into the world, the moral creation of Adam and Eve is underway.⁶⁵⁹

A scriptural theme associated with Jesus Christ is that of His role as Lord of the vineyard.⁶⁶⁰ “The fifth Similitude of the *Shepherd of Hermas*⁶⁶¹ figures the mission of Jesus in the world through a symbolism of the vineyard, an enclosed place of delights and of testing, an image of the Garden of Eden. God entrusts his vineyard to a servant (the man Jesus) so that he may guard it and surround it with a fence; the servant surrounds the vineyard with a palisade (of angels). He cultivates it (pulling up weeds until he is weary and sorrowful⁶⁶²) and makes it bring forth fruit... [I]n this similitude there seems to be the suggestion of the identification of Jesus with the new and pious Adam.”⁶⁶³

- 30 a my words... go forth... must be fulfilled. In other words, Adam and Eve were “sent forth” in order to fulfill the words of the Lord that had previously “gone forth.” The unstated implication is that because God’s words will not return “void,” so in the end Adam and Eve will not return without having accomplished all that they had been commanded to do. Thus, writes Anderson: “The work that God has begun in creation he will bring to completion.”⁶⁶⁴ Faulconer further explains: “Common Christian exegesis... notwithstanding, ... this is no unfortunate Fall... If we see that the introduction of death is also a birth (into the human world and the possibility of genuine human and, thus, godly existence among humans), then we see that [Moses 2-4] is an account of Creation, not of Creation and Fall.”⁶⁶⁵

OT1 reads “word” not “words.”⁶⁶⁶ The current text follows a change made to OT2.⁶⁶⁷

654 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 1:209.

655 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 3:5, p. 92; 3:13-15, pp. 95-96.

656 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 45, 47-48. See Commentary 3:15-b, p. 173.

657 Moses 4:31. See J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 59.

658 See Commentary 3:5-a, p. 154.

659 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 46.

660 Jacob 5; Matthew 21:33-44; Mark 12:1-11; Luke 13:6-10.

661 C. Osiek, Shepherd, 5:2 [55], 5:4 [57], pp. 170-172, 175-181.

662 See Genesis 3:17-18.

663 G. Lettieri, Ambiguity, p. 33 n. 22.

664 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 8. Cf. Gleanings, p. 188; Galatians 4:4: “God sent forth his Son.”

665 J. E. Faulconer, Adam and Eve, 51.

666 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 92.

667 Ibid., p. 602.

31 So I drove out the man, and I placed at the east of the Garden of Eden, cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.

- 31 a I drove out the man. The Hebrew word geresh (“drove out”) is harsher than the term shillah (“send him forth”) in verse 29. Significantly, the same two terms are used in the same order by the Lord to describe how Pharaoh would expel Israel from Egypt.⁶⁶⁸

Adam and Eve’s new condition is one of spiritual death.⁶⁶⁹ Sailhamer points out: “The penalty is identical to that established by the Mosaic law: to ‘be put to death’... is to be ‘cut off from his people.’”⁶⁷⁰ Their transgression has cut them off from the immediate “protective presence” of God they had experienced in the Garden,⁶⁷¹ and their “removal from His presence suggests a process of death.”⁶⁷²

- b at the east of the Garden. The entrance to the Garden—and presumably the only means of access—is on the east side, at the end farthest away from the mountain of God’s presence.⁶⁷³

- c cherubim. The term, which is left untranslated, may be related to the Akkadian karibu (intercessor) or karibi (gatekeepers).⁶⁷⁴ In Hebrew, the definite article is used (i.e., the cherubim), presupposing the reader’s familiarity with these beings.⁶⁷⁵ In ancient texts, cherubim appear “as guarding sacred vegetation, as carrying (or being) the throne of YHWH and as carrying YHWH in celestial transport.”⁶⁷⁶ Consistent with the concept of the temple as a representation of the Garden of Eden, cherubim also figured prominently in the layout of the Tabernacle and permanent structures subsequently built for worship. “Two golden cherubim with outstretched wings overshadowed the cover of the Ark in the Tabernacle in the wilderness,⁶⁷⁷ and from the space between them issued the divine Voice that spoke to Moses.⁶⁷⁸ Pictorial representations of the cherubim were also worked into the cloth curtains of the Tabernacle.⁶⁷⁹ The same cherubic motif decorated Solomon’s Temple,⁶⁸⁰ was envisaged by Ezekiel in his restored temple,⁶⁸¹ and was used to decorate medieval cathedrals. Hansen suggests that statues of Joseph and Hyrum Smith that once flanked the east entrance to the Salt Lake Temple also symbolized the role of the cherubim.⁶⁸² In our day, such symbolic protectors are used to guard entrances to banks and government buildings.

In each of the temple contexts mentioned above, the essential function of the cherubim placed at crucial locations was analogous to their role in the Garden; they were to be as sentinels guarding the portals of the temple against unauthorized entry, governing subsequent access to secure compartments, and ultimately assisting in the determination of the fitness of temple worshipers to enter God’s presence.⁶⁸³

- d flaming sword. Translated by Sarna as “the fiery ever-turning sword,” this is a “separate, protective instrument, not said to be in the hands of the cherubim.” Like the cherubim, the Hebrew “carries the definite article and so was also something well known to the Israelite imagination, even though it is not again mentioned in the Bible precisely in this form.”⁶⁸⁴

668 Exodus 6:1. See N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 30.

669 D&C 29:41.

670 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 59. See Exodus 31:14.

671 Cf. Moses 5:39. See Commentary 4:3-d, p. 245.

672 R. W. L. Moberly, Serpent, p. 18.

673 See Commentary 4:14-c, p. 259.

674 D. N. Freedman et al., Eerdmans, p. 233.

675 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 30.

676 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 293. See Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591.

677 Exodus 25:18-22.

678 Numbers 7:8-9.

679 Exodus 26:31; 36:8, 35; 37:7-9.

680 I Kings 6:23-35; 7:36; 8:6-7. See Figure 3-9, p. 146 and Figure 3-11, p. 149.

681 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 375; Ezekiel 41:18-20, 25.

682 G. E. Hansen, Jr. et al., Sacred Walls, p. 79.

683 D&C 132:19; D. W. Parry, Garden, p. 139; H. Schwartz, Tree, 518, p. 404; B. Young, 6 April 1853 - B, p. 31. See also Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177; R. Guénou, Symboles, pp. 105-113; J. A. Tvedtnes, Rituals.

684 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 30. See also H. Schwartz, Tree, 518, p. 404.

31 So I drove out the man, and I placed at the east of the Garden of Eden, cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.

Parry⁶⁸⁵ describes each of the three elements mentioned in more detail:

1. Sword. In this context, the weapon of war anticipates the sword of the Lord that delivers judgment. It blesses the righteous and slays the wicked: “I kill and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand.”⁶⁸⁶
2. Flame of fire. The flames enable the sword to scorch and devour, as it slashes and penetrates. The combined imagery of fire and the sword recalls Isaiah 66:15-16: “For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh”;
3. Turned every way. The scene is one of continual whirling, perhaps in a zig-zag way to protect the path.

Indirect references to the cherubim and flaming sword can be found in Ezekiel⁶⁸⁷ and in Isaiah’s vision of the seraphim protecting the throne of God.⁶⁸⁸ Moreover, the angel that turned Balaam’s ass aside was said to have had a sword in his hand.⁶⁸⁹ Cassuto also notes a more subtle association between flames and angels in Psalm 104:4.⁶⁹⁰

Swords symbolize discernment and that which separates.”⁶⁹¹ While the function of the cherubim is to selectively admit those authorized to enter, Nibley argues that the fire and steel combined in the sword are specifically meant to repulse the serpent, forever preventing its return to the Garden.⁶⁹² “This symbolism has been retained in some religious traditions through rites enacting the banishment of Satan prior to the baptism of a new Christian.”⁶⁹³ Just as the flaming sword at the gates of the Garden of Eden represents God’s resolve to prevent the return of the serpent, the renunciation rite signifies the baptismal candidates’ definitive rejection of the Devil prior to their passing through the gateway to eternal life. Celestial law prohibits dual citizenship in the kingdoms of God and Satan.⁶⁹⁴ Thus, as Elder Maxwell taught, the disciple of Christ “has his citizenship in the kingdom, but carries his passport into the... world—not the other way around.”⁶⁹⁵

Barker cites the writings of the Church Fathers that associate the symbolism of the fiery sword with the purifying “baptism by fire” that was seen to constitute the final test of the candidate’s worthiness to enter the kingdom of God: “[At his baptism,] Jesus himself stood in the river of fire, next to the flaming sword which barred the way to the presence of God... The river of fire, then, was the boundary between earth and heaven... which the ‘seed’ must pass if it is to reach the Pleroma.⁶⁹⁶ The veil of the temple shielded ‘things’ from its brightness and Jesus, the high priest, stood behind the veil in the Holy of Holies to assist those who passed through. The hylikon, the material, was burned away ‘in its passage through the fire.’⁶⁹⁷

685 D. W. Parry, Cherubim.

686 Deuteronomy 32:29-41.

687 Ezekiel 1:4-28.

688 Isaiah 6:1-8.

689 Numbers 22:23.

690 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 176.

691 A. L. Gaskill, Lost, p. 299.

692 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 319-320.

693 Cf. Moses’ experience in Moses 1:16-22. See also Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; 4:21-d, p. 266.

694 See Matthew 6:24; H. W. Nibley, Gifts, p. 104.

695 N. A. Maxwell, Some Thoughts, p. 589.

696 = the dwelling place of God. J. P. Migne, Patrologiae Graeca, Excerpts 38, 9:677 and ibid., Excerpts 52, 9:683; cf. the “awful gulf, which separated the wicked from the tree of life” in Nephi’s vision (1 Nephi 15:28; cf. 1 Nephi 12:18).

697 M. Barker, Risen, pp. 42-43. See also Gregory Nazianzen, Oration 39, 16, p. 358; Origen, Luke, Homily 24 Luke 3:15-16, p. 103, 1 Corinthians 3:13, and Excursus 11: The Sacred Circle, p. 547.

31 So I drove out the man, and I placed at the east of the Garden of Eden, cherubim and a flaming sword, which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.

32 (And these are the words which I spake unto my servant Moses, and they are true even as I will; and I have spoken them unto you. See thou show them unto no man, until I command you, except to them that believe. Amen.)

- e to keep the way of the tree of life. The mention of a via sacra leading from the place of Adam's exile back to the Garden ends the story on a note of hope. The cherubim will open the way for man once he is prepared to enter the Celestial Paradise and eat of the Tree of Life.⁶⁹⁸ Hirsch comments that the scriptural phrase "can mean to protect and preserve the way so that it shall not be lost for mankind, so that he will be able to find it again and ultimately go back on it... He finds support for this in the fact that this task was entrusted to Cherubim, using the same word used to describe the golden protectors of the Holy Ark in the Tabernacle and Temple."⁶⁹⁹ A rabbinic tradition has it that the last divine word that rang in the ears of Adam and Eve as they left the Garden of Eden was tashub, meaning "You shall return!"⁷⁰⁰

Note that the Hebrew term for "to keep" (shamar = keep, watch, guard, preserve) is identical to the earlier term describing one of the two duties given to Adam when he was originally placed in the Garden.⁷⁰¹ Adam's former function "to keep the Garden"—which, of course, equates to the task of keeping "the way to the tree of life"—will henceforth be assumed by the cherubim.⁷⁰² However, since no one is now appointed to fulfill the duty to "dress" the Garden (abad = work, serve within it as the archetypical Levite), it must remain unoccupied and unworked until man, prepared with "intelligence and knowledge" gained through "diligence and obedience," is ready to enter its sacred precincts.⁷⁰³

At last, when man is fully prepared, he will be able to truly "stand in holy places and be not moved."⁷⁰⁴ Zornberg explains that to "hold [one's] ground in the presence of God" is the meaning of being itself—"kiyyum: to rise up (la-koom), to be tall (koma zokufa) in the presence of God. To be banished from the Garden is to lose a particular standing ground." Adam's redemption will vanquish spiritual death, allowing him to stand again in God's presence. By way of contrast, consider Cain's protest: "Since I am to be a restless wanderer, I cannot stand in one place—that is what banishment from the soil means—I have no place of rest. 'And I must avoid Your presence'—for I cannot stand before You to pray." Likewise, when Israel heard the voices at Sinai "they moved backwards and stood at a distance: they were repelled to the rear a distance of twelve miles—that is the whole length of the camp. Then the angels came and helped them forward again." If this happened at each of the Ten Commandments, the people are imagined as traveling 240 miles in order to stand in place!"

Of the Tree of Life that awaits the returning exiles, 1 Enoch says that "its fruit will be as food for the chosen [elect]," its "fragrances will be in their bones" ("it is possible that the author is thinking of resurrection to the body," comments Nickelsburg), and "they will live a long life upon the earth."⁷⁰⁵ As a fitting sequel to this narrative sequence, Moses 5-7 will describe the unfolding revelation of the "plan of redemption" to Adam and Eve and their posterity that will make possible their return to Paradise and to the presence of God.⁷⁰⁶

32 a See thou show them unto no man. See Commentary 1:42-a, p. 69.

698 Revelation 2:7, 22:14; G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 44:4, p. 71E; M. D. Johnson, Life, 28:4, p. 285; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 38:2, p. 41; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 320; M. E. Stone, Fall of Satan, pp. 49-53; G. Weil, Legends, p. 36; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 29; cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 416-417.

699 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, pp. 140-141. See Commentary 5:4-b, p. 357.

700 A. LaCocque, Trial, 31.

701 Commentary 3:15-b, p. 173.

702 Cf. U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 174. See also D. I. Block, Ezekiel 25-48, p. 113.

703 D&C 130:18-19; see Excursus 27: Diligence, Obedience, and Friendship, p. 597.

704 D&C 87:8; cf. D&C 45:32. See A. G. Zornberg, Genesis, pp. 8, 16, 20-22, 27-28, 32-33. For more on this topic, see J. M. Bradshaw, Standing.

705 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 24:4-6, p. 312, 315.

706 Alma 12:23-34.

Gleanings

Table of Contents

Terryl L. Givens: The Fall Is Situated in the Context of Human Agency	283
Richard L. Bushman: A Profoundly Voluntaristic Universe	284
C. S. Lewis: The Effects of the Fall in Daily Life	284
Elder Boyd K. Packer: Moral Agency	286
C. Terry Warner: Agency and Accountability	286
Henry Eyring: God's Respect for Agency	286
Marden J. Clark: Heaven and Hell	287
Hugh W. Nibley: Satan Bribes Us to Sin	288
Louis Ginzberg: Satan's Method of Compromises	288
President Joseph Smith, Jr.: Nature of Adam and Eve's Transgression	288
Elder Dallin H. Oaks: The Difference Between Transgression and Sin	288
Allamah at-Tabataba'i: The Prohibition Was of an Advisory Nature	289
The Zohar: Adam Committed Only One Sin	289
Elder Brigham Young: The Fall Was Necessary	289
Richard D. Draper et al.: Adam and Eve Had to Make the Choice	290
Truman G. Madsen: God's Trust in Women	290
Truman G. Madsen: The Nature of the Fall	290
Gary A. Anderson: Felix Culpa	291
John Milton: Over Wrath, Grace Shall Abound	291
W. Cleon Skousen: Why a Time of Probation Is Needed	291
The Khoja Shia Ithna-Asheri Muslim Community: Why Are We Tested?	292
Hugh W. Nibley: Adam and Eve Received Similar Consequences	292
Hugh W. Nibley: No Patriarchy or Matriarchy in the Garden	293
Abu Ishaq al-Tha'labi: God's Gifts to Satan	293
President Ezra Taft Benson: An Understanding of the Fall Is Necessary	294
Elder Bruce C. Hafen: The Two Trees and the Purpose of Mortality	294
Hugh W. Nibley: The False Finery of Academic Caps and Gowns	296
Hugh W. Nibley: The Hymn of the Pearl	296

Terryl L. Givens: *The Fall Is Situated in the Context of Human Agency*⁷⁰⁷

If mortality is not man's original condition, a view of human nature based on scriptural descriptions of an embodied state is at one remove from the truth of the matter. The Book of Mormon is emphatic in its insistence that the detritus of the fall—sin and death especially—is a dark middle passage, not a point of origin, in humanity's spiritual odyssey. That is why, as regards Adam's transgression, the Book of Mormon weighs in with an unqualified endorsement of the "fortunate Fall" . . .⁷⁰⁸

In fact, the expulsion from the Garden was not wrathful punishment of a primal wickedness but merciful forestalling of premature immortality, in accordance with a plan that anticipated a temporary spiritual isolation from God . . .⁷⁰⁹

⁷⁰⁷ T. L. Givens, Hand, pp. 203-205.

⁷⁰⁸ 2 Nephi 2:22-25.

⁷⁰⁹ Alma 12:24-26. See Endnote 4-78, p. 320.

The Fall of man was fortunate, the Book of Mormon explains, not because in some Miltonic sense it called forth a triumphal act of supernal grace,⁷¹⁰ but because its actuality in the world is the sign—and price—of the moral freedom that precedes it. Freedom, in turn, is the precondition for human happiness...⁷¹¹

Thus the Book of Mormon view of the human condition emphasizes what was validated by the Fall—moral freedom—not what was temporarily assumed—sinfulness. In characterizing sin itself as an essential precondition for the very possibility of human happiness, the scripture emphasizes freedom rather than depravity...

Against this backdrop, then, the Book of Mormon develops a doctrine of the atonement in such a way as to reclaim the principle of justice from a kind of Platonic abstraction or equivalence with God himself and to situate it in the context of human agency. This may well be one of its greatest theological contributions.

Richard L. Bushman: A Profoundly Voluntaristic Universe⁷¹²

The story of the beginning envisions a profoundly voluntaristic universe. Human beings are not the creatures of God, because He did not create their inner essence. They are radically free intelligences, as eternal as God Himself. Nor did He impose His will on these lesser intelligences through an exercise of power. He offered them laws by which they could advance with the option of accepting or not. The books of Abraham and Moses incorporate this choice into a story. They tell about a time when Lucifer, a brilliant spirit in the heavenly realms, offered “to redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost.”⁷¹³ The drawback of this guaranteed salvation was that Lucifer would destroy human agency... Following God and Christ entailed the huge risk of sin and suffering. By allowing spirits their freedom, God left room for some to fall out of His presence into the realms of darkness and chaos... All the spirits who came to earth chose to take the risk.

C. S. Lewis: The Effects of the Fall in Daily Life⁷¹⁴

According to [the doctrine of the Fall], man is... a creature ill-adapted to the universe not because God made him so but because he has made himself so by the abuse of his free will... [The doctrine] exists to guard against two sub-Christian theories of the origin of evil—Monism, according to which God Himself, being “above good and evil,” produces impartially the effects to which we give these two names, and Dualism, according to which God produces good, while some equal and independent Power produces evil. Against both these views Christianity asserts that God is good; that He made all things good and for the sake of their goodness; that one of the good things He made, namely, the free will of rational creatures, by its very nature included the possibility of evil; and that creatures, availing themselves of this possibility, have become evil....

From the moment a creature becomes aware of God as God and of itself as self, the terrible alternative of choosing God or self for the center is opened to it. This sin is committed daily by young children and ignorant peasants as well as by sophisticated persons, by solitaries no less than by those who live in society: it is the fall in every individual life, and in each 710 J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 12:469-478, p. 253. See p. 291 below.

711 2 Nephi 2:13.

712 R. L. Bushman, Mormonism, p. 73.

713 Moses 4:1.

714 C. S. Lewis, Pain, pp. 61, 66-68, 71, 74-75, 76-77.

day of each individual life, the basic sin behind all particular sins: at this moment you and I are either committing it, or about to commit it, or repenting it. We try, when we wake, to lay the new day at God's feet; before we have finished shaving, it becomes our day and God's share in it is felt as a tribute which we must pay out of "our own" pocket, a deduction from the time which ought, we feel, to be "our own." A man starts a new job with a sense of vocation and, perhaps, for the first week still keeps the discharge of the vocation as his end, taking the pleasures and pains from God's hand, as they come, as "accidents." But in the second week he is beginning to "know the ropes": by the third, he has quarried out of the total job his own plan for himself within that job, and when he can pursue this he feels that he is getting no more than his rights, and, when he cannot, that he is being interfered with. A lover, in obedience to a quite uncalculating impulse, which may be full of good will as well as of desire and need not be forgetful of God, embraces his beloved, and then, quite innocently, experiences a thrill of sexual pleasures; but the second embrace may have that pleasure in view, may be a means to an end, may be the first downward step towards the state of regarding a fellow creature as a thing, as a machine to be used for his pleasure. Thus the bloom of innocence, the element of obedience and the readiness to take what comes is rubbed off every activity. Thoughts undertaken for God's sake—like that on which we are engaged at the moment—are continued as if they were an end in themselves, and then as if our pleasure in thinking were the end, and finally as if our pride or celebrity were the end. Thus all day long, and all the days of our life, we are sliding, slipping, falling away—as if God were, to our present consciousness, a smooth inclined plane on which there is no resting. And indeed we are now of such a nature that we must slip off, and the sin, because it is unavoidable, may be venial. But God cannot have made us so. The gravitation away from God, "the journey homeward to habitual self," must, we think, be a product of the Fall...

As a young man wants a regular allowance from his father which he can count on as his own, within which he makes his own plans (and rightly, for his father is after all a fellow creature) so [fallen mankind] desired to be on their own, to take care for their own future, to plan for pleasure and for security, to have a *meum*⁷¹⁵ from which, no doubt, they would pay some reasonable tribute to God in the way of time, attention, and love, but which nevertheless was theirs not His. They wanted, as we say, to "call their souls their own." But that means to live a lie, for our souls are not, in fact, our own.⁷¹⁶ They wanted some corner in the universe of which they could say to God, "This is our business, not yours." But there is no such corner...

God might have arrested this process by miracle: but this—to speak in somewhat irreverent metaphor—would have been to decline the problem which He had set Himself when He created the world, the problem of expressing His goodness through the total drama of a world containing free agents, in spite of, and by means of, their rebellion against Him... God saw the crucifixion in the act of creating the first nebula. The world is a dance in which good, descending from God, is disturbed by evil arising from the creatures, and the resulting conflict is resolved by God's own assumption of the suffering nature which evil produces...

With this I have said all that can be said on the level at which alone I feel able to treat the subject of the Fall. But I warn my readers... that this level is a shallow one. We have said nothing about Trees of Life and of Knowledge which doubtless conceal some great 715 I.e., a thing of one's very own. See Endnote 4-79, p. 320.

716 See 1 Corinthians 6:19-20.

mystery: and we have said nothing about the Pauline statement that “as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive”...⁷¹⁷ We have recently been told by scientists that we have no right to expect that the real universe should be picturable, and that if we make mental pictures to illustrate quantum physics we are moving further away from reality, not nearer to it. We have clearly even less right to demand that the highest spiritual realities should be picturable, or even explicable in terms of our abstract thought.

Elder Boyd K. Packer: Moral Agency⁷¹⁸

The agency the Lord has given us is not a “free” agency. The term “free” agency is not found in the revelations. It is a moral agency. The Lord has given us freedom of choice:

That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto him, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment.⁷¹⁹

There is no agency without choice; there is no choice without freedom; there is no freedom without risk; nor true freedom without responsibility.

C. Terry Warner: Agency and Accountability⁷²⁰

In LDS doctrine, to be “accountable” means that one must answer to God for one’s conduct. Answering for the deeds done in mortality is not simply an administrative requirement but an aspect of human nature itself: to be a child of God is to possess agency, which is both the power to choose between obedience and rebellion and the accountability for how that power is used.

Henry Eyring: God’s Respect for Agency⁷²¹

Lucifer promised to bring salvation to every soul, whether the person to be saved desired it or not. Dictators have been operating in the same way from time immemorial... God’s non-intervention in human affairs is not a sign of His absence or His disinterest. Rather, it exemplifies one of His greatest gifts—... agency, which enables us to work out our individual salvation. If Lucifer were ruling the world, no one could doubt his presence....

God rules from heaven. He does it with such silken threads that some think He has lost the reins. Some people do not even know that He exists. Others wonder whether He exists. I have often thought that a condition like this could never have come about if a dictator such as Hitler or Stalin were ruling.

God is so gentle, so dedicated to the principle that men should be taught correct principles and then govern themselves, that they should take responsibility for their own mistakes, that His children can actually question whether He exists. I cannot think of anything which more wonderfully typifies His mercy, His kindness, His consideration for us, His concern for us, than that He does it all with bonds that are like strongest steel but are so gentle that you cannot see them.

⁷¹⁷ 1 Corinthians 15:22.

⁷¹⁸ B. K. Packer, Govern Themselves; B. K. Packer, Errand, p. 179; see also pp. 176-183.

⁷¹⁹ D&C 101:78.

⁷²⁰ C. T. Warner, Accountability.

⁷²¹ H. Eyring, Faith, pp. 104, 106.

Marden J. Clark: Heaven and Hell⁷²²

“[X. J. Kennedy’s] poem is brief:

Nothing in Heaven functions as it ought:
 Peter’s bifocals, blindly sat on, crack;
 His gates lurch wide with the cackle of a cock,
 Not with a hush of gold as Milton had thought;
 Gangs of the slaughtered innocents keep huffing
 The nimbus off the Venerable Bede⁷²³
 Like that of an old dandelion gone to seed;
 The beatific choir keeps breaking up, coughing.
 But Hell, sleek Hell hath no freewheeling part:
 None takes his own sweet time, none quickens pace,
 Ask anyone, How come you here, poor heart?—
 And he will slot a quarter through his face,
 You’ll hear an instant click, a tear will start
 Imprinted with an abstract of his case.

It’s a simple enough poem, at least on the surface. Most readers will recognize it as a sonnet... It has a rhyme scheme students of literature “scan” as abba abba cdcddc. The rhyme scheme divides the poem neatly into two parts: the octet (eight lines) and the sestet (six lines). The octet traditionally sets up some kind of problem or question or situation, the sestet somehow answers or responds to or plays against the octet. In this poem the picture of hell in the sestet plays against that of heaven in the octet. We may be struck by the unusual qualities of heaven and hell and the images used to make us see each....

The sonnet is one of the most restrictive of forms... And yet some of the most lovely, most “spontaneous,” most energetic poems in the language are written in sonnet form... The poem gets most of its energy from what the poet does with its form: from the way it works within or strains against or plays with the conventions of its form.

One might begin to test such a statement simply by making a prose paraphrase of the poem: “Neither heaven nor hell is what we think it is; people make mistakes in heaven, but nothing goes wrong in hell.” But where is our energy?... [Something has gone wrong with the meter], even with the first line: “Nóthing/in heáv/en fúnc/tions ás/it ought.” The first [iambic] foot is reversed. And except to emphasize the meter most of us would not stress “as.” Or look at line eight: “The bé/atíf/ic choir/keeps break/ing úp,/coughing.” Almost regular—until it coughs at the end, in an extra inverted foot! The rime doesn’t quite work either: crack, cock; huffing, coughing. Other sounds jar: bifocals against crack, cackle against cock. And cocks don’t “cackle” anyway. Nothing in this octet functions as it ought. And that, of course, is the point.

But Hell, sweet Hell! The meter is perfectly regular—and perfectly mechanical. “And hé/will slot/a quart/er through/his face.” The rhymes are also perfect—and mechanical. And that, again, is the point. In this mechanical hell a soul is a piece of mechanism, a slot machine or coin-operated computer which uses even his tears as something on which to “print an abstract of his case.”

722 M. J. Clark, Liberating, pp. 2-3, 5-7.

723 See Endnote 4-80, p. 321.

The major energy of the poem, though, comes from the way the two parts play against each other. Our first reaction to this heaven may be negative. But we look back from the perfect but mechanical hell, where no man takes his own sweet time nor quickens his pace, to that imperfectly functioning heaven, where even St. Peter, the dispenser of judgments, has to have bifocals and is both forgetful and blind enough to sit on and crack them. And suddenly one's own sweet time becomes very sweet and precious indeed. The imperfections of heaven are humorous enough, but they too become precious because we recognize that they result from the fact of freedom. Even the slaughtered innocent children are free, free to form gangs and to blow the seedy halo off one of the venerable saints. That, I presume, is mostly what the poem is "about": the meaning of freedom in religious terms. It is easy enough to make a prose statement of that meaning: the price of freedom is a certain amount of inefficiency, in heaven or in earth; lack of freedom may be efficient enough but its price is infinitely greater: the soul becomes a mechanism. That is a meaningful statement and it has its own kind of energy. But contrasted with the poem it is insipid.

Hugh W. Nibley: Satan Bribes Us to Sin⁷²⁴

Satan cannot force us to sin, in which case we would be helpless ([i.e.,] innocent—no contest!); but he can bribe us to sin, in which case we are guilty and follow him on our own free will. We make covenants with the understanding that we mean to keep them, and the alternative is to place ourselves in Satan's power.⁷²⁵ We are placed here expressly to be proven herewith whether we will be true and faithful to our understanding with God, while Satan is allowed to try us and to tempt us, to invite and to entice, to see how far he can shake us.

Louis Ginzberg: Satan's Method of Compromises⁷²⁶

The serpent pushed Eve against the tree, and [then] said: "Thou seest that touching the tree has not caused thy death. As little will it hurt thee to eat the fruit of the tree..." To give due weight to these words, the serpent began to shake the tree violently and bring down its fruit. He [then] ate thereof, saying: "As I do not die of eating the fruit, so wilt thou not die"... [Eve then] made a compromise with her conscience. First she ate only the outside skin of the fruit, and then, seeing that death did not fell her, she ate the fruit itself.

President Joseph Smith, Jr.: Nature of Adam and Eve's Transgression⁷²⁷

Adam did not commit sin in eating the fruits, for God had decreed that he should eat and fall. But in compliance with the decree, he should die. Only [that] he should die was the saying of the Lord; therefore the Lord appointed us to fall and also redeemed us. For "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."⁷²⁸

Elder Dallin H. Oaks: The Difference Between Transgression and Sin⁷²⁹

It was Eve who first transgressed the limits of Eden in order to initiate the conditions of mortality. Her act, whatever its nature, was formally a transgression but eternally a glorious 724 H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 75.

725 Moses 4:4; 5:23.

726 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:72-74; cf. D. C. Matt, Zohar I, Be-Reshit 1:36a, p. 227; cf. M. A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Eliézer, 13, p. 90; J. Goldin, Fathers, 1, pp. 8-9.

727 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 9 February 1841, p. 63, spelling, capitalization, and punctuation standardized.

728 Romans 5:20.

729 D. H. Oaks, Plan, p. 73; cf. R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 231.

necessity to open the doorway toward eternal life. Adam showed his wisdom by doing the same....

We celebrate Eve's act and honor her wisdom and courage in the great episode called the Fall.... Elder Joseph Fielding Smith said: "I never speak of the part Eve took in this Fall as a sin, nor do I accuse Adam of a sin.... This was a transgression of the law, but not a sin"...⁷³⁰

This suggested contrast between a sin and a transgression reminds us of the careful wording in the second Article of Faith: "We believe that men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam's transgression."⁷³¹ It also echoes a familiar distinction in the law. Some acts, like murder, are crimes because they are inherently wrong. Other acts, like operating without a license, are crimes only because they are legally prohibited. Under these distinctions, the act that produced the Fall was not a sin—inherently wrong—but a transgression—wrong because it was formally prohibited. These words are not always used to denote something different, but this distinction seems meaningful in the circumstances of the Fall.

Allamah at-Tabataba'i: The Prohibition Was of an Advisory Nature⁷³²

If the prohibition against eating from the tree had the force of an authoritative command, an ordained law, Adam and his wife should have been returned to their place in the Garden as soon as their repentance was accepted. But they were not. It decisively proves that the prohibition was of advisory nature like telling someone not to put his hand in a fire; if he does not listen to the advice, his hand would certainly burn, and the subsequent apology would not unburn it, even if the apology was accepted. Likewise, Adam and his wife disregarded the advice, and as a result of eating from the tree, had to go out of the Garden and live in the earth a life of trial and hardship. Their repentance could not take them back to the Garden as their coming to the earth was the natural and inevitable result of that action. The prohibition, in short, was not a law ordained by the Master—like the announcement that a man who neglects to pray would enter the Fire; or the one who disobeys the rules of the *shari'ah*⁷³³ would be punished. If it were like such a command, the repentance would have rubbed out the effect of disobedience and they would have been sent back to the Garden straightaway.

The Zohar: Adam Committed Only One Sin⁷³⁴

When a man dies, he is presented to Adam whom he accuses of being the cause of all mankind's death. But Adam repudiates this, saying: "True, I committed one sin. But is there even one among you—even the most pious, who has not been guilty of more than one?"⁷³⁵

Elder Brigham Young: The Fall Was Necessary⁷³⁶

God first introduced sin into the world that man might be exalted and bring about the great purpose of God. For this was foreordained from before the foundation of the world, that men might be exalted, and first to descend below all things that he or they might rise above ⁷³⁰ J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 22 April 1939, 1:114-115.

⁷³¹ Emphasis mine.

⁷³² A. at-Tabataba'i, Al-Mizan, 1:193-194.

⁷³³ = Islamic law.

⁷³⁴ R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 171; cf. D. C. Matt, Zohar 1, Be-Reshit 1:57b, 1:327.

⁷³⁵ Cf. John 8:7.

⁷³⁶ B. Young, December 1844, reported in E. England, Laub, p. 28, spelling and punctuation standardized. See also B. Young, 3 June 1855, p. 302.

all things as the Father did before us, and be able to create worlds, and go from one world to another.

In my fullest belief, it was the design of the Lord that Adam should partake of the forbidden fruit, and I believe that Adam knew all about it before he came to this earth. I believe there was no other way leading to thrones and dominions only for him to transgress, or take that position which transgression alone could place man in, to descend below all things, that they might ascend to thrones, principalities, and powers; for they could not ascend to that eminence without first descending, nor upon any other principle.

Richard D. Draper et al.: Adam and Eve Had to Make the Choice⁷³⁷

God, being perfect, could not place Adam and Eve into such an imperfect, fallen world. They had to make that choice for themselves. By means of this qualifying statement, “Thou mayest choose for thyself,” God is making it clear to Adam and Eve that this is a necessary step they must take for themselves, and He explains the consequences of this choice—death.

Truman G. Madsen: God’s Trust in Women⁷³⁸

A woman was the first to taste death and the first to witness resurrected life. That is no coincidence. It is a lasting testimony of God’s trust in women.

Truman G. Madsen: The Nature of the Fall⁷³⁹

In major Jewish and Christian traditions, the Fall has often been treated as catastrophic. Associated traditions, as those of Augustine and Calvin, maintain that an omnipotent God Himself elected the Fall and its entire train of dire consequences. Moreover, with absolute foreknowledge, He decreed that the stain of Adam be transmitted to all of his descendants. This is the dogma of original sin.⁷⁴⁰ It is equally perplexing that He preordained his Son to reverse and heal these corruptions that He Himself had initiated.

In LDS parlance, Adam and Eve made a momentous decision both to leave their celestial home and then to embrace mortality by partaking of the forbidden fruit which led to their expulsion. However they did not fall from “dreaming innocence,” but from their prior condition as preeminent spirit-children of God. In the Garden, one law was broken: “Partake not.”⁷⁴¹ But Adam joined Eve to fulfill another law and commandment: “Multiply and replenish the earth.” Whatever culpability Scripture assigns to Adam and Eve, it is not transmitted. An LDS Article of Faith based on Doctrine and Covenants 93 and Moses 6:59 states, “Men will be punished for their own sins and not for Adam’s transgression.”⁷⁴²

The locus classicus in LDS scripture for the overarching outcome of the Fall seems on the face of it a cruel juxtaposition. “Adam fell that men might be [in mortal life]. And men are that they might have joy.”⁷⁴³ The context of this statement expounds the indispensability of human experience, including the mortal experience as the backdrop of joy...

⁷³⁷ R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 230.

⁷³⁸ T. G. Madsen, House of Love, p. 50.

⁷³⁹ T. G. Madsen, LDS View, pp. 99-100.

⁷⁴⁰ See Endnote 4-81, p. 321.

⁷⁴¹ See Moses 3:16-17.

⁷⁴² Article of Faith 2.

⁷⁴³ 2 Nephi 2:25.

Physical embodiment and mortality can be a step forward in the eternal journey. The Fall was in this and other ways purposive. It was descent essential to a higher ascent. By their opening the way for other spirits to enter embodiment and mortality, Adam and Eve fulfilled both a parental role and a sacrificial role. For this they are to be honored.

This is not to minimize the harsh and even tragic consequences that have come in the wake of the Fall. The Fall brought a partial separation from the presence of God. It brought exposure to our inhumanity towards one another, and to natural disasters in an environment often hostile to human endurance and felicity. And it brought death.

But the Fall did not destroy individual freedom, initiative, or accountability. It did not impose sinfulness—or absolute depravity—upon Adam or upon any or all of his children.

Gary A. Anderson: *Felix Culpa*⁷⁴⁴

The Latin phrase felix culpa “occurs in the famous song of the Easter Vigil, the exultet, a song sung over the paschal candle at the beginning of the liturgy. In recounting the history of salvation that will culminate in the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the song stops midway to exclaim, ‘O necessary sin of Adam, that Christ has blotted out by his death; O happy fault [felix culpa] which has earned for us such a great Redeemer.’”

John Milton: Over Wrath, Grace Shall Abound⁷⁴⁵

O goodness infinite, goodness immense!
That all this good of evil shall produce,
And evil turn to good; more wonderful
Than that by which creation first brought forth
Light out of darkness! Full of doubt I stand,
Whether I should repent me now of sin
By me done and occasioned, or rejoice
Much more, that much more good thereof shall spring,
To God more glory, more good will to Men
From God, and over wrath, grace shall abound.

W. Cleon Skousen: Why a Time of Probation Is Needed⁷⁴⁶

[God] wanted us to come in direct contact with sin and rebellion but under circumstances where we would not become permanently scarred by the experience....

This was not possible “in heaven.” There celestial law prevails which means that perfection is maintained and any sin or rebellion is not tolerated with even the “least degree of allowance.”⁷⁴⁷ Of course, like our brothers and sisters of the preexistence we could have rebelled, but not without suffering the immediate consequences. In heaven there is no opportunity to “learn” about rebellion, for those who indulge in it feel the immediate impact of judgment.

In order to learn what sin and rebellion are like we had to be removed from the celestial kingdom of the Father into an environment where good and evil exist side by side. It had to ⁷⁴⁴ G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 192.

⁷⁴⁵ J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 12:469-478, p. 253, spelling modernized.

⁷⁴⁶ W. C. Skousen, First 2,000, pp. 42-44.

⁷⁴⁷ D&C 1:31.

be a place where we could “taste” and have time to decide which we would choose.⁷⁴⁸ It had to be a place where judgment was temporarily suspended so that in case we became enmeshed in grievous error during our learning process we would still have time to turn back before a judgment was pronounced or a final penalty imposed. In other words, provision had to be made so that there was “a space granted unto man in which he might repent,”⁷⁴⁹ a time in which to turn back and, insofar as possible, regain the lost ground...

As Alma says: “This life is the time to prepare to meet God; yea, behold the day of this life is the day for men to perform their labors!”⁷⁵⁰

The Khoja Shia Ithna-Asheri Muslim Community: Why Are We Tested?⁷⁵¹

Allāh wishes that mankind, by obeying the divine law (shari'ah) and struggling through the various circumstances that he encounters in life, will blossom from potentiality to actuality, and will thereby attain the level of perfection that has been intended for him... The mettle of man is gold ore that is purified in the crucible of Divine tests and guidance...

The second purpose that these tests serve is to awaken man from his sleep of heedlessness. The Qur'an explains that one of the purposes of tragedy and disaster is to test man and thereby jar him from his stupor of heedlessness. In a way, tragedy in man's life serves the same purpose as the ridges that are embossed on some modern motorways and highways that are meant to wake drivers during the monotony of highway driving so they do not fall asleep at the wheel...

[T]he purpose for which man was created is only met if man achieves perfection through his freely chosen actions. Although the disbelievers and sinners who do not reach perfection certainly do not achieve the true goal of their creation (i.e., acting according to Allāh's decree and wishes) they nonetheless do not go against the existential goal of man's creation. This is because Allāh wanted with His existential will that man be able to choose between truth and falsehood.

Hugh W. Nibley: Adam and Eve Received Similar Consequences⁷⁵²

Now a curse was placed on Eve, and it looked as if she would have to pay a high price for taking the initiative in the search for knowledge. To our surprise, the identical curse was placed on Adam also. For Eve, God “will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children.”⁷⁵³ The key is the word for sorrow, atsav, meaning to labor, to toil, to sweat, to do something very hard. To multiply does not mean to add or increase but to repeat over and over again; the word in the Septuagint is plethynomai, as in the multiplying of words in the repetitious prayers of the ancients. Both the conception and the labor of Eve will be multiple; she will have many children. Then the Lord says to Adam, “In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life”⁷⁵⁴ (that is, the bread that his labor must bring forth from the earth). The identical word is used in both cases; the root meaning is to work hard at cutting or digging; both the man and the woman must sorrow and both 749 Alma 12:24; cf. 42:4.

748 D&C 29:39.

750 Alma 34:32.

751 Porch of Wisdom Cultural Institution, Faith and Reason, pp. 77-78, 174.

752 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, pp. 89-90.

753 Moses 4:22.

754 Moses 4:23.

must labor. (The Septuagint word is lype, meaning bodily or mental strain, discomfort, or affliction. It means not to be sorry, but to have a hard time)... The thing to notice is that Adam is not let off lightly as a privileged character; he is as bound to Mother Eve as she is to the law of her husband. And why not? If he was willing to follow her, he was also willing to suffer with her, for this affliction was imposed on Adam expressly “because thou hast hearkened unto... thy wife, and hast eaten of the fruit.”⁷⁵⁵

Hugh W. Nibley: No Patriarchy or Matriarchy in the Garden⁷⁵⁶

There is no patriarchy or matriarchy in the Garden; the two supervise each other. Adam is given no arbitrary power; Eve is to heed him only insofar as he obeys their Father—and who decides that? She must keep a check on him as much as he does on her. It is, if you will, a system of checks and balances in which each party is as distinct and independent in its sphere as are the departments of government under the Constitution—and just as dependent on each other.

Abu Ishaq al-Tha’labi: God’s Gifts to Satan⁷⁵⁷

“Lord,” said Iblis,⁷⁵⁸ ... Where... is my dwelling to be?”

“When you descend to the earth,” said God, “your dwelling place will be places of filth!”

“What shall I read?” asked Iblis.

“Poetry and song!”⁷⁵⁹

“What will call me to prayer?”

“Musical instruments!”⁷⁶⁰

“What will be my food?”

“That over which my name is not pronounced!”

“What will my drink be?”

“Wine!”

“Where will I dwell?”

“Public baths!”

“Where will be my gathering place?”

“Markets!”

“What is my battle-cry to be?”

“My curse!”

“What is my garment to be?”

“My wrath!”

“What is my prey?”

“Women!”

⁷⁵⁵ Moses 4:23.

⁷⁵⁶ H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, p. 93.

⁷⁵⁷ M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 51; cf. A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 70 and the list of blessings given to mankind in M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, pp. 49-50.

⁷⁵⁸ = the Devil.

⁷⁵⁹ “Reflecting Muhammad’s reputed dislike of poetry and poets” (A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 70).

⁷⁶⁰ “The muezzin calls the faithful to prayer, while the reed-pipe in the early days of Islam was considered anathema because most players were women of questionable behavior” (ibid., p. 70).

President Ezra Taft Benson: An Understanding of the Fall Is Necessary⁷⁶¹

The plan of Redemption must start with the account of the Fall of Adam. In the words of Moroni, “By Adam came the fall of man. And because of the fall of man came Jesus Christ,... and because of Jesus Christ came the redemption of man.”⁷⁶² Just as a man does not really desire food until he is hungry, so he does not desire the salvation of Christ until he knows why he needs Christ. No one adequately and properly knows why he needs Christ until he understands and accepts the doctrine of the Fall and its effect upon all mankind.

Elder Bruce C. Hafen: The Two Trees and the Purpose of Mortality⁷⁶³

Life is a school, a place for us to learn and grow. Our Teacher and Headmaster has placed us on the earth in a risk-filled environment called mortality. Here we may learn what we must know and become what we must be, not only to live with him someday, but to be like him.

To learn these profound lessons of life, we must undergo many experiences that subject us to the sorrow and contamination of a lone and dreary world. These experiences may include sin, but they also include undeserved pain, disappointment, and adversity. Every one of us will taste some bitter mixture of these forces. We must taste a measure of the bitter in order to prize the sweet.

But how, then, can we overcome the ill effects and consequences of this necessary contamination? The blessed news of the gospel is that the Atonement of Jesus Christ can purify us from all uncleanness and sweeten all the bitterness we taste. The Atonement not only pays for our sins, it heals our wounds—the self-inflicted ones and those inflicted from sources beyond our control. The Atonement also completes the process of our learning by perfecting our nature and making us whole. In this way, Christ’s atonement makes us as he is. It is the ultimate source of our forgiveness, our perfection, and our peace of mind.

In the beginning, the Lord God taught this vision of life’s nature and purpose to Adam and Eve. To symbolize these teachings, he placed two trees in the Garden of Eden: the Tree of Knowledge and the Tree of Life. The fruit of the first tree seemed desirable, but it became bitter as it led to the knowledge of good and evil. The second tree was sweet, and it led to a fulness of Godlike life. We, like Adam and Eve, taste the bitter fruit of the first tree that we may know to prize the sweet fruit of the second tree.

The Tree of Knowledge (learning through mortal, sometimes bitter, experience) and the Tree of Life (the Father’s sweet bestowal of forgiveness and a divine character) are both necessary for us to find fulfillment and meaning. Neither tree—neither force—is sufficient unless completed by the other.

The mortal learning experience, represented by the Tree of Knowledge, is so necessary that God placed cherubim and a flaming sword to guard the way of the Tree of Life until Adam and Eve completed, and we, their posterity, complete this preparatory schooling. Our tutorial is the gospel, a schoolmaster that brings us to Christ.⁷⁶⁴ But he cannot fully receive us and give us the gift of celestial life—partaking of God’s very nature—until we have learned by our own experience to distinguish good from evil. In multiplied sorrow

⁷⁶¹ E. T. Benson, Book, p. 85.

⁷⁶² Mormon 9:12.

⁷⁶³ B. C. Hafen, Broken, pp. 29-31.

⁷⁶⁴ See Galatians 3:24.

we must bring forth children.⁷⁶⁵ We must walk the earth through sharp thorns and poison thistles.⁷⁶⁶ The ground is cursed for our sakes.⁷⁶⁷ By the sweat of our faces we must eat bread until we return to the ground from whence we were taken.⁷⁶⁸

This treacherous path led Adam and Eve through the valley of death and pain. It weighed them down with the toil of earthly experience, until they knelt before God in the depths of humility. Through faithful obedience and sacrifice, they learned, they repented, and they reached out to God through the veil of mortality with all the energy of their hearts.

Thus the Tree of Knowledge symbolizes the entire process by which Adam and Eve—and we—learn through the dreary loneliness of earthly experience. Partaking of the forbidden fruit was only the beginning of that process.⁷⁶⁹

Over time Adam and Eve endured faithfully, until one day they began to grasp the joy of their Redemption. This was the day when the Savior began to lift them up in reverent humility. By then their hearts were broken and their spirits contrite in two ways: first, their sorrow for their sins, and second, their courageous response to the natural adversity of the lone and dreary world. Then at last the Good Shepherd placed them on his shoulder and carried them homeward to the fruits of his love through the power of his precious Atonement, cleansed and perfected from the ill effects of all mortal bitterness.

Our Savior's sanctifying power is represented by the Tree of Life. Without that power, there is no life, only death and timeless despair. Had they never partaken of this second tree, Adam and Eve would have wandered in their quest for knowledge into a path of endless misery. This result would have fulfilled what Satan intended when he tempted them in the Garden to seek knowledge without obedience, for he seeks "that all might be miserable like unto himself."⁷⁷⁰

Adam and Eve began the lifelong process of seeking after the fruit of the Tree of Life when, once their eyes were opened, they refused to worship Satan and chose, rather, to plant the seed of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.⁷⁷¹ They then nourished their small seedling with much care, so that it would not wither in the scorching heat of opposition.⁷⁷² When finally, after great patience and diligence, they plucked and tasted the fruit of the Tree of Life, it was sweet above all that is sweet and pure above all that is pure;⁷⁷³ for it represents the pure love of God, the most desirable of all things,⁷⁷⁴ made possible through the infinite Atonement of him who died of a broken heart.

He, too, knew of toil, and sweat, and sorrow, for Man of Sorrows was his name.⁷⁷⁵ In the days of his flesh, he prayed with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death.⁷⁷⁶ He was despised and rejected of men.⁷⁷⁷ He was acquainted with grief and ⁷⁶⁵ See Moses 4:22.

⁷⁶⁶ See Moses 4:24.

⁷⁶⁷ See ibid.

⁷⁶⁸ See Moses 4:25.

⁷⁶⁹ See Commentary 4:28-a, p. 276 about knowledge of "good and evil" vs. "good from evil."

⁷⁷⁰ 2 Nephi 2:27.

⁷⁷¹ See Alma 32:28.

⁷⁷² See Alma 32:37.

⁷⁷³ See Alma 32:42.

⁷⁷⁴ See 1 Nephi 11:22.

⁷⁷⁵ See Isaiah 53:3.

⁷⁷⁶ See Hebrews 5:7.

⁷⁷⁷ See Isaiah 53:3.

bruised for our iniquities.⁷⁷⁸ Having himself suffered temptation, he can succor those who are tempted.⁷⁷⁹ For his followers, the sweetest moment of his life was when he drank the bitter cup.⁷⁸⁰

Hugh W. Nibley: The False Finery of Academic Caps and Gowns⁷⁸¹

Twenty-three years ago today, if you will cast your minds back, on the same occasion [of BYU Commencement] I gave the opening prayer in which I said, “we have met here today clothed in the black robes of a false priesthood.” Now many have asked me since then if I really said such a thing, but nobody has ever asked what I meant by it. Why not? Well, some knew the answer already; and as for the rest, we do not question things at “the BYU”! But for my own relief, I welcome this opportunity to explain.

First, why a priesthood? Because these robes originally denoted those who had taken clerical orders; and a college was a “mystery,” with all the rites, secrets, oaths, degrees, tests, feasts, and solemnities that go with initiation into higher knowledge.

But why false? Because it is borrowed finery, coming down to us through a long line of unauthorized imitators. It wasn’t till 1893 that “an intercollegiate commission was formed... to draft a uniform code for caps, gowns, and hoods” in the United States. Before that there were no rules. You could design your own!; and that liberty goes back as far as these fixings can be traced. The late Roman emperors, as we learn from the infallible DuCange, mark each step in the decline of their power and glory by the addition of some new ornament to the resplendent vestments that proclaim their sacred office and dominion. Branching off from them, the kings of the tribes, who inherited the lands and claims of the empire vied with each other in imitating the Roman masters, determined to surpass even them in the theatrical variety and richness of caps and gowns....

And down through the centuries the robes have never failed to keep the public at a respectful distance, inspire a decent awe for the professions, and impart an air of solemnity and mystery that has been as good as money in the bank.

Hugh W. Nibley: The Hymn of the Pearl⁷⁸²

In coming to earth each man leaves his particular treasure, or his share of the Treasure, behind him in heaven, safely kept in trust (“under God’s throne”) awaiting his return.⁷⁸³ One has here below the opportunity of enhancing one’s treasure in heaven by meritorious actions, and also the risk of losing it entirely by neglecting it in his search for earthly treasure.⁷⁸⁴ Hence the passionate appeals to men to remember their tremendous stake on the other side and “not to defraud themselves of the glory that awaits them” by seeking the things of the world.⁷⁸⁵ To make the “treasure” test a fair one, the two treasures are placed before

778 See Isaiah 53:3, 5.

779 See Hebrews 2:18.

780 See D&C 19:18.

781 H. W. Nibley, Leaders, pp. 491-492, 495.

782 H. W. Nibley, Treasures, pp. 177-178. For a more detailed translation and summary, see H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 487-501.

783 E.g., A. F. J. Klijn, 2 Baruch, 54:13, p. 640: “you have prepared under your throne the treasures of wisdom”; M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GR 12:7, p. 381:21: “the living water below the throne”; M. Lichtheim, Memphite, 61, 1:55: “The Great Throne... is the granary of Ta-tenen.”

784 E.g., Matthew 25:14-29.

785 E.g., A. F. J. Klijn, 2 Baruch, 52:7, p. 639: “Prepare your souls for that which is kept for you, and make ready your souls for the reward which is preserved for you”; E. Hennecke et al., Apocalypse of Paul, 20, pp. 771-772:

us on an equal footing (the doctrine of the Two Ways), their two natures being mingled in exactly equal portions in every human being.⁷⁸⁶ To neutralize what would otherwise be the overpowering appeal of the heavenly treasure, the memory of its former glories has been erased from the mind of man, which is thus in a state of equilibrium, enjoying by “the ancient law of liberty” complete freedom to choose whatever it will.⁷⁸⁷ In this state, whatever choice is made represents the true heart and mind of the one who makes it. What conditions the Elect to make the right choice is no unfair advantage of instruction—for all men are aware of the issues involved—but a besetting nostalgia, a constant vague yearning for one’s distant treasure and happy heavenly home. This theme, akin to the Platonic doctrine of anamnesis,⁷⁸⁸ runs through all the apocrypha and scriptures; it is beautifully expressed in the Hymn of the Pearl from the Acts of Thomas.⁷⁸⁹

In this classic tale, a king’s son has come down to earth to find a pearl which he is to return to its heavenly depository; here below he becomes defiled with the things of the world until a letter from heaven, signed by all the Great and Mighty Ones, recalls to him his true heritage and his purpose in coming to earth, whereupon he casts off his earthly garments and with the pearl returns to the waiting arms of his loved ones in the royal courts on high and to his robe of glory that has been carefully kept for him in the Treasury. Our various “treasure” texts consistently refer to going to heaven as a return, a joyful homecoming, in which one follows the steps of Adam “back to the Treasury of Life from which he came forth.”⁷⁹⁰ A great deal is said about a garment that one changes in passing from one stage to another, the final garment of glory being often equated to the Treasure itself.⁷⁹¹ This garment introduces us to the very important ritual aspect of the treasure story, for it is generally understood that one can return to one’s heavenly treasure only by the careful observance of certain rites and ordinances, which provide the means both of receiving instruction and demonstrating obedience. In the Mandaean economy the ordinances are the Treasure, the knowledge of the proper procedures being the very knowledge by which the elements are controlled and the spirit of man exalted.⁷⁹²

“there are many good things which the Lord has prepared and his promise is great... Paul, may you receive the reward.”

786 E.g., F. G. Martinez, DSS Translated, 1QS 4:16-17, p. 7: “For God has sorted them into equal parts until the last day.”

787 E.g., Pseudo-Clement, Recognitions, 3:26, p. 121.

788 = the idea of things having been remembered from a former existence.

789 E. Hennecke et al., Pearl; M. R. James, Soul.

790 E.g., W. Barnstone et al., Songs of Thomas, 1:49, p. 620.

791 E.g., M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GR 1:64-65, 72, p. 13; GR 10:1, p. 243:35-36.

792 E.g., E. S. Drower, Thousand, pp. 212, 241, 245.

Endnotes

- 4-1 Westermann concurs with this basic division of structure, concluding that there are “two main parts, the prohibition and its transgression, and the punishment. Every single sentence takes on meaning according to its position in these parts. It is clear what the whole is about: it is a story of the breaking of a law and punishment.”⁷⁹³
- 4-2 The placement of these verses just prior to the story of the transgression in the Garden, rather than in chronological sequence preceding the Creation, serves to highlight thematic links between Satan’s rebellion and Adam’s Fall. It also sets the stage for the similar parting of the two ways on earth in the next chapter.⁷⁹⁴
- 4-3 Tvedtnes notes that this “covenant between the three members of the Godhead is confirmed in an early Ethiopic Christian document, the Kebra Nagast.”⁷⁹⁵ “For the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit with good fellowship and right good will and cordial agreement together made the Heavenly Zion to be the place of habitation of their Glory. And then the Father and the Son, and the Holy Spirit said, ‘Let Us make man in Our similitude and likeness,’ and with ready agreement and good will They were all of this opinion. And the Son said, ‘I will put on the body of Adam,’ and the Holy Spirit said, ‘I will dwell in the heart[s] of the Prophets and the Righteous’; and this common agreement and covenant was [fulfilled] in Zion, the City of their Glory.”⁷⁹⁶
- 4-4 Hugh Nibley pioneered early explorations of themes relating to creation rituals and associated covenants from the time of his dissertation⁷⁹⁷ and early writings on hierocentric civilizations⁷⁹⁸ to his increasing focus on temple topics from the 1970s onward.⁷⁹⁹ Ricks provides a brief summary of this vast literature.⁸⁰⁰ In 1992, Murray devoted a monograph to the subject of the “cosmic covenant,” arguing that it is an important “theme in its own right... [with] roots in near eastern religious culture distinct from the origins of the covenants associated with Moses, Abraham, and the House of David.”⁸⁰¹ Margaret Barker has picked up and extended many of the threads explored by Murray.⁸⁰²
- 4-5 Ryan notes that the “Divine Architect employs a compass to draw his lines and boundaries, [while] he himself is confined within a circle.”⁸⁰³ In an ironically fitting sense, such a view is consistent with LDS theology that sees God’s power as “circumscribed” in important respects.⁸⁰⁴
- 4-6 The Testament of Job attests that garments inscribed with the sacred name may also be worn by mortals. After Job’s daughter “wrapped herself just as her father said... she received another heart, so that she no longer thought about earthly things. And she chanted verses in the angelic language, and ascribed a hymn to God in accord with the hymnic style of the angels.”⁸⁰⁵ And as she chanted the hymns, she permitted ‘the Spirit’ to be inscribed on her garment.”⁸⁰⁶

Of the relationship between the name and the covenant, Barker writes: “Closely linked to this oath is the ‘name’ or the ‘secret name,’ which was the means of enforcing and maintaining the covenant/oath. The name had been named before the creation, presumably to make the Creation possible.”⁸⁰⁷ Note the similar close association of a unique name for the Savior with the covenant that King Benjamin administers to his people.⁸⁰⁸

793 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 193.

794 See the overview of Moses 5, pp. 343-350.

795 J. A. Tvedtnes, Follett.

796 E. A. W. Budge, Kebra, 1, p. 1.

797 H. W. Nibley, Roman Games.

798 H. W. Nibley, Hierocentric; cf. H. W. Nibley, Assembly, pp. 121-126 and Excursus 35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”, p. 612.

799 B. J. Petersen, Nibley, pp. 354ff.

800 S. D. Ricks, Liturgy.

801 R. Murray, Cosmic, p. xvii.

802 See Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60, 4:14-e, p. 260; 5:47-a, p. 395.

803 R. Ryan, Companion to Blake, p. 156.

804 See, e.g., B. T. Ostler, Attributes, pp. 105-135.

805 Cf. 2 Nephi 31:13, 32:2-3.

806 R. A. Kraft, Job, 48:1-4, p. 83. The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan gives a description of how the name representing the covenant was woven into such a garment (see Commentary 4:27-a, p. 274).

807 M. Barker, Lost, p. 78.

808 Mosiah 5:6-12.

- 4-7 A second circumambulation is performed near the end of the pilgrimage in order to complete the figurative ritual ascent:

If a man's pilgrimage has been completed both externally and internally and his realizations are depicted above, then he must once again go seven times around the Ka'bah, feeling this time as if he is going around the Throne of God. He is then entitled by God to enter into the station of nearness to the Almighty, Whose vision he achieves. It is to this achievement of direct vision of the Lord that God refers when He says, "And he made them drink the purest of drinks."⁸⁰⁹ This is symbolized externally by the drinking of the water of the holy well Zamzam after the completion of the circumambulation. When a person attains to this stage of consciousness, all veils are removed and he talks to the Lord without any veil between them... This tawaf symbolizes man's detachment from the lowest region and his journey to that region which is the highest of the high, his real homeland.⁸¹⁰

Note that an upraised veil (kiswa) hangs from the gate of the Ka'bah. "Such veils are used allegorically by Muslim mystics to stand for ignorance masking the true nature of God."⁸¹¹

Those who participate in the hajj are washed, dressed in white, and given a "new name," one that they must not reveal—for it is theirs to use in the next life when they approach Allāh... Muslims are urged to return to Mecca again..., but these pilgrimages are for or in behalf of other people, preferably relatives, who did not have the chance to go. Apparently, they may get the 'new name' for them as well."⁸¹²

The ritual of circumambulation is also practiced within the Dome of the Rock in Jerusalem: "The sacred Rock, focus of so many beliefs and traditions, is surrounded by marble piers and columns. Encircling the structure is a corridor, which Muslims use to circumambulate the Rock as they do the Ka'bah in Mecca."⁸¹³

- 4-8 "The stoning of the Devil (rajm al-shaytan) [still] forms part of the [modern] pilgrimage ritual. Pilgrims gather stones at Arafat and bring them to Mina where pillars set up to represent Satan are pelted. From this comes Satan's epithet al-Rajim (= the stoned one)."⁸¹⁴

- 4-9 A similar stone, with a new name written on it, is to be given "to each of those who come into the celestial kingdom."⁸¹⁵ The close association between this stone, the "hidden manna," and the "new name" in Revelation 2:17 implies that such a stone was given to others besides Adam in the preexistence. In the poem My Old White Stone, W. W. Phelps writes:⁸¹⁶

O keep my old "white stone," Father,
O keep it till I come;
The stone I had of thee at home,
Before this world was known;

For Lo! in it is my "new name"—
The name thou gavest me,
When I was wash'd and set apart
For the glory yet to be.

Eternity is thine, Father,
Age after age has gone,
And yet, among thy sons, as one,
My spirit moves divine

809 Qur'an 76:21.

810 S. A. Ashraf, Inner, p. 125.

811 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 155.

812 D. Rona, Revealed, p. 190.

813 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 141 n. 140.

814 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 344 n. 48.

815 D&C 130:4-11. See Endnote E-11, p. 706. See also Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62 and Figure 4-4, p. 219. See Endnote 4-22, p. 304. See Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519 and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: Jewish and Christian Analogues, p. 679.

816 Deseret News, 6, 416, cited in T. G. Hatch, Visions, pp. 230-231. The poem was set to the music of "The Indian Student's Lament," better known as the tune of "O Give Me Back My Prophet Dear" (M. Hicks, Music, p. 68 and p. 73 n. 65).

With light and life, and sense and love,
Through realms where wisdom's known,
To find, by faith, my path back home,
To my gem—my old “white stone.”

The sweetest joy that seems, Father,
Is now and then a view,
Of that eternal world and you,
That flashes through my dreams

In some blest spot that's still and pure,
Where virtue's bliss is known,
And where my spirit eyes can see,
For themselves, my old “white stone.”

Commenting on the passage of the Hymn of the Pearl where the protagonist says that he brought “precious stones from India and Kushan and gold and silver, and they girt me with a diamond” (= Greek adamas), Nibley writes:

There's an interesting footnote on adamas, on the diamond, here. You see, the word Adam was associated with diamond.⁸¹⁷ Adamantis means that which cannot be damaged, that which is immortal. There's a long story behind that. Diamond is the urim and thummim, the sacred stone that was given to Adam when he came down. So the name Adamantis was given to him—the prince of stones.⁸¹⁸

In another place, Nibley elaborates further:⁸¹⁹

We associated Adam's diamond with the Stone of Truth in the Book of Breathings.⁸²⁰ In this context the diamond identifies the speaker with Adam... the prevailing of the diamond over steel signifies that the true nature of the spirit can never be completely destroyed by earthly elements. This is confirmed by Klijn's rendering, “they furnished me with adamant which can crush iron,”⁸²¹ the coincidence of the words Adam, diamond, and adamant being intentional. We have shown elsewhere that the diamond in the girdle is the stone of life (sometimes the plant of life) which, in the Alexander period, the hero bears with him, having fetched it from the underworld, the hero leaves the girdle and its precious stone on the bank as he bathes in a deep pool, and the serpent steals them, thus robbing him of the hope of immortality. The story is told not only of Alexander but also of the very ancient Gilgamesh, taking it back to the beginning of history.

Moreover:⁸²²

According to Rabbi Eliezer, each of the twelve tribes was represented by a stone on the breastplate of the high priest, and it was said that Joshua could tell which tribe had sinned when their tribe's stone was dim...⁸²³ J. Massingberd Ford calls the stone of Peter and Abraham “the Jewel of Discernment,”⁸²⁴ thus lending belated support to Joseph Smith's interpretation of John 1:42 JST: “Thou shalt be called Cephas, which is, by interpretation, a seer, or a stone”... The image of Peter the Rock, now viewed as an old and authentic Hebrew concept⁸²⁵ throws a new light on a remarkable account of the setting apart of Peter found in one of the oldest of Christian writings, the Gospel of the Twelve Apostles, in which the Lord says to Peter, “Come to me on this stone, that I might give thee a blessing and a name in all the world.” Peter then sits on the stone; the Lord proceeds to pronounce over him something like the Opening of the Mouth formula: “Thy head shall never pain thee, neither shall thine eyes fail thee, nor thy fingers falter, etc.”⁸²⁶ And the name

817 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 196.

818 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 4, p. 48.

819 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 489; cf. H. W. Nibley, Approach, pp. 351-358.

820 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 190-202.

821 Cf. E. Hennecke et al., Acts of Thomas, 108:8, p. 498; M. R. James, Thomas, p. 411.

822 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 192-193.

823 M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliezer, 38, pp. 238-239.

824 J. M. Ford, Jewel, p. 109, cited in H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 192.

825 D. Flusser, Qumran, pp. 138-43, cited in H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 192.

826 E. Revillout, Évangile des Douze, p. 147 2^e fragment.

he gives him is Peter—Seer-stone, Stone of Truth. He gave him that name in return for Peter's recognition "that Jesus was Anointed,"⁸²⁷ while the talk of gates and keys⁸²⁸ refers to the "much desired admission to... the Temple," with special "contrast between the inescapable mass of the dead and the community of the living."⁸²⁹ There is much evidence that all important Matthew 16:18ff refers to temple work as understood by the Latter-day Saints. The Coptic Apocryphon of Adam says that in the last days the Righteous will be found "upon a high mountain, upon a Stone of Truth (hijn ou-petra nteme), and be accordingly named (or the mountain and stone will be named) "the Words of Immortality and Truth."⁸³⁰

A related tradition in a Coptic source reports that a girdle of sapphire was taken from Satan and given to Michael when he replaced the fallen archangel as "General-in-Chief of all the hosts of the heavens." God is portrayed as telling him: "Gird this girdle of sapphire about thy loins, so that when those who are waging war against thy Lord see thee they may be quickly overcome."⁸³¹ The stone was an appropriate sign of divine authority, since God's throne was said by Ezekiel to be made of sapphire.⁸³² This same idea was used to explain the color of the fringes in Jewish prayer shawls: "The thread of blue in the tzitzit resembles the hue of the sea, and the sea mirrors the azure of the sky, and the sky reflects the radiance from the throne of God's glory, concerning which it is written: 'Under His feet... a sapphire stone.'"⁸³³ The sapphire may have also been a symbol of incarnation, the dark-blue of the jewel corresponding to the color of the robe of the high priest which represented the glorious physical body denied to Satan but given to Adam.⁸³⁴ In later accounts connected with Solomon's building of the temple, the stone was symbolized by a signet ring with a sacred seal.⁸³⁵

Nibley identifies the Stone of Truth in its role of "foundation stone, as the cornerstone of the Hebrew scriptures was a pyramidion or sun-stone, Egyptian style, the headstone of the corner" of the temple. However, it must be understood that the true temple was not to be built of ordinary dead stones, but rather of "lively [i.e., living] stones... a spiritual house, an holy priesthood,"⁸³⁶ "Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone... [growing] unto an holy temple in the Lord."⁸³⁷ This same idea could be applied to the patriarchs: "... as the Tabernacle is a miniature replica of the cosmos, Adam/Aaron is a microcosmic replica of the sanctuary."⁸³⁸ Similarly, Nibley cites a tradition that "the foundation-stone upon which God founded the True Temple—the hagion kosmikon, [i.e.,] the world itself—... was the 'living Rock'—the patriarch Abraham."⁸³⁹ The identification of a living seer as the cornerstone of the temple undergirds the image painted by Christ of the foundational role of revelation in the establishment of the Church: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church."⁸⁴⁰ In the words of Elder James E. Talmage, "Revelation from God to His servants invested with the Holy Priesthood through authorized ordination as was Peter is the impregnable 'rock' upon which the Church is built."⁸⁴¹

4-10 Writes Barker:

This bonding together of the Creation is the key to understanding the Day of Atonement, the great ritual performed exclusively by the high priest at the New Year. The eternal covenant, or the covenant of eternity, was also described as the covenant of peace or wholeness. It bound all creation together in its bonds, but these bonds could be broken by human sin. Isaiah has a vivid picture of how the Creation collapses under the weight of human sin: "The earth mourns and withers, the world languishes and withers, the heavens languish together with the earth. The earth lies polluted under its inhabitants, for they have transgressed the laws, violated the statutes, broken the eternal 827 R. W. Riddle, Cephas-Peter, p. 178, cited in H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 193. See Matthew 16:16.

828 Matthew 16:18-19.

829 V. Burch, Stone, pp. 148-149, cited in H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 193.

830 Cf. G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, 85:10-14, p. 286.

831 E. A. W. Budge, Rebellion, pp. 294-295.

832 Ezekiel 1:26. See M. Barker, Gate, pp. 152-153.

833 Second-century Rabbi Meir, cited in K. Boren, Winepress, p. 82.

834 W. Williams, Shadow.

835 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, pp. 149-150.

836 1 Peter 2:5; cf. D&C 92:2. See also D. B. McKinlay, Peter, pp. 497-498.

837 Ephesians 2:20-21.

838 W. Williams, Shadow.

839 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 195.

840 Matthew 16:18.

841 J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, 22, p. 342 n. 7.

covenant.”⁸⁴² The Creation was fragmented and collapsing because it had lost its union with the Creator. The bonds of the covenant were restored by the Atonement, and thus the Creation was reunited with the Creator and renewed at the start of the year.⁸⁴³

Significantly, as part of the reforms of the Deuteronomists, the Day of Atonement “was simply dropped from the... calendar,⁸⁴⁴ but its original significance was remembered and repeated in the later targums and became the great proclamation of Christianity.”⁸⁴⁵

- 4-11 Based on her study of 1 Enoch 48:2-3, Barker concluded that the Son of Man, represented on earth as the great high priest:

... was part of the created order of things, and that the means of restoring the Creation was provided in the original plan which was outside time and therefore not strictly “before” anything. Knowing this name added force and strength to the oath.⁸⁴⁶ The climax of the last vision of judgment in the Similitudes is the revealing of the “name” of the Son of Man. This... is... likely to mean the revelation of an especially powerful name with which to bind the oath, and thus restore the Creation to its original state, as it had been before the incursion of evil. The vision ends with the Son of Man passing judgment on all those who had corrupted the earth, binding them so that evil passes away.⁸⁴⁷

- 4-12 Barker observes:

Of all the major covenants, we tend to emphasize the one at Sinai, but this covenant did not become important for the people of Israel until quite late in their history... But older than the Mosaic covenant was the royal covenant, which promised stability to the royal house... This older royal covenant was very similar to the cosmic or eternal covenant which we find in the Similitudes of Enoch.⁸⁴⁸ In the Old Testament the royal covenant was associated with the “anointed one,” and with kings who were called the “sons of God.” This makes it very likely that the cosmic/royal covenant was the background to some parts of the New Testament (e.g., Romans 8:19: “creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the sons of God”).⁸⁴⁹

Reynolds argues that the emphasis on covenant was lost in the early centuries of the Christian era.⁸⁵⁰

- 4-13 Though the singular term “Grand Council” is often used in scripture and in statements by Joseph Smith and others, it seems evident that there must have been a series of councils that took place in the premortal life.

As to the location of these councils, Joseph Smith’s poetic rendition of D&C 76 speaks of “the council in Kolob.”⁸⁵¹ Note that Abraham 3:21 specifies that God “came down” when He organized the premortal intelligences. Thus, strictly speaking, these councils do not take place in heaven, if we mean by the term the place where God lives, though Kolob is said to be “nearest to” that place.⁸⁵²

- 4-14 The Apocalypse of Abraham seems to allude to the grand councils in heaven and the foreordination of the premortal posterity of Abraham in the following words:

And I saw there a great crowd of men and women and children... and he [God] said to me: “This is my will with regard to what is in the light [or council] and it was good before my face. And then, afterward, I gave them a command by my word and they came into existence. Whatever I had decreed was to exist had already been outlined in this and all the previously created (things) you have seen stood [or took position] before me... these are the ones I have prepared to be born of you and to be called my people.”⁸⁵³

842 Isaiah 24:4-5.

843 M. Barker, Great High Priest, pp. 74-75; cf. D&C 1:15ff.; Moses 7:25ff.

844 Deuteronomy 16.

845 M. Barker, Hidden, p. 36.

846 Cf. Mosiah 5:7-12.

847 M. Barker, Lost, p. 79. See also T. G. Madsen, Putting.

848 E. Isaac, 1 Enoch, 69:13-26, pp. 48-49; G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 69:13-26, pp. 90-91.

849 M. Barker, Lost, pp. 80-81.

850 N. B. Reynolds, Decline of Covenant.

851 J. Smith, Jr. (or W. W. Phelps), A Vision, 1 February 1843, stanza 7, p. 82, reprinted in L. E. Dahl, Vision, p. 296.

852 Abraham, Facsimile 2, Fig. 1.

853 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 21:7, 22:2, 5, pp. 699-700.

- 4-15 Matthew Brown succinctly summarizes the teachings of Joseph Smith on the importance of a physical body.⁸⁵⁴

“All beings who have bodies have power over those who have not,” said the Prophet Joseph Smith.⁸⁵⁵ The “spirits of the eternal world” are as diverse from each other in their dispositions as mortals are on the earth. Some of them are aspiring, ambitious, and even desire to bring other spirits into subjection to them. “As man is liable to [have] enemies [in the spirit world] as well as [on the earth] it is necessary for him to be placed beyond their power in order to be saved. This is done by our taking bodies ([having kept] our first estate) and having the power of the resurrection pass upon us whereby we are enabled to gain the ascendancy over the disembodied spirits.”⁸⁵⁶ It might be said, therefore, that “the express purpose of God in giving [His spirit children] a tabernacle was to arm [them] against the power of darkness.”⁸⁵⁷

In a footnote relating to this passage, Brown includes additional relevant citations from the Prophet:⁸⁵⁸

“The design of God before the foundation of the world,” said Joseph Smith, “was that we should overcome and thereby obtain a resurrection from the dead, [and] in this wise obtain glory, honor, power, and dominion.” Receiving a physical body was “needful, inasmuch as [some] spirits in the eternal world glory in bringing other spirits in[to] subjection unto them, striving continually for the mastery.”⁸⁵⁹ “God is good and all His acts [are] for the benefit of inferior intelligences. God saw that those intelligences had not power to defend themselves against those that had a tabernacle. Therefore, the Lord call[ed] them together in Council and agree[d] to form them tabernacles that He might [en]gender the spirit and the tabernacle together so as to create sympathy for their fellowman.... [I]t is a natural thing with those spirits that [have] the most power to [bear] down on those of lesser power.”⁸⁶⁰

Nephi taught that if disembodied spirits who had lost their bodies through death did not regain a physical body in the resurrection, the Devil would have all power over them:

8 O the wisdom of God, his mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the Eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more.

9 And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself...⁸⁶¹

- 4-16 Nibley cites a parallel in the Mandaean Ginza where, after having been embraced and received secret names, Ptah-Uthra, the Creator god, was told, “Go down to that place where there is no occupied place, where there is no world, and create for us another world after the fashion of the Sons of Salvation.”⁸⁶²
- 4-17 A near echo of Abraham 3:25 can be heard in Kebra Nagast, where angels, jealous of God’s special treatment of Adam despite his transgression, beg Him to create physical bodies for them and allow their fidelity to be proven: “And now try us well, and put us to the test so that Thou mayest know whether we are able to keep Thy word.”⁸⁶³
- 4-18 This statement is from a recollection of a discourse by Joseph Smith likely given on 7 April 1844.⁸⁶⁴
- 4-19 These and some of the following quotations were previously noted by Tvedtnes.⁸⁶⁵
- 4-20 Continues Nibley: “This is an unfailing part of the picture; the Hallelujah chorus with its refrain of 854 M. B. Brown, Plan, p. 33.

855 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, p. 60.

856 Ibid., 21 May 1843, p. 208.

857 Ibid., 19 January 1841, p. 62.

858 M. B. Brown, Plan, p. 47.

859 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 21 May 1843, p. 207.

860 Ibid., 28 March 1841, p. 68.

861 2 Nephi 9:8-9.

862 H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 283; cf. K. Rudolph, Coptic, GR 3:1, p. 171.

863 E. A. W. Budge, Kebra, 100, p. 186.

864 J. Smith, Jr., 7 April 1844. See E. England, Laub, pp. 2, 32n. 24; cf. Excursus 22: The Nature of Satan’s Premortal Proposal, p. 577.

865 J. A. Tvedtnes, Follett.

‘Forever and ever!’ is the closing section of almost any ritual text.”⁸⁶⁶

Speaking of the angel singing witnessed by the shepherd’s on the night of Christ’s birth, Barker writes:⁸⁶⁷

The song of the heavenly host was a sign of the new creation, the restoration of the covenant that meant the renewal of the earth. Whenever the angels or the heavens sing in the Old Testament, it is a sign of the new creation. At the beginning of Creation, “the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy.”⁸⁶⁸ When the Lord called the Servant and announced a new beginning, there was a new song, or possibly a “renewing” song.⁸⁶⁹ Praise renewed the earth. When Isaiah heard the angels singing “Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts,” he knew that the whole earth was full of his Glory.⁸⁷⁰ Gregory of Nyssa... said that sin had silenced the voice of praise on earth... With the coming of the Savior... heaven and earth formed one choir again, and harmony was restored. Peace on earth among men.⁸⁷¹

4-21 The ancient annual celebration of the new year,⁸⁷² the hilaria, “was the occasion on which all the world joined in the great creation hymn, as they burst into a spontaneous song of praise recalling the first creation.” Nibley notes that the Greek term for the “mercy seat” is hilasterion—the place of the hilaria—and sees parallels both with Alma’s “song of redeeming love”⁸⁷³ and also with the “new song” sung by the hundred and forty-four thousand redeemed before the throne of God.⁸⁷⁴

4-22 Nibley, citing Neusner,⁸⁷⁵ recalls how sacrifices were performed in the Jerusalem temple: “the priest, gird up with his robe, ‘slaughtered with his right hand, and received in his left.’ ‘The sprinkling of the blood... [thus] accomplishes atonement, or kapporah.’ The hand is held in such a manner as to hold the blood, as it holds the oil in the anointing.”⁸⁷⁶

Hilton elaborates on the temple-related origin of the priestly practice of cupping the hand, whether to hold an offering or to receive a divine gift:

After the children of Israel left Egypt, Moses called for contributions to build the Tabernacle. The Lord had shown Moses on the mount the pattern of the Tabernacle, with its furnishings, vessels, and rituals. One commandment Moses received from the Lord was, “thou shalt make the... spoons... of pure gold.”⁸⁷⁷ In due course, each leader of the 12 tribes donated a golden spoon of 10 shekels weight, filled to overflowing with frankincense.⁸⁷⁸

The spoon was termed kaph in Hebrew, which means literally “hollow of the hand,” or the hand in cupping shape....

Once a year, on the Day of Atonement, the High Priest of the Aaronic line entered the Holy of Holies of Moses’ Tabernacle or, later, of Solomon’s temple, by passing through the veil. He carried the frankincense and the spoon, a hand in cupping shape, as he passed through...⁸⁷⁹

It was considered especially important for the priest to take up the raw incense in the hollow of his hand, not with his fingers, without dropping one small grain, and to pour it onto the fire...⁸⁸⁰

Incense spoons, or hands in cupping shape, are seen not only in the ancient art of Palestine and Syria, but also in Yemen and Mexico....

866 H. W. Nibley, Treasures, p. 191 n. 13.

867 M. Barker, Christmas, pp. 81-82.

868 Job 38:7.

869 Isaiah 42:10.

870 Isaiah 6:3.

871 Barker cites Gregory of Nyssa, Oratio in Diem Natalem Christi, in J. P. Migne, Patrologiae Graeca, 46:1128-1137.

872 Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60, 5:47-a, p. 395, Excursus 35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”, p. 612, and the overviews of Moses 4 and 6, pp. 221, 458. See Endnote 4-4, p. 298.

873 Alma 5:26.

874 H. W. Nibley, Atonement, pp. 564-566; cf. H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 2:228-230; Revelation 14:3. See also E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, 9:89-104.

875 J. Neusner, Without Myth.

876 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 593. See also M. Barker, Revelation, p. 28.

877 Exodus 25:29.

878 Numbers 7:84-86.

879 Leviticus 16:12-13; cf. Revelation 8:4.

880 Leviticus 16:12.

In Egypt literally dozens of reliefs of such spoons are constructed in the form of a bowl held in the hollow of a carved hand....

... John A. Tvedtnes... [pointed] out that the Hebrew original of the word “consecrate,” referring to the ordination of priests in Old Testament times, literally means “to fill the hand”....⁸⁸¹

... Tvedtnes notes that “there are some hints that the open hand is to be filled with sacrificial items (meat, etc.)...”⁸⁸² In the Temple, the priest evidently stood with hand in cupping shape, ready to receive something which was given to him. It was probably incense, though in the last days,⁸⁸³ it will evidently be the white stone or urim and thummim, with the new name written in it.”⁸⁸⁴

Though European kings, whose garments and emblems of kingship resembled those of the Israelite high priest until the fashion of military dress eventually became the style,⁸⁸⁵ are often pictured with an orb in their cupped hand, “no such ensign as an orb existed until the 11th century,” previous depictions having been “symbolic.”⁸⁸⁶

- 4-23 Luke 10:18, which one could easily believe was a quotation from a lost ancient source, seems in context not only to refer to a past event, but also to prophesy of the diminishing of Satan’s remaining power on earth at the time when all power will be given to Christ on Heaven and on Earth.⁸⁸⁷

- 4-24 Four accounts of the discourse are given below. The first three were used to create the amalgamated statement quoted on p. 223 above. It is significant that the statement about the premortal rebellion was given in the context of a discussion of the unpardonable sin.⁸⁸⁸

Report of Wilford Woodruff: All will suffer until they obey Christ himself. Even the Devil said, I am a savior and can save all. He rose up in rebellion against God and was cast down. Jesus Christ will save all except the sons of perdition. What must a man do to commit the unpardonable sin? They must receive the Holy Ghost, have the heavens opened unto them, and know God, and then sin against him. This is the case with many apostates in this Church: they never cease to try to hurt me, they have got the same spirit the Devil had, [and] you cannot save them. They make open war like the Devil.⁸⁸⁹

Report of Thomas Bullock: No man can commit the unpardonable sin after the dissolution of the body, but they must do it in this world. Hence the salvation of Jesus Christ was wrought out for all men to triumph over the Devil. For he stood up for a Savior. Jesus contended that there would be certain souls that would be condemned and the Devil said he could save them all. As the Grand Council gave in for Jesus Christ, so the Devil fell, and all who put up their heads for him. All sin shall be forgiven except the sin against the Holy Ghost.⁸⁹⁰

Report of William Clayton: I said no man could commit the unpardonable sin after the dissolution of the body. Hence the salvation that the Savior wrought out for the salvation of man—if it did not [indcipherable, TPJS says “catch”] him in one place it would another. The contention in heaven was Jesus said there were certain men [who] would not be saved, [and] the Devil said he could save them. He rebelled against God and was thrust down.⁸⁹¹

Report of George Laub: Jesus Christ, being the greater light or of more intelligence, for he loved righteousness and hated iniquity, He, being the elder brother, presented himself for to come and redeem this world, as it was his right by inheritance. He stated [that] He could save all those who 881 Exodus 28:9, 29, 41; Exodus 29:33, 32:29; Leviticus 8:33, 16:32, 21:10; Numbers 3:3; Judges 17:5, 12; 1 Kings 13:33; 1 Chronicles 29:5; 2 Chronicles 29:31; Jeremiah 44:25; Ezekiel 43:26. See also H. W. Attridge, Hebrews, p. 85.

882 See Leviticus 8:26-28 and Exodus 29:24. See also 2 Chronicles 13:9, which should read “to fill his hand with a young bullock” (KJV: “to consecrate himself with a young bullock”).

883 See Revelation 2:17; D&C 130:4-11; cf. Commentary 1:27-b, p. 62 and Figure 4-4, p. 219. See Endnote 4-9, p. 299. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: Jewish and Christian Analogues, p. 679.

884 L. M. Hilton, Hand, pp. 171-176. See also J. L. Carroll et al., Incense; Cyril of Jerusalem, Five, 5:21, p. 156; H. W. Nibley, Sacred, Figure 48, p. 592; H. W. Nibley, Vestments, Figure 22, p. 106.

885 E. Tóth, Holy Crown, p. 63.

886 Ibid., p. 57.

887 See Matthew 28:17-18; H. A. Kelly, Satan, pp. 97-100.

888 See Commentary 4:1-e, p. 244.

889 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 7 April 1844, p. 347, spelling and punctuation standardized.

890 Ibid., 7 April 1844, p. 353, spelling and punctuation standardized.

891 Ibid., 7 April 1844, p. 361, spelling and punctuation standardized.

did not sin against the Holy Ghost and they would obey the code of laws that was given. But their circumstances were that all who would sin against the Holy Ghost should have no forgiveness neither in the world nor in the world to come. For they strove against light and knowledge after they had tasted of the good things of the world to come. They should not have any pardon in the world to come, because they had a knowledge of the world to come and were not willing to abide the law. Therefore they can have no forgiveness there, but must be most miserable of all, and never can be renewed again.⁸⁹² But Satan or Lucifer, being the next heir..., had allotted to him great power and authority, even Prince of the air. He spake immediately and boasted of himself saying, “Send me, I can save all, even those who sinned against the Holy Ghost.” And he accused his brethren⁸⁹³ and was hurled from the Council for striving to break the law immediately. And there was a warfare with Satan and the Gods. And they hurled Satan out of his place and all them that would not keep the law of the Council. But he himself being one of the Council would not keep his or their first estate, for he was one of the sons of perdition and consequently all the sons of perdition became devils, etc.⁸⁹⁴

Note that Laub’s report, taken from his journal, is a retrospective summary. The value of Laub’s summary is in that it contains details not recorded elsewhere, however, it is certainly less reliable overall than the three contemporaneous accounts,⁸⁹⁵ having probably been reconstructed in 1845 “from notes of actual speeches heard but not accurately dated and from memory of those speeches and other teachings he had heard.”⁸⁹⁶

4-25 The Prophet Joseph Smith stated that:

... the greatness of [Satan’s] punishment is that he shall not have a tabernacle... So the Devil, thinking to thwart the decree of God, by going up and down in the earth, seeking whom he may destroy—any person that he can find that will yield to him, he will bind him, and take possession of the body and reign there, glorying in it mightily, not caring that he had got merely a stolen body; and by-and-by some one having authority will come along and cast him out and restore the tabernacle to its rightful owner. The Devil steals a tabernacle because he has not one of his own; but if he steals one, he is always likely to be turned out of doors.⁸⁹⁷

4-26 Milton’s classic words in Paradise Lost eloquently capture the scene of Satan’s fall:

... cast... out from Heav’n, with all his Host
Of Revel⁸⁹⁸ Angels, by whose aid aspiring
To set himself in Glory above his Peers,
He trusted to have equal’d the most High,
If he oppos’d; and with ambitious aim
Against the Throne and Monarchy of God
Rais’d impious War in Heav’n and Battel proud
With vain attempt. Him the Almighty Power
Hurl’d headlong flaming from th’Ethereal Skie
With hideous ruine and combustion down
To bottomless perdition, there to dwell
In Adamantine Chains and penal Fire,
Who durst defie th’Omnipotent to Arms.⁸⁹⁹

The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan contains the following account of Satan’s rebellion, as recounted by the angels:

“But now, O Adam, we will make known to thee, what came upon us through him, before his fall from heaven.

892 See Hebrews 6:4-8.

893 See Revelation 12:10.

894 J. Smith, Jr., 7 April 1844, reported in E. England, Laub, p. 22, spelling and punctuation standardized.

895 A. Ehat et al., in J. Smith, Jr., Words, pp. xvi-xvii.

896 E. England, Laub, p. 32 n. 24. On the issue of finding the correct date for the discourse referenced by this journal entry, see E. England, Laub, pp. 2, 32 n. 24.

897 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 14 May 1843, pp. 200-201; J. Smith, Jr., Encyclopedia, 14 May 1843, pp. 187-188.

898 I.e., rebel.

899 J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:37-49, p. 17.

He gathered together his hosts, and deceived them, promising them to give them a great kingdom, a divine nature; and other promises he made them.

His hosts believed that his word was true, so they yielded to him, and renounced the glory of God.

He then sent for us—according to the orders [i.e., ranks or dignities] in which we were—to come under his command, and to hearken to his vain promise. But we would not, and we took not his advice.

Then, after he had fought with God, and had dealt frowardly with Him, he gathered together his hosts, and made war with us. And if it had not been for God's strength that was with us, we could not have prevailed against him to hurl him from heaven.

But when he fell from among us, there was great joy in heaven, because of his going down from us. For had he continued in heaven, nothing, not even one angel would have remained in it.

But God in his mercy, drove him from among us to this dark earth; for he had become darkness itself and a worker of unrighteousness.

And he has continued, O Adam, to make war against thee..."⁹⁰⁰

See the section on Zoroastrian Texts below for an account of the origin of the "evil principle" in consequence of the free choice of some of the spirit children of the supreme deity, Ahura Mazda.⁹⁰¹

- 4-27 In this context, agency does not describe the everyday sense of making arbitrary decisions, but rather the possibility of moral choices between right and wrong according to the light one is given⁹⁰² while being subject to the enticings of God and Satan.⁹⁰³ In recent years, Elder Boyd K. Packer, among others, has also repeatedly stressed the importance of accountability in such choices.⁹⁰⁴ Thus, Warner has appropriately defined agency in the scriptural sense as "both the power to choose between obedience and rebellion and the accountability for how that power is used."⁹⁰⁵
- 4-28 Note that D&C 29:36 equates power with "honor"—presumably this is related to the glory that the Devil sought in conjunction with his proposal to save all mankind.⁹⁰⁶
- 4-29 For discussions of the Judaic use of the Hebrew term for Satan as a description of a generic adversarial role rather than as a specific individual of cosmic stature, see Kelly and Pagels.⁹⁰⁷ For a collection of essays that treat the role of Satan within secular literature, see Bloom.⁹⁰⁸ On the waning of the idea of a personal Devil in modern times, see Kelly.⁹⁰⁹
- 4-30 There is perhaps an echo of the conflict between Satan and Jehovah in Egyptian accounts of "the council in heaven and the controversy over the right to dominion with Horus winning over Seth—being recognized as the firstborn, the sole heir and the opener of the ways."⁹¹⁰
- 4-31 Sources are unanimous in characterizing this prostration of the angels as one of "honor and greeting, not one of prayer and worship."⁹¹¹

Al-Tabari's Tarikh includes several versions of this story.⁹¹² Note, however, the contrast to the Christian view of Satan as a rebellious angel:

The Islamic view of angels holds that they possess no will of their own but, according to the doctrine of angelic impeccability, are able merely to execute God's bidding; they are, therefore, incapable of such a willful act of disobedience to God's command as that of Iblis. By maintaining his absolute but mistaken fidelity to God alone [i.e., under the assumption that the reason Iblis would not bow

900 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:55, pp. 61-62.

901 Annotated Bibliography, pp. 858, 859.

902 D&C 93:31.

903 Moroni 7:12-13.

904 E.g., B. K. Packer, Covenants; B. K. Packer, Errand, pp. 176-183; cf. D&C 101:78.

905 C. T. Warner, Accountability. See Excursus 22: The Nature of Satan's Premortal Proposal, p. 577.

906 Moses 4:1.

907 H. A. Kelly, Satan, pp. 13-30; E. Pagels, Satan, pp. 38-48.

908 H. Bloom, Satan.

909 H. A. Kelly, Satan, pp. 308-322.

910 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 6, p. 77. See also H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 396-401 and Excursus 1: Speech, Writing, and Revelation, p. 512.

911 A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 48.

912 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:91-94, pp. 263-266; cf. I. Ibn Kathir, Stories, pp. 23-27.

down to Adam was that he reserved that action of devotion exclusively to God], Iblis refused to obey God's command, although, as his act has been interpreted, he was involuntarily obedient to God's eternal will and knowledge, inasmuch as He had willed before all time that Iblis not bow down to Adam, in contradistinction to His command that he do obeisance. "God can command a thing and yet will that it not be, and He can will a thing to be and command it not to be: He commanded Iblis to bow down to Adam but willed that he not bow down; had He willed it, he would have necessarily obeyed. He forbade Adam to eat of the tree but willed that he eat; had He willed that he not eat, he would not have eaten."⁹¹³ As expressed by the martyr-mystic Husayn ibn Mansur al-Hallaj, executed in Baghdad in 922, Iblis was like a man bound hand and foot and cast into the sea while being admonished not to get wet! Because Iblis was incapable of recognizing the divine part of man to which he was bade prostrate himself, the later mystics dubbed him "the absolute monotheist" and "the one-eyed."⁹¹⁴

4-32 Elsewhere, Budge translates this as "the written authority that was in his hand" in which was written "the names of all the angels under his command. Knowing their names, his authority over them was absolute."⁹¹⁵ Nibley translates the term "writing" as token, mark, document, or authorization,⁹¹⁶ which is consistent with a story in a late Ethiopian text of the attempt of the penitent thief who was crucified with Christ to enter Paradise. He succeeds at last only when he shows the Cherubim "the writing which was in his hand, [that] was written in the blood... of our Lord Jesus Christ."⁹¹⁷ Likewise, the Mandaean Ginza says that the ascending one will be greeted by "the one who holds the nails of glory and the signs in the hands, and the key of the kushta of both arms."⁹¹⁸

4-33 Presumably, the armor refers to his "garment of glory."⁹¹⁹ The Gospel of the Secret Supper likewise describes the rebellious Satan and his followers being deprived of their glorious apparel: "Then the father ordered his angels, 'Rip off their robes!' The angels stripped all those angels who had listened to Satan of their robes, their thrones, and their crowns... My father transformed him because of his pride, and he withdrew the light from him."⁹²⁰ His face became like red fire and was fully like that of a man."⁹²¹ Similarly, The Cave of Treasures says that Satan "lost the apparel of his glory. And behold, from that time until the present day, he and all his hosts have been stripped of their apparel, and they go naked and have horrible faces."⁹²²

4-34 Having broken the oath and covenant of the priesthood and altogether turned from it,⁹²³ Satan is portrayed as having been stabbed and cut from shoulder to shoulder with a knife in ritual fashion. He has committed the unpardonable sin and cannot be redeemed.⁹²⁴ Other traditions mention a specific angel or cherub whose wing becomes the weapon by which Satan is smitten and rendered helpless.⁹²⁵ Al-Kisa'i's Qisas Al-Anbiya recounts that when Lucifer's "countenance was transformed into that of the Devil[, t]he angels, gazing upon his evil appearance and smelling his abominable stench, fell on him with their spears, cursing him and saying, 'Accursed! Accursed! Damned! Damned!'"⁹²⁶

Nibley relates the following general information concerning the symbolic enactment of curses as part of temple ritual:

The ritual performance of a curse was anciently an imitation sacrifice. The priest shed his own blood either for the king, whom he originally represented, or for the people, whom the king also 913 Kulayni, al-Usul, 1, 151, cited in M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, pp. 341-342 n. 23.

914 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, pp. 341-342 n. 23.

915 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 59; cf. Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177. See also Milik's translation in an account of the Watchers: "in one (hand) the authorization (?) of the Giants" (QG5 (4QEnGib 3) cited in J. C. Reeves, Jewish Lore, p. 64, see also p. 103 n. 3).

916 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 557.

917 I. Mikael, son of Bakhayla, Godhead, p. 136. See also N. Isar, Dance of Adam, pp. 180-181.

918 M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GL 1:1, p. 429, cited in H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 300; cf. Isaiah 49:16; Zechariah 13:6; Cyril of Jerusalem, Five, 2:5, p. 148. See Commentary 5:4-a, p. 355; 5:5-b, p. 359; and Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

919 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, et al., 1 Enoch, 62:15, p. 81.

920 Note that Satan was also Lucifer, bearer of the light.

921 W. Barnstone et al., Secret Supper, pp. 743-744.

922 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 56.

923 D&C 84:41.

924 See Commentary 4:1-e, p. 244; 4:17-b, p. 263; and 4:20-c, p. 264.

925 G. A. Anderson, Ezekiel, pp. 142-143.

926 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 28.

represented.⁹²⁷ But as he can represent them by proxy, so he too may shed his blood by proxy by the sacrificial beast. All of this, of course, is “a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten,”⁹²⁸ which atoned for the sins of all, and thus redeems or saves from death.

In the old covenant, when the leper is declared clean and his life restored, two birds are taken: one is killed and the other is drenched with its blood,⁹²⁹ and then allowed to fly away free, taking the leper’s sins with it, while the patient is sprinkled with the same blood.⁹³⁰ Being thus delivered from death, he washes his clothes, shaves his hair, and bathes. Then he brings two lambs, one for trespass, the price of sin,⁹³¹ its blood is placed upon the right ear of the one to be cleansed and upon the thumb of his right hand.⁹³² Then the priest takes the oil held in his left hand,⁹³³ and after sprinkling it puts it on the right ear and right thumb of the healed person, where the blood had been, pouring the rest of the oil on his head⁹³⁴—it is the oil of healing. This is a private version of the public rite in which Aaron and his sons lay their hands on the head of a ram, transferring their guilt to it, slay it, and then put the blood on their own thumbs and ears.⁹³⁵ The ram is burnt for a sin-offering as an atonement.⁹³⁶ It is clear when one thinks back to the ram that was sacrificed in the place of Isaac, Abraham’s offering of his only son, that this all looks forward to the great atoning sacrifice, the whole idea being to celebrate our redemption from death.⁹³⁷ We are told that a covenant must be made by the shedding of one’s own blood unless a substitute can be found to redeem one.⁹³⁸ In ancient times, all the sacrifices were symbolic,⁹³⁹ and Maimonides says that in the entire history of Israel only nine heifers were really sacrificed.⁹⁴⁰ Certainly one of the striking things about the newly discovered Temple Scroll is the avoidance of bloody sacrifice, which takes place only at a discreet distance from the temple.

The ear has a significance in ancient Israel. When a servant in Israel, out of pure love, wished to be sealed to a master for the rest of his life, even though free to go his own way, his bond was made sure by fixing his ear to the door with a nail driven through it.⁹⁴¹ It was a relatively painless operation, since there are only three nerves in the lobe of the ear. But it would be hard to find a more convincing symbol of anything fixed in a sure place.⁹⁴²

A medieval Ethiopian Christian text portrays Adam as enacting similar covenantal gestures as part of his exaltation by God before the angels in the Garden of Eden.⁹⁴³

Then God said unto his angels, “This is My image. I have given unto him everything which is lower than Myself [in rank]. Thus saying I have appointed him to be governor [thereof]. Take four sheep which are in the Garden (i.e., Paradise), and slay them, and smear thy hand with the blood, and thy right ear, and the fingers of thy right hand, and [the toes of] the right foot. And this shall be a memorial for thy children, and thou shalt become associated with the Surafel (i.e., the Seraphim) in the mysteries.”⁹⁴⁴

- 4-35 Nibley explains: “This cost him a third of his strength and rendered him forever incapable of prevailing by force. Henceforth, he gains his ends by deception and trickery, which makes him all the more dangerous.”⁹⁴⁵

927 See 1 Samuel 13:8-14.

928 Moses 5:7.

929 See Leviticus 14:1-6.

930 See Leviticus 14:7.

931 See Leviticus 14:8-12.

932 See Leviticus 14:14.

933 See Leviticus 14:15.

934 See Leviticus 14:17-18.

935 See Leviticus 8:22-24.

936 See Leviticus 9:2-7.

937 See Exodus 13:8-10.

938 See Numbers 8:13-15.

939 See Leviticus 5.

940 Commentary on the Mishnah, Laws of the Red Heifer 3:4, cited in J. Neusner, Without Myth, p. 99. See also J. Neusner, Mishnah, 6 (Purities), Parah, 3:5, p. 1016.

941 See Deuteronomy 15:16-17.

942 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 554-557; cf. Isaiah 22:23. See also S. D. Ricks, Oaths, pp. 46-48.

943 See Endnote 4-58, p. 314.

944 B. Mikael, Book, p. 21.

945 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 557. See Commentary 4:20-f, p. 265.

- 4-36 Indeed, noting the high regard among the LDS for this pseudepigraphal book, Nickelsburg falsely assumes that it is part of the Mormon canon: “Among twentieth-century Christians, only the Ethiopian Church and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints consider the Enoch writings to be authoritative.”⁹⁴⁶
- 4-37 Note that in early Christian texts (e.g., the Life of Adam and Eve), Satan is always portrayed as being cast down “to the earth (and not to Hades as one might have expected).”⁹⁴⁷
- 4-38 Christensen also argues for a Book of Mormon parallel to the story of the Watchers:
- ... the account of Amulon’s wicked priests shows the use of allusions to the fallen angel myth to interpret that story. The arch sin of the fallen angels in the Enoch accounts was pride, and in consequence of their fall, they spread a corrupt form of wisdom. In the Enoch accounts, the fallen angels intermarried with human women, and their offspring were destroyed in the time of Noah. In the Book of Mormon, Amulon’s priests are described from the beginning as proud;⁹⁴⁸ they also pervert sacred knowledge for gain⁹⁴⁹ and take wives they should not have.⁹⁵⁰ Amulon’s priests teach the Lamanites to be cunning and wise “as to the wisdom of the world.”⁹⁵¹ Finally, their descendants from the union with the stolen wives become “hardened” and meet with destruction.⁹⁵²
- 4-39 Said Elder Boyd K. Packer:
- Lucifer in clever ways manipulates our choices, deceiving us about sin and consequences. He, and his angels with him, tempt us to be unworthy, even wicked. But he cannot, in all eternity he cannot, with all his power he cannot completely destroy us; not without our own consent. Had agency come to man without the Atonement, it would have been a fatal gift.⁹⁵³
- 4-40 Barker similarly concludes that, at least during the intertestamental period, one would expect to find evidence for a combination of influences to account for mankind’s disobedience:
- It is clear that there was a whole spectrum of ideas as to the nature of sin and evil... At one end, sin was disobedience, an individual’s transgression of one of the laws, and at the other sin was also disobedience, but the disobedience of angels who misused their divine knowledge and brought calamity to the earth as a result. Somewhere between these two extremes, we can place the two spirits at work to influence man’s actions, a position which seems to be a compromise between the “external influences” view of 1 Enoch, and the “intentional disobedience” view of later Judaism.⁹⁵⁴
- 4-41 The motif of the divergence of the two ways for those who hearken⁹⁵⁵ and for those who do not hearken to the voice of the Lord⁹⁵⁶ will dominate the remainder of the book of Moses, culminating in the sanctification of Enoch’s Zion on the one hand⁹⁵⁷ and the destruction of the Noachian flood on the other.⁹⁵⁸
- 4-42 Indeed, knowledge is one of the preconditions to the full exercise of agency in this life: “Behold, here is the agency of man, and here is the condemnation of man; because that which was from the beginning is plainly manifest unto them, and they receive not the light.”⁹⁵⁹ “And it is given unto them to know good from evil; wherefore they are agents unto themselves.”⁹⁶⁰
- 4-43 Satan’s misery is no doubt due in large measure to his being deprived of a body. 2 Nephi 9:9 says that if there were no resurrection we would continue our existence only as spirits, “to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself.” Recall also the Prophet Joseph Smith’s statement that “the

946 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, p. 82.

947 G. A. Anderson, Ezekiel, p. 142.

948 Mosiah 11:5-13.

949 Mosiah 11:5-6; 12:28-29.

950 Mosiah 20:1-5.

951 Mosiah 24:7; cf. 23:31-35; 24:1-7.

952 K. Christensen, Temple, pp. 465-466; cf. Alma 25:4, 7-9. See the overview of Moses 5, p. 349.

953 B. K. Packer, Who Is Jesus Christ, p. 18.

954 M. Barker, Older, pp. 233-234.

955 Moses 5:17.

956 Moses 5:16.

957 Moses 7:69.

958 Moses 8:30. See the overview of Moses 5, pp. 344-350.

959 D&C 93:31.

960 Moses 6:56.

greatness of [Satan's] punishment is that he shall not have a tabernacle."⁹⁶¹ D&C 138:50 says that "the dead [look] upon the long absence of their spirits from their bodies as a bondage,"⁹⁶² and, on the other hand, D&C 93:33-34 reads that: "spirit and element, inseparably connected, receive a fulness of joy; And when separated, man cannot receive a fulness of joy." Therefore, when Lehi teaches that "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy,"⁹⁶³ it is no error to take the scripture in context as meaning to equate "a fulness of joy" with the blessing of a glorified resurrected body.

Truman G. Madsen has written:

In LDS theology, the physical body is not the muffling and imprisoning of the spirit. The body is the spirit's enhancement. It is an instrument of redemption; and the instrument itself is to be redeemed. Indeed, in its most inclusive sense, "soul" is honorifically defined in Doctrine and Covenants 88:15-17 as spirit and body combined, "inseparably connected," or fused. So, as the Teachings informs us, "The great principle of happiness consists in having a body"...⁹⁶⁴

This may be the inversion—some would say the misreading—of the classical reading of Plato that insists every sublimely true and good and beautiful thing is absolutely separate from the material world and even from particularity. Instead, apparently, even ideational realms of the most profound subtlety and nuance are beyond full apprehension and comprehension when we are not embodied. Further, what we see, hear, smell, taste, and touch on earth only foreshadows the expansion of sensate awareness in the world to come—hence the criticality of Christ's resurrection, and through Him, our own.⁹⁶⁵

4-44 In a scene that recalls elements of the protoevangelion, Nibley notes that "the cat who split the ished-tree and released the god also beheads the god's mortal enemy, the Apophis serpent, beneath the same ished-tree."⁹⁶⁶ The cat's paw rests heavily on the head of the serpent in accompanying illustrations.

4-45 Rasmussen gives an alternative explanation for Satan's actions: "Apparently [the Devil] did not know the divine plan of Redemption as we know it."⁹⁶⁷ For his own purposes, therefore, Satan sought to persuade the ancestors of the family of humankind to do a deed that would separate them from the presence of God in spiritual death and later separate their spirits from their bodies in physical death; then they would be like his unembodied spirit followers and be subject to him."⁹⁶⁸

4-46 An example of preparatory redemption is given in Ether 3:13, where the brother of Jared is told in conjunction with his vision of the premortal Jesus Christ: "Because thou knowest these things, ye are redeemed from the fall; therefore ye are brought back into my presence; therefore I show myself unto you."

4-47 The door represents the entrance to the "road to Rosetjau,"⁹⁶⁹ the path through the Underworld or Netherworld that must be traversed by the dead. The nature of the journey is described by Assman:

The body of water that the deceased must cross in order to attain eternal life separates the two aspects of the netherworld as a place of death and a place of life. The idea of distancing from death is here turned into a matter of spaces, while the idea of the Judgment of the Dead turns it into a matter of ethics and law. In the conceptual horizon of the Judgment of the Dead, the deceased was obliged to distance himself from this guilt so as not to fall victim to the Devouress. Here, mortal danger threatened him from the guardians and "policemen" in the netherworld, whom Osiris had bidden to ward off evil. In the horizon of overcoming space, he was threatened by bird catchers who had spread a giant net over this body of water. He escapes this danger, for he is able to name 961 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 14 May 1843, p. 201; J. Smith, Jr., Encyclopedia, 14 May 1843, p. 187.

962 See also D&C 45:17; cf. the Mandaean idea of reunification of a spirit and body, exactly resembling one another, which is seen "as if [one] had come out of prison" (E. S. Drower, Mandaeans, p. 55).

963 2 Nephi 2:25.

964 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 January 1841, p. 181. Ch-d-h, one of the Hebrew roots for "joy" (as in e.g., Nehemiah 8:10: "the joy of the Lord") has three meanings: "gladness; ... togetherness or being joined one with another; and ... something about the temple" (T. G. Madsen, Joy; F. Brown et al., Lexicon, p. 292 d). No doubt related to these meanings is the Book of Mormon dictum: "Man is that he might have joy" (2 Nephi 2:25; cf. D&C 42:61), and, in the Greek NT: "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matthew 25:21; cf. Commentary 1:25-c, p. 60). See also 1 Chronicles 16:27; Y. Buxbaum, Mystic Joy, pp. 2, 249 n. 1, 250 n. 17.

965 T. G. Madsen, LDS View, p. 101.

966 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 311-312. See Commentary, 4:21-d, p. 266.

967 2 Nephi 9:5-10.

968 E. T. Rasmussen, OT Commentary, p. 14; cf. 2 Nephi 9:8.

969 R. O. Faulkner, Book of the Dead, heading to Spell 117, p. 113.

all the individual elements of this net in a mysterious spirit language, which proves him to be an initiated member of the divine realm, a transfigured ancestral spirit.⁹⁷⁰

- 4-48 On the false door as a “horizon,” Assman writes:

[The] false door was not only an interface between the inaccessible and the accessible portions of the tomb, and between this realm and the next one, but also a symbol of the celestial gateway... that led to the sky... We must therefore picture this gate as located in that liminal area between sky and earth that... we conventionally render as “horizon.” This translation is not entirely correct, for a horizon depends on the standpoint of the beholder, and it shifts as he moves along, so that it can never be reached. As the Egyptians conceived it, however, the [horizon] could indeed be reached. It was the zone at the edge of the world, where the sun rose and set... The false door was therefore also such a symbol, that is, “sacramentally explainable.”⁹⁷¹

- 4-49 Assman properly characterizes the function of the Egyptian myth of Osiris as follows: “The myth is not theology, it does not inquire after the essence of the gods; rather, it surrounds human actions with a story that invests them with meaning.”⁹⁷²

- 4-50 The more standard interpretation of the symbolism of the “Lady of the Tree” is closer to a Tree of Life motif than to a Tree of Knowledge figure as Nibley seems to suggest here. According to Assman:

The goddess of the West appears in the role of provisioner of the deceased. In all its variations, this is the principal motif of the idea of transition: the deceased’s journey into the afterlife always leads to a place where he is forever provided with food and drink. Along with the goddess of the West, Nut and Hathor also play the role of the goddess of provisions; the three goddesses are indistinguishable in this role. There is also the tree goddess, who is usually a manifestation of Nut, but who can also be Hathor. This is a goddess in the form of a tree that dispenses eternal nourishment to the deceased.... In all [her] welcoming and embracing forms, she promises the deceased security, eternal renewal, air, water, and nourishment. As nurse and nourisher, she manifests herself as a sycamore, the Tree of Life, who dispenses eternal nourishment to the deceased.⁹⁷³

With respect to the tree, Nibley writes:⁹⁷⁴

At least from the beginning of the New Kingdom, every major city in Egypt had a tomb of Osiris that was sheltered by a tree, which was represented as the cedar of Byblos sheltering the coffin of Osiris in that city... From the long Book of Breathings, we learn that there was a cave beneath the ished-tree. According to the well-known legend, Osiris was actually shut up in the cedar tree and had to be liberated from it in order to be resurrected.⁹⁷⁵ Joseph’s grave was an Urhügel at Shechem, sheltered by a tree, in Egyptian fashion.

In a decoration on a twelfth-century altar, such a tree is stands above the tomb of Christ.⁹⁷⁶

- 4-51 The teaching that mortal life is just one of a series of temporary transitions recalls an inscription at a mosque at Fatehpur Sikri, India, and also attested in the Clerical Instruction of Petrus Alphonsi, where Jesus is quoted as saying: “This world is a bridge. Pass over it, but do not build your dwelling there.”⁹⁷⁷ Barnstone notes that the spirit of this statement closely resembles Gospel of Thomas 42: “Be passersby” or, in a less literal reading, “Come into being as you pass away.”⁹⁷⁸

- 4-52 Many early Christians adopted this rabbinical teaching. For example, Origen taught that Adam and Eve were “wonderfully adorned in Eden. Like the high priest Aaron, [Adam’s] life before God was marked by glorious apparel. After his transgression, [he] was stripped of his glory...”⁹⁷⁹

970 J. Assman, Death, p. 131.

971 J. Assman, Death, p. 335.

972 J. Assman, Search, p. 129, emphasis in original.

973 J. Assman, Death, p. 153, 171. See also, e.g., R. H. Wilkinson, Art, p. 117.

974 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 290; cf. the palm tree over “Adam’s grave” at Machpelah (N. Arnon, Machpela, p. 13). See also Figure 4-12, p. 231; Commentary 4:14-e, p. 260; Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall”, p. 632; and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663.

975 See Commentary 4:14-e, p. 260 and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations of the Mysteries, p. 663—especially p. 669ff.

976 G. R. Murphy, Gemstone, p. 25.

977 W. Barnstone et al., Gnostic, p. 662.

978 Ibid., p. 54.

979 Homilies on Leviticus 6:7, cited in G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 122.

Several early Christian texts likewise agree that “Adam and Eve had been created in an intermediate state; whether or not they would be raised to a higher state God leaves to the outcome of the exercise of their free will.”⁹⁸⁰

- 4-53 The close relationship between ritual clothing actions and temple ordinances is summarized by Ostler:

The ritual action of putting on a sacred garment is properly termed an “endowment.” The word garment is, in fact, representative of ordinances found in ancient texts. The Greek word... that means “garment,” or... “to clothe upon,” was used to represent sacramental, baptismal, and sealing ordinances in the Clementine Recognitions,⁹⁸¹ an extremely important and ancient Christian (Ebionite) work. The Latin induire, meaning “to clothe,” and inducere, “to lead or initiate,” are the roots for our English word “endowment.” All connote temple ordinances.⁹⁸²

Although generally in agreement with the points made in Ostler’s article, specific meanings associated with the sequence of changes in garments outlined in this chapter differ from his presentation in various details.⁹⁸³

- 4-54 The same pattern typified the life of Christ, except that He lived without sin.⁹⁸⁴ Anderson summarizes:

Prior to his incarnation, Christ resided in heaven clothed in glory. He descended to earth, assuming the garments of flesh bequeathed by Adam at his fall. There, he persevered all temptation and was obedient even to the point of death. As a result God the Father raised him from the dead and reclothed him with a glorious body on Easter morning.⁹⁸⁵

- 4-55 Though the rebellion of Satan and his hosts clearly demonstrates that sin was possible in the premortal life, it is a matter of conjecture whether sin and repentance were part of the general experience of all who lived in the spirit world. D&C 93:38 reads: “Every spirit of man was innocent in the beginning; and God, having redeemed man from the fall, men become again, in their infant state, innocent before God.” Top interprets the verse as follows: “The key word is ‘again.’ This seems to indicate that men had lost innocence in the premortal world through sin and disobedience, but were once again, through the great plan of Redemption, made innocent before God upon entering mortality ‘in their infant state.’”⁹⁸⁶ Another possibility is that the comma between “again” and “in” was inserted erroneously. Without this comma, the scripture would simply imply that the Redemption of Christ (accomplished through the ordinances) brings men again to an infant state, in other words, innocent before God.

- 4-56 William W. Phelps describes Adam and Eve’s spirits as being “clothed in heavenly garments” as they witnessed the Creation.⁹⁸⁷ An Islamic legend states that before the soul of Adam entered his body, it was first commanded to bathe “in the sea of glory which proceedeth from [God].”⁹⁸⁸ Jewish and Islamic sources sometimes describe Adam and Eve’s original glory as “a garment of translucent skin” [Arabic zifr vs. jild] which, when “he yielded to sin, ...was exchanged for the (present) skin, but a remnant of it has been left in his fingertips to remind him of his original condition.”⁹⁸⁹

About his own belief in a preexistence, Wordsworth stated:

It is far too shadowy a notion to be recommended to faith, as more than an element in our instincts of immortality. But let us bear in mind that, though the idea is not advanced in revelation, there is nothing there to contradict it, and the Fall of Man presents an analogy in its favor. Accordingly, a preexistent state has entered into the popular creeds of many nations; and, among all persons acquainted with classic literature, is known as an ingredient in Platonic philosophy.... Having to wield some of its elements when I was impelled to write this poem on the “Immortality of the 980 Brock in Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, p. 90.

981 Pseudo-Clement, Recognitions, 4:36, pp. 142-143. See also Pseudo-Clement, Homilies, 8:22-23, pp. 274-275.

982 B. T. Ostler, Clothed, p. 1.

983 Cf. B. T. Ostler, Clothed, p. 10.

984 Hebrews 4:15.

985 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 130.

986 B. L. Top, Life Before, p. 95; cf. Moses 6:53. See Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519.

987 Cited in S. Brown, Paracletes, p. 82.

988 G. Weil, Legends, p. 20.

989 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 47, cf. p. 53. See also al-Tabari, Creation, 1:105, p. 276; p. 276 n. 677; and 1:128, p. 299.

Soul,” I took hold of the notion of preexistence as having sufficient foundation in humanity for authorizing me to make for my purpose the best use of it I could as a poet.”⁹⁹⁰

4-57 Cf. the statement from the Qur'an: “Righteousness is the best kind of garment.”⁹⁹¹

4-58 The Prophet Joseph Smith taught that Adam received the First Presidency and its keys (i.e., the keys necessary to direct the Kingdom of God on the earth) “before the world was formed.”⁹⁹² Similarly, the book of the Cave of Treasures records that immediately following his creation, “Adam was arrayed in the apparel of sovereignty, and there was the crown of glory set upon his head, there was he made king, and priest, and prophet, there did God make him to sit upon his honorable throne, and there did God give him dominion over all creatures and things.”⁹⁹³

A medieval Ethiopian Christian text similarly portrays Adam in the Garden of Eden being commanded by God to enact a series of covenantal gestures in order to “become associated with the Surafel (i.e., the Seraphim) in the mysteries.”⁹⁹⁴ Afterward, God gloriously clothed him:

... He arrayed Adam in apparel of light which resembled the flower of the rose, and He bound on his head a magnificent crown one part of which resembled a flame and the other the sun. And he made for him a tunic of light and girded it about his body; and he made a helmet of iron for his skull (or, forehead). And God had an elephant brought and He mounted Adam thereon, and He gave him a spear in his hand, and He made sandals of gold for his feet.⁹⁹⁵

In this manner, Adam and Eve, “though naked, [were] still clothed.”⁹⁹⁶

Islamic tradition also records Adam’s enthronement, recording that in “the midst of Paradise there stood a green silken tent, supported on golden pillars, and in the midst of it there was a throne, on which Adam seated himself with Eve.”⁹⁹⁷ Zilio-Grandi observes that, according to the Qur'an, “the reason why [Adam] was created and placed in the universe... [was] to be a viceregent (halifa = caliph). On this question the Qur'an states at verse 2:30: ‘... thy Lord announced to the angels: I am about to place a viceregent in the earth.’” Alusi explains that:

The meaning of the word halifa here referred to is that Adam is successor to God on His earth, just as every prophet is a caliph of God on the earth, insofar as he takes the place of God in maintaining (imara) the earth, in governing (siyasa) men and perfecting their souls, transmitting the Decree of the most High... Adam was the first prophet, the first to whom revelation was given...⁹⁹⁸

4-59 This theme is beautifully developed in the early Christian Hymn of the Pearl, summarized by Nibley⁹⁹⁹ in Moses 4 Gleanings, p. 296.

4-60 The Targum Pseudo-Jonathan says that Adam and Eve were “divested of the purple robe in which they had been created.”¹⁰⁰⁰ An Islamic source recounts the event as follows:

Scarcely had Adam received the fruit when his crown rose toward heaven, his rings fell from his fingers, and his silken robe dropped from him. Eve, too, stood spoiled of her ornaments and naked before him, and they heard how all these things cried to them with one voice, “Woe unto you! your calamity is great, and your mourning will be long: we were created for the obedient only: farewell until the resurrection!” The throne which had been erected for them in the tent thrust them away and cried, “Rebels, depart!” The horse Meimun, upon which Adam attempted to fly, would not suffer him to mount, and said, “Hast thou thus kept the covenant of Allāh?”

All the creatures of Paradise then turned from them, and besought Allāh to remove the human pair from that hallowed spot. Allāh himself addressed Adam in a voice of thunder, and said, “Wast thou not commanded to abstain from this fruit, and forewarned of the cunning of Iblis [Satan], 990 Cited in B. L. Top, Life Before, p. 7.

991 J.-L. Monneret, Grands, 7:26, p. 217.

992 J. Smith, Jr., Words, before 8 August 1839, p. 8.

993 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 53; cf. Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, pp. 198-199.

994 See Endnote 4-34, p. 308.

995 B. Mikael, Book, pp. 21-22; cf. M.al-Kisa’i, Tales, pp. 28-29.

996 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, Hymns on Faith (The Pearl), 133:2, p. 71.

997 G. Weil, Legends, p. 25.

998 I. Zilio-Grandi, Paradise, pp. 82-83.

999 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 487-501. See also H. W. Nibley, Treasures, pp. 177-178.

1000 J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos; cf. “stripped of the clothing of fingernails” or “garments of splendor” (M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 3:7, p. 26 and p. 26 n. 12).

thy foe?” Adam attempted to flee from these upbraidings, and Eve would have followed him, but he was held fast by the branches of the tree Talh, and Eve was entangled in her own disheveled hair.¹⁰⁰¹

As discussed earlier in this overview, Satan had been similarly deprived of his garments of glory at the time of his rebellion, becoming a type, in that respect, for Adam and Eve. The couple’s transgression in Eden in turn became a type for the rebellion of Israel at Sinai: “In rabbinic sources... was the tradition that Israel put on crowns when they accepted the Torah. These crowns kept the angel of death at bay. When Israel venerated the golden calf, the crowns were stripped away and Israel returned to a mortal state. A classic proof text of this was Psalm 82:6:

I say, “You are gods,
children of the Most High, all of you;
nevertheless, you shall die like mortals, and fall like any prince.”

This verse was paraphrased ‘When you accepted the Torah you shined like the angels; but now, having worshipped the calf, you shall die like Adam’¹⁰⁰² In a broader sense, Anderson argues that “In the story of the Fall,... we have a presentation of Israel’s central story in miniature.”¹⁰⁰³

- 4-61 Sailhamer highlights the distinction between the use of the Hebrew arom for “naked” in 3:25 and the similar erom in 4:13: “Whereas both terms are infrequently used in the Pentateuch, erom is distinguished by its use in Deuteronomy 28:48, where it depicts the state of Israel’s exiles who have been punished for their failure to trust and obey God’s word... [Thus, the] effect of the Fall was not simply that the man and the woman come to know that they were ‘naked’ (arom). The effect is rather that they come to know that they were ‘naked’ (erom) in the sense of being ‘under God’s judgment,’ as in Deuteronomy 28:48.”¹⁰⁰⁴

- 4-62 Anderson notes that the “reference to seventy afflictions is certainly a sign that the afflictions have covered every inch of Adam’s body, seventy being a number of wholeness in the biblical tradition.”¹⁰⁰⁵

- 4-63 Thus, Adam and Eve could be seen as having received two “garments” of skin: the first when they were clothed with mortal flesh, and the second when they were clothed by God in coats of animal skin. Confusion in many commentaries may have resulted from the conflation of these two events. Moreover, rabbinical wordplay equated the coats of skin (cor) with garments of light (ur),¹⁰⁰⁶ which, notes Nibley, has also led to “a great deal of controversy.”¹⁰⁰⁷

The Book of the Rolls describes Adam and Eve being “clothed with flesh” as follows: “After the clothing of fig-leaves they put on clothing of skins, and that is the skin of which our bodies are made, being of the family of man, and it is a clothing of pain.”¹⁰⁰⁸

- 4-64 In theologically-laden verses neither included in the LDS *Hymnbook*¹⁰⁰⁹ nor the current British Methodist book of hymns,¹⁰¹⁰ Charles Wesley’s magnificent Christmas anthem “Hark! the Herald Angels Sing”¹⁰¹¹ also includes the concept of Jesus, the “second Adam,” being “veiled in flesh.”¹⁰¹² Wesley presents this idea in a manner consistent with Paul’s teaching that “in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily,”¹⁰¹³ though LDS reject a Trinitarian interpretation of that scriptural passage.¹⁰¹⁴ Note also the entreaty for Christ to join each person “in mystic union” so that Father “Adam’s likeness” in them may be replaced by the image of Christ, the “Second Adam”:

1001 G. Weil, Legends, p. 32.

1002 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 125.

1003 Ibid., p. 121. See also J. A. Tvedtnes, Laws, pp. 387-391.

1004 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 49; cf. Ezekiel 16:39; 23:29.

1005 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 127.

1006 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah I, 20:12, p. 227.

1007 H. W. Nibley, Vestments, p. 124. See also S. D. Ricks, Garment, pp. 706-708; J. A. Tvedtnes, Clothing, pp. 651-654.

1008 M. D. Gibson, Rolls 1901, p. 113.

1009 Hymns (1985), #209.

1010 British Methodist Conference, Hymns, #106.

1011 Originally entitled “Hymn for Christmas-Day,” with the first line of “Hark how all the Welkin [= sky, heaven] rings” (J. Wesley et al., Hymns, p. 142).

1012 See also W. Williams, Shadow.

1013 Colossians 2:9.

1014 B. W. Ricks, Godhead., pp. 79-87, 97-101.

...

Christ, by highest heav'n adored,
 Christ, the everlasting Lord,
 Late in time behold him come,
 Offspring of a virgin's womb;

Veiled in flesh the Godhead see!
 Hail th' incarnate Deity!
 Pleased as man with men to dwell,
 Jesus, our Immanuel.¹⁰¹⁵

...

Come, Desire of nations, come,
 Fix us in Thy humble home.
 Rise, the Woman's conqu'ring Seed,
 Bruise in us the Serpent's head.

Now display thy saving power,
 Ruined nature now restore;
 Now in mystic union join
 Thine to ours, and ours to Thine.

Adam's likeness, Lord, efface,
 Stamp Thy Image in its place.
 Second Adam from above,
 Reinstate us in Thy love.

Let us Thee, though lost, regain,
 Thee, the Life, the Heav'nly Man:
 O, to all Thyself impart,
 Formed in each believing heart.¹⁰¹⁶

4-65 Nibley asks:

Why do we have to be baptized with water? The answer is: "I've forgiven the cause. Now, you have to get rid of the effect. The cause was the Fall. It made you dirty, but you have to wash off now. You have to take advantage in good faith of the sacrifice that has been made for you. Here's the chance. It's a very simple thing to do, but you have to do it." Why is it that man must repent and be baptized? "Not because you are damned but because I have forgiven you," he says... "I have taken care of the transgression in the Garden of Eden." That's the Erbsunde, the primal sin. To think we are not responsible for that and, therefore, we are not to blame for our sins is ridiculous. That sin has been forgiven, so if you want to go on what you do then is wash off and get started again. He says here, "The Son of God hath atoned for original guilt, wherein the sins of the parents cannot be answered upon the heads of the children, for they are whole from the foundation of the world."¹⁰¹⁷ But "when they begin to grow up, sin conceiveth in their hearts."¹⁰¹⁸

Note that OT2 and current book of Moses use the singular "transgression," while OT1 uses the plural term "transgressions."¹⁰¹⁹

4-66 In describing the ascent of chosen souls upward, the Mandaean Ginza uses the image of the vine as "a symbol of the soul's equipment or clothing on her journey to the light. The equipment or clothing can mean both protection ... and help for the soul. With the vine's assistance, she can ascend and see the place of light."¹⁰²⁰ In another passage, Ryen again sees "the vine as a clothing for the soul... The vine is qua 'garment' a protection for the soul. The uprising soul is according to Mandaean tradition in need of protection against the evil planets and other demonized beings. The soul's clothing is here identified with a vine, which in its turn is said to have been established in the house of the 'Great, First Life.' The vine is according to this statement related in a special way to Life, and this gives the 1015 Originally, "Please as man with men t'appear, Jesus our Immanuel here" (J. Wesley et al., Hymns, p. 142).

1016 J. Wesley et al., Hymns, pp. 142-143, spelling, capitalization, and punctuation modernized.

1017 Moses 6:54.

1018 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, p. 278. See Moses 6:55.

1019 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 101, 613.

1020 J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, p. 109. See M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GL 3:26, p. 551:16-19.

garment of the soul even greater importance... [T]he vine is here clearly a metaphor for the soul's protective clothing on her journey up to the Lightworld."¹⁰²¹ It is also significant that in several texts the Mandaean liturgical equipment (wreath, staff, vestment, and possibly the myrtle) were said to have originated from mythic vines.¹⁰²² Heavenly equipment of this sort was also bestowed on the dead at the culmination of their ascent.

The protection provided by the garment was accompanied by a promise of heavenly assistance. In this connection, Nibley cites the following passage from Ginza: "... when Adam stood praying for light and knowledge a helper came to him, gave him a garment, and told him, 'Those men who gave you the garment will assist you throughout your life until you are ready to leave earth.'"¹⁰²³

- 4-67 The function of the skin garment was subsumed by the linen coat and breeches worn next to the skin by priests in the Tabernacle precincts at the time of Moses,¹⁰²⁴ purportedly in order "to avoid the shedding of animal blood."¹⁰²⁵ Moreover, as Brown observes, "The fine linen worn by heavenly beings is described as 'clean and white' or 'pure and white' and is therefore an appropriate symbol of worthiness or righteousness."¹⁰²⁶ Since linen is not the product of an animal that is subject unto death,¹⁰²⁷ or 'corruption' as it is called, it is also a fitting symbol of immortality, which is also called 'incorruption.'¹⁰²⁸
- 4-68 A related pattern is still preserved among Armenian Christians—first, the anointing with olive oil "in the different parts of the body," then baptism, then the dressing of the "new Adam," then, following prayer, an anointing with perfumed oil representing "the seal of the covenant."¹⁰²⁹
- Similar anointings are performed today by the Roman Catholic Church in the sacrament of Extreme Unction, more recently given the preferred name of the "Anointing of the Sick." The rite includes anointing of "the organs of the five external senses (eyes, ears, nostrils, lips, hands), of the feet, and, for men (where the custom exists and the condition of the patient permits of his being moved), of the loins or reins." In the Eastern Church, the "parts usually anointed are the forehead, chin, cheeks, hands, nostrils, and breast."¹⁰³⁰
- 4-69 In fact, the title "Christ" is explained in Pseudo-Clement's Recognitions 1:45:2 as an anointing of oil from the Tree of Life: "Although indeed He was the Son of God, and the beginning of all things, He became man; Him first God anointed with oil which was taken from the wood of the Tree of Life: from that anointing therefore He is called Christ."¹⁰³¹
- 4-70 Cf. Ephrem the Syrian: "Adam put off his glory in a moment; ye have been clothed with glory in a moment."¹⁰³²
- 4-71 The Life of Adam and Eve attests that at death Christians were to be dressed according to specific instructions in anticipation of this glorious resurrection.¹⁰³³
- 4-72 Roper discusses the successive putting on of clothing as a metaphor for the accrual of glory by candidates for initiation in the Mandaean tradition. The action of clothing is associated with a testing process that includes a series of ritual handclaps:

1021 J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, p. 85. See M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GR 15:6, p. 317:32-36.

1022 J. O. Ryen, Mandaean Vine, pp. 250-252.

1023 H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 299. The German reads: "Wie Adam dasteht und sich aufzuklären sucht, kam der Mann, sein Helfer. Der hohe Helfer kam zu ihm, der ihn in ein Stück reichen Glanzes hineintrug. Er sprach zu ihm: 'Ziehe dein Gewand an... Die Männer, die dein Gewand geschaffen, dienen dir, bis du abscheidest'" (M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GL 2:19, p. 488).

1024 See Exodus 39:27-28.

1025 R. Eisler, Ièsous Basileus ou Basileusas, 2:34, cited in H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 18.

1026 See Revelation 3:4-5; 15:6; 19:8.

1027 Philo, Specialibus 1, 84, p. 542.

1028 M. B. Brown, Gate, pp. 81-82. See 1 Corinthians 15:52-54.

1029 M. E. Stone, Angelic Prediction, p. 125. See also Stone's discussion of 2 Enoch 22:8-9 (M. E. Stone, Angelic Prediction, pp. 126-127; cf. F. I. Andersen, 2 Enoch, 22:8-9, pp. 138-139) and Nibley's discussion of the Egyptian rite of the Opening of the Mouth (H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 164-182). For a comprehensive survey of early and medieval baptismal liturgies, see B. D. Spinks, Baptism.

1030 P. J. Toner, Extreme Unction, p. 716. See also A. Villien, Sacraments, pp. 202-234.

1031 Pseudo-Clement, Recognitions, p. 89; cf. F. S. Jones, Recognitions, pp. 76-77.

1032 Ephrem the Syrian, Epiphany, 6:9, p. 274; cf. 13:1-22, p. 283.

1033 See Commentary 6:12-b, p. 483.

Both the Ginza... and the Canonical Prayer-Book of the Mandaean describe how, upon death, the soul, leaving behind her mortal body, will ascend to the heavenly world of Light from which she originally came. As she ascends through the heavenly spheres, the soul must pass through a series of gates or “watch-houses” where the soul is detained and questioned and where the souls of the wicked and unprepared are punished. As it successfully passes each watch-house the soul dons a series of sacred vestments at each successful passage. “Garment on garment she putteth on, she arrayed herself in robe after robe.... She laugheth, rejoiceth, leapeth for joy, danceth, exulteth, and is overjoyed about the glorious splendor resting [upon her] and the glory that accrueth to her.”¹⁰³⁴ This text continues, “And on she went and reached Abathur’s house of detention, (Abathur), the Ancient, Lofty, Holy and Guarded one.” Abathur is a powerful angel who guards the entrance into paradise. “There his scales are set up and spirits and souls are questioned before him as to their names, their signs, their blessing, their baptism and everything that is therewith.”¹⁰³⁵

- 4-73 In one of the Hymns on Virginity, Ephrem describes “the whole purpose of the Incarnation... as the restoration of Adam’s original garment”:¹⁰³⁶

Blessed are you whom they told among the trees,
 “We have found Him Who finds all,
 Who came to find Adam who was lost, and in the garment of light to return him to Eden.”¹⁰³⁷

Parallels between the Fall and the Atonement are brought out in one of Ephrem’s Hymns on the Nativity:¹⁰³⁸

You put on our visible body; let us put on Your hidden power.
 Our body became Your garment; Your spirit became our robe....
 All these changes did the Merciful One make, stripping off glory and putting on a body;
 for He had devised a way to reclothe Adam in that glory which he had stripped off.
 He was wrapped in swaddling clothes, corresponding to Adam’s leaves,
 He put on clothes
 in place of Adam’s skins;
 He was baptized for Adam’s sin,
 He was embalmed for Adam’s death,
 He rose and raised Adam up in His glory.
 Blessed is He who descended,
 put Adam on and ascended.

- 4-74 The full words of Kierkegaard read:

To love one’s neighbor means, while remaining within the earthly distinctions allotted to one, essentially to will to exist equally for every human being without exception.... Consider for a moment the world which lies before you in all its variegated multiplicity; it is like looking at a play, only the plot is vastly more complicated. Every individual in this innumerable throng is by his differences a particular something; he exhibits a definiteness but essentially he is something other than this—but this we do not get to see here in life. Here we see only what role the individual plays and how he does it. It is like a play. But when the curtain falls, the one who played the king, and the one who played the beggar, and all the others—they are all quite alike, all one and the same: actors. And when in death the curtain falls on the stage of actuality (for it is a confused use of language if one speaks about the curtain being rolled up on the stage of the eternal at the time of death, because the eternal is no stage—it is truth), then they also are all one; they are human 1034 E. S. Drower, Prayerbook, p. 44, cf. p. 45.

1035 M. Roper, Adam. See E. S. Drower, Prayerbook, p. 45. See also Excursus 51: The Five Lost Things of the Temple, p. 658. For discussions of sacred clothing in LDS, Jewish, Christian, and Muslim tradition, see C. E. Asay, Garment; M. B. Brown, Girded; M. B. Brown, Gate, pp. 80-88; E. R. Goodenough, Light, pp. 265-267, 326-329, 351, 366-367; E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, 9:126-128, 162-164; C. W. Griggs, Evidences; E. T. Marshall, Garments; H. W. Nibley, Vestments; B. T. Ostler, Clothed; S. D. Ricks, Garment; J. A. Tvedtnes, Clothing; J. W. Welch et al., Gammadia; W. Williams, Shadow. See also the overview of Moses 4, pp. 234-240.

1036 S. Brock, in Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, p. 68.

1037 Ephrem the Syrian, Virginity, 46:9, p. 331.

1038 22:39, translation in Ephrem the Syrian, Hymns, p. 185; 23:13, translation in Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, p. 69.

beings. All are that which they essentially were, something we did not see because of the difference we see; they are human beings. The stage of art is like an enchanted world. But just suppose that some evening a common absent-mindedness confused all the actors so they thought they really were what they were representing. Would this not be, in contrast to the enchantment of art, what one might call the enchantment of an evil spirit, a bewitchment? And likewise suppose that in the enchantment of actuality (for we are, indeed, all enchanted, each one bewitched by his own distinctions) our fundamental ideas became confused so that we thought ourselves essentially to be the roles we play. Alas, but is this not the case? It seems to be forgotten that the distinctions of earthly existence are only like an actor's costume or like a travelling cloak and that every individual should watchfully and carefully keep the fastening cords of this outer garment loosely tied, never in obstinate knots, so that in the moment of transformation the garment can easily be cast off, and yet we all have enough knowledge of art to be offended if an actor, when he is supposed to cast off his disguise in the moment of transformation, runs out on the stage before getting the cords loose. But, alas, in actual life one laces the outer garment of distinction so tightly that it completely conceals the external character of this garment of distinction, and the inner glory of equality never, or very rarely, shines through, something it should do and ought to do constantly.¹⁰³⁹

- 4-75 Currid discusses the ambivalence of the serpent motive in connection with the Egyptian context of the construction of the bronze serpent by Moses, which “signified blessing and curse. Those Hebrews who were bitten by the fiery serpents needed only to look to the bronze serpent and they would be healed. That was the blessing. However, the brass image also symbolized the destruction of Egypt (which had occurred during the Exodus plagues) and of those who wished to return to Egypt and her ways. That was the curse.”¹⁰⁴⁰
- 4-76 The fifteenth-century Adamgirk asks: “... if a good secret [or mystery¹⁰⁴¹] was in [the evil fruit], Why did [God] say not to draw near?”¹⁰⁴² and then answers its own question implicitly. Simply put, the gift by which Adam and Eve would “become divine,”¹⁰⁴³ and for which the Tree of Knowledge constituted a part of the approach, was, as yet, “an unattainable thing [t]hat was not in its time.”¹⁰⁴⁴ Though God intended Adam and Eve to advance in knowledge, Satan was condemned because he had acted unilaterally and preemptively, in the realization that introducing the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge to Adam and Eve under circumstances of disobedience would bring the consequences of the Fall upon them, putting them in a position of vulnerability and danger. Note that the knowledge itself was good—indeed it was absolutely necessary for their salvation—however, some kinds of knowledge are reserved to be revealed by God Himself “in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will.”¹⁰⁴⁵ As Joseph Smith taught: “That which is wrong under one circumstance, may be, and often is, right under another.”¹⁰⁴⁶ By way of analogy to the situation of Adam and Eve, recall that service in temples under conditions of worthiness is intended to bestow glory upon the participants, but, as taught in Levitical laws of purity, doing the same “while defiled by sin, was to court unnecessary danger, perhaps even death.”¹⁰⁴⁷

The message about the results of eating of one or the other tree is clear. In both cases, those who eat become “partakers of the divine nature”¹⁰⁴⁸—the Tree of Life symbolizing the means by which eternal life is granted to the faithful, while the Tree of Knowledge enables those who ingest its fruit to become 1039 Works of Love, pp. 92-96 (SV XLL 86-91), cited in S. Kierkegaard, Parables, pp. 47-48.

1040 J. D. Currid, Egypt, p. 149.

1041 M. E. Stone, Adamgirk, p. 53 n. 108.

1042 Ibid., 3:2:5, p. 53.

1043 Ibid., 1:3:71, p. 101. Note, however, that this promise actually would be fulfilled through taking of the Tree of Life, not of the Tree of Knowledge as deceptively asserted here by Satan.

1044 Ibid., 1:3:27, p. 96.

1045 D&C 88:68.

1046 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 11 April 1842, 5:135. Continuing, the Prophet wrote: “A parent may whip a child, and justly, too, because he stole an apple; whereas if the child had asked for the apple, and the parent had given it, the child would have eaten it with a better appetite; there would have been no stripes; all the pleasure of the apple would have been secured, all the misery of stealing lost. This principle will justly apply to all of God’s dealings with His children. Everything that God gives us is lawful and right; and it is proper that we should enjoy His gifts and blessings whenever and wherever He is disposed to bestow; but if we should seize upon those same blessings and enjoyments without law, without revelation, without commandment, those blessings and enjoyments would prove cursings and vexations” (ibid.).

1047 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 129.

1048 2 Peter 1:4.

“as gods, knowing good and evil.”¹⁰⁴⁹ The story of the Fall teaches, however, that eating of either tree in an unprepared state may bring disastrous consequences that can be reversed only through a divine plan of mercy that will enable them to overcome spiritual and physical death.

See Mettinger¹⁰⁵⁰ for a discussion of how, in Job 15:7-8, we are made to understand that the “wisdom of the first human being is the quality that was seized by the first man in the divine council. The situation is not one of eavesdropping. Rather, the first man supposedly had access to the divine assembly... [and] this wisdom was attained without divine authorization.”

Though Satan seems to have been aware of what had been “done in other worlds,”¹⁰⁵¹ Moses 4:6 makes it clear that he “knew not the mind of God” with respect to this one. Indeed, we might say that it was his very ignorance of God’s designs that paved the way of knowledge for Adam and Eve. The Adversary intended to thwart God’s plan by inducing their transgression, but instead unknowingly served as the required catalyst for the divinely-ordained exercise of human choice. In this set up for Satan, God had beat the Devil at his own game; in fact, we might say that He had out-tempted the great Tempter.

If, then, there was, as it seems we must assume, something different about this world as compared to the others Satan had known, what was it? Intriguingly, scripture mentions only one single respect in which this earth is unique, in contrast to all the other worlds belonging to the order of those created by Jesus Christ, namely that it was here, and here alone, that He wrought out His Atonement. Though LDS teachings affirm that all these many worlds shared the same Savior,¹⁰⁵² they are also clear in asserting that it took place, once and for all, here on the Earth. Moreover, scripture tells us why this planet was singled out: it was the only one among His creations that would be wicked enough to crucify their own Savior.¹⁰⁵³

Building on this line of thought, is it possible, as C. S. Lewis tried to imagine,¹⁰⁵⁴ that there are at least some other worlds, more enlightened than our own, on which the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge was not forbidden at the outset and on which there was no corresponding Fall? Certainly, Joseph Smith’s teachings about “translated” beings who live on more glorious worlds in such a blessed state give hints of such ideas.¹⁰⁵⁵ Though any further speculation seems unwarranted, one conclusion, at least, seems compelling: Satan’s shortsighted strategy can only be explained in terms of an effort to opportunistically exploit his discovery of certain differences between this world and the “other worlds” of which he had cognizance; and God’s success in co-opting the Devil’s strategy depended on Satan’s ignorance of the ultimate purpose for these differences.

4-77 Judaism developed the principle of hester panim (= the hiding of the face) to describe the idea of a “temporary suspension of God’s surveillance.”¹⁰⁵⁶

4-78 Flake elaborates:

In the JS1 narrative, humans are by nature separate, not evil. “The Fall” is not a fall into evil, but into alienation. Adam and Eve’s legacy is not to change human nature but, rather, to change the conditions under which that nature will be developed, that is, out of God’s presence and in a world where “God gave unto man that he should act for himself. Wherefore, man could not act for himself save it should be that he was enticed by the one or the other,”¹⁰⁵⁷ according to the Book of Mormon.¹⁰⁵⁸

4-79 Lewis expanded on this theme in Perelandra, the second work in his science fiction trilogy.¹⁰⁵⁹ As Downing explained:

1049 Moses 4:11; cf. Moses 4:28.

1050 T. N. D. Mettinger, Eden, pp. 90-92.

1051 H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 63, emphasis mine; cf. H. W. Nibley, Gifts, p. 92.

1052 See, e.g., D&C 76:41-42; J. Smith, Jr. (or W. W. Phelps), A Vision, 1 February 1843, stanzas 19-20, cited in L. E. Dahl, Vision, p. 298; D&C 88:51-61; J. Taylor, Government, 1852, pp. 76-77.

1053 2 Nephi 10:3; Moses 7:36-37; J. F. Smith, Jr., Signs, 14 October 1942, p. 5.

1054 C. S. Lewis, Perelandra.

1055 J. Smith, Jr. Teachings, 5 October 1840, pp. 170-171.

1056 A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 84 n. 5.

1057 2 Nephi 2:16.

1058 K. Flake, Translating Time, p. 517.

1059 C. S. Lewis, Perelandra.

Maleldil [God] has decreed the floating islands to be the proper home of the king and queen of Perelandra, and he has forbidden them to dwell on the fixed land. At first thought, one would tend to associate a fixed land with absolutes, eternal truths, anchoring oneself in unchanging realities. And floating islands would connote the opposite—relativism, instability, being driven by the caprices of the moment. In the Epistle of James the doubter is described as being “like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed”...¹⁰⁶⁰ But for Lewis the emphasis is not upon stability vs. instability but upon relinquishing control and accepting what is given. When Ransom[, the hero of the story,] wonders if Maleldil had told the king how the queen’s temptation would turn out, the king answers, “He gave me no assurance. No fixed land. Always one must throw oneself into the wave.”¹⁰⁶¹

4-80 “The Venerable Bede (672-735 CE) was an English monk most noted for his ecclesiastical history of England. He wrote a number of works in Latin, mostly Bible commentaries that were highly valued throughout the Middle Ages.”¹⁰⁶²

4-81 Though many Christians disparage the doctrine of original sin, “G. K. Chesterton affirmed it with equal insistence, adding the sardonic note that it is the only doctrine of the Christian faith that is empirically provable.”¹⁰⁶³ See S. Taylor, Broken-Mirror, for a thoughtful discussion of original sin in LDS theology, and its relationship to Augustinian and Pelagian ideas.

4-82 Chesterton gives the following account of Blake’s final hours:¹⁰⁶⁴

His last sickness fell upon him very slowly, and he does not seem to have taken much notice of it. He continued perpetually his pictorial design; and as long as they were growing stronger he seems to have cared very little for the fact that he was growing weaker himself. One of the last designs he made was one of the strongest he ever made—the tremendous image of the Almighty bending forward, foreshortened in colossal perspective, to trace out the heavens with a compass. Nowhere else has he so well expressed his primary theistic ideas—that God, though infinitely gigantic, should be as solid as a giant. He had often drawn men from the life; not infrequently he had drawn his dead men from the life. Here, according to his own conception, he may be said to have drawn God from the life. When he had finished the portrait (which he made sitting up in his sick-bed) he called out cheerfully, “What shall I draw after that?” Doubtless he racked his brain for some superlative spirit or archangel which would not be a mere bathos after the other. His rolling eyes (those round lustrous eyes which one can always see roll in his painted portraits) fell on the old frail and somewhat ugly woman who had been his companion so long, and he called out, “Catherine, you have been an angel to me; I will draw you next.” Throwing aside the sketch of God measuring the universe, he began industriously to draw a portrait of his wife, a portrait which is unfortunately lost, but which must have substantially resembled the remarkable sketch which a friend drew some months afterwards; the portrait of a woman at once plain and distinguished, with a face that is supremely humorous and at once harsh and kind. Long before that portrait was drawn, long before those months had elapsed, William Blake was dead.

Whatever be the explanation, it is quite certain that Blake had more positive joy on his death-bed than any other of the sons of Adam. One has heard of men singing hymns on their death-beds, in low plaintive voices. Blake was not at all like that on his death-bed: the room shook with his singing. All his songs were in praise of God, and apparently new: all his songs were songs of innocence. Every now and then he would stop and cry out to his wife, “Not mine! Not mine!” in a sort of ecstatic explanation. He truly seemed to wait for the opening of the door of death as a child waits for the opening of the cupboard on his birthday. He genuinely and solemnly seemed to hear the hoofs of the horses of death as a baby hears on Christmas Eve the reindeer hooves of Santa Claus. He was in his last moments in that wonderful world of whiteness in which white is still a color. He would have clapped his hands at a white snowflake and sung as at the white wings of an angel at the moment when he himself turned suddenly white with death.

A little later, George Richmond included the following in a letter:

He died on Sunday night at 6 o’clock in a most glorious manner. He said he was going to that Country he had all his life wished to see and expressed himself happy, hoping for salvation through Jesus Christ. Just before he died his countenance became fair. His eyes brightened and he burst out into singing of the things he saw in heaven.¹⁰⁶⁵

¹⁰⁶⁰ James 1:6.

¹⁰⁶¹ D. C. Downing, Planets, p. 91. See C. S. Lewis, Perelandra, p. 181.

¹⁰⁶² J. A. Tvedtnes et al., Traditions, p. 213. See Bibliography, p. 843.

¹⁰⁶³ Cited in A. Jacobs, Original Sin, p. x.

¹⁰⁶⁴ G. K. Chesterton, William Blake, pp. 66, 69-70.

¹⁰⁶⁵ Cited in P. Ackroyd, Blake, p. 389.

FIGURE 5-1. The Offering of Abel and Cain, 1425-1429
 Jan van Eyck, ca. 1395-1441

And the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering; But unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not respect (Moses 5:20-21). This carefully conceived scene, executed in grisaille to decorate the top of a niche containing a portrait of Adam, is part of a set of large altarpiece panel paintings in the Joost Vijdt chapel in the Cathedral of St. Bavon at Ghent, Belgium. The portrayal of Abel lifting up the lamb “prefigures both the sacrifice of Christ and the Eucharist” (E. Kren et al., Ghent). The contrasting choices of Cain and Abel with respect to their covenantal obligations typify the parting of the ways of righteousness and wickedness that begins in Moses 5. Of those who followed the latter, Jude wrote: “Woe unto them! For they have gone in the way of Cain” (Jude 1:11).

MOSES 5

The Two Ways

Overview	323
The Many Roles of Adam.....	325
The Doctrine of the Two Ways.....	328
The Way of Satan.....	329
The Way Back	338
Moses 5: Text and Commentary	352
Gleanings	402
Endnotes	432

Overview

NOT long after the departure of Oliver Cowdery for Fayette, New York in early August 1830, Joseph Smith wrote: “I began to arrange and copy the revelations which we had received from time to time; in which I was assisted by John Whitmer,¹ who now resided with me.”² The heading that prefaces the section of the JST corresponding to Moses 5:1-6:52 reads “Chapter Second—A Revelation concerning Adam after he had been driven out of the Garden of Eden.”³

While the importance of the account of the Creation and the Fall in Moses 1-4 cannot be overstated, a careful reading of Moses 5-8 is required to see the prior material in its overall context.⁴ Reeves observes:

Most modern students of Bible fail to discern the pivotal significance which [the tale of Cain and Abel] plays in the present narrative structure of Genesis because of the enormous religious significance with which ancient, medieval, and modern Christian interpreters have invested the immediately preceding story of Adam and Eve in the Garden. The subsequent Cain and Abel affair is homiletically reduced to an afterthought cast under the dark shadow of human hubris and disobedience to God. But I would like to suggest that while admittedly the episode of disobedience in the Garden was not a good thing, the story of Cain and Abel introduces something far worse into the created order; namely, the “corruption” and “bloodshed” of which the Qur’anic angels speak.⁵ It represents a critical turning point in antediluvian history, and is (from the point of view of the final redactor of Genesis) the key crime which leads ineluctably to the Flood.⁶

Happily, however, the story of Adam and Eve and their family found in Moses 5 “is not an account of sin alone but the beginning of a drama about becoming a being who fully

¹ See Endnote 5-1, p. 432.

² J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, July 1830, 1:104. Whitmer transcribed the remainder of Moses 5 and portions of Moses 6 on two occasions: October 21 (Moses 5:43-51) and November 30 (Moses 5:52-6:18). See S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 57.

³ S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 92.

⁴ C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 2-3.

⁵ See M. M. Ali, Qur’an, 2:30, p. 17; cf. Moses 6:15, 8:28.

⁶ J. C. Reeves, Flowing Stream. See Endnote 5-2, p. 432.

reflects God's very own image. Genesis is not only about the origins of sin; it is also about the foundations of human perfection. The work that God has begun in Creation He will bring to completion.... [E]arly Jewish and Christian readers [were] aware of this while most of their modern counterparts have not been."⁷ The clarity with which the fundamental doctrines, laws, and ordinances of the Gospel begin to unfold in Moses 5 fully justifies Nibley in calling it "the greatest of all chapters" in scripture.⁸

Consistent with the overall developmental themes of perfection and corruption throughout the remainder of the book of Moses, chapter 5 is structured into a series of stories highlighting the contrast between those who would and would not hearken to the voice of God.⁹ We read the record of Adam and Eve's obedience to the "second commandments"¹⁰ given after the Fall and of the angel's explanation of the law of sacrifice.¹¹ We also are provided with an extended account of how, with the tragedy of Cain and Abel,¹² "the rebellion in the heavens was transmitted to a rebellion on the earth."¹³ Following the brief genealogies of the posterity of Cain,¹⁴ we encounter the story of Lamech's rise to the pinnacle of wickedness through the murder of his rivals,¹⁵ an account that foreshadows the sad notice of the complete parting of the ways between the righteous and the wicked.¹⁶

Moses 5 fills in many details that are missing from Genesis, such as the reason why Cain's offering was rejected,¹⁷ and the fact that there were descendants born to Adam and Eve prior to Cain and Abel.¹⁸ It was from among these descendants that Cain chose a wife¹⁹—and, later, it was from among these same family members he had reason to fear vengeance for his crime against Abel.²⁰ Sarna argues that many details of this sort were no doubt originally contained in an independent narrative, of which the traditional text of Genesis preserves only the "bare bones of the story."²¹ Thus, it is not surprising that valuable text and commentary relating to themes missing in Genesis but found in the book of Moses have survived in fragmentary form within Jewish, Islamic, early Christian, and other sources—though, not unexpectedly, seemingly genuine ancient material is mixed with material of more dubious provenance.²² Robinson summarizes some of the significant parallels between such literature and the prophetic additions to Genesis provided in the book of Moses:

Among the extracanonical themes found in the writings of Joseph Smith—themes confirmed to be ancient ones in light of the literature discovered only after his death—are the heavenly messengers, the raising of Adam, Adam's detection of Satan disguised as an angel of light (a false messenger), the promise to Adam of a coming Savior, the gathering of Adam's righteous posterity to receive his final blessing or testament, and Adam's prediction of future world history. In addition, the doctrine of the two Adams—the divine, heavenly Adam and the

7 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 8. See Endnote 5-3, p. 432.

8 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 231.

9 See Moses 5:16, 17, 23, 57.

10 Alma 12:37. See also Alma 12:29-35, Moses 6:56.

11 Moses 5:1-12.

12 Moses 5:13-41.

13 J. Taylor, Mediation, 1882, p. 68; J. Taylor, Gospel Kingdom, 1882, p. 101.

14 Moses 5:42-46.

15 Moses 5:47-54.

16 Moses 5:55-59.

17 Moses 5:18-26.

18 Moses 5:2.

19 Moses 5:28.

20 Moses 5:39.

21 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 31. See Endnote 5-4, p. 432.

22 S. E. Robinson, Lying. See Excursus 29: The Development of Extracanonical Literature on Adam and Eve, p. 601.

created, earthly Adam—found in many of the ancient traditions but mostly unknown to scholars until around the turn of the century, may have some application to certain cryptic remarks of Brigham Young on the subject of our primal ancestor....²³

It is... remarkable that Joseph Smith could reconstruct the main outlines of the ancient extra-canonical Adam literature without benefit of acquaintance with the pseudepigrapha known to us in the twentieth century.²⁴

The Many Roles of Adam

Though surprisingly little is said about Adam and Eve²⁵ in the Old Testament outside of the first chapters of Genesis,²⁶ other works of scripture further describe their crucial roles in helping to carry out the Plan of Salvation.²⁷ We also have accounts of two discourses by Joseph Smith where he focused on the figure of Adam, with particular emphasis on his responsibilities with respect to certain priesthood keys and his “standing as head of the human family.” Teachings from these discourses, given 2 July 1839 and 5 October 1840, illuminate some of Adam’s many roles and assignments:

- Adam is Michael the Archangel. “He is Michael the Archangel, spoken of in the Scriptures.”²⁸
- Adam was placed at the head of the organization of premortal spirits. “The Father called all his spirits before Him at the creation of man, and organized them. He (Adam) is the head, and was told to multiply.”²⁹
- Adam held the keys of the Presidency from generation to generation. “The Priesthood was first given to Adam: he obtained the First Presidency, and held the keys of it from generation to generation. He obtained it in the Creation, before the world was formed, as in Genesis 1:26, 27, 28. He had dominion given him over every living creature.”³⁰
- Adam is the “Ancient of Days,” and the first to whom priesthood ordinances were revealed. “Adam, who was the first man,... [or] ‘Ancient of Days,’³¹ or in other words, the first and oldest of all, the great, grand progenitor of whom it is said in another place he is Michael, because he was the first and father of all, not only by progeny, but the first to hold the spiritual blessings, to whom was made known the plan of ordinances for the salvation of his posterity unto the end, and to whom Christ was first revealed, and through whom Christ has been revealed from heaven, and will continue to be revealed from henceforth.”³² “That he received revelations, commandments and ordinances at the beginning is beyond the power of controversy; else how did they begin to offer sacrifices to God in an acceptable manner? And if they offered sacrifices they must be authorized by ordination.”³³
- Adam blessed his posterity in Adam-ondi-Ahman. “I saw Adam in the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman. He called together his children and blessed them with a patriarchal blessing. The Lord appeared in their midst, and he (Adam) blessed them all and foretold what should

23 See Excursus 30: Adam-God Theory and the Heavenly and Earthly Adam, p. 603.

24 S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, p. 147. See Endnote 5-5, p. 433.

25 See Endnote 5-6, p. 433.

26 See Endnote 5-7, p. 433.

27 E.g. Romans 5:14; 1 Corinthians 15:22; Jude 1:9; Revelation 12:7; 2 Nephi 2; Alma 12, 42; D&C 27:11, 29:26, 78:16, 84:16, 88:112, 107:54, 116:1, 117:8, 128:21, 137:5, 138:38. See also Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582.

28 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, p. 157. See Endnote 5-8, p. 433.

29 Ibid., p. 157. See Endnote 5-9, p. 433.

30 See Endnote 5-10, p. 433.

31 See Endnote 5-11, p. 434.

32 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 October 1840, p. 167.

33 Ibid., 5 October 1840, pp. 168-169

FIGURE 5-2. The Archangel Michael Subduing Satan, 1518
Raffaello Sanzi (Raphael), 1483-1520

SEE COLOR PLATE 5-2.

*For Michael shall fight their battles, and shall overcome him who seeketh the throne of him who sitteth upon the throne, even the Lamb.*¹ To the story of Michael as a triumphant warrior in the premortal war in heaven, the Doctrine and Covenants adds a prophecy that he will lead angelic armies against the host of Satan in a final battle following the Millennium.²

As a symbol of the temporarily renewed relationship between France and the Church—and of the pontiff's campaign for a joint expedition against the Turks—Pope Leo X commissioned this painting for the French king Francis I, the grandmaster of the Order of St. Michael.³ Middleton writes: "Raphael... 'the prince of painters' is considered by many, and with some justification, to be the greatest painter who ever lived... One of Raphael's last works, the present painting anticipates the high baroque in its turbulent movement and vivid coloration, and set the standard pattern for depictions of this celestial event for the next four hundred years."⁴

1 D&C 88:15.

2 D&C 88:110-116.

3 Musée du Louvre, Saint Michel.

4 J. Middleton, Michael.

befall them to the latest generation. This is why Adam blessed his posterity: he wanted to bring them into the presence of God. They looked for a city, etc., 'whose builder and maker is God.'³⁴

- By Adam's authority, the priesthood keys are revealed. "The keys [of the Priesthood] have to be brought from heaven whenever the Gospel is sent. When they are revealed from heaven, it is by Adam's authority."³⁵ "[God] set the ordinances to be the same forever and ever, and set Adam to watch over them, to reveal them from heaven to man, or to send angels to reveal them. 'Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?'"³⁶ These angels are under the direction of Michael or Adam, who acts under the direction of the Lord."³⁷
- Others will give account of their stewardship to Adam, and Adam will give account to Christ. "Christ is the Great High Priest; Adam next."³⁸ "The keys were... given... by him to others. He will have to give an account of his stewardship, and they to him."³⁹ "This, then, is the nature of the Priesthood; every man holding the Presidency of his dispensation, and one man holding the Presidency of them all, even Adam; and Adam receiving his Presidency and authority from the Lord, but cannot receive a fulness until Christ shall present the Kingdom to the Father, which shall be at the end of the last dispensation."⁴⁰

34 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, pp. 158-159; Hebrews 11:10; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 18 December 1833, pp. 38-39; Excursus 38: The Meaning of "Adam-ondi-Ahman", p. 622; Excursus 39: The Location of Adam-ondi-Ahman, p. 623; and Excursus 40: Dating Joseph Smith's Vision of Adam-ondi-Ahman, p. 625. See Endnote 5-12, p. 434.

35 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, p. 157; cf. K. Rudolph, Coptic, GL 3:43, p. 270.

36 Hebrews 1:14.

37 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 October 1840, p. 168.

38 Ibid., 2 July 1839, p. 158.

39 Ibid.

40 Ibid., 5 October 1840, p. 169.

- Adam will hold a council to prepare his posterity for the second coming of Christ. “Father Adam, Michael... will call his children together and hold a council with them to prepare them for the coming of the Son of Man. He (Adam) is the father of the human family, and presides over the spirits of all men, and all that have had the keys must stand before him in this grand council. This may take place before some of us leave this stage of action. The Son of Man stands before him, and there is given him glory and dominion. Adam delivers up his stewardship to Christ, that which was delivered to him as holding the keys of the universe, but retains his standing as head of the human family.”⁴¹

As a supplement to the wealth of extrabiblical material available in LDS scripture, Robinson notes that the “figure of Adam was long a favorite with the authors of both Jewish and Christian apocryphal and pseudepigraphal literature.”⁴² He writes:

There was a rich tradition of Adam literature in ancient Judaism and early Christianity.⁴³ The interest in Adam and the focus on his experiences both before and after the Fall were much more intense during those earlier periods of history than in the modern world generally, where the figure of the primal ancestor has lost its normative character. Perhaps as a result of that loss of interest, many of the ancient books attributed to or associated with Adam have not survived, among them the Book of Adam, the Book of the Generations of Adam, the Testament of the Protoplasts, the other Apocalypse(s) of Adam, and the Book of the Daughters of Adam.

Among the Latter-day Saints, however, the figure of Adam largely retains its normative character. In this sense, the Latter-day Saints are closer to the ancient world and to the early Church than are most of our contemporaries. Indeed, the Latter-day Saint temple endowment may be said in some sense to be our own “Book of Adam and Eve,” and functions in the Latter-day Church in precisely the same way that extracanonical Adam literature functioned in ancient Judaism and early Christianity.⁴⁴

Robinson summarizes some of the reasons why the life of Adam has been the natural focus for temple ritual, both inside and outside of LDS tradition:

As the first created one, the protoplast, Adam served as a revelator of the mysteries of Creation and of the natural order of the universe. As the first human being, he stood as the archetypical exemplar of the human condition and of man in his quest for and relationship with God. As the... common ancestor, all human experience was conveniently subsumed under the experience of Adam in the beginning.⁴⁵

Commenting on the function served by dramatic presentations of the Fall in medieval mystery plays, Auerbach makes a distinction that bears on the experience of LDS temple worship: “In contrast to the feudal literature of the courtly romance, which leads away from the reality of the life of its class into a world of heroic fable and adventure, here there is a movement in the opposite direction, from distant legend and its figural interpretation into everyday contemporary reality.”⁴⁶ Of the relationship between Adam’s experiences and our own, Nibley writes:

Let us consider our Adam. What kind of being is he? The same kind as ourselves—but what is that? He plays a surprising number of roles, each with a different persona, a different name, a different environment, a different office and calling: (1) he was a member of the presidency

41 Ibid., 2 July 1839, p. 157.

42 S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam, p. 3.

43 See Endnote 5-13, p. 434.

44 S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, pp. 146-147.

45 S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam, p. 3.

46 E. Auerbach, Mimesis, pp. 158-159. See Endnote 5-14, p. 434.

when the earth project was being discussed; (2) he was on the committee of inspection that came down from time to time to check up on the operation; (3) then he changed his name and nature to live upon the earth, but it was a very different earth from any we know; it had to be a garden place specifically prepared for him. (4) When he left that paradise, he changed his nature again and for the first time began to reckon the passing of time by our measurements, becoming a short-lived creature subject to death. (5) In this condition, he began to receive instructions from heavenly mentors on how to go about changing his condition and status, entering into a covenant that completely changed his mentality and way of life... The man Adam passes from one state of being to another, and so do we: “as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.”⁴⁷ (6) In time he died and became a spirit being, the head of all his spirit children in the waiting place, according to common Christian tradition as well as our own. (7) Then he became, after Christ, the firstfruits of the resurrection and returned triumphantly to his first and second estates (8) to go on to glory and eternal lives. In these seven or eight Adams, we have another fundamental teaching that sets Mormonism off... [Rather than a one-act drama, we] see an ongoing epic of many episodes, each one a play in itself—a dispensation.⁴⁸

The Doctrine of the Two Ways

Relating the themes of opposition and agency that are portrayed in the life of Adam and Eve and enacted in our own, Nibley frequently wrote about “the inescapable choice between Two Ways.”⁴⁹ Although this theme is Jewish,⁵⁰ says Allison, “it is also Greek; the motif indeed belongs to world-wide moral tradition.”⁵¹ Nibley explains:

No teaching is more frequently met with nor more emphatically brought home in the earliest Christian literature than the famous doctrine of the “Two Ways,” which proclaims that there lie before every human being and before the church itself two roads between which a choice must be made. The one is the road of darkness, the way of evil; the other, the way of light. Every man must choose between the two every day of his life; that choosing is the most important thing he does, and the two ways, good and evil are absolutely essential to God’s plan. There is nothing weak or vicious in the arrangement, for every man is clearly given to understand that as he chooses so he will be judged. He will be judged by God in the proper time and place. Meantime he must be free, perfectly free, to choose his own way.⁵²

None may commit his decision to the judgment of a faction, a party, a leader, or a nation; none can delegate his free agency to another. “Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil.”⁵³ We cannot protest innocence on the grounds of having been given bad advice, doing what we did for the best interests of the country, doing only what others were doing, or being forced to do it by the need to check and frustrate a nefarious enemy....

It is easy to imagine absolutes, and to think and argue in terms of absolutes, as the theologians have always done: Good and evil, light and darkness, hot and cold, black and white—we know exactly what they are; but in the real world we rarely experience the pure thing—our own experience lies between. Yet standing on that middle ground, we are faced with absolute decisions. It is not where we stand, says Ezekiel,⁵⁴ that makes us good or evil in God’s eyes—no

47 1 Corinthians 15:49.

48 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 77.

49 H. W. Nibley, Prophetic, p. 462. See also J. W. Welch, Sermon, pp. 47, 75; J. W. Welch, Light, pp. 173-174, 187, 218. See Endnote 5-15, p. 434.

50 See, e.g., Deuteronomy 30:19. An early Christian dictum held that “there is no third term” (tertium non datur) or, we might say, “there is no other way” (A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 71).

51 D. C. Allison, Testament, p. 242.

52 H. W. Nibley, Liberty, pp. 184-185; cf. H. W. Nibley, Consecration, p. 435.

53 Exodus 23:2.

54 Ezekiel 18:19-28.

one has reached the top or bottom in this short life—but the direction in which we are facing. There we have only two choices. The road up and the road down are the same, says Heraclitus. It all depends on the way you are facing. You are taking either the up-road or the down-road; there is no third way, for if you try to compromise and go off at an angle, you will never reach either goal. You are either repenting or not repenting, and that is, according to the scriptures, the whole difference between being righteous or being wicked.⁵⁵

By means of this “doctrine of probation,” it is continually demonstrated “that the embattled hosts on earth [are] but a local version of the war in heaven.”⁵⁶ The most astonishing aspect of it is that although “[t]he devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually,”⁵⁷ ... God permits it! He has expressly allowed Satan, the common enemy, to try men and to tempt them—that is the whole point of the thing; men must be exposed to both influences so each can make his own choice.”⁵⁸ “To these two ways all the children of men are born,” says the Rule of the Community (Manual of Discipline) from Qumran, “and to these two divisions they are heirs; every one of them each in his generation, and in his time every man shares more or less in both of them.”⁵⁹ The whole human race, ‘all kinds of their spirits and their natures’⁶⁰ are put to the same test, each in his own dispensation, ‘until the final appointed end-time.’⁶¹

The Way of Satan

As an illustration of the pull of the downward way, Nibley succinctly summarizes the stock story of Satan’s efforts to supplant God’s plan of dominion with his own—a sequence of scenes that has been replayed countless times since Adam and Eve left the Garden of Eden:

The story is told not only of Adam but of the other great patriarchs as well. Noah was confronted by the same party with the same proposition while he was working in his garden after the Flood.⁶² Abraham too had an Eden and an altar, and while he was once calling upon God in prayer, Satan suddenly showed up with an insolent, “Here I am!” and proceeded with his sales pitch.⁶³ Moses like Christ was tempted on a mountain, by the same person and with the same proposal: “If thou wilt worship me, all shall be thine.”⁶⁴ Adam is thus only the first; the elements of the story that follow are found in various combinations among the many texts of the growing Adam literature that is coming to light in our generation. The texts often take dramatic form indicative of ritual origin.⁶⁵

As Adam was praying one day, runs the story, a distinguished gentleman appeared on the scene and engaged him in conversation... [H]e was well-dressed, and came to Adam with “cunning and smooth talk, as a true friend genuinely concerned for his welfare.”⁶⁶ He began with some harmless generalities — the weather and the scenery: it was, he observed, a most 55 H. W. Nibley, Prophetic, pp. 462-463. See Endnote 5-16, p. 434.

56 H. W. Nibley, Expanding 1992, p. 195.

57 Moroni 7:12.

58 H. W. Nibley, Prophetic, p. 461. See Endnote 5-17, p. 435.

59 IQS 4:15-16.

60 IQS 3:13-14.

61 IQS 4:25. H. W. Nibley, Expanding 1992, pp. 197-198. See Instruction on the Two Spirits, Rule of the Community, IQS 3:13-4:25 in F. G. Martinez, DSS Translated, pp. 6-8; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 465-467; G. Vermes, Complete, pp. 101-103. See also The Two Ways, 4Q473 in G. Vermes, Complete, p. 443.

62 M. J. B. bin Gorion et al., Mimekor, 13, 1:24; J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 2, 36:3, p. 29.

63 D. C. Allison, Testament, 16:6-10, pp. 319, 328-331; L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:270-272; E. P. Sanders, Testament of Abraham, 16:6-10, p. 892; cf. M. J. B. bin Gorion et al., Mimekor, 22, 1:58-59.

64 Moses 1:12-19; Luke 4:9.

65 See Endnote 5-18, p. 435.

66 K. Kohler, Jewish Quarterly Review 7, 1895, p. 589. See also D. C. Allison, Testament, 16:5, pp. 319, 328; E. P. Sanders, Testament of Abraham, 16:5, p. 892.

FIGURE 5-3. How the Devil Deceived Eve, early 14th century
Lutwin

When eighteen days of their weeping were completed, then Satan took on the form of a Cherub with splendid attire, and went to the Tigris river to deceive Eve.¹ The illustration comes from the only existing copy of Eva und Adam, a mid-15th-century manuscript in the National Library in Vienna, whose original by the otherwise unknown Lutwin was probably written in the early 14th century. The Middle High German text was composed in the form of poetry, and is thought to be based on an unidentified Latin source incorporating elements “not included in any of the known versions of the Vita Adae et Evae.”² In the drawing, the raised earth next to the water represents the Garden of Eden (often described in similar texts as being “high above the earth”³) from which Adam and Eve have been expelled. The Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge both stand in the center of the Garden with their branches intertwined.⁴

According to Lutwin: “Eve stood in the water for eighteen days doing her penance without a word (to anybody) while fasting with pitiful lamentation. Then Satan roused himself, for he was sorry to see anything good being achieved, for that was not in accordance with his false counsel. He had transformed his horrible appearance into that of an angel of light and, on seeing her weeping in the water, asked: ‘Eve, why are you crying? Now you must no longer lament, for God has taken heed of your penance. This very moment I am to return you to the place where you were banished, and all will be well with you as it was before. You need no longer do penance, for we angels have requested this of God...’ With that the Devil offered her his hand and then helped her out of the water and onto the bank.”⁶ The text just above the illustration rubric comments: “Dis was ir ander myssetat” (“This was her second⁷ mistake”). Lutwin continues: “[T]he Devil in angel’s clothing led Eve by the hand (to the place) where she found Adam, who with heartfelt contrition was standing in the Jordan as a penance. The same wicked spirit, the sum of all that is evil, had thought that with his false lies he could betray Adam as he had Eve. Adam, however, was so wise that... he recognized his dissimulation... at once.”⁹

In response to Adam’s query to Satan as to why he was so intent on troubling them, the Devil replied with the story of his refusal to bow down with the other angels in homage to the first created man as the “image of God.”¹⁰ Then “Adam, sighing, turned to heaven. He prayed: ‘Creator, sweet God, everything that heaven and earth contain is under your command; in your mercy drive from me this evil spirit who alienates me from you. Give me the joy and the status which he lost in heaven.’”¹¹ This I ask of you, Lord, grant me this through your goodness and in your honour.’ After these words the Devil vanished.”¹² Adam’s upraised arm is “a gesture of both speech and action”¹³ that could be taken as an oath-, covenant-, or prayer-related movement,¹⁴ a warning for Eve,¹⁵ and/or an attempt to repel Satan.¹⁶

1 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Armenian 9:1, p. 11E.

2 Latin Life of Adam and Eve; M.-B. Halford, Eva und Adam, p. 37; cf. p. 95.

3 M. E. Stone, Selections, p. 188. See also M. D. Gibson, Rolls 1901, p. 112.

4 See Commentary 3:9-h, p. 167; Excursus 25: The Tree of Life as the Hidden Throne of God, p. 591; and Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654. Cf. Wahb bin Munabbih in al-Tabari, Creation, 1:106, p. 277; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 23.

5 The Life of Adam and Eve says this was done with “weeping and... false tears dripping down on his garment and from his garment down to the ground” (G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Georgian 9:2, p. 11E; cf. S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:60, p. 70).

6 M.-B. Halford, Eva und Adam, pp. 255-256; cf. M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, pp. 9-10.

7 Or “other.”

8 Line 1310, M.-B. Halford, Eva und Adam, pp. 146, 260.

9 Ibid., p. 259; cf. M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 10; D&C 128:20, 129:4-7; Commentary 1:12-d, p. 53.

10 See the overview of Moses 4, p. 225 and Excursus 23: The Roles of Christ, Adam, and Michael, p. 582.

11 See the overview of Moses 4, p. 225 and Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575.

12 M.-B. Halford, Eva und Adam, p. 262.

13 P. H. Jolly, Eve and Adam, p. 14.

14 S. D. Ricks, Oaths, pp. 49-50; J. W. Wevers, Notes, p. 200. Note that in one source, before her penance, Eve is instructed by Adam: “Raise your hand toward the Lord” (M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 9).

15 S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, p. 142.

16 Cyril of Jerusalem, Five, 19:2, 4, pp. 144-145; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, 1:2, 4, p. 516. See Commentary 5:29-a, p. 377 and Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575.

glorious and beautiful world. This, however, by way of leading up to his next point, which was that he happened to be the owner and proprietor of it all.⁶⁷ Yes sir, as far as the eye could see it was all his, and he tolerated no nonsense in it: nobody dared make trouble where he was in charge. This was all hokum, of course; “Satan never owned the earth; he never made a particle of it,” said Brigham Young, “his labor is not to create, but to destroy.”⁶⁸ But to demonstrate his authority, when three strangers (usually described as angels)⁶⁹ appeared on the scene at this moment, he at once challenged them as trespassers, asking them if they had any money. He explained to Adam that everything in his world could be had for money,⁷⁰ and then got down to business. For the fellow was all business, a person of integrity, ready to keep his part of an agreement (the agreement always turns out to be a trap for the other party), pious and God-fearing,⁷¹ dedicated to hard work — he works, in fact, “like a demon.” He was there to offer Adam the chance of a lifetime to buy in on a scheme that would give him anything he wanted in this world. It was an ingenious and simple self-financing operation in which one would buy power with wealth and then more wealth with the power, until one might end up owning and controlling everything. The initial capital? It was right under their feet! You begin by taking the treasures of the earth, and by exchanging them for the services of important people in key positions; you end up running everything your way. What if your rule is one of blood and terror? Better to rule in hell, as Milton’s Satan puts it, than to be ruled in heaven!⁷²

The most widely-known extracanonical account of Adam and Eve’s experiences after they leave the Garden of Eden is the Life of Adam and Eve (hereafter Life), which exists in Greek, Latin, Armenian, and Georgian recensions⁷³ as well as in several later texts derived in part from it.⁷⁴ A major theme of this series of stories concerns the unsuccessful attempts of Satan to deceive Adam and Eve, who become increasingly immune to his wiles through the knowledge and protective power provided by angelic teachings, covenants, and ordinances.

For example, the Life tells of how Adam, following his transgression and expulsion from Eden, spent forty days of penance standing in the Jordan River⁷⁵—the same river that Christ would be baptized in, and the same period of time that Catholics (including candidates for baptism) traditionally spend in prayer and fasting during Lent.⁷⁶ Likewise, Eve is said to have agreed to spend thirty-seven days in the Tigris River. During Eve’s penance, Satan appears as an angel of light to persuade her to leave the river prematurely. Robinson notes the significant warning that Adam had previously given her: “‘Take great care of thyself. Except thou seest me and all my tokens,⁷⁷ depart not out of the water, nor trust in the words, which are said to thee, lest thou fall again into the snare.’ Thus, properly equipped, Eve does not succumb to Satan the second time, according to the Slavonic version.”⁷⁸

67 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 33/34.1-35/37.1, p. 6E.

68 B. Young, 31 July 1864, p. 320.

69 See references in H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 460-461. See Endnote 5-19, p. 435.

70 Cf. R. A. Kraft, Job, 23:3b, p. 45: “Pay the price and take what you want.” See also R. A. Kraft, Job, 6-7, pp. 27-29; H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 63; H. W. Nibley, Consecration, p. 439. See Endnote 5-20, p. 435.

71 See Endnote 5-21, p. 435.

72 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, pp. 13-14; cf. J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:261, p. 22. See Endnote 5-22, p. 435.

73 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis.

74 E.g., E. A. W. Budge, Cave; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve.

75 See Endnote 5-23, p. 435.

76 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, pp. 8-9; M. D. Johnson, Life, 6:1-8:3, pp. 258, 260; cf. Moses 6:52-68 and Commentary 5:6-a, p. 360. See Endnote 5-24, p. 436.

77 In another version of the story, Adam implies that Eve was to wait in the water until “an angel of God” came to bring her out (M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 10).

78 S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam, p. 142. See also B. T. Ostler, Clothed, p. 6.

FIGURE 5-4. The Bond of Adam, after a Church Mural in Voronet, Moldavia, 1547

The Devil said, 'I will not permit you to till the earth, unless you sign a cheirograph, pledging that you belong to me'¹ The story of the Cheirograph begins when the Devil claims ownership of the earth and accuses Adam of trespassing. "In this remarkable image," part of the unique iconographical programme of four churches in North Moldavia, the robed Adam kneels before the naked Satan and "dutifully signs a bond of indebtedness that deeds over to [the 'Lord of the Earth' himself and] all his offspring."² Satan's plan fails, of course, because—as Adam knows—God is the true "Lord of the earth." The title at the top of this picture reads: "Here Adam is writing his Cheirograph."³

1 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Slavonic 33-34.6, p. 6E.

2 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 163.

3 P. Henry, Moldavie, 2:246, republished in G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 163. See also M. E. Stone, Adam's Contract, pp. 57-59.

Another account of Satan's deception is found in the story of Adam's cheirograph, from the Slavonic Life. A cheirograph is literally a "note of hand,"⁷⁹ but in this context it means more specifically a "contract":⁸⁰

Adam took the oxen and began to till, that he might obtain nourishment.

Then the Devil appeared and stood steadfastly in front of the oxen and wouldn't allow Adam to till the earth. And the Devil said to Adam, "the earth is mine,⁸¹ God owns Heaven (and the Garden). If you want to become mine, then, by all means, till the earth. If, however, you want to belong to God then go only into Paradise."

Adam said, "God owns Heaven and Paradise, but God also owns the earth and the sea and the entire world."

The Devil said, "I will not permit you to till the earth, unless you sign a cheirograph, pledging that you belong to me."

Adam said, "Whoever is Lord of the earth, to him both I and my children belong."⁸² Adam knew of course that the Lord would come down to the earth and take on himself the form of a man and trample down the Devil.

79 Greek kheir = hand, graph = writing.

80 M. E. Stone, Legend, pp. 152-153. See also Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

81 See Endnote 5-26, p. 436.

82 See Endnote 5-27, p. 437.

The Devil said, “Write for me your cheirograph.”

And Adam wrote and said, “Whoever is Lord of the earth, both I and my children belong to him.”

The Devil took the cheirograph for himself.⁸³

Satan’s plan fails, of course, because—as Adam knows—God is the true “Lord of the earth.” Related accounts describe how the cheirograph is destroyed by Christ at His baptism or, according to some versions, at the time of His visit to “proclaim liberty to the captives” in spirit prison following His crucifixion.⁸⁴

In contrast to stories that emphasize the role of Satan as a deceiver and tempter, we find him elsewhere employed not as “a figure of complete evil” but rather as a means to represent “the principle of justice.”⁸⁵ For example, a ninth-century midrash reads:

Satan [comes] on the Day of Atonement to accuse Israel and he specifies the iniquities of Israel, saying: Master of the universe, as there are adulterers among the nations of the earth; so, too, among Israel. There are thieves among the nations of the earth; so, too, among Israel. But the Holy One, blessed be He, specifies the just deeds of Israel. Then what does He do? He suspends the beam of the scales and looks to see what the balance or imbalance is between the iniquities and the just deeds. And as they are weighed—the iniquities against the just deeds, these against those—the two pans of the scale balance exactly. Thereupon Satan goes out to fetch more iniquities to put in the pan of iniquities and bring it down.

What does the Holy One, blessed be He, do? Even while Satan is going about seeking iniquities, the Holy One, blessed be He, takes the iniquities out of the pan and hides them under His royal purple.⁸⁶ Then Satan comes and finds no iniquity on the scales, as is said “The iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none.”⁸⁷ When Satan sees there is no iniquity, he cries out before the Holy One, blessed be He: Master of the universe, “Thou hast carried away the iniquity of Thy people.”⁸⁸ When David realized what God does, he said: “...Happy is he whose transgression is carried away, whose sin is hidden.”⁸⁹

“In this midrash,” Peter Schäfer argues, “the principles of justice and mercy are evenly balanced—the one personified in Satan, the other concretized in the robe of God—and justice was overtaken by mercy.”⁹⁰ Anderson further observes that: “Mercy would have no value unless it was calibrated against a strict measure of justice.”⁹¹ But a world that is just, through and through, would allow no room for humans.”⁹²

In the well-known parable by Elder Boyd K. Packer entitled The Mediator, a theme similar to the story of the cheirograph is concerned, not with a tale about Satan’s fraud in claiming ownership of the earth, but rather with the dilemma of trying to reconcile the strict demands

83 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 33-34.1-35-37.1, p. 6E.

84 Isaiah 61:1; cf. Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617 and Figure 6-12, p. 471. See Endnote 5-28, p. 437.

85 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 167-168.

86 See Endnote 5-29, p. 437.

87 Jeremiah 50:20.

88 Psalm 85:3.

89 W. G. Braude, Rabbati, 45:2, pp. 783-784. See Psalm 32:1.

90 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 167-168; cf. Alma 34:15: “the bowels of mercy... overpowereth justice.” See Endnote 5-30, p. 437.

91 Cf. Alma 42:22-25.

92 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 168. As Joseph Smith said: “God does not look on sin with allowance, but when men have sinned there must be allowance made for them (J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 9 June 1842, p. 240; cf. D&C 1:31-32). See Endnote 5-31, p. 437.

FIGURE 5-5. The Foolish Man and the Creditor, 1978
Jerry Harston, 1943-

And thus we see that all mankind were fallen, and they were in the grasp of justice.¹ In the parable of Elder Boyd K. Packer, the theme of the cheirograph is combined, not with a tale about fraud and deception, but about the dilemma of trying to reconcile a creditor's strict demands for justice with his client's pleas for mercy. Elder Packer writes that the debtor "had been warned about going into that much debt, and particularly about his creditor. But... he was sure he could pay for it later. So he signed a contract."²

The later intercession of Christ as the Mediator recalls Shakespeare's words describing the accusation of the unyielding Angelo and the moving reply of Isabella on behalf of her guilty brother Claudio:

Angelo: Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Isabella: Alas! Alas!
Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once;
And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? Oh, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips
Like man new made.³

1 Alma 42:14.

2 B. K. Packer, Mediator 1977, p. 54; B. K. Packer, Errand, p. 44.

3 W. Shakespeare, Measure, 2:2:70-79, p. 560.

of justice with mankind's need for mercy. Though the subject of the story represents, like Adam, an "Everyman," his antagonist is not the Devil but rather an unyielding creditor who demands that the terms of the contract for repayment of a loan be fully satisfied, despite the entreaties of his client for mercy. Rejoins the creditor:

Mercy is always so one-sided. It would serve only you. If I show mercy to you, it will leave me unpaid. It is justice I demand. Do you believe in justice?" "I believed in justice when I signed the contract," the debtor said. "It was on my side then, for I thought it would protect me. I did not need mercy then, nor think I should need it ever. Justice, I thought, would serve both of us equally as well." "It is justice that demands that you pay the contract or suffer the penalty," the creditor replied. "That is the law. You have agreed to it and that is the way it must be. Mercy cannot rob justice."

There they were: One meting out justice, the other pleading for mercy. Neither could prevail except at the expense of the other. "If you do not forgive the debt there will be no mercy," the debtor pleaded. "If I do, there will be no justice," was the reply.

Both laws, it seemed, could not be served. They are two eternal ideals that appear to contradict one another. Is there no way for justice to be fully served, and mercy also?

There is a way! The law of justice can be fully satisfied and mercy can be fully extended—but it takes someone else. And so it happened this time.

The debtor had a friend. He came to help. He knew the debtor well. He knew him to be short-sighted. He thought him foolish to have gotten himself into such a predicament. Nevertheless, he wanted to help because he loved him. He stepped between them, faced the creditor, and made this offer. "I will pay the debt if you will free the debtor from his contract so that he may keep his possessions and not go to prison."

As the creditor was pondering the offer, the mediator added, “You demanded justice. Though he cannot pay you, I will do so. You will have been justly dealt with and can ask no more. It would not be just.”

And so the creditor agreed.

The mediator turned then to the debtor. “If I pay your debt, will you accept me as your creditor?” “Oh yes, yes,” cried the debtor. “You saved me from prison and showed mercy to me.” “Then,” said the benefactor, “you will pay the debt to me and I will set the terms. It will not be easy, but it will be possible. I will provide a way. You need not go to prison.”

And so it was that the creditor was paid in full. He had been justly dealt with. No contract had been broken.

The debtor, in turn, had been extended mercy. Both laws stood fulfilled. Because there was a mediator, justice had claimed its full share, and mercy was satisfied.⁹³

The Mediator, of course, represents Jesus Christ, who “atoneth for the sins of the world, to bring about the plan of mercy, to appease the demands of justice, that God might be a perfect, just God, and a merciful God also.”⁹⁴

Since the Atonement will cover the offenses of the innocent and unwittingly deceived, as well as temporarily shortsighted individuals who repent and prepare themselves to receive the gift of the Savior’s great sacrifice, there is a happy ending for each of the stories thus far recounted. However, Moses 5 has a different message about the fate of those who unrepentantly “love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.”⁹⁵ Of such was Cain who, had he “fulfilled the law of righteousness as did Enoch... could have walked with God all the days of his life and never failed of a blessing.”⁹⁶ Instead, he “sinned with his eyes open,”⁹⁷ “was cursed,”⁹⁸ and became known not merely as one of the “sons of perdition”⁹⁹ but rather, in similitude of Satan, as “Perdition” itself, it having been prophesied that Cain, if he did not repent, would be so preeminent in evil that he would “rule over” Satan.¹⁰⁰

Nibley describes the approach by which Satan “plans to put the world under his bloody and horrible misrule.” He appeals to anyone willing to consecrate their time and efforts to adopt his agenda—namely to “murder and get gain”¹⁰¹—as their own:

He will control the world economy by claiming possession of the earth’s resources; and by manipulation of its currency—gold and silver—he will buy up the political, military, and ecclesiastical complex and run everything his way. We see him putting his plan into operation when he lays legal claim to the whole earth as his estate, accusing others of trespass, but putting everything up for sale to anyone who has the money. And how will they get the money? By going to work for him. He not only offers employment but a course of instruction in how the whole thing works, teaching the ultimate secret: “That great secret”¹⁰² of converting life into property. Cain got the degree of Master Mahan,¹⁰³ tried the system out on his brother, and 93 B. K. Packer, Mediator 1977, p. 55; B. K. Packer, Errand, pp. 44-46. See Endnote 5-32, p. 437.

94 Alma 42:15.

95 D&C 10:21.

96 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 October 1840, p. 41.

97 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 30 March 1935, 2:280. See Endnote 5-33, p. 437.

98 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 October 1840, p. 40.

99 D&C 76:32-35.

100 See D&C 76:26; Moses 5:23-24.

101 Moses 5:31.

102 Moses 5:49-50.

103 See Commentary 5:31-a, p. 379.

FIGURE 5-6. Cain and Abel, ca. 1540
Tiziano Vecellio (Titian), 1490-1576

SEE COLOR PLATE 5-6.

*And it came to pass that while they were in the field, Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and slew him.*¹ The scriptures are silent on the details of Abel's murder, however one tradition has it that Abel, at the invitation of Cain, "came to a lonely place... Then Cain... walking a little behind him... hastened, and smote him with [a] staff, blow upon blow, until he was stunned."² Inflicting wounds on "all parts of his body," in the manner of the "blows of death" taught by Satan himself, Cain was said to have finally "killed him by striking him on the neck."³

Of this painting by Titian, Brenson writes that "the sharply delineated, muscular, animated figures... seem to jump off the ceiling... When Cain lifts up his club, about to slam it down on his brother, helplessly teetering on the edge of a rock, it seems as if the club will come down on us."⁴

1 Moses 5:32.

2 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:74, pp. 100-101. Some sources describe the weapon as the "jaw-bone of a camel" (M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 18).

3 Talmud, Sanhedrin 37b, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 151. See the overview of Moses 4, p. 236; Commentary 5:29-b, p. 377; 5:47-b, p. 396.

4 M. Brenson, Titian. See Endnote 5-34, p. 437.

FIGURE 5-7. Cain and Abel
Pietro Novelli (Il Monrealese), 1603-1647

SEE COLOR PLATE 5-7.

*And the Lord said unto Cain: Where is Abel thy brother? And he said: I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?*¹ In this unsettling scene, we see God speaking from a cloud to the fleeing Cain as he runs past the still-burning altar. Abel's lifeless body, dominating the foreground, loudly proclaims the falsity of Cain's profession of ignorance. The contrast of the skin color to the gray monochrome of the background highlights the link between the three actors.

1 Moses 5:34.

FIGURE 5-8. Cain, Based on Victor Hugo's Poem, 1880
Fernand-Anne Piestre (Cormon), 1845-1924

SEE COLOR PLATE 5-8.

*And Cain said... I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth.*¹ Cormon's tableau depicts the furtive wanderings of the dispossessed son of Adam: "When Cain, dishevelled, angry, in the middle of a storm, / Fleeing with his children wrapped in hides to keep warm, / Was running from Jehovah, he arrived at the base / Of a solitary mountain in the middle of a waste"² In Victor Hugo's poem, Cain anxiously marches his family from place to place to escape the lidless gaze of the eye of his conscience "entirely open, in the depths of the sky, / which stared at him fixedly from out of the night"—a torment he could not evade, even in the final darkness of the tomb. Of the role of light and shadow in Cormon's painting, Rosenblum writes: "To convey the sense of dread before the weight of Jehovah's moral law, Cormon has exaggerated the length of the shadows cast before the fleeing procession of man, woman, and child, as if the oppressive light of truth were pursuing the guilty tribe across the barren plain."³

¹ Moses 5:38-39.

² V. Hugo, Poetry, p. 215. For the full poem, see Gleanings, p. 407.

³ R. Rosenblum, Paintings, p. 388.

gloried in its brilliant success, declaring that at last he could be free, as only property makes free, and that Abel had been a loser in a free competition.¹⁰⁴

Sarna summarizes the thematic progression between chapters 4 and 5 of the book of Moses: "The transgression in the Garden was an offense against God; now it is man against his brother, which is also an offense against God. It was the 'fruit of the tree' that led to the downfall of Adam and Eve; it is the 'fruit of the soil' that leads to Cain's undoing. The first human was worried about death; now the experience of death becomes a reality."¹⁰⁵ Though Cain disavowed knowledge of Abel's fate, the crime was not hid from the Lord, who lamented: "The voice of thy brother's blood cries unto me from the ground."¹⁰⁶

In consequence of Cain's murderous act, he was told: "the ground shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth."¹⁰⁷ He was "driven... out... from the face of the Lord" and a "mark" was set upon him "lest any finding ¹⁰⁴ H. W. Nibley, Foundation, pp. 165-166.

¹⁰⁵ N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 31.

¹⁰⁶ Moses 5:35.

¹⁰⁷ Moses 5:37. See Endnote 5-35, p. 438.

him should kill him.”¹⁰⁸ Being “shut out” from the presence of the Lord, he and his family dwelt “in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden”¹⁰⁹—a place even further removed from the presence of God than the land where his parents had settled after the Fall.¹¹⁰ Of his fate, Nibley writes:

Cain began as a farmer; but when following Satan’s instructions, he made use of that great secret of how to murder and get gain, the earth refused him her strength, and he became a wanderer. Since time immemorial that homeless tribe (the land of Nod means land of unsettled nomad) is designated throughout the East by the name Qayin, meaning a wandering metal-worker, the mark of his trade and his tribe being the face blackened at the forge; he is a skillful maker and peddler of weapons and jewels, the twin destroyers and corrupters of mankind.¹¹¹

The Way Back

Moses 5 not only describes the path that leads to spiritual death, but also the way to eternal life.¹¹² Jacob explained that this “way is prepared from the fall of man... And men are instructed sufficiently that they know good from evil.” He specifically mentions instruction because a knowledge of good from evil is not obtained as the result of mere blind experience in a fallen world. On the contrary, it requires that a “law [be] given unto men.” However, because even those who are struggling to do right will inevitably violate that law, “no flesh is justified,” and all mankind is thus “cut off” “by the temporal law... and also, by the spiritual law.” Hence the need for “redemption... in and through the Holy Messiah.”¹¹³

D&C 29:42 affirms that Adam and Eve received knowledge of all these things through specially appointed messengers:

But, behold, I say unto you that I, the Lord God, gave unto Adam and unto his seed, that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I, the Lord God, should send forth angels to declare unto them repentance and redemption, through faith on the name of mine Only Begotten Son.¹¹⁴

God’s motivation in instituting laws was not arbitrary—His purpose is, as the Prophet Joseph Smith explained, “to instruct the weaker intelligences,” allowing fallen humanity to gradually “advance in knowledge” so that eventually they “may be exalted with [God] himself.”¹¹⁵ The Syriac version of the Testament of Adam expresses the similar belief of early Christians who taught that the plan of salvation was revealed to Adam in order to bring the eventual possibility of godhood within the reach of fallen mankind:

And on this account [God] taught me in the midst of Paradise when I picked the fruit in which death was hiding. And He said to me, “Adam, do not fear. A god you desired to be; a god I will make you. However, not right now but after a space of (many) years. Right now I am going to drive you from Paradise, and I will bring you down into the earth of thorns. Your back I will bend (and) your knees will quake from old age overtaking you. I am delivering you up to death. The maggot and worm will devour your body.

¹⁰⁸ Moses 5:39-40.

¹⁰⁹ Moses 5:41.

¹¹⁰ See Commentary 3:8-b, p. 161 and Commentary 5:41-c, p. 390.

¹¹¹ H. W. Nibley, Stewardship, p. 60.

¹¹² 2 Nephi 21:30-31.

¹¹³ 2 Nephi 2:4-6.

¹¹⁴ See Endnote 5-36, p. 438.

¹¹⁵ J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 354.

FIGURE 5-9.

Abraham Entertains Three Strangers, 1866
Paul Gustave Doré, 1832-1883

*And I saw before me three men whose appearance I could not recognize... saying to me, "Rise up, Adam, from the sleep of death, and hear about the aeon [i.e., the manifestation of God] and the seed of that man to whom life has come."*¹ Extracanonical texts speak of three messengers who appeared to warn, protect, and instruct Adam and Eve, and of how their efforts were resented and opposed by the Evil One.² Similar accounts are also given concerning other prominent Old Testament figures, including Abraham. About the identity of these envoys, Nibley writes: "The Mandaean literature will tell you that the messengers that came to instruct Adam and Eve were the apostles who later became the pillars of the Church (Peter, James and John)."³ In modern times, Peter, James, and John were again sent to restore the Melchizedek Priesthood.⁴

In the case of Abraham, rabbinical commentary takes great care to depict the extraordinary nature of Abraham's hospitality to all travelers which, in his hundredth year, was rewarded by the visit of these three messengers from God.⁵ As in many other such accounts, his blessings came only after a period of intense trial: "On the third day after his circumcision,⁶ when Abraham was suffering dire pain, God spoke to the angels, saying, 'Go to, let us pay a visit to the sick'....⁷ The day whereon God visited him was exceedingly hot,⁸ for He had bored a hole in hell, so that its heat might reach as far as the earth, and no wayfarer venture abroad on the highways, and Abraham be left undisturbed in his pain. But the absence of strangers caused Abraham great vexation, and he sent his servant Eliezer forth to keep a lookout for travelers. When the servant returned from his fruitless search, Abraham himself, in spite of his illness and the scorching heat, prepared to go forth on the highway..."⁹ Taken from his groundbreaking illustrated Bible,¹⁰ Doré's woodcut shows Abraham at this very moment, just as he began to set off alone for the desert and was dramatically brought to his knees by this sudden encounter¹¹ with the three divine messengers.¹²

Hugh Nibley, who was deeply moved by this story,¹³ said of Abraham: "He seemed to be generous to the point of lacking common sense," citing a rabbinic account of his welcoming words to the messengers: "'Lord of the Universe,' he cried, recognizing one of them, 'is it the order of the Cosmos that I sit while you remain standing?'"¹⁴ The scene, as... André Parrot... remarks, 'is as magnificent as it is strange.'¹⁵

1 G. W. MacRae, Adam 1983, 2:1-2, p. 712.

2 E.g., M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GR 3:1, pp. 197-198; 11:1, pp. 263-264. See also Bibliography, Mandaean Texts, p. 869.

3 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 233. See Endnote 5-37, p. 438.

4 D&C 128:20.

5 See Excursus 31: The Hospitality of Abraham, p. 606.

6 Genesis 17:23-27.

7 See Endnote 5-38, p. 439.

8 See Endnote 5-39, p. 440.

9 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:240-241; cf. Babylonian Talmud, Baba Metsi'a 86b, cited in H. N. Bialik et al., Legends, 26, p. 35; A. Elkaïm-Sartre, Ein Yaakov, 52, pp. 909-910. See also E. D. Clark, Blessings, pp. 171-179; M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 29, p. 170. See Endnote 5-40, p. 440.

10 J. J. Bourasse et al., Vulgate.

11 See Endnote 5-41, p. 440.

12 Genesis 18:3; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 18:2, p. 628. See Endnote 5-42, p. 441.

13 B. J. Petersen, Nibley, pp. 332-333.

14 Cf. Tanhumah, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 18:2, p. 626.

15 H. W. Nibley, Drama, p. 3.

FIGURE 5-10.
The Holy Trinity, ca. 1408-1425
 Andrei Rublev, ca. 1360-70-ca. 1427-30

SEE COLOR PLATE 5-10.

*That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us.*¹ In the Orthodox Church, the icon of the three divine messengers who appeared to Abraham is used as a symbol of the oneness of the Godhead, and the “beginning of the promise of Redemption” which reached “its fulfillment on the day of the Pentecost,” binding together the Old Testament and New Testament Churches.² In LDS doctrine, the oneness of purpose and holiness attained by the Godhead is a blessing held out for all faithful disciples of Christ, as expressed in the high priestly prayer of the Lord at the Last Supper cited above. To both the head and the body of the Church, the Lord said in 1831: “...be one; and if ye are not one ye are not mine.”³

With reference to accounts of visits of divine messengers to Adam and Eve, Gaskill observes that: “Peter, James, and John, whether appearing to Adam and Eve or serving as the head of the post-resurrection Church in the meridian of time, are symbols of something much greater than themselves, namely, the Godhead... as [are] all subsequent First Presidencies. Whether these three brethren, or any set of tripartite messengers had physical contact with Adam and Eve (or any other Old Testament figure) makes no difference. What is of importance is what they brought and whom they represented.”⁴

“Many scholars consider Rublev’s Trinity the most perfect of all Russian icons and perhaps the most perfect of all the icons ever painted.”⁵ The basic form of the icon is a circle: “Passing through the upper part of the nimbus of the central Angel and partly cutting off the bottom of the pedestals, this circle embraces all three figures, showing very faintly through their outlines... In this way the central Angel, though taller than the others, does not overwhelm or dominate them... The icon... has action, expressed in gestures, communion, expressed in the inclining of the heads and the postures of the figures, and a silent, motionless peace... [T]he gestures of the hands are directed towards the eucharistic chalice, with the head of a sacrificial animal, which stands on the white table as on an altar. Symbolizing the voluntary sacrifice of the Son of God, it draws together the gestures of the Angels, indicating the unity of will and action of the Holy Trinity, Who entered into a covenant with Abraham.” The Father, represented at left, is dressed differently than the other two. He wears “a pale pink cloak with brown and blue-green lights” of “sober and indefinite hue” that covers both shoulders. The Son, depicted in the middle, “has the customary colors of... a purple chiton [= a draped, belted tunic] and a blue cloak” draped over His left shoulder, the color of the cloak symbolizing incarnation.⁶ Behind Him grows a Tree of Life, born of His sacrificial death. The “principal color” of the Holy Spirit is green, represented in the cloak draped over His right shoulder. Here, the color green “signifies ‘youth, fullness of powers.’ This specifically indicates the properties of... renewing all things and giving them life.”⁷ The symbolism recalls the promise made to those who are to be “sanctified by the Spirit unto the renewing of their bodies.”⁸

1 John 17:21.

2 L. Ouspensky et al., Icons, p. 200. See also G. Bunge, Rublev Trinity, pp. 45-57.

3 D&C 38:27.

4 A. L. Gaskill, Lost, p. 302. See also ibid., pp. 303-306. Cf. Nibley: “When Peter spoke to Adam, which Peter was it? The Peter of Adam’s day? No, the timeless Peter” (H. W. Nibley, Consecration, p. 439).

5 The Holy Trinity.

6 W. Williams, Shadow.

7 L. Ouspensky et al., Icons, p. 202.

8 D&C 84:33.

And after a short time my mercy (will be) revealed to you: I will go down to you... For your sake, Adam, I become an infant... For your sake, Adam, I ascend the cross... For your sake, Adam, I open the tomb.”¹¹⁶

The set of laws and ordinances that were given to Adam and Eve is known collectively as “The New and Everlasting Covenant.”¹¹⁷ This comprehensive covenant includes the 116 S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam, 3:2-3, pp. 97, 99; cf. M. D. Gibson, Rolls 1901, p. 117; E. P. Sanders, Testament of Adam 1983, 3:2-3, p. 994. See also C. Buck, Paradise, p. 100.

117 H. C. Kimball, 6 January 1861, p. 330; Book of Abraham, Facsimile 2, Figure 3.

baptismal and temple covenants as well as covenants made at other times.¹¹⁸ Because God is everlasting, the Covenant is also “everlasting”: it was first given to Adam, and later to all subsequent prophets.¹¹⁹ Because it is given anew each time the Gospel is restored, the Lord also describes it as “new.”¹²⁰ Riddle summarizes the two basic parts of the Covenant:

Part one is the covenant of baptism, being born of water and of the Spirit. The covenant of baptism is our pledge to seek after good and to eliminate all choosing and doing of evil in our lives, and it is also our receiving the power to keep that promise.¹²¹ Part two of the New and Everlasting Covenant is to receive the power and authority of God and to become perfect in using that power and authority to minister to other beings to bring about their happiness.¹²²

Elder Bruce R. McConkie’s name for the first part of the New and Everlasting Covenant is the “Covenant of Salvation.” It is “accepted by men in the waters of baptism”¹²³ and is confirmed by the laying on of hands. Adam and Eve were the first mortals to receive this covenant, as Enoch recounts.¹²⁴ As an element of the process of repentance, sacrifice is both a necessary precursor to baptism and a requirement for renewal of that covenant.¹²⁵ The ordinance of sacrifice given to Adam and Eve¹²⁶ corresponds in our day to the sacrament.¹²⁷ Thus, as Elder McConkie explained, three ordinances (baptism, sacrifice, sacrament) are associated with one and the same covenant.¹²⁸ Throwing light on the symbols of the sacrament, Alma equates the eating and drinking of the “bread and the waters of life” with “partaking of the fruit of the tree of life.”¹²⁹ By this means, we literally become “partakers of the divine nature.”¹³⁰ Thus also, Coptic Christian writings saw in a grain of wheat, mercifully granted to Adam and Eve after their exile from Eden, the flesh of God Himself.¹³¹

Jesus taught Nicodemus that “Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.”¹³² Although in a narrow sense this commandment is fulfilled through baptism and confirmation, in reality these first ordinances are only the “gate” through which we begin our journey down the “strait and narrow path which leads to eternal life.”¹³³ Additional ordinances—along with the development of perfect faith, hope, and charity—are a necessary part of the process of spiritual rebirth that ultimately results in sanctification.¹³⁴ “And now... after ye have gotten into this strait and narrow path, I would ask if all is done? Behold, I say unto you, Nay... Wherefore, ye must press forward... and if ye press forward, feasting upon the word of Christ, and endure to the end, behold, thus saith the Father: Ye shall have eternal life.”¹³⁵ Speaking plainly on this topic, the Prophet 118 Gospel Principles, p. 98.

119 E.g., JST Genesis 9:21-23, 13:13; JST Deuteronomy 10:2; cf. D&C 49:9, 66:2, 88:133.

120 Gospel Principles, p. 98. See Jeremiah 31:31-34; Ezekiel 37:26; H. C. Kimball, 6 January 1861, p. 330.

121 D. A. Bednar, Strength, p. 77.

122 C. C. Riddle, New, p. 228.

123 B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 293.

124 Moses 6:64-65. See Endnote 5-43, p. 441.

125 D&C 20:37, 59:9-12.

126 Moses 5:5-9.

127 D&C 59:8-14.

128 B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 293.

129 Alma 5:34.

130 2 Peter 1:4.

131 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 18-19 n. 1; cf. S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:68, p. 81; B. Mikael, Apocalypse, pp. 102, 131; John 6:25-58. See Endnote 5-44, p. 441.

132 John 3:5.

133 2 Nephi 31:17-18.

134 E. T. Benson, Teachings 1988, 28 September 1982, p. 337; B. C. Hafen, Disciple’s Journey, pp. 292-301.

135 2 Nephi 31:19-20; cf. Jacob 6:11. See Endnote 5-45, p. 442.

declared that being “born again comes by the Spirit of God through ordinances”¹³⁶—with the understanding that the bestowal of these ordinances and keys will continue even in the next life.¹³⁷ Joseph Smith explicitly linked the manner in which higher ordinances were given to the Saints to the figure of Adam, calling it the “order pertaining to the Ancient of Days.”¹³⁸

Elder McConkie calls the second part of the New and Everlasting Covenant “The Covenant of Exaltation.” He explains how it is related to the oath and covenant of the Priesthood:¹³⁹

When we receive the Melchizedek Priesthood, we enter into a covenant with the Lord. It is the covenant of exaltation. In it, we promise to magnify our callings in the priesthood, to keep the commandments, “to give diligent heed to the words of eternal life,”¹⁴⁰ to “live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God,”¹⁴¹ and to enter the patriarchal order, which leads to a continuation of the family unit in the realms ahead.¹⁴²

Eventually, those who keep this oath and covenant are promised “all that [the] Father hath.”¹⁴³ When they are fully prepared, greater light and knowledge about the covenant will be given them through personal communion with the Father:

47 And every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit cometh unto God, even the Father.
48 And the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you...¹⁴⁴

Specific teachings about the New and Everlasting Covenant are to be had in the temple.¹⁴⁵ Elder Ezra Taft Benson elaborated on this subject: “Celestial laws, embodied in certain ordinances belonging to the Church of Jesus Christ, are complied with by voluntary covenants. The laws are spiritual. Thus, our Father in Heaven has ordained certain holy sanctuaries, called temples, in which these laws may be fully explained, the laws include the law of obedience and sacrifice, the law of the gospel, the law of chastity, and the law of consecration.”¹⁴⁶ In the temple, the story of events surrounding the Creation and the Fall provide a context for the presentation of covenants that are made as part of the endowment.¹⁴⁷ Thus, it would not be surprising to find that a similar pattern of interleaving history and covenant-making themes may have also helped dictate both the structure and the content of the material selected for inclusion in the book of Moses. Writes Johnson:¹⁴⁸

Throughout the text [of the early chapters of the book of Moses], the author stops the historic portions of the story and weaves into the narrative framework ritual acts such as sacrifice and sacrament; ordinances such as baptism, washings and the gift of the Holy Ghost; and oaths and covenants, such as obedience to marital obligations and oaths of property consecration.... [If we assume that material similar to Moses 1-8 might have served as a temple text,¹⁴⁹ it would 136 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, p. 162; cf. D&C 84:19-22. See Endnote 5-46, p. 442.

137 S. W. Kimball, Potential; B. Young, 14 August 1872, pp. 136-139.

138 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 4 May 1842, p. 237. See Endnote 5-47, p. 442.

139 D&C 84:33-48.

140 D&C 84:43.

141 D&C 84:44.

142 B. R. McConkie, New Witness, pp. 312-313. See D&C 132:19-24 and Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519.

143 D&C 84:38. This verse corrects a common misinterpretation of Luke 15:31 which falsely concludes that when the Father gives all He has to one of his children it somehow diminishes what He can give to the others (D. Packard et al., Feasting, p. 49).

144 D&C 88:47-48; cf. John 14:16, 23; D&C 88:3-4, 130:3; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 27 June 1839, p. 151.

145 See Endnote 5-48, p. 442.

146 E. T. Benson, Vision. See Excursus 51: The Five Lost Things of the Temple, p. 658.

147 J. E. Talmage, House of the Lord, p. 54.

148 See Endnote 5-49, p. 443. See also J. M. Bradshaw, LDS Book of Enoch.

149 See Endnote 5-50, p. 443.

THE WAY OF LIFE	THE WAY OF DEATH
Obedience (Moses 5:1-6)	Defiance (Moses 5:13-14)
Sacrifice (Moses 5:4-8, 20)	Perversion of Sacrifice (Moses 5:18-19, 21)
The Gospel (Moses 5:58-59; 8:19)	Works of Darkness (Moses 5:29-31, 47-57; 8:26)
Chastity (Moses 6:5-23; 8:13)	Licentiousness (Moses 6:15; 8:14-21)
Consecration (Moses 7:18)	Violence and Corruption (Moses 5:31-33, 50; 6:15; 8:28)
Eternal Life (Moses 7:23, 69; 8:27)	Death (Moses 8:30)

FIGURE 5-11. The Two Ways

And it came to pass that Noah continued his preaching unto the people, saying: Hearken, and give heed unto my words;... nevertheless they hearkened not.¹ The figure illustrates the progressive separation of the “two ways” due to a sequence of covenant violations. While the later editors of the “Primary History” of the Old Testament structured their account in order to extol the keeping of the Law of Moses as the essence of Wisdom,² the book of Moses is laid out in a fashion that expounds a more complete Wisdom tradition based on the original temple rites. The Wisdom of the book of Moses relates closely to temple themes, what Barker calls “an older form of communication between God and his people... which the Deuteronomists reformed.”³

1 Moses 8:23-24.

2 Deuteronomy 4:6; cf. J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 10-14.

3 M. Barker, Older, p. 83. See Excursus 2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom, p. 516, Figure 1-4, p. 35, and Commentary 2:1-c, p. 93.

be expected that as] this history was recited, acts, ordinances and ceremonies would have been performed during this reading. For instance, during the story of Enoch and his city of Zion, members of the attending congregation would be put under oath to be a chosen, covenant people and to keep all things in common, with all their property belonging to the Lord.¹⁵⁰

A precedent for the idea of structuring key scriptural accounts to be consistent with a series of temple-related covenants can be found in Welch’s analysis of the Sermon on the Mount¹⁵¹ and the Sermon at the Temple,¹⁵² where he found that:

The commandments issued... are not only the same as the main commandments always issued at the temple, but they appear largely in the same order: obedience and sacrifice,¹⁵³ evil speaking of the brethren,¹⁵⁴ chastity and a higher understanding of marriage and divorce,¹⁵⁵ love for one’s enemies and obedience to the law of love or the law of the Gospel,¹⁵⁶ and alms to the poor and consecration of one’s life to the worship and service of God.¹⁵⁷

In a similar vein, David Noel Freedman has found evidence for an opposite pattern of covenant-breaking in the “Primary History” of the Old Testament. He argues that the books of the Bible from Exodus through Kings were deliberately edited to reveal:

150 M. J. Johnson, Prologue, pp. 23-24, See Endnote 5-51, p. 443.

151 Matthew 5-7.

152 3 Nephi 11-18.

153 See 3 Nephi 12:19.

154 See 3 Nephi 12:22.

155 See 3 Nephi 12:28-32.

156 See 3 Nephi 12:39, 41-45.

157 J. W. Welch, Temple in the Book of Mormon, p. 373; 3 Nephi 13:1, 20, 24. For a more complete account see J. W. Welch, Sermon and J. W. Welch, Light. See Endnote 5-52, p. 443.

... a pattern of defiance of the Covenant with God that inexorably leads to the downfall of the nation of Israel, the destruction of the Temple, and the banishment of survivors from the Promised Land. Book by book... the violation of the first nine [of the Ten C]ommandments are charted one by one. Because covetousness lies behind all the acts committed, each act implicitly breaks the Tenth Commandment as well. This hidden trail of sin betrays the hand of a master editor, who skillfully has woven into Israel's history a message to a community in their Babylonian exile that their fate is not the result of God's abandoning them, but a consequence of their abandonment of God.¹⁵⁸

An interesting result of looking carefully at the history of Adam through Enoch and Noah as a temple text is the realization that—like both of Christ's great Sermons and the biblical text of the "Primary History"—the series of covenant-related themes unfolds in what appears to be a definite order of progression. Also remarkable is the fact that both the ultimate consequences of covenant-keeping as well as those of covenant-breaking are fully illustrated at the conclusion of the sequence: in the final two chapters of the book of Moses, Enoch and his people are taken up to walk in the presence of God¹⁵⁹ while the wicked are destroyed in the great Flood.¹⁶⁰

Obedience vs. Defiance. Elder Bruce R. McConkie stated that: "Obedience is the first law of heaven, the cornerstone upon which all righteousness and progression rest."¹⁶¹ The reason why this is so is explained by Nibley: "If every choice I make expresses a preference, if the world I build up is the world I really love and want, then with every choice I am judging myself, proclaiming all the day long to God, angels, and my fellowmen where my real values lie, where my treasure is, the things to which I give supreme importance. Hence, in this life every moment provides a perfect and foolproof test of your real character, making this life a time of testing and probation."¹⁶²

A Christian account relates that Adam made his first covenant with God—a covenant of obedience—"ere he came out of the Garden, [when he was by the tree] whereof Eve took the fruit and gave it him to eat."¹⁶³ It seems reasonable to suppose that the law of sacrifice, a companion to the law of obedience, was also given to Adam and Eve at this time, before they came to live in the mortal world.¹⁶⁴ Moses 5:1-6 highlights the subsequent obedience of Adam and Eve by enumerating their faithfulness to each of the commandments they had been given. Adam, with his fellow-laborer Eve, began to "till the earth, and to have dominion over all the beasts of the field, and to eat his bread by the sweat of his brow."¹⁶⁵ Likewise Eve fulfilled the commission she had received in the Garden of Eden and "bare... sons and daughters, and they began to replenish the earth."¹⁶⁶ Moreover, "Adam was obedient to the commandments of the Lord" in obeying the law of sacrifice and offering "the firstlings of their flocks" for "many days," despite the fact that he did not yet fully understand the reason why he had been thus commanded.¹⁶⁷

158 D. N. Freedman, Nine 2001, p. 1. For a full exposition of Freedman's arguments, see D. N. Freedman, Nine 2000. See also Excursus 32: Freedman's Analysis of the Primary History, p. 607.

159 Moses 7:69.

160 Moses 8:30. See Endnote 5-53, p. 444.

161 B. R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, p. 539. See also H. B. Eyring, Jr., Be One, pp. 67-68.

162 H. W. Nibley, Zeal, p. 66.

163 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:3:7, p. 4. See Figure 4-10, p. 228.

164 Cf. Excursus 48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants, p. 649. See Endnote 5-54, p. 444.

165 Moses 5:1; cf. Mosiah 6:6-7.

166 Moses 5:2.

167 Moses 5:5-6.

Later, in defiant counterpoint, Satan also came among the children of Adam and Eve, demanding their obedience, “and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not.” From that point on, many of them openly demonstrated that they “loved Satan more than God,” becoming “carnal, sensual, and devilish.”¹⁶⁸

Sacrifice vs. Perversion of Sacrifice. President David O. McKay described the essence of the law of sacrifice as follows: “The first law of mortal life, self-preservation, would claim the most luscious fruit, the most tender meat, the softest down on which to lie. Selfishness, the law of nature would say, ‘I want the best; that is mine.’ But God said: ‘Take of the firstlings of your herds and of your flocks.’¹⁶⁹ The best shall be given to God... Thus should God become the center of our being.”¹⁷⁰ The Lectures on Faith further explain that: “When a man has offered in sacrifice all that he has for the truth’s sake, not even withholding his life, and believing before God that he has been called to make this sacrifice because he seeks to do His will, he does know, most assuredly, that God does and will accept his sacrifice and offering, and that he has not, nor will not seek his face in vain. Under these circumstances, then, he can obtain the faith necessary for him to lay hold on eternal life.”¹⁷¹

Once Adam and Eve had passed their initial test of obedience to the new commandments they had been given in the Garden after their transgression, God, seeing that it was “expedient that man should know concerning the things whereof he had appointed unto them... sent angels to converse with them... and made known unto them the plan of redemption.”¹⁷² To Adam was explained that the law of sacrifice “is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth.”¹⁷³

Abel followed the pattern of his father in perfect obedience to God and offered a lamb in sacrifice. By way of contrast, Cain, at the command of Satan, “offered the fruit of the ground as a sacrifice, which was not symbolic of Christ’s great act of Redemption... Instead of purchasing a lamb or another animal that would serve as an appropriate sacrifice, he offered what he produced.”¹⁷⁴ Speaking of the reason Cain’s sacrifice was rejected, the Prophet Joseph Smith explained that “ordinances must be kept in the very way God has appointed,”¹⁷⁵ in this case by “the shedding of blood... [as] a type, by which man was to discern the great Sacrifice which God had prepared.”¹⁷⁶ Not only must the form of the ordinance comply with the divine pattern, but also the heart must be filled with the spirit of sincere repentance, since “the shedding of the blood of a beast could be beneficial to no man, except it was ... done with an eye looking forward in faith on the power of that great Sacrifice for a remission of sins.”¹⁷⁷ Following the “great and last sacrifice”¹⁷⁸ of Jesus Christ, no further shedding of blood was required, but rather the sacrifice of “a broken heart and a contrite spirit.”¹⁷⁹

168 Moses 5:13.

169 Deuteronomy 12:6.

170 D. O. McKay, Cherished, 25 September 1941, p. 19. See also D. O. McKay, Treasures, 20 December 1920, pp. 275-278.

171 L. E. Dahl et al., Lectures, 6:7, p. 93.

172 Alma 12:28-30.

173 Moses 5:7. See Excursus 33: The Restoration of Sacrifice, p. 609.

174 H. L. Andrus, Doctrinal, p. 387.

175 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 October 1840, p. 169.

176 Ibid., 22 January 1834, p. 58.

177 Ibid., p. 58.

178 Alma 34:14.

179 D&C 59:8. See also Excursus 33: The Restoration of Sacrifice, p. 609.

FIGURE 5-12. The Devil Approaches Jabez Stone, 1937
Harold Denison, 1870-1943

And Satan said unto Cain: Swear unto me by thy throat... And Satan sware unto Cain that he would do according to his commands.¹ Ever ready to make a deal, Satan eagerly exchanged deadly oaths with Cain. At the beginning, such an arrangement is always congenial — “the Devil serves his client, gratifies his slightest whim, pampers his appetites, and is at his beck and call throughout his earthly life, putting unlimited power and influence at his disposal through his command of the treasures of the earth, gold and silver. But in exchange the victim must keep his part of the agreement, following Satan’s instructions on earth and remaining in his power thereafter. That is the classic bargain, the pact with the Devil, by which a Faust, Don Juan, Macbeth, or Jabez Stone achieve the pinnacle of earthly success and the depths of eternal damnation.”²

This illustration is taken from Stephen Vincent Benét’s 1936 story The Devil and Daniel Webster, made into a popular film in 1941. Piazza characterizes the latter as “a fascinating allegory, filmed on the eve of World War II, of a society gone mad with materialism, a premonition of the opportunities and dangers awaiting the United States as it recovered from the Great Depression.” Old Scratch is portrayed as polite, refined, and soft-spoken—and as usual, he “gets the best lines” as he preaches his gospel of cold cash to a down-on-his-luck New Hampshire farmer, making it clear at the end of the film that there is nothing he wants more than to have each viewer in his power.³ Warned Benét “[I]f a smooth-spoken and businesslike stranger should appear at your door and offer you all that money can buy in exchange for your freedom of soul, it might be well to look him over rather carefully. I seem to have heard that there are such people abroad in the world, even today.”⁴

1 Moses 5:29-30.

2 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, pp. 174-175.

3 T. Piazza, Devil.

4 S. V. Benét, Author.

The Gospel vs. Works of Darkness. Although in a general sense, “the law of the Gospel embraces all laws, principles, and ordinances necessary for our exaltation,”¹⁸⁰ the interpretive context of the temple specifically brings to mind pointed instructions relating to Christlike behavior toward one’s fellow man. These instructions parallel some of the items prohibited in the community that produced the Dead Sea Scrolls, “such as laughing too loudly, gossiping, and immodest dress.”¹⁸¹ D&C 20:54, also bearing on this theme, instructs teachers in the Church that they should watch over members, assuring that there is “neither hardness with each other, neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking.” Likewise, members of the Kirtland School of the Prophets were told: “cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness, and from all your wicked doings.”¹⁸² Thus, as Nibley summarizes, “the law of the Gospel requires self-control in everyday situations,”¹⁸³ putting “restraints on personal behavior” while “it mandates deportment... to make oneself agreeable to all.”¹⁸⁴ Elaborating on these qualities, he wrote:

As to light-mindedness, humor is not light-minded; it is insight into human foibles... What is light-minded is kitsch, delight in shallow trivia; and the viewing of serious or tragic events with complacency or indifference. It is light-minded, as Brigham Young often observed, to 180 E. T. Benson, Teachings 1988, 28 September 1982, p. 337.

181 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 34.

182 D&C 88:121.

183 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 34.

184 H. W. Nibley, Drama, p. 36.

take seriously and devote one's interest to modes, styles, fads, and manners of speech and deportment that are passing and trivial, without solid worth or intellectual appeal. As to laughter, Joseph Smith had a hearty laugh that shook his whole frame; but it was a meaningful laugh, a good-humored laugh.¹⁸⁵ Loud laughter is the hollow laugh, the bray, the meaningless laugh of the soundtrack or the audience responding to prompting cards, or routinely laughing at every remark made, no matter how banal, in a situation comedy. Note that "idle thoughts and... excess of laughter" go together in D&C 88:69.

As to light speech and speaking evil, my policy is to criticize only when asked to: nothing can be gained otherwise. But politicians are fair game—the Prophet Nathan soundly denounced David though he was "the Lord's anointed,"¹⁸⁶ but it was for his private and military hanky-panky, thinking only of his own appetites and interests.¹⁸⁷ Since nearly all gossip is outside the constructive frame, it qualifies as speaking evil.

As to lustful desires and unholy practices, such need no definition, one would think. Yet historically, the issue is a real one that arises from aberrations and perversions of the endowment among various "Hermetic" societies which, professing higher knowledge from above, resort to witchcraft, necromancy, and divination, with a strong leaning toward sexual license, as sanctioned and even required by their distorted mysteries...¹⁸⁸

Conforming to the sequence of revealed laws found in other temple texts, the term "Gospel" occurs in the book of Moses as part of two passages—and in neither case does the order of its appearance defy our expectation of consistency with the sequence of temple covenants.¹⁸⁹ We read that Adam and Eve were tutored by holy messengers,¹⁹⁰ and that he and Eve in turn "made all things known unto their sons and daughters."¹⁹¹ The mention of the Holy Ghost falling upon Adam¹⁹² carries with it the implication that he had at that point already received the ordinance of baptism,¹⁹³ something that might have logically occurred soon after the angel's explanation of the meaning of the law of sacrifice.¹⁹⁴ The ordinance of baptism was followed by additional instruction concerning the plan of salvation given "by holy angels,... and by [God's] own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost."¹⁹⁵ Bestowals of divine knowledge, the making of additional covenants, and the conferral of priesthood power must have surely accompanied these teachings.¹⁹⁶ "And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance, and the Gospel [was] preached, and a decree [was] sent forth, that it should be in the world, until the end thereof."¹⁹⁷

Sadly, scripture records that, despite Adam's efforts to the contrary, "works of darkness began to prevail among the sons of men."¹⁹⁸ Rejecting the covenants, the ordinances, and the universal scope of the brotherhood of the Gospel, they reveled in the exclusive nature of 185 See R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 483-485.

186 See, e.g., David's characterization of Saul in 1 Samuel 24:6.

187 See 2 Samuel 12.

188 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 553-554. See Endnote 5-56, p. 445.

189 Moses 5:58-59 and 8:19.

190 D&C 29:42; Moses 5:7-8, 58.

191 Moses 5:12.

192 Moses 5:9.

193 Moses 6:64.

194 Moses 5:6-8.

195 Moses 5:58; cf. 6:52-64.

196 Moses 6:67-68.

197 Moses 5:59.

198 Moses 5:55.

their “secret combination” by whose dark arts “they knew every man his brother,”¹⁹⁹ and they engaged in “wars and bloodshed... seeking for power.”²⁰⁰

Chastity vs. Licentiousness. Nibley writes that this covenant of “self-control”²⁰¹ places a “restraint on uncontrolled appetites, desires, and passions, for what could be more crippling on the path of eternal progression than those carnal obsessions which completely take over the mind and body?”²⁰² Both chastity outside of marriage and fidelity within marriage are required by this covenant,²⁰³ as Welch explains in the context of Jesus’ Sermon at the Temple:

The new law [in 3 Nephi 12:27-30] imposes a strict prohibition against sexual intercourse outside of marriage and, intensifying the rules that prevailed under the old law, requires purity of heart and denial of these things...²⁰⁴

In connection with the law of chastity, Jesus teaches the importance of marriage by superseding the old law of divorcement with the new law of marriage: “It hath been written, that whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whoso shall marry her who is divorced committeth adultery”²⁰⁵... The context of the Sermon at the Temple suggests that this very demanding restriction applies only to husbands and wives who are bound by the eternal covenant relationship involved here. This explains the strictness of the rule completely, for eternal marriages can be dissolved only by proper authority and on justifiable grounds. Until they are so divorced, a couple remains covenantally married.²⁰⁶

Moses 6:5-23 describes the ideal family order established by Adam and Eve. Such an order is also implied in 8:13, where Noah and his righteous sons are mentioned. The patriarchal order of the priesthood “which was in the beginning” and “shall be in the end of the world also”²⁰⁷ is depicted as presiding over a worthy succession of generations in the likeness and image of Adam,²⁰⁸ just as Adam and Eve were made in the image and likeness of God.²⁰⁹

However, in contrast to these “preachers of righteousness,”²¹⁰ extracanonical traditions speak of “fornication... spread from the sons of Cain” that “flamed up,” and moreover tell how, “in the fashion of beasts, they would perform sodomy indiscriminately.”²¹¹ Various sources describe how these practices then spread to Seth’s male descendants as “the Malicious One increased his struggle to bring close the sons of Seth to the daughters of Cain.”²¹² The apogee of this wickedness was reached in the days of Noah,²¹³ when the “sons of God” who “hearkened not” to Noah broke their covenants and illicitly took to themselves²¹⁴ “the daughters of men.”²¹⁵ Wholly consumed in consuming, according to the 199 Moses 5:51.

200 Moses 6:15.

201 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 34.

202 H. W. Nibley, Drama, pp. 36-37.

203 Cf. D&C 42:22-24.

204 See Endnote 5-57, p. 445.

205 3 Nephi 12:31-32.

206 J. W. Welch, Sermon, pp. 52-53; cf. J. W. Welch, Light, pp. 91-92.

207 Moses 6:7; see also D&C 107:40-41, Abraham 1:26.

208 Moses 6:10.

209 Moses 6:9, 22.

210 Moses 6:23.

211 M. E. Stone, Question, 5, 8, pp. 119, 121.

212 Ibid., 9, p. 121. See Endnote 5-58, p. 446.

213 Moses 8:13, 21.

214 See Endnote 5-59, p. 447.

215 See Moses 5:41-b, p. 388; the overview of Moses 4, p. 227; and Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

dictates of their appetites and passions, they are described as being wantonly absorbed in “eating and drinking, and marrying and giving in marriage.”²¹⁶ Christensen sees a parallel to these events in the Book of Mormon story of the priests of Noah who abandoned their wives and then kidnapped and took to themselves daughters of the Lamanites.²¹⁷ As with those who lived in the days of Noah, the hardened “descendants from the union with the stolen wives” ultimately met with destruction.²¹⁸

Consecration vs. Corruption and Violence. President Ezra Taft Benson has described the law of consecration as being “that we consecrate our time, talents, strength, property, and money for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God on this earth and the establishment of Zion.”²¹⁹ He notes that all the covenants made up to this point are preparatory, explaining that: “Until one abides by the laws of obedience, sacrifice, the gospel, and chastity, he cannot abide the law of consecration, which is the law pertaining to the celestial kingdom.”²²⁰ Nibley similarly affirms that this law is “the consummation of the laws of obedience and sacrifice, is the threshold of the celestial kingdom, the last and hardest requirement made of men in this life”²²¹ and “can only be faced against sore temptation.”²²² In compensation for this supreme effort, President Harold B. Lee avers that to the “individual who thus is willing to consecrate himself, [will come] the greatest joy that can come to the human soul.”²²³ Consecration is, as Welch affirms, the step that precedes perfection.²²⁴

Moses 7 describes how Enoch succeeded in bringing a whole people to be sufficiently “pure in heart”²²⁵ to fully live the law of consecration.²²⁶ In Zion, the “City of Holiness,”²²⁷ the people “were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them.”²²⁸ Moreover, it can be safely presumed that, as with the Nephites following the visit of Christ: “There were no contentions and disputations among them, and every man did deal justly one with another. And they had all things in common among them; therefore, there were no rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.”²²⁹ Note that this ideal of economic reform is not based merely on the idea of fair division of property,²³⁰ but rather on the higher principle “that everything we have belongs to the Lord; therefore, the Lord may call upon us for any and all of the property which we have, because it belongs to Him.”²³¹

Just as the life of Enoch can be regarded as a type of the spirit of consecration, so Lamech, who also lived in the seventh generation from Adam, serves as a scriptural example of its anti-type. While Enoch and his people covenanted with the Lord to ensure that there would

216 Moses 8:20-21.

217 Mosiah 20:4-5.

218 K. Christensen, Temple, p. 466 and Alma 25:4, 7-9. See Endnote 4-38, p. 310.

219 E. T. Benson, Teachings 1988, 28 September 1982, p. 121; cf. G. B. Hinckley, Teachings 1997, 10 April 1996, p. 147; H. B. Lee, Teachings 1996, 6 October 1973, p. 318.

220 E. T. Benson, Teachings 1988, 28 September 1982, p. 121 and D&C 78:7.

221 H. W. Nibley, Foundation, p. 168.

222 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 34.

223 H. B. Lee, Teachings 1996, 4 April 1947, p. 318. See Excursus 34: The Law of Consecration, p. 611.

224 J. W. Welch, Sermon, pp. 60-61; cf. Matthew 19:21. See Endnote 0-23, p. 24.

225 D&C 97:21. Being “pure in heart” qualifies one to “see God” (Matthew 5:8, 3 Nephi 12:8, D&C 97:16).

226 See Endnote 5-60, p. 447.

227 Moses 7:19.

228 Moses 7:18.

229 4 Nephi 1:3-4; cf. H. W. Nibley, Weep, p. 372.

230 See Endnote 5-61, p. 447.

231 J. R. Clark, Jr., Evening, p. 55.

be “no poor among them,”²³² Lamech “entered into a covenant with Satan”²³³ to see to it that he would never find himself as one of the poor. Lamech’s “secret works” contributed to the rapid erosion of the unity of the human family, culminating in a terrifying chaos where “a man’s hand was against his own brother, in administering death” and “seeking for power.”²³⁴

In the same measure that the righteousness of the people of Enoch was unprecedented, so the “corruption and violence” of the people that reached a climax at the time of Noah was beyond anything heretofore witnessed.²³⁵ In a striking echo of Moses 7:48, we are told that “[e]ven the earth complained and uttered lamentations.”²³⁶ To Enoch, the Lord sorrowed: “Behold these thy brethren; they are the workmanship of mine own hands... And... I [have] said... that they should love one another, and that they should choose me, their Father; but behold, they are without affection, and they hate their own blood... and among all the workmanship of my hands there has not been so great wickedness as among thy brethren... wherefore should not the heavens weep, seeing these shall suffer?”²³⁷ Like the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, the wicked at last “were destroyed, because it was better for them to die, and thus be deprived of their agency, which they abused, than entail so much misery on their posterity, and bring ruin upon millions of unborn persons.”²³⁸

The promise of being “received... into [God’s] own bosom”²³⁹ like Enoch and his people is extended to all those who, through the cleansing power of the Atonement “after all [they] can do,”²⁴⁰ prepare themselves to receive it.²⁴¹ “Therefore, sanctify yourselves that your minds become single to God, and the days will come that you shall see him; for he will unveil his face unto you, and it shall be in his own time, and in his own way, and according to his own will. Remember the great and last promise which I have made unto you.”²⁴²

The supreme qualification signaling readiness for this crowning blessing is charity, what Nibley calls the “essence of the law of consecration..., without which, as Paul and Moroni tell us, all the other laws and observances become null and void.”²⁴³ Love is not selective, and charity knows no bounds.²⁴⁴ Thus, “if I expect anything in return for charity except the happiness of the recipient, then it is not charity.”²⁴⁵ For in charity, Nibley continues, “there is no bookkeeping, no quid pro quo, no deals, interests, bargaining, or ulterior motives; charity gives to those who do not deserve and expects nothing in return; it is the love God has for us, and the love we have for little children, of whom we expect nothing but for whom we would give everything.”²⁴⁶

232 Moses 7:18.

233 Moses 5:49.

234 Moses 6:15. See Excursus 35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”, p. 612.

235 Moses 8:28.

236 A. B. Mikael, Mysteries, p. 29; cf. G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 7:6, 9:2, 87:1, pp. 182, 202, 364; M. Wise et al., DSS, 4Q203 Frag. 8:9, p. 294. See also D. C. Peterson, Weeping God; A. C. Skinner, Vindicated.

237 Moses 7:32-33, 36-37. See Endnote 5-62, p. 447.

238 J. Taylor, Government, 1852, p. 53; cf. P. P. Pratt, 10 April 1853, p. 259.

239 Moses 7:69.

240 2 Nephi 25:23.

241 D. H. Oaks, To Become.

242 D&C 88:68-69; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 350.

243 See 1 Corinthians 13:1-3; Moroni 7:44.

244 H. W. Nibley, Foundation, p. 172.

245 H. W. Nibley, Perspectives, p. 495.

246 H. W. Nibley, Since, p. 347.

FIGURE 5-13. The Ladder of Virtues, late twelfth century
Herrard of Hohenbourg

SEE COLOR PLATE 5-13.

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.¹ This twelfth-century illustration shows the ladder of virtues, an ancient symbol of the process of spiritual progression.² Speaking of Jacob's dream of the heavenly ladder in Genesis 28, Elder Marion G. Romney said: "Jacob realized that the covenants he made with the Lord were the rungs on the ladder that he himself would have to climb in order to obtain the promised blessings—blessings that would entitle him to enter heaven and associate with the Lord."³ Thus, the Prophet Joseph Smith correlated the "three principal rounds of Jacob's ladder" with "the telestial, the terrestrial, and the celestial glories or kingdoms."⁴

Faith, hope, and charity are portrayed as the three major rungs of the ladder in many ancient Christian sources. It is through faith that men are called to enter the gateway to the kingdom through baptism and confirmation. Those who subsequently prove themselves ready through their faithfulness to the Gospel are chosen or elected to inherit the kingdom "according to a preparatory redemption"⁵ and they obtain a first hope of attaining it through the "earnest of the Spirit in [their] hearts."⁶ Finally, having served God and their fellow man "at all hazards" in similitude of the Son of God,⁷ and being filled with a "perfect brightness of hope"⁸ through charity, the "pure love of Christ,"⁹ they are prepared to have their election made sure and they are eventually sealed up to eternal life and exaltation.¹⁰ "There are many called, but few are chosen" in this ultimate sense of the word.¹¹ "And why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set so much upon the things of this world, and aspire to the honors of men."¹² Their "bowels are not filled with charity"¹³ which is, as Nibley affirms, the "essence of the law of consecration."¹⁴

In this drawing, the figure of Charity, representing those who have had their election "made sure," is depicted as having reached the summit of the ladder. Her hand is extended toward the hand of the Lord, shown emerging from a cloud and holding the crown of Life.¹⁵ Other personages below her fall short as they are attracted by one thing or another. The hermit is too busy cultivating his garden and neglects his prayers; the reclusive monk longs for sleep; the alms-seeking monk falls for a large basket filled with pieces of silver—what his heart treasures most; the priest's attention is not occupied by his church but rather by friends, good food and drink, lusts of the flesh, and simony (i.e., the selling of ecclesiastical privileges for money); the nun chatting with the priest is seduced by the pleasures of the world and by family wealth; while the lay woman (attracted to jewels and beautiful lodgings) and the soldier (tempted by horses, arms, and other soldiers to command) have hardly begun the climb. At the bottom of the ladder, the Devil, whose temptations have ensnared all except Charity herself, appears in the form of a dragon, while his minions take steady aim at their victims with bow and arrow. The Prophet Joseph Smith taught: "Until we have perfect love we are liable to fall, and when we have a testimony that our names are sealed in the Lamb's Book of Life we have perfect love, and then it is impossible for false Christs to deceive us."¹⁶ The caption on the ladder bears a message of encouragement, proclaiming that all those who have fallen will have the opportunity, through sincere penitence, to begin their climb anew.¹⁷

1 1 Corinthians 13:13.

2 R. Guénon, Symbols, pp. 336-339; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, pp. 346-348, 354; M. C. Thomas, Hebrews; M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared; N. M. Sarna, Mists, p. 82. See Figures 1-2 and 1-3, p. 34 and Commentary 1:1-c, p. 43.

3 M. G. Romney, Temples, pp. 239-240. See H. W. Nibley, Sacred, pp. 579-581.

4 J. L. Carroll, Reconciliation, p. 95 n. 18; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 21 May 1843, p. 305.

5 Alma 13:3.

6 2 Corinthians 1:22, 5:5; cf. Ephesians 1:14.

7 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 27 June 1839, p. 150.

8 2 Nephi 31:20; cf. Ether 12:28: "a more excellent hope."

9 Moroni 7:47; cf. D&C 121:45.

10 See Endnote 5-63, p. 448.

11 D&C 121:34; cf. Matthew 20:16, 22:14; D&C 95:5-6, and Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519.

12 D&C 121:34-35.

13 D&C 121:44.

14 H. W. Nibley, Foundation, p. 172. See Endnote 5-64, p. 448.

15 Cf. Commentary 1:25-c, p. 60. See Endnote 1-22, p. 79.

16 D. Q. Cannon et al., Far West, 25 October 1831, p. 23; J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 25 October 1831, p. 9; cf. 2 Peter 1:5-11, Moroni 8:25-26.

17 R. Green et al., Hortus, 2:352-353.

Moses 5: Text and Commentary

CHAPTER 5 (June–October 1830)

OBEDIENCE SHOWN (PP. 354-359)

AND ^ait came to pass that after I, the Lord God, had driven them out, that Adam began to till the earth, and to have dominion over all the beasts of the field, and to eat his ^bbread by the sweat of his brow, ^cas I the Lord had commanded him. And Eve, also, his wife, did labor with him.

2 And ^aAdam knew his wife, and she bare unto him sons and daughters, and they began to multiply and to replenish the earth.

3 And from that time forth, the ^asons and daughters of Adam began to divide ^btwo and two in the land, and to ^ctill the land, and to tend flocks, and they also begat sons and daughters.

4 And ^aAdam and Eve, his wife, called upon the name of the Lord, and ^bthey heard the voice of the Lord from the way toward the Garden of Eden, speaking unto them, and they saw him not; ^cfor they were shut out from his presence.

5 And ^ahe gave unto them commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God, and should ^boffer the firstlings of their flocks, for an offering unto the Lord. And ^cAdam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord.

SACRIFICE EXPLAINED (PP. 360-362)

6 And ^aafter many days ^ban angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying: Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me.

7 And then the angel spake, saying: ^aThis thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is ^bfull of grace and truth.

8 Wherefore, thou shalt ^ado all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and ^bthou shalt repent and ^ccall upon God in the name of the Son forevermore.

ADAM AND EVE REJOICE (PP. 362-364)

9 And ^ain that day the ^bHoly Ghost fell upon Adam, which ^cbearth record of the Father and the Son, saying: ^dI am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and forever, that ^eas thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will.

10 And in that day ^aAdam blessed God and was ^bfilled, and ^cbegan to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth, saying: ^dBlessed be the name of God, for ^ebecause of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and ^fagain in the flesh I shall see God.

11 And ^aEve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying: Were it not for our transgression ^bwe never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient.

12 And Adam and Eve blessed the name of God, and they ^amade all things known unto their sons and their daughters.

THE TWO WAYS (PP. 364-367)

13 And ^aSatan came among them, saying: ^bI am also a son of God; and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And ^cmen began from that time forth to be ^dcarnal, sensual, and devilish.

14 And ^athe Lord God called upon men by the Holy Ghost everywhere and commanded them that they should repent;

15 ^aAnd as many as believed in the Son, and repented of their sins, should be saved; and as many as believed not and repented not, should be damned; and the words went forth out of the mouth of God in ^ba firm decree; wherefore they must be fulfilled.

CAIN'S SACRIFICE (PP. 367-373)

16 And ^aAdam and Eve, his wife, ceased not to call upon God. And ^bAdam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare ^cCain, and said: I have gotten ^da man ^efrom the Lord; ^fwherefore he may not reject his words. But behold, ^gCain hearkened not, saying: ^hWho is the Lord that I should know him?

17 And she again conceived and bare his brother ^aAbel. And ^bAbel hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. And Abel was a ^ckeeper of sheep, but ^dCain was a tiller of the ground.

18 And Cain loved Satan more than God. And Satan commanded him, saying: ^aMake an offering unto the Lord.

19 And ^bin process of time it came to pass that ^cCain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord.

20 And ^aAbel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering;

21 But unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not respect. Now ^aSatan knew this, and it pleased him. And ^bCain was very wroth, and ^chis countenance fell.

CAIN REJECTS THE LORD (PP. 373-376)

22 And ^athe Lord said unto Cain: ^bWhy art thou wroth? Why is thy countenance fallen?

23 ^aIf thou doest well, thou shalt be accepted. And if thou doest not well, ^bsin lieth at the door; and ^cSatan desireth to have thee; and except thou shalt hearken unto my commandments, ^dI will deliver thee up, and it shall be unto thee according to his desire. And ^ethou shalt rule over him;

24 For from this time forth ^athou shalt be the father of his lies; thou shalt be called ^bPerdition; for ^cthou wast also before the world.

25 And it shall be said in time to come—That these abominations were had from Cain; for he rejected the greater counsel which was had from God; and this is a cursing which I will put upon thee, ^aexcept thou repent.

26 And ^aCain was wroth, and ^blistened not any more to the voice of the Lord, neither to ^cAbel, his brother, who walked in holiness before the Lord.

27 ^aAnd Adam and his wife ^bmourned before the Lord, because of Cain and his brethren.

CAIN SLAYS ABEL (PP. 376-382)

28 And it came to pass that ^aCain took one of his brothers' daughters to wife, and they loved Satan more than God.

29 And ^aSatan said unto Cain: ^bSwear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and ^cby the living God, that they tell it not; for ^dif they tell it, they shall surely die; and this ^ethat thy father may not know it; and ^fthis day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands.

30 And ^aSatan sware unto Cain that he would do according to his commands. And all these things were done in secret.

31 And Cain said: ^aTruly I am Mahan, the master of this great secret, ^bthat I may murder and get gain. Wherefore Cain was called Master Mahan, and ^che gloried in his wickedness.

32 And ^aCain went ^binto the field, and ^cCain talked with Abel, his brother. And it came to pass that while they were in the field, Cain rose up against ^dAbel, his brother, and ^eslew him.

33 And ^aCain gloried in that which he had done, saying: ^bI am free; ^csurely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands.

CONSEQUENCES (PP. 382-390)

34 And the Lord said unto Cain: ^aWhere is Abel, thy brother? And he said: ^bI know not. ^cAm I my brother's keeper?

35 And the Lord said: ^aWhat hast thou done? The ^bvoice of thy brother's blood cries unto me ^cfrom the ground.

36 And now ^athou shalt be cursed ^bfrom the earth which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.

37 When thou tillest the ^aground it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. A ^bfugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

38 And Cain said unto the Lord: Satan tempted me ^abecause of my brother's flocks. And I was wroth also; for his offering thou didst accept and not mine; ^bmy punishment is greater than I can bear.

39 Behold ^athou hast driven me out this day from the face of the Lord, and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that ^bhe that findeth me will slay me, because of mine iniquities, for these things are not hid from the Lord.

40 And I the Lord said unto him: ^aWhosoever slayeth thee, vengeance shall be taken on him ^bsevenfold. And ^cI the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

41 And Cain ^awas shut out from the presence of the Lord, and with his wife and many of his brethren dwelt ^bin the land of Nod, ^con the east of Eden.

POSTERITY OF CAIN (PP. 390-395)

42 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare ^aEnoch, and he also begat many sons and daughters. And ^bhe builded a city, and ^che called the name of the city after the name of his son, Enoch.

43 And ^aunto Enoch was born Irad, and other sons and daughters. And Irad begat Mahujael, and other sons and daughters. And ^bMahujael begat Methusael, and other sons and daughters. And ^cMethusael begat Lamech.

44 And Lamech ^atook unto himself ^btwo wives; the name of one being ^cAdah, and the name of the other, Zillah.

45 And Adah bare ^aJabal; he was the father of ^bsuch as dwell in tents, and they were keepers of ^ccattle; and his brother's name was Jubal, who was the father of all such as handle the ^dharp and organ.

46 And Zillah, she also bare ^aTubal Cain, an instructor of every ^bartificer in brass and iron. And ^cthe sister of Tubal Cain was called Naamah.

WORKS OF DARKNESS (PP. 395-399)

47 And ^aLamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah: Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech; for I have slain a man to my ^bwounding, and ^ca young man to my hurt.

48 If Cain shall be avenged ^asevenfold, truly Lamech shall be seventy and seven fold;

49 For Lamech having entered into a covenant with Satan, after the manner of Cain, wherein he became ^aMaster Mahan, master of that great secret which was administered unto Cain by Satan; and ^bIrada, the son of Enoch, having known their secret, began to reveal it unto the ^csons of Adam;

50 Wherefore Lamech, being angry, slew him, not like unto Cain, his brother Abel, for the sake of getting gain, but ^ahe slew him for the oath's sake.

51 For, from the days of Cain, there was a ^asecret combination, and their works were in the dark, and they knew every man his brother.

52 Wherefore the Lord cursed Lamech, and ^ahis house, and ^ball them that had covenanted with Satan; for they kept not the commandments of God, and it displeased God, and he ministered not unto them, and their works were abominations, and began to spread among all the ^csons of men. And it was among the sons of men.

53 And among the daughters of men these things were not spoken, because that ^aLamech had spoken the secret unto his wives, and they rebelled against him, and declared these things abroad, and had not compassion;

54 ^aWherefore ^bLamech was despised, and cast out, and came not among the sons of men, ^clest he should die.

55 And thus the works of darkness began to prevail among all the sons of men.

56 And ^aGod cursed the earth with a sore curse, and was angry with the wicked, with all the ^bsons of men whom he had made;

57 For ^athey would not hearken unto his voice, nor believe on his Only Begotten Son, even him whom he declared should come in the meridian of time, who was ^bprepared from before the foundation of the world.

THE GOSPEL PREACHED (PP. 400-401)

58 ^aAnd thus the ^bGospel began to be preached, from the beginning, ^cbeing declared by holy angels sent forth from the presence of God, and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost.

59 ^aAnd thus ^ball things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance, and the Gospel preached, and ^aa decree sent forth, that it should be in the world, until the end thereof; and thus it was. Amen.

1 And it came to pass that after I, the Lord God, had driven them out, that Adam began to till the earth, and to have dominion over all the beasts of the field, and to eat his bread by the sweat of his brow, as I the Lord had commanded him. And Eve, also, his wife, did labor with him.

2 And Adam knew his wife, and she bare unto him sons and daughters, and they began to multiply and to replenish the earth.

- 1 a it came to pass that after I, the Lord God, had driven them out, that Adam began to till the earth. The structure and symmetry of vv. 1-3 help paint a scene of pastoral tranquility. Adam, Eve, and all Creation, as yet untroubled by Satan (v. 13), carry out their labors in perfect obedience to the instructions God gave in the Garden of Eden.²⁴⁷

OT1 reads “for after that he had been driven out he began to till the Earth.”²⁴⁸

to till the earth. “Adam was a ploughman when ploughing first begun,” English farmers once sang with pride.²⁴⁹ “Here, in the place of the ‘subdue’ of the King James version, we have explicitly the word ‘till’ applied to the earth alone, while ‘dominion’ is reserved for the animal kingdom.”²⁵⁰ The tilling reported here was previously anticipated in Moses 3:5 and 4:29.²⁵¹

“Tilling the earth” is a frequent theme in the Book of Mormon. Indeed, 2 Nephi 2:19 and Alma 42:2 specifically state that Adam and Eve were driven out of the Garden of Eden to till the earth. The linking of the themes of obedience and the tilling of the earth is found in Mosiah 6:6-7, and tilling is followed by a mention of children in 2 Nephi 2:19-20 and Ether 6:13-16. Tilling as part of settling a new land can be seen in 1 Nephi 18:24, Enos 1:21, and Ether 6:13, and the making of tools to till the earth is mentioned in Ether 10:25.

- b bread by the sweat of his brow. God rewarded the labor of Adam and Eve with a harvest of life-sustaining grain. Bread relieved them from the diet of wild plants and roots they had presumably followed immediately after their expulsion from Eden.²⁵²

OT1 and OT2 read “by the sweat of the brow”²⁵³ — “his” was substituted by the 1866-67 RLDS Publication Committee.²⁵⁴

- c as I the Lord had commanded him. And Eve, also, his wife, did labor with him. Vv. 1-6 highlight the obedience of Adam and Eve by enumerating their faithfulness to each of the commandments they had been given. Adam, with his fellow-laborer Eve, began to “till the earth, and to have dominion over all the beasts of the field, and to eat his bread by the sweat of his brow.”²⁵⁵ Likewise Eve fulfilled the commission she had received in the Garden of Eden and “bare... sons and daughters, and they began to replenish the earth.”²⁵⁶ Moreover “Adam was obedient to the commandments of the Lord” to “offer the firstlings of their flocks” for “many days,” despite the fact that he did not yet fully understand the reason why he had been thus commanded.²⁵⁷

- 2 a Adam knew his wife. The book of Moses expresses this event in the simple past, rather than in the pluperfect (i.e., “Adam had already known his wife”) preferred by some interpreters.²⁵⁸

247 Moses 4:22, 25.

248 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 92.

249 R. Palmer, Painful Plough, p. 54.

250 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 6.

251 See Commentary 3:5-a, p. 154; 4:24-b, p. 271; 4:25-a, p. 272; and 5:2-a, p. 354.

252 See Commentary 4:24-b, p. 271 and 4:25-a, p. 272. See also 3:9-g, p. 163; 3:9-i, p. 168; the overview of Moses 5, p. 341; and Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall.” p. 632.

253 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 92, 602.

254 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 22.

255 Moses 5:1; cf. Mosiah 6:6-7.

256 Moses 5:2.

257 Moses 5:5-6.

258 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 217.

2 And Adam knew his wife, and she bare unto him sons and daughters, and they began to multiply and to replenish the earth.

3 And from that time forth, the sons and daughters of Adam began to divide two and two in the land, and to till the land, and to tend flocks, and they also begat sons and daughters.

4 And Adam and Eve, his wife, called upon the name of the Lord, and they heard the voice of the Lord from the way toward the Garden of Eden, speaking unto them, and they saw him not; for they were shut out from his presence.

An Armenian text explicitly states: “When Adam and Eve left the Garden, they were still virgins.”²⁵⁹

“Ancient writers often mentioned sexual relations as an indication that a period of penitence or mourning had come to its natural termination.”²⁶⁰ For example, one text says that Adam “having abandoned the sad mourning, at the command of God and the instruction of an angel... came to his wife Eve to beget a child.”²⁶¹ The same pattern of mourning followed by an explicit mention of sexual relations is implied in Moses 6:2, which follows the narrative of the rebellion of Cain and the death of Abel.²⁶²

- 3 a sons and daughters. In contrast to Genesis, the book of Moses specifically mentions children who were born prior to Cain and Abel. Al-Kisa’i recounts that Eve had twenty births prior to Cain and Abel—each of the births producing a set of twins, male and female.²⁶³
- b two and two. The monogamous pairing described here can be contrasted with the presumably unauthorized polygamous marriage of the wicked Lamech²⁶⁴ and the general licentiousness of the people in the days of Noah.²⁶⁵
- c till the land... sons and daughters. The wording of this verse parallels the description of Adam and Eve’s faithfulness to God’s commandments.²⁶⁶ We are meant to understand that the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve were as thoroughly obedient as their parents.
- 4 a Adam and Eve, his wife, called upon the name of the Lord. Here, we are told that Adam and Eve “called upon the name of the Lord”—meaning Jehovah. Later, they will receive the more specific instruction that they should “call upon God in the name of the Son.”²⁶⁷

William Clayton wrote that the “first word Adam spoke” was “a word of supplication.”²⁶⁸ Ancient sources purport to give details about the form of prayer used by Adam and Eve. For example, the practice of prayer with uplifted hands is frequently mentioned, e.g., “Adam was then offering on the altar, and had begun to pray, with his hands spread unto God.”²⁶⁹ This classical orans (= Latin “praying”) posture is a traditional priestly gesture that Christians have long associated with the Crucifixion.²⁷⁰ Brown explains the practice of praying with upraised hands by reference to Isaiah 1:15-16, where it is evident “that the Lord’s eyes are drawn to those who lift up clean (or innocent) hands to Him, while He hides His eyes, or 259 M. E. Stone, Sethites, 1, p. 203; cf. Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 18, p. 24; M. E. Stone, Question, 1, p. 118; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 29. For a discussion of early Christian view on the consummation of Adam and Eve’s marriage and its implications for celibacy in early Christian thought, see G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 43-73.

260 G. A. Anderson, Penitence, pp. 30-31.

261 M. E. Stone, Forefathers, 27, p. 193; cf. M. E. Stone, Adam and Grandsons, 1, p. 92.

262 See Commentary 5:16-a, p. 367 and 5:16-b, p. 367.

263 M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 73; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:137-147, pp. 308-317.

264 Moses 5:44.

265 Moses 8:21.

266 Moses 5:1-2.

267 Moses 5:8. See Commentary 5:8-a, p. 361 and 6:4-a, p. 477.

268 W. Clayton, Chronicle, 15 June 1844, p. 134.

269 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:59, p. 83. See also Moses 7:41; H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, pp. 56-60; J. A. Tvedtnes, Temple Prayer, pp. 81-88; M. von Wellnitz, Liturgy, p. 31; Figure 3-8, p. 145; and Figure 6-14, p. 473.

270 See Endnote 5-65, p. 449.

4 And Adam and Eve, his wife, called upon the name of the Lord, and they heard the voice of the Lord from the way toward the Garden of Eden, speaking unto them, and they saw him not; for they were shut out from his presence.

glances away, from those whose hands are unclean... Notice also that raising the hands essentially exposes the heart to the Lord. Hence we find the directive in Job 11:13 to ‘prepare thine heart, and stretch out thine hands toward him’ and the admonition of Lamentations 3:41: ‘Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.’ These two concepts are combined in the well-known temple scripture: ‘Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart.’²⁷¹

Parry sees in Psalm 24 a possible reference to a prayer circle, noting that “prayer with upraised arms was an essential feature of holy petitions put up to God in the temple of Solomon.”²⁷² “Clean hands” can be thought of as a symbol of the justificatory remission of sins while a “pure heart” can be considered as the result of the process of sanctification.²⁷³ The one whose “palms are innocent, and whose heart is pure” will have the “privilege of appearing before God in his temple,”²⁷⁴ that he “may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death.”²⁷⁵ Hence a Christian text that has the penitent thief being welcomed into Paradise only after he shows to the Cherubim “the writing [token, mark, authorization²⁷⁶] which was in his hand, [that] was written in the blood... of our Lord Jesus Christ.”²⁷⁷ The symbolism relates to sacrifice “after the order of the Melchizedek Priesthood”²⁷⁸—not the Levitical offering of animal sacrifice but an ongoing dedication of one’s own life in a spirit of consecration.²⁷⁹ Elder Neal A. Maxwell explained that “real, personal sacrifice never was placing an animal on the altar. Instead, it is a willingness to put the animal in us upon the altar and letting it be consumed!”²⁸⁰

Accounts purporting to record the words of Adam and Eve’s prayer have long puzzled interpreters. For example, Nibley cites The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan, which says that Adam and Eve “stood with upstretched hands calling upon the Lord, as ‘Adam began to pray in a language which is unintelligible to us.’”²⁸¹ The Gospel of Bartholomew 2:13 likewise has Mary, the mother of Jesus, and the apostles praying with outspread hands. Her prayer begins with words that James reports as being “hopelessly corrupted,” and that Hennecke simply omits.²⁸² While James justifies abandoning any attempt at decipherment by saying “the matter is not of importance,”²⁸³ Nibley correctly explains that her “speaking in an unknown language” is actually “the usual code introducing [such a] prayer.”²⁸⁴

Repetition is another hallmark of solemn prayer. For example, at the dedication of the Kirtland temple the Prophet prayed following the pattern of “Adam’s prayer”²⁸⁵ with threefold

271 M. B. Brown, Gate, p. 125 and Psalm 24:3-4; cf. 1 Timothy 2:8; D&C 109:19; S. A. Ashraf, Inner, p. 125.

272 D. W. Parry, Psalm 24, p. 61 n. 9.

273 D. A. Bednar, Clean Hands, pp. 82-83.

274 D. W. Parry, Psalm 24, p. 60.

275 Philippians 3:10.

276 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 557.

277 I. Mikael, son of Bakhayla, Godhead, p. 136; cf. Commentary 5:5-b, p. 359; Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617; M. Lidzbarski, Ginza, GL 1:1, p. 429; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:69, pp. 83-84. See Endnote 4-32, p. 308. See Endnote E-146, p. 736.

278 J. Smith, Jr., Words, p. 55 n. 29. See Mosiah 13:27-35.

279 See Excursus 33: The Restoration of Sacrifice, p. 609. See also H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, pp. 59-60.

280 N. A. Maxwell, Deny.

281 H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, pp. 57-58. See S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:5, p. 6.

282 E. Hennecke et al., NT Apocrypha, 2:493 n. 2; cf. G. Scholem, Trends, p. 62: “original and... bizarre phrases and word combinations... regarded as the original language of the creature addressing its Creator.”

283 M. R. James, Bartholomew, p. 171.

284 H. W. Nibley, Unrolling, p. 164. See also C. Schmidt, Pistis, 4:136, p. 707; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 5:136, pp. 295-296; H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, pp. 306-307, 313-314; H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, pp. 56-58.

285 H. W. Nibley, House of Glory, p. 339.

4 And Adam and Eve, his wife, called upon the name of the Lord, and they heard the voice of the Lord from the way toward the Garden of Eden, speaking unto them, and they saw him not; for they were shut out from his presence.

repetition: “O hear, O hear, O hear us, O Lord! ...that we may mingle our voices with those bright, shining seraphs around thy throne.”²⁸⁶ Similarly, Abraham, having “rebuilt the altar of Adam” at the command of an angel,²⁸⁷ is reported as having repeatedly raised his voice to God, saying: “El, El, El, El, Iaoel...”²⁸⁸ Accept my prayer.”²⁸⁹ Abraham’s prayer was also in imitation of Adam, who was reported in one account to have supplicated: “May the words of my mouth be acceptable.”²⁹⁰ The threefold repetition in some versions of the story may represent the tradition that it was on the third day when Adam’s urgent and persistent request for additional knowledge from the Lord was at last answered with instruction by an angel. The angel is said to have borne a book that “teaches [those who are wise and God-fearing] how to call upon the angels and make them appear before men, and answer all their questions.”²⁹¹ Likewise, the Prophet Joseph Smith was anxious to teach the Saints the manner by which they could “pray and have [their] prayers answered.”²⁹²

- b they heard the voice of the Lord from the way toward the Garden of Eden. In response to their obedience and prayers, Adam and Eve heard the Lord’s voice calling them back from their place of exile. Later, He gave them additional commandments (and covenants) in order to set their feet back on the way toward the Garden of Eden which is, of course, the path that terminates in “the way of the Tree of Life.”²⁹³

In a passage from the Midrash Tehillim,²⁹⁴ the Hebrew term teshuvah, which denotes “return” but scripturally means “repentance” or “conversion,” is used to describe the way back to the Garden, signifying “the movement that brings every thing and every being back to its supernal origin,” the “return to the celestial abode.”²⁹⁵ The spiritual movement of turning away from the world and back toward mankind’s heavenly origins is mirrored in the layout of ordinance rooms in some modern temples.²⁹⁶

3 Enoch relates that the “first man and his generation dwelt at the gate of the Garden of Eden so that they might gaze at the bright image of the Shekhinah.”²⁹⁷ “The entrance to the Garden therefore symbolizes the human possibility of reaching a privileged vantage point from which a higher knowledge may be obtained.”²⁹⁸

- c for they were shut out from his presence. Lacking knowledge of the conditions by which they could receive the blessings of the Atonement, Adam and Eve experienced a temporary state of spiritual death—the “first death, even that same death which is the last death” for the wicked.²⁹⁹

Nibley comments: “They could hear his voice speaking from the Garden, but they saw him not. They were shut out from his presence, but the link was there. This is what the rabbis call the

286 D&C 109:78-79.

287 H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 57.

288 I.e., Yahweh-El = Jehovah (M. Barker, Gate, p. 153; H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 57).

289 R. Rubinkiewicz, Apocalypse of Abraham, 17:13, 20, p. 697.

290 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:91; cf. Psalm 54:2: “Hear my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth.”

291 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:92; cf. S. Savedow, Rezial, p. 6. Early Christians, when they gathered to “lift up [their] hearts to heaven,” were reminded that God Himself (with the angels) would be an “onlooker” to their proceedings (J. Cooper et al., Testament, 1:23, p. 71).

292 To Bathsheba W. Smith, Juvenile Instructor, 27, 1 June 1892, p. 345, cited in T. G. Madsen, Joseph Smith, p. 99. Cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 28 April 1842, p. 226.

293 Moses 4:31.

294 W. G. Braude, Midrash on Psalms, 90:12, 2:94.

295 G. B. Eden, Mystical Architecture, pp. 16, 17 n. 7.

296 See, e.g., J. E. Talmage, House of the Lord, pp. 118-134.

297 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 5:3, p. 259.

298 G. B. Eden, Mystical Architecture, p. 18.

299 D&C 29:41.

4 And Adam and Eve, his wife, called upon the name of the Lord, and they heard the voice of the Lord from the way toward the Garden of Eden, speaking unto them, and they saw him not; for they were shut out from his presence.

5 And he gave unto them commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God, and should offer the firstlings of their flocks, for an offering unto the Lord. And Adam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord.

bath-kol. The bath-kol is the ‘echo.’ Literally, it means the ‘daughter of the voice.’ After the last prophets, the rabbis didn’t get inspiration, but they did have the bath-kol. They could hear the voice. They could hear the echo. You could have inspiration, intuition, etc. (not face-to-face anymore, but the bath-kol).³⁰⁰

Despite significant differences, initiation rites in Greco-Roman mystery religions and traditions of early Christian mysticism shared the idea of an upward physical movement symbolizing an ascent from darkness to increasingly greater light. For example, some Greek rites required the initiate to sleep in the darkness of an underground room or cave before their period of instruction began, simulating the process of rebirth.³⁰¹ Likewise, some traditions have Adam and Eve living in the darkness of a cave after their expulsion from Eden.³⁰² Armenian texts, though without in this case specifically mentioning a cave, describe an intermediate place of darkness where Adam and Eve spent time after they left the Garden: “And they [the angels] took Adam and Eve away from the Garden. And they went outside to a dark and gloomy place, [and] they remained there [six days] without eating, weeping inconsolably, and bemoaning themselves. But after six days the Lord took pity on them, and he sent his angel to take them out of the darkness, and he guided and brought them into this bright world.”³⁰³ Likewise, Islamic scholar al-Qummi describes a period of misery for Adam and Eve after the Fall, recording the story that upon their descent to earth they were placed on two mountain peaks where Adam remained weeping for forty days.³⁰⁴

Nibley comments: “They had been cast out into another world, into another Life. Life became short and miserable, and Adam didn’t know whether he would ever get out of it again. The lights went out. When he saw the sun go down, he had no assurance the sun would ever rise again. He was utterly depressed. Then he comes and receives the instruction from the angel that tells him he doesn’t have to remain there... Remember, we had that light-dark-light business (preexistence, existence, and hereafter; past, present, and future). You get a religion which is light all the way. There was light in the preexistence. They are going to have light now, and light hereafter, rather than darkness in all three.”³⁰⁵

- 5 a he gave unto them commandments. “What was the reward for diligence in prayer?” asks Draper et al. “The answer is more commandments.”³⁰⁶ These were among what Alma termed the “second commandments,” given because of Adam and Eve had transgressed the “first commandments.”³⁰⁷ Nibley continues: “Now he gives them commandments. He gives them the law of God. He gives them the law of obedience. He gives them the law of sacrifice, and

300 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 233.

301 D. Ulansey, Mithraic, pp. 35-36; cf. Commentary 3:21-a, p. 180. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, The Mysteries, p. 663.

302 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 69; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:3:16, p. 5; H. Schwartz, Tree, p. 344. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, The Cave of Treasures, p. 669.

303 W. L. Lipscomb, Creation, 46-47, p. 126; cf. W. L. Lipscomb, Creation, 50-51, pp. 265-266, S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:4-16, pp. 5-18 and Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, Cave of Treasures, p. 669.

304 A. at-Tabataba'i, Al-Mizan, 1:197; cf. A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, pp. 58-59. See Commentary 5:6-a, p. 360, and the overview of Moses 3, p. 143.

305 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, pp. 231, 234.

306 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 58. See D&C 88:13 (light = law). Compare M. Lieber, Pirkei Avos, 4:2, pp. 219-221: “one mitzvah leads to another mitzvah, and one sin leads to another sin; the consequence of a mitzvah is a mitzvah, and the consequence of a sin is a sin.”

307 Alma 12:31-37.

5 And he gave unto them commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God, and should offer the firstlings of their flocks, for an offering unto the Lord. And Adam was obedient unto the commandments of the Lord.

he gives them the law of the Gospel..., which they follow. They are starting on the way back now.”³⁰⁸

OT1 and OT2 have the singular term “commandment.”³⁰⁹ The use of the plural in the current text perpetuates a change introduced by the 1866-67 RLDS Publication Committee.³¹⁰

- b offer the firstlings of their flocks. As an element of the process of repentance, sacrifice is both a necessary precursor to baptism and confirmation, and a requirement for renewal of that covenant.³¹¹ The ordinance of animal sacrifice given to Adam and Eve³¹² corresponds in our day to the sacrament.³¹³ Thus, as Elder Bruce R. McConkie explained, three ordinances (baptism, sacrifice, sacrament) are associated with one and the same covenant.³¹⁴

Rabbi Nathan says that at the dawning of the first day after their expulsion, Adam “arose and built altars... and he offered [an ox] up as a burnt offering.”³¹⁵ In another text, Adam and Eve make a first sacrifice of their own blood: “Adam and Eve stood on their feet; and Adam said to Eve, ‘Gird thyself, and I will also gird myself’... Then Adam and Eve took stones and [made] an altar; and they took leaves... with which they wiped, from the face of the rock, the blood they had spilled.³¹⁶ But that which had dropped on the sand, they took... and offered it upon the altar... Then Adam and Eve... wept, thus entreating God, ‘Forgive us our trespass and our sin, and look upon us with Thine eye of mercy.’”³¹⁷ Nibley cites an account where Satan smites Adam with a sacrificial weapon as he made his offering: “Adam fell on the altar and would have died were it not that God intervened and healed him on the spot, declaring that what Adam had suffered so far was acceptable to him as a true sacrifice, being in the similitude of his own offering: ‘Even so will I be wounded!’”³¹⁸

An Islamic tradition records that “the angel Gabriel brought a lamb, and taught Adam to kill it in the name of Allāh.”³¹⁹ In addition to the coming of the angel, Islamic sources also associate a deceitful appearance of Satan with the act of sacrifice. As part of the hajj, pilgrims go to Mina “to throw stones at Satan and to sacrifice some animal in the Name of God.”³²⁰ The explanation of this ritual is that “Satan tried to deceive Abraham and Ishmael, but they realized who he was and threw stones at him.”³²¹

- c Adam was obedient. Though both Adam and Eve are commanded, only Adam is specifically mentioned as being obedient. Maybe this is because, as a priest, he is the one who actually carried out the performance of the offering. In any case, there is no implication that Eve was not obedient.³²²

308 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 233.

309 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 93, 603.

310 K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 29.

311 D&C 20:37, 59:9-12.

312 Moses 5:5-9.

313 D&C 59:8-14.

314 B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 293.

315 J. Goldin, Fathers, 1, p. 14.

316 See Commentary 5:4-a, p. 355 and Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

317 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:23, p. 23.

318 H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 60. See S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve 1:69, pp. 83-84; cf. J. Cooper et al., Testament, 1:23, pp. 73, 75 and I. E. Rahmani, II, Testamentum, 1: De Oblatione Sacrificii, pp. 40-41, 44-45.

319 G. Weil, Legends, p. 45; cf. A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 62; J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 58; Commentary 4:27-a, p. 274.

320 See Excursus 47: Islamic Perspectives Relating to Redemption, p. 645.

321 S. A. Ashraf, Inner, p. 122. Note that Muslims generally see Ishmael rather than Isaac as the son who Abraham was commanded to sacrifice (see Genesis 22 and Qur'an 37:102).

322 Cf. Commentary 5:1-d, p. 354 and 6:1-a, p. 475.

6 And after many days an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying: Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me.

- 6 a after many days. The law of sacrifice was given as “a test of being faithful while not perceiving (fully) the reason behind an instruction.”³²³ Here we are specifically told that the additional light and knowledge that Adam sought did not come immediately. However, writes Nibley: “[The Lord] doesn’t keep you waiting forever. Give your test sufficient time, enough to show your integrity, and you will get your answer.”³²⁴

Jubilees 3:9 records that Adam had previously spent forty days, presumably representing some kind of preparatory experience, “in the land where he was created” prior to being placed into the Garden of Eden.³²⁵ Likewise, in direct correspondence to the idea of the period of testing for Adam involving “many days” mentioned here, the Life of Adam and Eve tells of how Adam, following his transgression and expulsion from Eden, spent forty days of penance standing in the Jordan River—the same river that Christ would be baptized in, and the same period of time that Catholics (including candidates for baptism) traditionally spend in prayer and fasting during Lent.³²⁶ Also relevant in this connection is Peter’s association of Noah’s ark, which protected the righteous during a cleansing renewal of the earth lasting “forty days and forty nights,”³²⁷ with Christ’s preaching to the disobedient and the saving effect of baptism.³²⁸ Stone notes that a period of forty days also evokes “Moses’ ascent to Mount Sinai, during which period the Israelites sinned with the golden calf.”³²⁹ It is also the duration of Christ’s withdrawal to the desert and his successful repulse of Satan.³³⁰ In that period Adam fasted..., as Moses did on the mountain³³¹ and Elijah did on Mount Horeb.³³² In the biblical incidents, there is an element of testing: the Israelites failed where Moses succeeded; Elijah recognized God in the small, still voice; and Christ succeeded against Satan. It is very likely that this biblical pattern, including a testing, influenced the formulation in Life of Adam and Eve.³³³

- b an angel. Nibley argues on the basis of scriptural parallels and pseudepigraphal accounts that there were three messengers rather than one: “The... Apocryphon of John... will tell you that it was three messengers that were sent to instruct them.”³³⁴ The Mandaean literature will tell you that the messengers that came to instruct Adam and Eve were the apostles who later became the pillars of the Church (Peter, James and John).³³⁵ They came and instructed Adam and Eve in the Garden.”³³⁶

Alma 12:28-35 implies that Alma was aware of the material in this account, either through direct revelation or through his study of the brass plates.

- c I know not, save the Lord commanded me. Comments Nibley: “I doubt not that when we know the reasons for some of the things we do now on faith, the practical value of the actions

323 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 226.

324 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 234.

325 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 3:9, p. 59; cf. Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, p. 198.

326 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, pp. 8-9; M. D. Johnson, Life, 6:1-8:3, pp. 259-260; cf. Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; Moses 6:52-68.

327 Genesis 7:12.

328 1 Peter 3:18-21.

329 Exodus 32.

330 Matthew 4:1-11.

331 Exodus 34:28.

332 1 Kings 19:8.

333 M. E. Stone, Adam’s Contract, pp. 13-14.

334 F. Wisse, Apocryphon of John, II 1 2:5-9, p. 105.

335 See H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 460-461 n. 47.

336 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 233. See Figure 5-9, p. 339 and Figure 5-10, p. 340.

6 And after many days an angel of the Lord appeared unto Adam, saying: Why dost thou offer sacrifices unto the Lord? And Adam said unto him: I know not, save the Lord commanded me.

7 And then the angel spake, saying: This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father, which is full of grace and truth.

8 Wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore.

will be so plain that we will wonder how we could have missed it, and then we shall be heartily glad that we did what we were told to do.”³³⁷

- 7 a This thing is a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten of the Father. In this connection, Joseph Smith taught: “Certainly, the shedding of the blood of a beast could be beneficial to no man, except it was done in imitation or as a type, or explanation of what was to be offered through the gift of God Himself, and this performance done with an eye looking forward in faith on the power of that great Sacrifice for a remission of sins... [W]henver the Lord... commanded [men] to offer sacrifices to Him,... it was done that they might look forward in faith to the time of his coming and rely upon the power of that Atonement for a remission of their sins.”³³⁸

The Conflict of Adam and Eve gives an account of how Adam and Eve’s prayer at the altar was answered: “Then came the Word of God to Adam, and said unto him, ‘O Adam, as thou hast shed thy blood, so will I shed My own blood when I become flesh of thy seed; and as thou didst die, O Adam, so also will I die. And as thou didst build an altar, so also will I make for thee an altar on the earth; and as thou didst offer thy blood upon it, so also will I offer My blood upon an altar on the earth. And as thou didst sue for forgiveness through that blood, so also will I make My blood forgiveness of sins, and blot out transgressions in it. And now, behold, I have accepted thy offering, O Adam, but the days of the covenant, wherein I have bound thee, are not fulfilled. When they are fulfilled, then will I bring thee back into the Garden. Now, therefore, strengthen thy heart; and when sorrow comes upon thee, make Me an offering, and I will be favorable to thee.’ This, then, was the first offering Adam made unto God; and so it became his custom to do.”³³⁹

- b full of grace and truth. See Commentary 1:6-e, p. 47.

- 8 a do all that thou doest in the name of the Son. Nephi teaches similarly: “But behold, I say unto you that ye must pray always, and not faint; that ye must not perform any thing unto the Lord save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul.”³⁴⁰

The mention of “the Son” without further explanation implies that Adam had previously received knowledge about the mission of the Only Begotten. An account of such instruction being given to Adam can be found in Moses 6:51-63. Note also the correspondence in the mention of repentance made here and in 6:50.³⁴¹

- b thou shalt repent. Nibley remarks: “This perpetual repentance is a very interesting thing. Of course, we do that all the time. We can only call upon God correctly if we repent. We must repent and call upon him forevermore. You can see why. To repent means putting yourself in the condition of repentance, of recognition of your unworthiness. How long are you unworthy? How long do you need to repent? We are told until you are full of grace and truth.

337 H. W. Nibley, Ritual, p. 149.

338 J. Smith, Jr., The Elders, p. 143. See also H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 233.

339 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 24/25, pp. 24, 25; cf. H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 60.

340 2 Nephi 32:9.

341 See Commentary 5:4-a, p. 355 and 5:9-b, p. 362.

8 Wherefore, thou shalt do all that thou doest in the name of the Son, and thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore.

9 And in that day the Holy Ghost fell upon Adam, which beareth record of the Father and the Son, saying: I am the Only Begotten of the Father from the beginning, henceforth and forever, that as thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed, and all mankind, even as many as will.

When you are full of grace and truth, then maybe you might not need to repent anymore. But I think that's quite a while before any of us will be full of grace and truth. One person needs it just as badly as another. If we repent, we are approaching him honestly. If we don't, we're not approaching him honestly.³⁴² c call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore. Cf. Commentary 1:17-b, p. 55.

9 a in that day. The phrase emphasizes the connection between what Adam has just learned and the joy he expressed in the promise of Redemption.

b Holy Ghost fell upon Adam. The explanation of the meaning of the law of sacrifice in vv. 6-8 sets the stage for the baptism of Adam. Though, contrary to expectation, an explicit account of this event is reserved for the sermon of Enoch,³⁴³ Adam's baptism plausibly can be inferred from the explicit mention of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost in this verse.³⁴⁴

With no human administrator available to perform Adam's baptism, it was accomplished in an exceptional manner by his being "caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and... carried down into the water."³⁴⁵ Similarly, in the Mandaean account of Adam's baptism, the ordinance was completed by Hibil Ziua, who is often identified with Manda d-Hiia, the Mandaean Redeemer figure.³⁴⁶

After giving the account of Adam's baptism, Enoch affirms that he also received the Melchizedek Priesthood.³⁴⁷ No doubt additional priesthood ordinances were given to Adam at the same time or soon thereafter.³⁴⁸

c beareth record of the Father and the Son. The Holy Ghost here speaks on behalf of the Father by divine investiture of authority.³⁴⁹ In Moses 6:61 He is given the title of "the record of heaven," and in 6:66 He is called "the record of the Father."³⁵⁰

d I am the Only Begotten of the Father. OT1 reads "I am Jesus Christ."³⁵¹ The current text is consistent with a change made in OT2.³⁵²

e as thou hast fallen thou mayest be redeemed. Helaman 8:18 also affirms that a knowledge of the Redemption was given to mankind "a great many thousand years before his [Christ's] coming."

10 a Adam blessed God. Nibley asks: "How can you bless God? Does he need blessing?... A blessing can go in both ways. A blessing is full approval and full acceptance of another... Bless has a double etymology. One says it's from the Old English word, blotsian, connected with

342 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 234.

343 Moses 6:51-64.

344 Cf. Commentary 1:24-a, p. 59, 1:24-c, p. 59, Moses 7:11.

345 Moses 6:64.

346 E. S. Drower, Prayerbook, p. 30. A Manichaean text similarly speaks of Adam being baptized by Jesus. See Endnote B-16, p. 907.

347 Moses 6:67-68.

348 See Commentary 5:59-c, p. 400.

349 See Commentary 1:3-a, p. 44.

350 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 59.

351 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 93.

352 Ibid., p. 603.

10 And in that day Adam blessed God and was filled, and began to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth, saying: Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh I shall see God.

our word ‘blood.’ To make a blood sacrifice; to bless in that sense. But bless is also connected with the word ‘bliss,’ a complete approval..., a complete acceptance when you bless God. So people can bless each other. You can bless your father or your mother as well as they can bless you.”³⁵³

- b filled. That is, filled with the Holy Ghost.³⁵⁴ The phrase “with the Holy Ghost” was inserted into OT2 by an unknown scribe, then crossed out.³⁵⁵
- c began to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth. Similarly, in D&C 107:56 we are told that at a great gathering preceding his death Adam prophesied about “whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation.” Though the details of his prophecies are not given in extant scripture, we are told that Adam’s words are recorded “in the book of Enoch” and will “be testified of in due time.”³⁵⁶
- d Blessed be the name of God... in this life I shall have joy. Adam’s words are phrased in elegant parallel. Moreover, in vv. 10-11, Adam and Eve’s individual expressions of newfound understanding and joy meld to form a harmonious dual psalm of gratitude.

OT1 omits a part of the expression, and reads instead: “blessed be the name of God for my transgression for in this life I shall have joy.”³⁵⁷

- e because of my transgression my eyes are opened... again in the flesh I shall see God. The second part of Adam’s parallel expresses a significant insight: the crowning moment and the supernal reward of the opening of Adam’s eyes is that again one day he shall see God.

Nibley comments: “What were his eyes opened to? All sorts of things. They have eaten the fruit already and their eyes were opened. They became what the Old Testament calls piqeakh. A piqeakh is a person whose eyes are open, and he sees things that other people don’t see. Laman and Lemuel accused their father of being a visionary man. That’s the way it is nearly always rendered in the Bible. A visionary man is a piqeakh. Like the attendants of Elisha who see the horses there when other people can’t see them,³⁵⁸ you see things that really are there but others can’t see them. There is such a condition. But this is not what he refers to... Here because of his transgression, his eyes are open to his vulnerability. His eyes are open to his condition now. He knew he was in a bad condition, but his eyes were opened to the real situation. There is a whole series of eye openings here. Moses said, ‘...Now for this cause I know that man is nothing which thing I never had supposed.’³⁵⁹ He had come down to this earth. His eyes were opened, and he realized how low he could get. That had never occurred to him. His eyes were opened again. Then it says, ‘he lifted up his eyes’ and again he saw God on his throne.³⁶⁰ So we see different things that are there or that aren’t. ‘...Because of my transgression my eyes are opened...’³⁶¹ [The creation of a hologram was once thought to be] impossible on a two dimensional surface... But you can do it. When you go into some new phase, your eyes are opened. So be ready for all sorts of surprises.”³⁶²

353 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, pp. 235-236.

354 Cf. 3 Nephi 12:6.

355 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 603; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 49.

356 D&C 107:57. See the overview of Moses 6, p. 457.

357 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 93.

358 2 Kings 6:15-18.

359 Moses 1:10.

360 See Moses 1:24ff.

361 Moses 5:10.

362 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 236; cf. Commentary 1:10-b, p. 51, 4:13-a, p. 258.

10 And in that day Adam blessed God and was filled, and began to prophesy concerning all the families of the earth, saying: Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh I shall see God.

11 And Eve, his wife, heard all these things and was glad, saying: Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient.

12 And Adam and Eve blessed the name of God, and they made all things known unto their sons and their daughters.

13 And Satan came among them, saying: I am also a son of God; and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish.

transgression. As in Article of Faith 2, the term “transgression” is deliberately used rather than the more common word “sin.” Elder Dallin H. Oaks sees a parallel with “a familiar distinction in the law. Some acts, like murder, are crimes because they are inherently wrong. Other acts, like operating without a license, are crimes only because they are legally prohibited. Under these distinctions, the act that produced the Fall was not a sin—inherently wrong—but a transgression—wrong because it was formally prohibited.”³⁶³

- f again in the flesh I shall see God. The Hebrew text of the corresponding words in Job 19:26 is notoriously corrupt. If we assume that the author of Job was deliberately citing an ancient source such as this one, the parallel phrasing of the book of Moses would be a valuable witness of the authentic reading. A rabbinic source makes the point about resurrection “in the flesh” even more dramatically, saying that the dead will rise “in their own clothes.”³⁶⁴
- 11 a Eve... was glad, saying. Comments Nibley: “It is [Eve] who perceives and points out to Adam that they have done the right thing after all. Sorrow, yes, but she is willing to pass through it for the sake of knowledge—knowledge of good and evil that will provide the test and the victory for working out their salvation as God intends... She discovers the principle of opposites by which the world is governed and views it with high-spirited optimism: it is not wrong that there is opposition in everything, it is a constructive principle making it possible for people to be intelligently happy. It is better to know the score than not to know it.”³⁶⁵
- b we never should have had seed. While absent from Adam’s psalm of praise, the theme of childbearing is the focus of Eve’s first expression of gratitude. Draper et al. further observe that “Eve’s use of the plural [in this verse] contrasts with Adam’s singular pronouns in Moses 5:10 and divulge her broad and instinctive concern for her family members.”³⁶⁶
- 12 a made all things known unto their sons and their daughters. Again stressing the obedience of Adam and Eve, the text tells us that they taught the Gospel to their children.³⁶⁷ An Islamic tradition also says that Adam and Eve “imparted the information which they had received from Gabriel to their grandchildren and great-grandchildren.”³⁶⁸
- 13 a Satan came among them. As soon as Adam and Eve began to teach the gospel to their children, Satan moved in to blunt their influence. The Prophet Joseph Smith said: “In relation to the kingdom of God, the Devil always sets up his kingdom at the very same time in opposition to God.”³⁶⁹

363 D. H. Oaks, Plan, p. 73.

364 R. Hiyya ben Joseph, Byblyonian Talmud, Kethuboth 111b, cited in D. H. Akenson, Surpassing Wonder, p. 384.

365 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, pp. 92-93; cf. Commentary 4:12-e, p. 256.

366 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 60.

367 Cf. Commentary 5:59-c, p. 400, Moses 6:1.

368 G. Weil, Legends, p. 46.

369 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 May 1844, p. 365.

13 And Satan came among them, saying: I am also a son of God; and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish.

In contrast to the eloquent expressions of Adam and Eve, Satan's preaching is painted in brash and abrupt terms. From the fact that so many were so easily persuaded (he simply said: "Believe it not" and "they believed it not"), it seems that the people were predisposed to reject the word of the Lord. As Nibley observes: "All it took was somebody to say 'don't believe it.' They want that to happen. They are triggered to receive that because of the amount of discipline that's required if you accept it... [The law of obedience is] a strenuous thing. It requires some concentration. You can't keep a celestial order on earth without working at it all the time... In Fourth Nephi you see how the people got tired of it. They thought it was just not worth the trouble. It was easier going back to the old way and becoming competitive and teaching their children to hold the Lamanite children in contempt, etc. This was the easy thing to do."³⁷⁰

- b I am also a son of God. Being a "son of God" is more than being a spirit child of God. Hence, this statement is a bald lie. At one time, Lucifer had been a son of God,³⁷¹ but no more. His title is now Perdition.³⁷²

Satan has no qualms about assuming the garb of piety to further his purposes. An Islamic scholar relates: "The old man who was the first to pledge his allegiance to Abu Bakr and whose forehead was calloused from extensive prostrations, was the accursed Satan.... He was the first to ascend to the pulpit. He expressed with tears running down his cheeks, 'Praise be to the Allāh.'"³⁷³

Nibley comments on this verse as follows: "Notice, that... [Satan's] appeal [is] that he is a son of God... He's all for the Gospel. He is all for saving people. In the Council in Heaven he wanted them saved, too, and he wanted to do the saving. There are lots of people that way, that want to do the right thing as long as they are in charge. But if they are not in charge, all government is then just an evil. When they are in charge, they run everything... When he appeared, his first step was to make a command, speak outright. He wants to be worshipped. That's what he wanted in the first place. ('Give me thine honor.'³⁷⁴) So he commands them."³⁷⁵

- c men began from that time forth. Contrast Moses 6:4.
- d carnal, sensual, and devilish. Though, in a general sense, the Fall was the cause of all mankind becoming carnal, sensual, and devilish "by nature,"³⁷⁶ this passage makes it clear that it was only "from that time" when men individually chose to reject the Gospel, demonstrating that they "loved Satan more than God," that they fully suffered the effects of alienation from God. Such individuals remain "as though there was no redemption made," "knowing evil from good, subjecting themselves to the devil."³⁷⁷ On the other hand, those who accept the Atonement of Christ become "free forever, knowing good from evil, to act for themselves and not be acted upon."³⁷⁸

370 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 237.

371 See Job 1:6.

372 Commentary 1:13-c, p. 53; 4:1-d, p. 243; 4:1-e, p. 244; 4:5-b, p. 246; 5:24-a, p. 375; 5:24-b, p. 375.

373 al-Kafi, vol. 8, cited in Porch of Wisdom Cultural Institution, Faith and Reason, pp. 115, 118.

374 Moses 4:1.

375 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 237.

376 Mosiah 16:3; Alma 42:10.

377 Mosiah 16:5, 3.

378 2 Nephi 2:26.

13 And Satan came among them, saying: I am also a son of God; and he commanded them, saying: Believe it not; and they believed it not, and they loved Satan more than God. And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish.

14 And the Lord God called upon men by the Holy Ghost everywhere and commanded them that they should repent;

The word “carnal,” from a Latin root meaning “flesh,” is closely associated in scripture with the terms “natural,”³⁷⁹ “temporal,”³⁸⁰ and “earthly.”³⁸¹ It represents the condition of estrangement from spiritual things experienced by individuals in their fallen, mortal, and corrupt state before they are born again.³⁸² The “sensual” man or woman is one who privileges the satisfaction of bodily appetites and passions. Such a person becomes “devilish” when “he... persists in his own carnal nature, and goes on in the ways of sin and rebellion against God, remaineth in his fallen state and the devil hath all power over him... being an enemy to God; [as] the devil [is] an enemy to God.”³⁸³ Nibley alternately renders the phrase as “lecherous, pampered, and vicious.”³⁸⁴

This oft-cited triplet appears to be one of the many stock, fixed distinctive combinations of words “which belonged to the literary tradition of Israel and Canaan, and poets [and prophets], specially trained in their craft, drew on this stock to aid in the... composition of parallel lines.... [These combinations were, figuratively speaking, part of] the poets’ dictionary, as it has been called.”³⁸⁵ Though its equivalent appears only once in the Bible,³⁸⁶ a combination of these terms in pairs or triplets occurs several times in LDS scripture.³⁸⁷

14 a the Lord God called upon men by the Holy Ghost everywhere and commanded them that they should repent. The Holy Ghost, an invisible yet powerful opponent to Satan’s preaching, provided a witness to the things that Adam and Eve taught.³⁸⁸ But: “There’s the rub... Who wants to be told to repent? You are not going to get votes by telling people to repent, but by telling them that everything is wonderful.”³⁸⁹

Elsewhere Nibley writes: “The test for this life is not for knowledge; it is not for intelligence, or for courage, or for anything like that. That would be a huge joke. None of us knows very much, none of us is very brave, none of us is very strong, none of us is very smart. We would flunk those tests terribly... [There are] two things and the only two things we are good at: we can forgive and we can repent.”³⁹⁰ Humbly feeling his limitations in so many things, it was a consoling thought to Elder George Albert Smith that life offers an absolutely level playing field with regard to the personal qualities that matter most: “As I have looked at other men both in the Church and out of the Church,... seeing many who are my superiors in education and in experience, perhaps also in intelligence and in other characteristics, I have taken satisfaction in knowing that I am the moral equal of any man alive.”³⁹¹

379 E.g. D&C 29:35.

380 E.g., Alma 36:4.

381 E.g., James 3:15.

382 E.g., Romans 8:6; 2 Nephi 9:39; Mosiah 3:19, 7:24-25; Alma 22:13, 41:13; D&C 67:10-13; B. R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, pp. 113, 195, 267-268, 702.

383 Mosiah 16:5; cf. Mosiah 3:19.

384 H. W. Nibley, Assembly, p. 129.

385 Berlin, cited in J. T. Duke, Pairs, p. 33. See also K. L. Barney, Poetic; J. A. Tvedtnes, Word Groups.

386 James 3:15.

387 Mosiah 16:3; Alma 41:13, 42:10; D&C 20:20, 29:35; Moses 5:13, 6:49.

388 Moses 5:12. See 5:58-c, p. 400.

389 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 237. See also J. B. MacDonald, Holiness, p. 83.

390 H. W. Nibley, Funeral, p. 301.

391 G. A. Smith, n. d., reported by G. A. Smith, Jr. and cited in M. J. Pusey, Builders, p. 226.

15 And as many as believed in the Son, and repented of their sins, should be saved; and as many as believed not and repented not, should be damned; and the words went forth out of the mouth of God in a firm decree; wherefore they must be fulfilled.

16 And Adam and Eve, his wife, ceased not to call upon God. And Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare Cain, and said: I have gotten a man from the Lord; wherefore he may not reject his words. But behold, Cain hearkened not, saying: Who is the Lord that I should know him?

15 a And as many as believed in the Son, and repented of their sins, should be saved; and as many as believed not and repented not, should be damned. Draper et al. characterize this decree as “a legal declaration from the divine world.” They note that “Jesus virtually quoted these terms as He instructed His apostles for the last time; then He gave these instructions to His New World disciples.”³⁹²

b a firm decree. See Commentary 5:59-d, p. 401.

16 a Adam and Eve, his wife, ceased not to call upon God. There is an implied connection between the prayers of Adam and Eve and the arrival of Cain, whom Eve acknowledged as having come “from the Lord.”³⁹³ Childbirth as a blessing from God in answer to prayer is also highlighted in the stories of Abraham and Sarah³⁹⁴ and Hannah and Elkanah.³⁹⁵

OT1 reads: “And Adam ceased not to call upon God; and Eve also his wife.”³⁹⁶

b Adam knew Eve his wife. Sarna comments: “Knowing’ in the Bible is not essentially intellectual activity... Rather, it is experiential, emotional, and, above all, relational... For that reason, the Hebrew stem y-d-’ can encompass a range of meanings that includes involvement, interaction, loyalty, and obligation. It can be used of the most intimate and most hallowed relationships between man and wife, and between man and God. Significantly, the verb is never employed for animal copulation.”³⁹⁷

Cassuto points out that the Hebrew term for “know/knew,” found at several key points throughout this chapter,³⁹⁸ “contains a link with the previous section, whose essential theme is centered on the Tree of Knowledge.”³⁹⁹

c Cain. The Hebrew stem k-n-h typically means “to own or acquire”⁴⁰⁰ but there is evidence for a secondary stem meaning “to produce or create.”⁴⁰¹ Interestingly, this latter stem also appears in the name of Elkanah, a father whose name mockingly highlighted his inability to produce children.⁴⁰² The name is also related to the stem k-y-n which means “to form, fashion, or forge,” and the name kayn denotes a “smith” in Aramaic and Arabic.⁴⁰³

d a man. The Hebrew term for man, ’ish, is striking in this context because it is never used elsewhere to refer to a newborn. By way of explanation, Sarna hears an echo of Adam’s cry

392 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 63. See Mark 16:16; Mormon 9:23; Ether 4:18.

393 Commentary 5:16-e, p. 368.

394 Genesis 17:16.

395 1 Samuel 1:11, 20. See Commentary 5:2-a, p. 354; Moses 5:4. Parallels between the births of Cain and Abel and those of Jacob and Esau are noted in C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 292-293.

396 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 93.

397 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 31.

398 Vv. 2, 6, 16 (twice), 21, 29, 34, 42, 51.

399 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 197. See also pp. 178-248 passim.

400 Cf. “possession” in J. Smith, Jr., 13 April 1843, as reported in E. England, Laub, p. 25.

401 E.g., Genesis 14:19; Deuteronomy 32:6; Psalm 115:19, 139:13; U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 199-202; N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32.

402 1 Samuel 1:11.

403 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32. See Commentary 5:24-b, p. 375.

16 And Adam and Eve, his wife, ceased not to call upon God. And Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare Cain, and said: I have gotten a man from the Lord; wherefore he may not reject his words. But behold, Cain hearkened not, saying: Who is the Lord that I should know him?

in 3:23: in effect Eve now can be seen as saying, “I, woman (‘ish(sh)ah), was produced from man (‘ish); now I, woman, have in turn produced a man.”⁴⁰⁴

- e from the Lord. This phrase has long been a problem for interpreters.⁴⁰⁵ Sarna sees the Hebrew ‘et YHVH as better rendered “together with” or “with the help of” the Lord.⁴⁰⁶ In the talmudic literature, Niddah 31a states: “There are three copartners in the production of a human being: God, father, and mother.”⁴⁰⁷ The use of “Lord” rather than God is explained in Jewish sources as an emphasis on His attributes of mercy rather than of justice.⁴⁰⁸ Note that Eve “is the first person to pronounce the name of God [i.e., Jehovah] in the Bible.”⁴⁰⁹

Hamilton, following earlier exegetes, observes that there is no reason to rule out the argument that ‘et is, in this verse, simply intended to function in its typical role as the marker of the direct object of the verb. For example, we read in Luther’s revised translation of 1546: “I have gotten the man, [namely or even] the Lord.”⁴¹⁰ “This rendering suggests,” according to Hamilton, “that in the birth of Cain Eve thought, mistakenly, that the divinely promised seed of [Moses 4:21] had now come in Cain. The child, whose birth is so welcomed, could be looked on as God himself.”⁴¹¹ Also concluding that “she thought the deliverer had been sent by God,” Boice renders Eve’s exclamation as “Here he is” or “I’ve gotten him.”⁴¹² That Eve could have been so deceived in thinking the promised Redeemer had already come in the person of Cain is highly doubtful. However, in a wider sense, her words may be taken as foreshadowing her hope that, in contrast to her wayward progeny,⁴¹³ Cain would “not reject [the Lord’s] words” and would become the progenitor of the righteous branch of her family through whom the promise of 4:21 would eventually be fulfilled. As in subsequent patriarchal tradition, “a representative child continued to be God’s visible guarantee for the present and a pledge for the future. Also, he was representative of the interests and spiritual and material fortunes of the whole lot who were joined to him.”⁴¹⁴

The Qur’an tells of how Adam, seeing Eve’s hardships in the final stages of pregnancy, promised God that he would always remember Him, if He would grant them a righteous (siddiq) child—a “testifier of truth.”⁴¹⁵ This is the same term used to describe Enoch (= Idris⁴¹⁶), Abraham,⁴¹⁷ and Joseph.⁴¹⁸ Thus, it was natural that the parents had high hopes for Cain. Writes Nibley: “You think of Cain as a very blessed and special person. They thought he was. They expected great things of him. They expected that he would turn the tide. Everything had gone against Adam and Eve. Many of their posterity were not repenting...

404 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32; cf. L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 126.

405 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 221; C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 289-292.

406 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32.

407 Cited in N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 142.

408 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 142.

409 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 26.

410 T. Gallus, Der Nachkomme 1, p. 124; cf. Targum Pseudo-Jonathan: “I have acquired a man, the Angel of the Lord,” where “the Angel of” is clearly a gloss to explain away the literal meaning (M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, p. 31 n. 2). See also Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

411 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 221. See also Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266; T. Gallus, Der Nachkomme 1, pp. 116-132; W. C. J. Kaiser, Toward, p. 37; G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 102.

412 J. M. Boice, Genesis 1-11, p. 250.

413 Moses 4:13.

414 W. C. J. Kaiser, Toward, p. 37.

415 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Sirat Rasul, p. 183 n. 1.

416 M. M. Ali, Qur’an, 19:56, p. 603.

417 Ibid., 19:41, p. 601.

418 Ibid., 12:46, p. 46; Genesis 41:38-39. See J.-L. Monneret, Grands, n. 24, p. 483.

16 And Adam and Eve, his wife, ceased not to call upon God. And Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bare Cain, and said: I have gotten a man from the Lord; wherefore he may not reject his words. But behold, Cain hearkened not, saying: Who is the Lord that I should know him?

17 And she again conceived and bare his brother Abel. And Abel hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.

There was hope that Cain would be the right one, that he wouldn't reject the words. He would put things back on the track. But he didn't.⁴¹⁹

Further supporting the idea of Cain's special potential are traditions of unusual circumstances surrounding his birth. In some accounts, the newborn Cain is described as "a glorious person"⁴²⁰ being "like the color of stars,"⁴²¹ "a designation which associates Cain with the angels."⁴²² This description can be compared to that of the newborn Noah⁴²³—or, on the other hand, to "Satan himself."⁴²⁴

- f wherefore he may not reject his words. The theme of obedience—which formed both the hinge of the plot of Moses 4 and the central motif of the story of Adam and Eve after their expulsion in Moses 5—is once again highlighted by the hopeful words of Eve. Sadly, Eve's children had already begun to reject God's words.⁴²⁵

- g Cain hearkened not. Contrast Commentary 5:17-d, p. 370.

OT1 reads: "But, behold, also Cain hearkened not."⁴²⁶

- h Who is the Lord that I should know him? Draper et al.⁴²⁷ note that "Cain's arrogant question will be mirrored later by that of Pharaoh,⁴²⁸ as well as that of King Noah" in the Book of Mormon.⁴²⁹ The recurrence of the word "know"⁴³⁰ fittingly recalls the covenant relationship between Adam, Eve, and God that resulted in Cain's birth—the type of "covenant relationship that Cain refuses to enter."⁴³¹

- 17 a Abel. The announcement of a second birth cues the reader to one of the many occurrences of the OT pattern of sibling rivalry, where the younger son is the one favored of God.⁴³²

For reasons that are not stated, Eve gives an explanation for Cain's name but not for Abel's. The Hebrew term for Abel's name appears in Ecclesiastes 1:2 and 12:8 in the well-known phrase "vanity of vanities" (hevel hevelim, i.e., the greatest vanity or "vanity of vanities" as it is rendered in the KJV).⁴³³ It can also be translated as "breath" or "nothingness."⁴³⁴ Sarna comments: "The name may augur his destiny... Hevel is often used to express the fleeting nature of life. The name may alternatively, or perhaps simultaneously, contain a reference to his vocation in that Syriac hablā means a 'herdsman'."⁴³⁵

419 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 238.

420 Ibid., 19, p. 241.

421 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Armenian 21:3a, p. 24E.

422 J. Tromp, Cain, pp. 290-291.

423 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 106:2-6, p. 536.

424 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 241.

425 Moses 5:13.

426 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 93.

427 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 65.

428 See Exodus 5:2.

429 Mosiah 11:27.

430 Moses 5:16.

431 See Commentary 5:34-b, p. 382.

432 See Commentary 6:2-d, p. 476.

433 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 222.

434 Cf. "sorrow," J. Smith, Jr., 13 April 1843, as reported in E. England, Laub, p. 25.

435 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32.

17 And she again conceived and bare his brother Abel. And Abel hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.

- b Abel hearkened. The fundamental contrast between Cain and Abel is succinctly stated.⁴³⁶
- c keeper of sheep. Hamilton points out that Abel “is followed in that vocation by such notables as Jacob,⁴³⁷ Joseph,⁴³⁸ Moses,⁴³⁹ and David.”⁴⁴⁰ “Since, in the biblical view, mankind was vegetarian until after the Flood, the function of animal husbandry at this point was to supply milk, hides, and wool.”⁴⁴¹
- Kass expresses an ancient view that exalted the life of the shepherd over that of the farmer: “The shepherd... lives a simple and by and large artless life. His work is mild and gentle; his rule requires no violence. The sheep graze as they roam and produce wool and milk out of their own substance, the shepherd contributing nothing but also harming nothing. Though he wanders the earth as he pleases, the shepherd has no illusions of self-sufficiency; indeed he is likely to feel acutely the dependence of his entire life on powers not under his control and processes not of his own creation. The settled farmer seeks to design his life; the wandering shepherd allows his life to be designed by the world.... When it finally comes, the shepherd may be more open to the edifying and elevating call of the Lord.”⁴⁴²
- d Cain was a tiller of the ground. Kass summarizes the view that the very nature of Cain’s profession had spiritual risks requiring special vigilance: “Rather than serving God, farmers are in danger of serving the earth as if it were a divinity; they are at risk of becoming slaves to the earth. It is not just that they are at the mercy of the elements... The farmer is bound to his plot, rooted in place just like his crops, not free to leave, not free to escape the grip of necessity by which the cursed ground holds him fast, as it were, by the throat.”⁴⁴³

Tromp comments: “Cain’s role in the Armenian/Georgian version [of the Life of Adam and Eve] may be seen to symbolize the destructive forces in humanity: whereas Adam had been taught agriculture, so that he and his posterity might live,⁴⁴⁴ Cain plucks up the grass, his mother’s inferior, but only sustenance.”⁴⁴⁵ Tradition holds Cain to be a farmer, but here he not merely shows himself an ill-omened pupil of his father. He is even the one ‘who first, when [the earth] was giving birth to every kind of animals and plants and was bright with all the products of its fruitfulness, set a bar to that fruitfulness.’⁴⁴⁶ The angel-midwife who delivered Cain is reported to have said to him: “... you are Cain, the perverse one, killer of the good, for you are the one who plucks up the fruit-bearing tree, and not he who plants it.”⁴⁴⁷

Of Cain’s farming practices, Josephus reports the tradition that: “Cain was not only very wicked in other respects, but was wholly intent upon getting; and he first contrived to plough the ground.”⁴⁴⁸ Franxman sees this as a condemnation of those who dishonor God by offering him “products forced from nature by the ingenuity of grasping man,”⁴⁴⁹ and Feldman notes that Josephus’ statement “connects Cain’s name, which means ‘acquisition,’ ...with this quality in his character.”⁴⁵⁰

436 See Moses 5:16.

437 Genesis 30:36.

438 Genesis 37:2.

439 Exodus 3:1.

440 1 Samuel 16:11; 17:34. See V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 222.

441 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 32.

442 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, pp. 131, 132. This is, of course, a generalization of an ancient view—not a condemnation of modern farming methods, nor an endorsement of current animal raising practices.

443 Ibid., p. 131.

444 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Armenian 21:3a, p. 24E.

445 Ibid., Latin 22:2, p. 26E.

446 J. Tromp, Cain, p. 289. See Philo, Rewards, 68, p. 670.

447 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Georgian 21:3c, p. 25E.

448 F. Josephus, Antiquities, 1:2:1, p. 26.

449 T. W. Franxman, Genesis, p. 67. See also p. 66 and n. 5.

450 L. H. Feldman, Hellenization, p. 346. See Commentary 5:37-a, p. 384.

17 And she again conceived and bare his brother Abel. And Abel hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.

18 And Cain loved Satan more than God. And Satan commanded him, saying: Make an offering unto the Lord.

19 And in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord.

The overall description recalls D&C 59:18, 20, which warns that the “things which come of the earth” are “made to be used, with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion.” The term “extortion” has the sense of forcible extraction or wresting out, as when money is obtained through coercion or threats. Explains Nibley: “From the wine and olive presses we get the word ‘extortion,’ meaning to squeeze out the last drop, another way to make a margin of profit—putting the squeeze on, wringing out the last drop.”⁴⁵¹ Robinson and Garrett write: “There is a difference between use and exploitation. Humans did not ‘use’ the passenger pigeon very wisely; they are now extinct. The resources of nature are given to man to manage, not to pillage. Wholesale destruction of natural resources violates God’s command that they be used ‘with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion.’ Perhaps ‘extortion,’ which literally means to ‘twist out,’ here refers to forcing more from a resource than it can bear.”⁴⁵²

18 a Make an offering unto the Lord. Comments Nibley: “Notice [that Satan] says, ‘Make an offering unto the Lord.’ He doesn’t say, make an offering unto me, or make an offering unto devils... He claims to be running the Gospel on earth... Cain is being obedient... but not following the law of God. He is following the law of Satan... He’s being obedient to Satan.”⁴⁵³

19 a in process of time. Westermann notes that this phrase in Genesis “presumes that something has already happened beforehand... We cannot reconstruct it.”⁴⁵⁴ Verse 18 in the book of Moses, however, appropriately provides the missing event.

b Cain brought of the fruit of the ground. Cain, at the command of Satan, “offered the fruit of the ground as a sacrifice, which was not symbolic of Christ’s great act of Redemption... Instead of purchasing a lamb or another animal that would serve as an appropriate sacrifice, he offered what he produced, even as Abel offered that which he produced.”⁴⁵⁵ Echoing the account of the Fall, an Islamic source says that the offering was of figs.⁴⁵⁶ Speaking of the reason Cain’s sacrifice was rejected, the Prophet Joseph Smith explained that “ordinances must be kept in the very way God has appointed,”⁴⁵⁷ in this case by “the shedding of blood... [as] a type, by which man was to discern the great Sacrifice which God had prepared.”⁴⁵⁸ Not only must the form of the ordinance comply with the heavenly pattern, but also the heart must be filled with the spirit of sincere repentance, since “the shedding of the blood of a beast could be beneficial to no man, except it was ... done with an eye looking forward in faith on the power of that great Sacrifice for a remission of sins.”⁴⁵⁹ Thus, Cain’s sin was not merely that he failed to comply to the outward requirements of the law of sacrifice, but also that he did not offer it in righteousness with a “broken heart and a contrite spirit.”⁴⁶⁰

451 H. W. Nibley, Work, pp. 216-217.

452 S. E. Robinson et al., D&C Commentary, 2:167.

453 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, pp. 238-239; cf. Commentary 5:29-c, p. 378.

454 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 294; cf. G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 103.

455 H. L. Andrus, Doctrinal, p. 387.

456 J. C. Reeves, al-Yaqubi.

457 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 October 1840, p. 169.

458 Ibid., 22 January 1834, p. 58.

459 Ibid., 22 January 1834, p. 58.

460 See 1 Samuel 15:22-23; Psalm 51:17-18; Proverbs 15:8-9, 21:3, 27; Isaiah 1:10-20; Hosea 14:2; Micah 6:6-8; 3 Nephi 9:19-20; D&C 64:34; J. R. Holland, Amazed, p. 204.

19 And in process of time it came to pass that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord.

20 And Abel, he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering;

21 But unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not respect. Now Satan knew this, and it pleased him. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell.

Some interpreters have argued that Cain's offering of "the fruit of the ground" should have been perfectly acceptable according to subsequent Old Testament practice. However, with reference to the idea of a cereal offering in Mosaic worship, Andrus notes:⁴⁶¹ "Israel was later commanded to bring the first fruits of the field to the priests as an offering to the Lord. But these offerings were, in the main, to be given to the poor, the widows, and the fatherless."⁴⁶² In some instances they were also used in conjunction with the sacrifice of lambs, but not as a substitute for the shedding of blood."⁴⁶³

- 20 a Abel... brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof. In the book of Hebrews, "Abel's (pre-levitical) sacrifice [is not] contrasted with that of Christ. In this respect, there is an implied analogy between Abel... and Melchizedek" in the righteous nature of their actions.⁴⁶⁴ We are meant to notice a difference from Cain in the care with which Abel selected his offering. About the offering of Abel, Cassuto comments: "This twofold emphasis—on the firstlings, which are the best of the flock, and on the fat portions, which are their best parts... underlines... Abel's desire to gratify his Creator, and to honor him to the best of his ability; his oblation is accompanied by good intent."⁴⁶⁵

In later Old Testament cultic practice, the desirable fatty portions of the sacrifice were seen as belonging to God and forbidden for human consumption.⁴⁶⁶ By way of contrast, the Armenian Abel and Cain describes Cain's offering as coming from grain which had been exposed, beaten down by the wind, and injured as it was trampled underfoot.⁴⁶⁷

- 21 a Satan knew this. What knowledge the Devil has, he uses manipulatively. In this case, Satan not only knew of Cain's anger after the rejection of his sacrifice, but also certainly knew beforehand that a sacrifice of the sort he commanded Cain to make would be rejected.
- b Cain was very wroth. The Hebrew term, often used in the Bible as a "prelude to homicidal acts,"⁴⁶⁸ can express either anger or grief.⁴⁶⁹ What is clear in any event is that Cain's brooding twisted his self-pity and resentment into violent passion,⁴⁷⁰ which soon ignited an explosion of murderous aggression. Wrote Elder Spencer W. Kimball: "It is doubtful if Cain had murder in his heart when his first jealous thought crossed his mind, when the first hate began to develop; but ounce by ounce, moment by moment, the little parasite developed to rob him of his strength, his balance, and his peace. The evil took over, and Cain... changed his appearance, his attitudes, his life, and became a world wanderer, vicious and desolate."⁴⁷¹

Following Rousseau, Kass concludes that the source of Cain's anger is perceived injury born of self-regard (= French considération): "Once there is self-regard, there will be perceived insult experienced as injustice. Once there is perceived injustice, there will be anger and 461 H. L. Andrus, Doctrinal, p. 388.

462 See Deuteronomy 26.

463 See Leviticus 23:10, 17-18.

464 P. Ellingworth, Greek Hebrews, p. 571.

465 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 206.

466 E.g., Leviticus 3:3-5, 9-11, 14-16.

467 W. L. Lipscomb, Abel, 7, pp. 258, 258 n. 5, 270.

468 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 106; Genesis 34:7, Numbers 16:15, 1 Samuel 18:8, 2 Samuel 3:8, Nehemiah 4:1.

469 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 207; V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 224-225; N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 33.

470 Cf. Commentary 5:26-a, p. 376.

471 S. W. Kimball, Mistletoe, p. 229.

21 But unto Cain, and to his offering, he had not respect. Now Satan knew this, and it pleased him. And Cain was very wroth, and his countenance fell.

22 And the Lord said unto Cain: Why art thou wroth? Why is thy countenance fallen?

23 If thou doest well, thou shalt be accepted. And if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door, and Satan desireth to have thee; and except thou shalt hearken unto my commandments, I will deliver thee up, and it shall be unto thee according to his desire. And thou shalt rule over him;

the desire for revenge. And the larger the self-regard, the greater the exacted vengeance.”⁴⁷² Warner has argued convincingly that the self-absorbed perspective that nurtures such feelings is rooted in moral choice, essentially a betrayal of what we know to be right.⁴⁷³

- c his countenance fell. The Hebrew phrase roughly corresponds to the idea of being “crestfallen”⁴⁷⁴ or “downcast.”⁴⁷⁵

- 22 a the Lord said unto Cain. Just as Jeremiah pleaded with his people to “amend [their] ways” and refrain from “shed[ding] innocent blood” so that they could “dwell in... the land that [God] gave to [their] fathers,”⁴⁷⁶ so the Lord lovingly persuades Cain to turn to Him, lest it “be unto [him] according to [Satan’s] desire.”⁴⁷⁷ Sadly, despite the Lord’s entreaties to Cain and his spiritual successors “that they should love one another, and that they should choose me, their Father;... they [were] without affection, and they [hated] their own blood.”⁴⁷⁸

Comments Nibley: “The Lord counsels [Cain] and speaks with him very kindly, very gently, with much long-suffering, you will notice... [H]e doesn’t say, now you will be damned on the spot and wiped out because you didn’t do right, but He says, you are running a risk. You’re at risk if you start doing that sort of thing. ‘Sin lieth at the door [it’s not far away].’ If you are going to keep up with this sort of thing, you are in real trouble... You hearken to God’s voice or you are in Satan’s power: ‘All who do not live up to their covenants will be in my power.’ That’s the provision that has been made. You have the one choice or the other.”⁴⁷⁹

- b Why art thou wroth? “The narrative... focuses our attention to Cain’s response. It is there that the narrative seeks to make its point. Cain’s response was twofold: (1) anger against God⁴⁸⁰ and (2) anger against his brother.”⁴⁸¹

- 23 a If thou doest well, thou shalt be accepted. The Hebrew text of this verse in Genesis is so riddled with difficulties for the interpreter that “every attempt to extract a meaning from the verse is more or less of a tour de force.”⁴⁸² The book of Moses agrees in substance with the traditional rendering of the first part of the verse, but then extends the text to make it clear that it is not “sin” per se but rather Satan who has made Cain the object of his desire. Again it is also Satan, not sin, who will in the end be ruled over (i.e., mastered) by Cain.

thou shalt be accepted. The phrase in literal Hebrew refers to a “lifting up,” perhaps a sort of contrast with the “crouching down” (= lieth) in the phrase that follows.⁴⁸³ The wording of this phrase in OT1 (“shalt thou not be accepted”⁴⁸⁴) is identical to that of Genesis.

472 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 139.

473 C. T. Warner, Bonds, pp. 19-38.

474 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 224.

475 M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 4:5, p. 32.

476 Jeremiah 7:5-7.

477 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 62.

478 Moses 7:33.

479 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, pp. 239-240.

480 Moses 5:26.

481 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 61. See Moses 5:32.

482 Skinner, cited in V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 225.

483 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 210-212.

484 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 94.

23 If thou doest well, thou shalt be accepted. And if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door, and Satan desireth to have thee; and except thou shalt hearken unto my commandments, I will deliver thee up, and it shall be unto thee according to his desire. And thou shalt rule over him;

- b sin lieth at the door. “Sin” makes its first appearance in the Bible here. Hamilton explains: “Because [Cain’s] offering has been rejected by God he is seething with anger. In such an emotional state he is easy prey for sin which crouches lion-like and waits to jump on him.”⁴⁸⁵
 - c Satan desireth to have thee. The words for “desireth” and “rule” in the Hebrew text parallel the terms used earlier to describe the tendency for marriage relationships in a fallen world to deteriorate into a state of competition and rancor.⁴⁸⁶ Unwilling to escape the bands of wickedness, Satan and Cain will be eternally locked together in the utterly destructive embrace of unrighteous dominion.⁴⁸⁷
- Cassuto notes as well that the Hebrew term used for the verb in “bruise his heel”⁴⁸⁸ comes from a stem that is cognate with “desire” as it is used in this verse,⁴⁸⁹ thus evoking the mortal danger Cain is courting in giving in to Satan’s craving to wound him, and also perhaps suggesting that he must quickly act to crush his opponent.⁴⁹⁰
- d I will deliver thee up. If Cain persists in wickedness, God’s protective power will be withdrawn from him.
 - e thou shalt rule over him. In every respect, Cain will become more of a devil than the Devil himself. In v. 24, Satan’s own ignominious titles, “Perdition”⁴⁹¹ and “the father of lies,”⁴⁹² are ultimately conferred upon him.

Elder Joseph Fielding Smith made the following comment relating to Cain’s subsequent “ascendancy” over Satan: “Now as to whether or not those who in mortal life rebel and become sons of perdition will be able to exercise greater dominion than those who followed Lucifer, who became the Devil and arch-enemy of Jesus Christ, might be a moot question. However, the Lord has made it definitely clear that Cain will hold that ascendancy in the realm of wickedness; that Satan desired to have him, and the implication is clear that the reason was because Cain had a body of flesh and bones.... As far as Cain is concerned, the information given is definite that he became Perdition, and that Lucifer who is Satan, became subject to him. It appears that the reason Satan desired to have him was due to the fact that Cain had obtained a body of flesh and bones and therefore had superior power, and Satan was willing to accept and be obedient to him because of that condition. The natural conclusion is, therefore, that a devil with a body of flesh and bones has some power greater than one who was denied the physical body.”⁴⁹³

Note that Cain’s ultimate ascendancy over Satan is foreshadowed in v. 30, where Satan takes an oath to “do according to [Cain’s] commands.”

485 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 201-202.

486 See Commentary 4:22-c, p. 268.

487 See D&C 121:39; 2 Nephi 4:18; and Alma 5:7, 10.

488 See Commentary 4:21-d, p. 266.

489 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 161.

490 Cf. Hamilton’s translation of the last clause of v. 23 “you, you are to master it!” (V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 228).

491 D&C 76:26.

492 2 Nephi 9:9; Moses 4:4.

493 J. F. Smith, Jr., Answers, 1958, 2:170-171. The teachings of Joseph Smith relating to the fact that “beings who have bodies have power over those who have not” (J. Smith, Jr., Words, 5 January 1841, p. 60) are summarized elsewhere. See Endnote 4-15, p. 303. See also Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575.

24 For from this time forth thou shalt be the father of his lies; thou shalt be called Perdition; for thou wast also before the world.

24 a thou shalt be the father of his lies. The scripture portrays Cain’s wickedness as even greater than that of Satan. Though Satan continues to be the “father of lies,”⁴⁹⁴ it will be as if Cain were the “grandfather.” Elder Bruce R. McConkie comments: “Both Satan and Cain... have been liars from the beginning.”⁴⁹⁵ The name signifies authorship and sponsorship of all that is dishonest and which leads away from the truth. In a similar sense Satan is the ‘master of sin’⁴⁹⁶ and the father of secret combinations and every evil thing.”⁴⁹⁷

b Perdition. Emphasizing Cain’s accountability, Elder Joseph Fielding Smith writes: “Cain sinned with his eyes open, so he became Perdition.”⁴⁹⁸ Whereas Judas Iscariot was called the “son of perdition” by Jesus Christ,⁴⁹⁹ Cain is the only scriptural personage referred to as “Perdition” itself.

The title “Perdition”—from a Latin root meaning “to destroy, to ruin”—is an ironic reversal of one of the derivations of the name Cain: “to produce, to create.”⁵⁰⁰ Nibley further explains: “‘Perdition’ means... one fallen from high estate... Nine days[, as Milton says,] he fell in ‘hideous ruin and combustion down,’ down, down’...⁵⁰¹ He was among the highest in heaven up there, and down he fell.”⁵⁰²

Writes Andrus: “To become Perdition, Cain would have to commit the unpardonable sin. ‘No one can commit the unpardonable sin,’ Joseph Smith explained, ‘... until he receives the Holy Ghost.’⁵⁰³ Having received the Holy Ghost, one must then commit murder, wherein he sheds innocent blood. Said the Prophet: ‘The unpardonable sin is to shed innocent blood, or be accessory thereto.’⁵⁰⁴ Innocent blood is the blood of the righteous. It is sanctified blood. And to shed innocent blood, one must come out in open opposition to the kingdom of God so as to assent unto the death of Christ.”⁵⁰⁵ At that point, when one is “fully ripe,” the Spirit utterly ceases to “strive with man” and he is “cut off from the presence of the Lord.”⁵⁰⁶ In rejecting the law of sacrifice, trampling the Savior under his feet, and shedding the innocent blood of his brother, Cain put himself beyond the reach of the Atonement.

c thou wast also before the world. From this verse, Elder Bruce R. McConkie concludes that Cain was a friend of Lucifer in premortality, and at that time had already charted his future course.⁵⁰⁷

Comments Nibley: “This refers back to the time in the Council in Heaven, in glory. Satan is not going to say, you brought me into this world and put me in this terrible jam, and I had nothing to say about it. Oh no, you were in the preexistence, too. You were high up there because you are Perdition now. ‘...for thou wast also before the world.’ You had your preexistence and your chance.”⁵⁰⁸

494 2 Nephi 9:9, Moses 4:4.

495 2 Nephi 9:9; Moses 5:18-27; D&C 93:25; cf. Alma 5:25. See Commentary 4:1-c, p. 243.

496 Mosiah 4:14.

497 B. R. McConkie, Mormon Doctrine, p. 278; cf. 2 Nephi 26:22; Helaman 6:26; Moroni 7:12. See Commentary 4:4-b, p. 246.

498 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 30 March 1935, 2:280. Other scriptural passages that refer to the title “perdition” and “sons of perdition” include John 17:12; 2 Thessalonians 2:3; 3 Nephi 27:32, 29:7; D&C 75:26, 32, 43.

499 John 17:12; 3 Nephi 27:32, 29:7.

500 See Commentary 4:1-f, p. 244; 5:16-c, p. 367.

501 See J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:46, p. 17.

502 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 240.

503 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 357.

504 Ibid., 16 May 1843, p. 300; D&C 132:27.

505 H. L. Andrus, Doctrinal (Rev.), p. 335. See also J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 358.

506 Ether 2:15; cf. Moses 8:17.

507 B. R. McConkie, NT Commentary, 1:715; cf. John 8:44; 1 John 3:11-12; J. A. Widtsoe, Evidences, p. 212.

508 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 240.

25 *And it shall be said in time to come—That these abominations were had from Cain; for he rejected the greater counsel which was had from God; and this is a cursing which I will put upon thee, except thou repent.

26 And Cain was wroth, and listened not any more to the voice of the Lord, neither to Abel, his brother, who walked in holiness before the Lord.

27 And Adam and his wife mourned before the Lord, because of Cain and his brethren.

28 *And it came to pass that Cain took one of his brothers' daughters to wife, and they loved Satan more than God.

- 25 a except thou repent. God tenders a loving plea to Cain, as the tragic son of Adam nears the final crossroads. Nibley observes: “It’s still not too late. This is the gospel of repentance. As long as you are in this earth, you can still repent. As long as we are in this earth, there is no one who doesn’t need to repent... The door is open to everyone here... As Ezekiel⁵⁰⁹ says... However wicked the bad guys have been all their days, they can still repent and become righteous. And however righteous the good guys have been all their days, they can still fall and become the wicked. The door is open right to the end. Never, never claim that you are saved. No one is saved here[—no one is] beyond sinning... And again, no one is damned. You are not damned on this earth. You are damned in the judgment in the hereafter. And you are not saved on this earth. You are in between and you are being tested. Therefore, this life became, as [Lehi] says, a time of probation.”⁵¹⁰
- 26 a Cain was wroth. Cain does not answer the Lord, but inwardly fans his smoldering resentment into a flame of murderous passion.⁵¹¹
- b listened not any more. Writes Nibley: “‘The... door of repentance is held open right to the last moment, when it is Cain himself who breaks off the conversation and angrily stamps out, refusing to listen ‘any more to the voice of the Lord’ or to his brother’s remonstrances.”⁵¹² Arnold observes: “Eve had been talked into her sin. Cain could not be talked out of his, even by God himself.”⁵¹³
- c Abel... walked in holiness. Joseph Smith explained that Abel “magnified the Priesthood which was conferred upon him, and died a righteous man, and therefore has become an angel of God by receiving his body from the dead, holding still the keys of his dispensation; and was sent down from heaven unto Paul to minister consoling words, and to commit unto him a knowledge of the mysteries of godliness.”⁵¹⁴
- 27 a Adam and his wife. OT1 reads: “And Adam also, and his wife.”⁵¹⁵
- b mourned before the Lord. This expression may indicate the practice of bringing one’s concern for loved ones to the altar as the subject of special prayer.⁵¹⁶
- 28 a Cain took one of his brothers’ daughters to wife, and they loved Satan more than God. The mention of Cain’s brothers in v. 27, coupled with the statement that they loved Satan more than God,⁵¹⁷ makes it seem reasonable to suppose that Cain’s wife was the daughter

509 Ezekiel 18:26-27.

510 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 241; see 2 Nephi 2:21.

511 Cf. Commentary 5:21-b, p. 372.

512 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, pp. 175-176.

513 B. T. Arnold, Genesis, p. 40.

514 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 5 October 1840, p. 169 and Hebrews 11:4; see also D&C 84:16. For an LDS perspective on the authorship of Hebrews, see T. L. Szink, Authorship. See Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

515 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 94.

516 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 67; H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, pp. 75-79. See also M. B. Brown, Gate, pp. 124-126; D. W. Parry, Psalms 24; D. M. Quinn, Prayer Circles; J. A. Tvedtnes, Temple Prayer; M. von Wellnitz, Liturgy, pp. 32-33.

517 Cf. Moses 5:13.

28 And it came to pass that Cain took one of his brothers' daughters to wife, and they loved Satan more than God.

29 And Satan said unto Cain: Swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by the living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it, they shall surely die; and this that thy father may not know it; and this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands.

of one of the unbelieving sons of Adam rather than of the righteous Abel. Note the later Old Testament custom “for men to marry a niece, as did Nahor, brother of Abraham.”⁵¹⁸ Falk writes: “During the tribal period, marriage was contracted within the kinship group. Originally the rule, perhaps, applied even to close relatives, requiring marriage with a man’s paternal sister. Later, the same tendency took the form of a preference for one’s niece or cousin.”⁵¹⁹

According to Jewish, Christian, and Islamic sources, Cain’s wife had not been the first object of his desire. Accounts tell of the twin sisters of Cain and Abel, and relate that Adam appointed which of the sisters each brother was to marry. Angry because the sister promised to Abel was more beautiful, Cain was said to have killed his brother “out of passion for [his] sister.”⁵²⁰ A Manichaean version of the story goes further in claiming that Abel’s wife was unfaithful, and when Abel learned about her involvement with Cain, his complaints to her and to his mother Eve provoked Cain’s murderous anger.⁵²¹ President Spencer W. Kimball concurred with the plausibility of such a scenario: “If we had the record, we would probably find that Cain was promiscuous, for seldom do great crimes travel in single file.”⁵²²

29 a Satan said unto Cain. Remarks Nibley: “God discusses things with men ‘in all humility’ for the sake of our enlightenment. Satan too loves to ‘discuss,’ but what a different type of discussion! He is not teaching but laying traps; his whole line is a sales pitch with his own advantage as the end. He is not enlightening but manipulating. He does not reason, but bargains.”⁵²³ The Apocalypse of Abraham counsels: “Answer [Satan] not, lest his will affect you.”⁵²⁴

b Swear unto me by thy throat. Nibley observes: “The throat is one of the most vulnerable parts of the body to an ancient weapon such as a knife or a spear. Hence, it is vital to the continuation of life. In addition, cutting the throat of an sacrificial animal began the process of a sacred offering. It seems plain that Satan’s oaths gain credibility not through his name but only through repeating the divine name [“swear... by the living God”] and, possibly, mimicking genuinely sacred covenants made in God’s name.”⁵²⁵

Anciently, discretion in the revealing of sacred religious knowledge was solemnly enjoined by the symbolic enactment of self-cursing. For example, a hint of such may be seen in the following is statement attributed to Abu Hurayrah, who is said to have received secret knowledge from Muhammad during the Islamic Prophet’s final years in Medina: “I have memorized two kinds of knowledge from Allāh’s Apostle... I have transmitted one of them

518 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 67. See Genesis 11:27-29.

519 Z. W. Falk, Law, p. 129. See Genesis 11:29; 20:12; 24; 28.

520 M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, pp. 346-347 n. 60; al-Tabari, Creation, 1:137-147, pp. 308-317; A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, pp. 73-76; E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 69-70; L. Ginzberg, Legends, 5:138; M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, pp. 38-39; J. L. Kugel, Traditions, pp. 147-148; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:76-79, pp. 95-103; J. C. Reeves, al-Yaqubi; S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam 1983, 3:5, p. 994; H. Schwartz, Tree, 575, pp. 449-450; Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 18, pp. 25-26; M. E. Stone, Question, 1-2, pp. 118-119; M. E. Stone, Sethites, 1-3, pp. 203-204; G. Weil, Legends, pp. 42-43. See also Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

521 J. C. Reeves, Heralds, p. 80.

522 S. W. Kimball, Teachings 1982, 26 September 1971, p. 268.

523 H. W. Nibley, Beyond Politics, p. 291.

524 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 14:12, p. 696. See n. 14 l.

525 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, pp. 67-68; cf. J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, p. 669.

29 And Satan said unto Cain: Swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by the living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it, they shall surely die; and this that thy father may not know it; and this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands.

to you, and if I spread the second, then my throat would be cut.”⁵²⁶ In the performance of sacred covenants in ancient times, writes Westermann, “Words and actions are part of the oath. There can be the raising of the hand or some other action(s). A standard form which is very common is the conditional self-cursing...”⁵²⁷ The one who passes between the divided halves of the slain animals invokes death upon himself should he break the word by which he has bound himself in the oath.”⁵²⁸ Sarna also cites an example in the Aramaic Sefire Treaty from northern Syria: “As this calf is cut up, thus Mattiel... shall be cut up.”⁵²⁹ In Arabic, the “original meaning [of the word for oath] is the right hand. As they strike by, raise, or give, the right hand when taking an oath, showing allegiance or concluding a deal, the word was metaphorically used for the oath.”⁵³⁰

As a parallel to this passage about the oath Cain made to Satan in seeming imitation of genuine ancient religious practices, Nibley cites a Greek fragment of 1 Enoch (Gizeh) describing the events surrounding the marriage of the Sons of Heaven and the Daughters of Men, where their leader Semiazus [= Satan] says: “I am afraid you will not be willing to go through with this thing... And they answered him all saying, We will all swear with an oath, and bind each other by a mortal curse [literally, anathemize each other], that we will not go back on this agreement [gnome] until we have carried it out; ... Then they all swore together and pronounced the doom of death on each other.”⁵³¹ In the same spirit, the oath between Cain and Satan is appropriately described in the Doctrine and Covenants as a “conspiracy.”⁵³²

- c by the living God. Nibley comments: “Notice..., who do they swear by? By the living God. They don’t swear by anybody else.”⁵³³ Similarly, we read in 1 Enoch: “Kasbeel, the chief of the oath... when he dwelt high above in glory... requested Michael to show him the hidden name, that he might enunciate it in the oath, so that those might quake before that name and oath who revealed all that was in secret to the children of men.”⁵³⁴
- d if they tell it, they shall surely die. Draper et al. explain: “The stakes for turning against one’s oath were deadly. Here death can result from mere spoken words.”⁵³⁵ This verse foreshadows vv. 49-50, where Lamech slays Irad “for the oath’s sake” because he had begun to reveal “their secret.”
- e that thy father may not know it. Satan is particularly concerned that the oath be kept secret from Adam.
- f this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands. Comments Nibley: “God and Satan both presented plans of dominion to Adam and then to his son Cain. [Adam] chose one plan, [Cain] the other.”⁵³⁶ Satan’s hatred of Jehovah mirrored Cain’s animosity toward Abel

526 M. I. I. Bukhari, Sahih, 3:43:120, 1:113. See also A. B. S. Ed-Din, Sufism, p. 236.

527 E.g., Genesis 15:9ff.

528 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 225; cf., e.g., V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, pp. 430-433.

529 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, pp. 114-115; cf., e.g., Alma 46:20-21; D. R. Seely, Genesis 15, pp. 356-358.

530 A. at-Tabataba’i, Al-Mizan, 2:224, 4:4; cf. D. R. Seely, Raised Hand. See Endnote 4-34, p. 308.

531 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 182; cf. R. H. Charles, Enoch, 6:2-5, p. 278; H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 10; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 6:3-5, p. 174; Moses 6:29.

532 D&C 84:16; cf. Commentary 5:47-b, p. 396.

533 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP; cf. Commentary 5:18-a, p. 371.

534 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 182; cf. G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 69:13-14, p. 90.

535 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 68.

536 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 13.

29 And Satan said unto Cain: Swear unto me by thy throat, and if thou tell it thou shalt die; and swear thy brethren by their heads, and by the living God, that they tell it not; for if they tell it, they shall surely die; and this that thy father may not know it; and this day I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands.

30 And Satan sware unto Cain that he would do according to his commands. And all these things were done in secret.

31 And Cain said: Truly I am Mahan, the master of this great secret, that I may murder and get gain. Wherefore Cain was called Master Mahan, and he gloried in his wickedness.

as, in the words of President John Taylor, “the rebellion in the heavens was transmitted to a rebellion on the earth.”⁵³⁷

30 a Satan sware unto Cain. Nibley points out the illusory nature of Satan’s seeming subservience: “Cain rule over Satan? Yes, that is the arrangement—the Devil serves his client, gratifies his slightest whim, pampers his appetites, and is at his beck and call throughout his earthly life, putting unlimited power and influence at his disposal through his command of the treasures of the earth, gold and silver. But in exchange the victim must keep his part of the agreement, following Satan’s instructions on earth and remaining in his power thereafter. That is the classic bargain, the pact with the Devil, by which a Faust, Don Juan, Macbeth, or Jabez Stone achieve the pinnacle of earthly success and the depths of eternal damnation.”⁵³⁸

31 a Truly I am Mahan. Draper et al. comment: “Cain takes a new name as an indicator of his new status, also a later characteristic of righteous persons (Abram becomes Abraham;⁵³⁹ and so on).”⁵⁴⁰ Nibley discusses a possible etymology of the name: “The word ‘secret’ is sirra in Arabic; the eighth form of the verb, mustirra, means ‘to hold a secret, to keep a secret.’ It’s the same as the Greek word sathra for secret. The Egyptian word is seshet; mesehet is ‘to hold a secret.’ Sether is the Hebrew word for keeping a secret (the master of the secret). So this word ‘master’ may not be our word ‘master’ at all, but ‘master’ means ‘keeper of secret,’ and ‘Mahan’ means ‘great.’ In any language, maha means ‘great.’ Words like magnus, mighty, might, many, maharaja; anything that’s big is ma. So this could mean Master Mahan, the ‘great secret keeper.’ (It could be; this is just a suggestion here.)”⁵⁴¹

Note that in OT1, “Mahan” is consistently spelled “Mahon,” which suggests how the Prophet might have pronounced the name while dictating the manuscript.⁵⁴² The spelling was changed to “Mahan” in OT2.⁵⁴³

b that I may murder and get gain. The essence of the great secret of Cain is what Nibley calls “converting life into property. Cain got the degree of Master Mahan, tried the system out on his brother, and gloried in its brilliant success, declaring that at last he could be free, as only property makes free, and that Abel had been a loser in a free competition.”⁵⁴⁴

President Spencer W. Kimball warned that “we must eliminate the individual tendency to selfishness that snares the soul, shrinks the heart, and darkens the mind. President [Marion G.] Romney recently referred to the tragic cycle of civilization, a cycle propelled by anyone who seeks for power and gain. Was it not this that led Cain to commit the first murder ‘for the sake of getting gain’?⁵⁴⁵ Is not this the spirit of the anti-Christ in which ‘every man prospered according to his genius, and ... every man conquered according to his strength;

537 J. Taylor, Mediation, 1882, p. 68; J. Taylor, Gospel Kingdom, 1882, p. 101.

538 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 175. See Commentary 5:23-e, p. 374.

539 See Genesis 17:5.

540 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 68; cf. Moses 5:49; Commentary 3:19-b, p. 177.

541 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 242.

542 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 94-95.

543 Ibid., pp. 605, 607.

544 H. W. Nibley, Foundation, p. 166. See Commentary 5:38-a, p. 384.

545 Moses 5:50,

31 And Cain said: Truly I am Mahan, the master of this great secret, that I may murder and get gain. Wherefore Cain was called Master Mahan, and he gloried in his wickedness.

32 And Cain went into the field, and Cain talked with Abel, his brother. And it came to pass that while they were in the field, Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and slew him.

and whatsoever a man did was no crime?⁵⁴⁶ Did not Nephi single this out as the spirit which led his generation to destruction?⁵⁴⁷

c he gloried in his wickedness. See Commentary 5:33-a, p. 381.

32 a Cain went. Wenham writes: “The awfulness of the deed is accentuated by the stark brevity of the description... [T]he terseness conveys the feel of the story hastening to its climax.”⁵⁴⁸

b into the field. Sarna notes: “Hebrew sadeh refers to the open, uninhabited country away from the settled areas. It was often the scene of crime.”⁵⁴⁹ Later in the OT, the word “field” will appear in several other stories of sibling rivalry and fratricide: the story of Jacob and Esau,⁵⁵⁰ Joseph and his brothers,⁵⁵¹ Abimelech, who killed seventy of his brothers,⁵⁵² and the war between the tribe of Benjamin and those of his brothers.⁵⁵³

c Cain talked with Abel, his brother. The Hebrew indicates that the phrase has been truncated (i.e., “Cain said to his brother Abel...”). Friedman conjectures that Cain’s words were “skipped in the Masoretic text by a scribe whose eye jumped from the first phrase containing the word ‘field’ to the second.”⁵⁵⁴ Sarna notes that the “Aramaic targums, like the Greek, Syriac, and Latin versions of the text, add: ‘Come let us go into the field’... Others took Hebrew va-yo’mer to mean ‘He had words with him.’”⁵⁵⁵ Cassuto renders the phrase as “Cain appointed a place where to meet Abel his brother,” commenting: “first he arranged the meeting and then he turned the meeting into an assault.”⁵⁵⁶

In addition to the general themes of Cain’s jealousy and wickedness mentioned previously, ancient sources cite other immediate pretexts for Cain’s argument with Abel. One version of the story has it that Cain coveted a twin sister who had been appointed by Adam to be Abel’s wife.⁵⁵⁷ Al-Tabari, on the other hand, recounts that “Adam singled Abel out for [receiving God’s] knowledge” and that “Cain... killed Abel out of envy.”⁵⁵⁸ Implausibly, Jewish midrash⁵⁵⁹ envisions an argument over property as the catalyst for Cain’s fatal quarrel with Abel: “[W]hen they divided the world, one took the land and the other took the movables. The former said, ‘You are standing on my land,’ while the other said ‘What you are wearing is mine!’ One said ‘Strip,’ while the other retorted ‘Fly [off my land].’”⁵⁶⁰ The dispute recalls the Sumerian myth of Dumuzi and Enkimdu, whose plot is based on, Kramer asserts, “what may not inaptly be described as the ‘Cain-Abel’ motif.”⁵⁶¹

546 Alma 30:17.

547 S. W. Kimball, Pure, p. 79. See 2 Nephi 26:10-11.

548 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 106.

549 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 33. See N. M. Sarna, Mists, p. 69 for a photograph of a Druze shrine purporting to be the tomb of Abel.

550 Genesis 25-27. See 25:27, 29.

551 Genesis 37. See 37:7, 15.

552 Judges 9. See 9:27, 32, 44.

553 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 27; Judges 20:31. See also Deuteronomy 22:25.

554 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 26.

555 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 33.

556 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 213, 215. An Islamic account of the dialogue between Cain and Abel can be found in Qur’an 5:27-29.

557 See Commentary 5:28-a, p. 376 and Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

558 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:159-160, p. 331.

559 J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 22:7, p. 247.

560 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 149.

561 S. N. Kramer, Dumuzi, p. 41.

32 And Cain went into the field, and Cain talked with Abel, his brother. And it came to pass that while they were in the field, Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and slew him.

33 And Cain gloried in that which he had done, saying: I am free; surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands.

Abel, his brother. The word “brother” is repeated seven times in verses 32-36, mercilessly highlighting the grim perfidy of Cain’s crime.

d slew him. The Hebrew term is harag, signifying intentional murder, in contrast to the sixth commandment’s rasah, a term that includes manslaughter.⁵⁶² Sarna comments: “The transgression in the Garden was an offense against God; ‘now it is man against his brother, which is also an offense against God. It was the ‘fruit of the tree’ that led to the downfall of Adam and Eve; it is the ‘fruit of the soil’ that leads to Cain’s undoing. The first human was worried about death; now the experience of death becomes a reality.”⁵⁶³

33 a Cain gloried. The mood of Cain was previously described as “very wroth” and of a fallen countenance.⁵⁶⁴ Then, according to an Armenian text, after he “killed his brother he went away cheerfully.”⁵⁶⁵ In ironic counterpoint to Moses 1:39, Cain has now made the work of death the object of his glorying.⁵⁶⁶

b I am free. Elder Bruce C. Hafen writes: “Cain was never more in bondage than when he said he was free.”⁵⁶⁷ Observes Elder Neal A. Maxwell: “A confused Cain, a vain Cain, not only murdered his brother while they conversed together in the field, but also gloried in the murder of Abel, when Cain said (probably shouted), ‘I am free.’ So often violence creates the illusion of freedom or possession. So often sin creates a momentary illusion which those involved are taken in by... [It seems] that the raucousness and the shouting of sin, the Cain-like glorying in it, is also the sound of pain trying to erase itself.”⁵⁶⁸

Nibley comments: “Recently this gospel was proclaimed by one of the richest Americans addressing the student body of Ohio State University...: ‘There is nothing that gives freedom,’ he said, ‘like bucks in the bank.’ This seems to be the policy we are following today, and there is no doubt whose policy it is.”⁵⁶⁹ “What is the market?” former French prime minister Édouard Balladur disparagingly asked, “It is the law of the jungle.”⁵⁷⁰ This much-maligned statement was actually put to a test by Piccione and Rubenstein, who found that “the notion of a jungle equilibrium” demonstrates “a number of standard results of competitive markets.” They observed that “the virtue of the market system is that it utilizes people’s natural desire to acquire wealth,” while “the jungle uses people’s natural willingness to exercise power and to dominate without employing central government.”⁵⁷¹

c surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands. Nibley points out that “all the oldest words for money simply mean flocks.”⁵⁷² “Satan promised Cain what he had promised Adam before: You can have anything in this world for money... The words for money we have here are, remember, ‘...surely his flocks fall into my hands.’ So we have flocks, fee, Old English feoh, and German Vieh, meaning cattle or flocks of all kinds. The Arabic word for flocks is

562 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 230.

563 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 31.

564 Moses 5:21-22, 26.

565 W. L. Lipscomb, Abel, 34, p. 165.

566 See also Moses 5:31. Cf. Commentary 5:47-a, p. 395.

567 B. C. Hafen et al., Belonging, p. 276; cf. N. A. Maxwell, Deposition, p. 85; N. A. Maxwell, Praise, p. 72. See also 2 Peter 2:19; 2 Nephi 2:26-30.

568 N. A. Maxwell, Insights, p. 50. See also N. A. Maxwell, Enemy, p. 76; N. A. Maxwell, Seventh, p. 78; Proverbs 14:13.

569 H. W. Nibley, Work, p. 230.

570 Cited in A. Greenspan, Turbulence, p. 277.

571 M. Piccione et al., Equilibrium, pp. 883, 894.

572 H. W. Nibley, Consecration, p. 436. See Moses 5:38.

33 And Cain gloried in that which he had done, saying: I am free; surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands.

34 And the Lord said unto Cain: Where is Abel, thy brother? And he said: I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?

ghanam, which is our word “gain”... Ghaniy is “to be rich.” The land Ghana means ‘rich land.’ A ghanuuun is a rich person (plural aghniyau). That’s the way you measured it.”⁵⁷³

34 a Where is Abel, thy brother? “[T]he question is a means of opening the conversation, perhaps eliciting confession and contrition.”⁵⁷⁴ Sarna notes that this verse “virtually reproduces” the Lord’s question to the fleeing Adam in the Garden of Eden: “the divine question to the culprit in each case— ‘Where?’ — receives an evasive reply in both chapters.”⁵⁷⁵ The wording of the curse is similar, too—“the son, like his parents in the previous chapter, is ‘banished’ and settles to the east of Eden.”⁵⁷⁶ Unlike his parents, however, he will not repent and begin a return to the presence of God. Like Satan and the fallen angels, Cain and those who persist in following his ways are cast out of Paradise forever.⁵⁷⁷

b I know not. Once more the term “know” recurs in the story of Cain.⁵⁷⁸ His renewed effort at self-deception recalls the confession of Amulek, “I did harden my heart, for I was called many times and I would not hear; therefore I knew concerning these things, yet I would not know.”⁵⁷⁹

Though Cain disavowed knowledge of his brother’s fate, the crime was not hid from the Lord, who lamented: “The voice of thy brother’s blood cries unto me from the ground.”⁵⁸⁰ Elder Spencer W. Kimball wrote: “When Cain’s great sin was conceived in his heart and the propitious moment had arrived for the foul deed, undoubtedly he looked to the right and to the left and behind him and was certain there was no eye and no ear; he perpetrated his heinous crime and left his righteous brother lying in his blood. The Lord perceived it all—the sights and sounds and thinking and malice and intents and desires and urges.”⁵⁸¹

c Am I my brother’s keeper? It is no coincidence that the Hebrew stem for “keeper” is the same one used in the Lord’s commandment to Adam and Eve that they should “dress and keep” the Garden of Eden.⁵⁸² Following Daube, Hamilton notes that keeper is “a legal term for a person entrusted with the custody and care of an object.”⁵⁸³ Though, apart from this verse, it is never used in scripture in connection with a responsibility of one person for another, the verbal form of “keep” “often appears in the OT to describe God’s relationship to Israel.”⁵⁸⁴ Israel is His peculiar treasure. “He is its keeper and as such he never slumbers or sleeps.”⁵⁸⁵ Moses’ prayer for the people of Israel is that the Lord bless them and keep them.”⁵⁸⁶ Abraham’s blessings are confirmed upon him because he “obeyed my voice, and kept my charge” (= “kept my keeping”⁵⁸⁷—repeating the Hebrew root twice for emphasis).⁵⁸⁸

573 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 243. See Commentary 5:31-c, p. 379.

574 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 34; cf. W. L. Lipscomb, Abel, 36, p. 165.

575 See Commentary 4:15-b, p. 261.

576 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 31; see also J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 65.

577 Moses 5:41.

578 See Commentary 5:16-b, p. 367 and 5:16-h, p. 369.

579 Alma 10:6.

580 Moses 5:35.

581 S. W. Kimball, Temptation, p. 243.

582 See Commentary 3:15-b, p. 173.

583 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 230.

584 Ibid., p. 231.

585 Psalm 121:4-8, where five times God is called the one who “keeps” Israel.

586 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 231. See Numbers 6:24.

587 Genesis 26:5.

588 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 28.

34 And the Lord said unto Cain: Where is Abel, thy brother? And he said: I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?

35 And the Lord said: What hast thou done? The voice of thy brother's blood cries unto me from the ground.

Though the English translation we have here is more or less accurate, Royal Skousen notes that it fails to fully convey the haughty impudence of Cain's reply:⁵⁸⁹ "Couldn't Abel take care of himself? Did he have to have someone look after him? The Hebrew word for 'keeper,' shomer, refers to a watchman, a guard, or anyone who has charge, care or oversight of something. Typically, we have keepers of sheep, baggage, wardrobes, altars, doors, houses, gates, city walls, forests, fields, and the king's women. Although shomer does not apply to children, the modern reader might get a better feel for Cain's answer if we paraphrased it as: 'How should I know? Am I my brother's baby-sitter?'"⁵⁹⁰ Chauncey Riddle suggests an answer to Cain's question: "No, Cain, you are not expected to be your brother's keeper. But you are expected to be your brother's brother."⁵⁹¹

35 a What hast thou done? This would be better punctuated with an exclamation mark ("What has thou done!")—it is "[n]ot a question, but a cry of horror."⁵⁹²

b voice of thy brother's blood cries unto me. Draper et al. point out that "in a legal sense spilt blood stands as a witness that a crime may have been committed."⁵⁹³ The Hebrew stem of "cries out" "connotes a plea for help or redress on the part of the victim of some great injustice."⁵⁹⁴ For example, we read elsewhere in the OT about the cries of "the afflicted in Sodom and Gomorrah,"⁵⁹⁵ the overworked and exhausted Israelites in Egypt,⁵⁹⁶ or the afflicted stranger, widow, or orphan."⁵⁹⁷ blood. The Hebrew plural for blood used here (damim) usually indicates "a context of bloodshed or bloodguilt."⁵⁹⁸ Sarna notes that the "Mishnah Sanhedrin 4:5, so the targums, takes the plural to include, apart from the blood of the victim, also that of the potential offspring now doomed never to be born: 'Whoever takes a single life destroys thereby an entire world.'"⁵⁹⁹

c from the ground. "The earth itself demands from God that He should execute justice on one who destroys a man."⁶⁰⁰ Explains Nibley: "Every creature is supposed to have its time, but the purpose of the earth is to sustain and support life. Anything that destroys life prematurely is against the purposes for which it was constructed, and the earth is offended. That negates its whole purpose."⁶⁰¹

Gelander observes that "while in the story of Eden the earth is alienated from Man, in the story of Cain it is the sinner who is alienated from the earth, since the disruption of harmony had already been caused by Adam and Eve in the preceding stage. Now the alienation is made personal."⁶⁰²

589 W. L. Lipscomb, Abel, 35, p. 165.

590 R. Skousen, Darkly, p. 9; cf. Wenham's "Am I the shepherd's shepherd?" (G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 106).

591 Cited in J. R. Holland, Rudder, p. 142; cf. N. A. Maxwell, Wherefore, p. 88.

592 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 34.

593 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 70.

594 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 34, cf. p. 132. See G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 22:5-7, p. 300; 9:2, 10, p. 202. See also pp. 305-306 n. 5-7.

595 Genesis 18:13.

596 Exodus 3:7.

597 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 231 and Exodus 22:21-24. See Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

598 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 34.

599 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 34; cf. J. Goldin, Fathers, 31, p. 136.

600 Hirsch, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 152.

601 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 245.

602 S. Gelander, Creator, p. 6.

36 And now thou shalt be cursed from the earth which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.

37 When thou tillest the ground it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.

38 And Cain said unto the Lord: Satan tempted me because of my brother's flocks. And I was wroth also; for his offering thou didst accept and not mine; my punishment is greater than I can bear.

- 36 a thou shalt be cursed. Westermann points out: "In [Moses 4] neither the man nor the woman are cursed but only the serpent. In [Moses 5], however, the man Cain is cursed."⁶⁰³

Cain's curse resembles the warning of exile given to Israel in Deuteronomy: "Cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field. Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body [i.e., thy posterity], and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep."⁶⁰⁴

- b from the earth. Kass points out that the "preposition here translated 'from' could also be translated 'by' or 'of' or even 'more than'; Rashi reads that Cain is now cursed more than the ground, the ground having been cursed for man's sake at the end of the Eden story."⁶⁰⁵ Just as the serpent who was "more subtle" than any beast of the field⁶⁰⁶ became "more cursed" than all cattle and beasts,⁶⁰⁷ so the one who loved Satan "more than" God⁶⁰⁸ will be cursed "more than" the earth from which he wrested his living.⁶⁰⁹

- 37 a ground... shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. From now on, the soil will be unproductive for Cain. Writes Hirsch: "When the man tears asunder the bond between himself and God, then God tears asunder the bond between man and the earth."⁶¹⁰ Comments Nibley: "What Cain has done by murder is... to curtail life... As a result the earth is not going to give you anything. You have taken life from it; now it will not return life to you."⁶¹¹

- b fugitive and a vagabond. Hamilton treats these two words as a hendiadys (i.e., two words expressing a single idea), thus a signifying a "wandering fugitive."⁶¹² Not only the unfruitfulness of the ground, but also Cain's new lifestyle would make it impossible for him to continue as a successful tiller of the soil. Yet more devastating is the fact that, like Ishmael and Esau, Cain "is now ousted from civilization... Rootlessness is the punishment and the wilderness is the refuge of the sinner."⁶¹³

- 38 a because of my brother's flocks. See Commentary 5:33-c, p. 381.

- b my punishment is greater than I can bear. The Hebrew awon can be understood as either "punishment" or "sin," while the verb nasa can mean "to bear" or "to be forgiven."⁶¹⁴ By way of analogy to Leviticus 5:1, Anderson reads: "The weight of my sin is too great for me to bear."⁶¹⁵

603 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 306.

604 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 64-65. See Deuteronomy 28:16-18; cf. Isaiah 26:21, ch. 27.

605 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 143 n. 27. See Moses 4:23.

606 Moses 4:5.

607 Moses 4:20.

608 Moses 5:18; cf. vv. 13, 28.

609 See Moses 4:23 and Commentary 5:17-c, p. 370.

610 Hirsch, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 153.

611 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 245. See Commentary 4:23-b, p. 270; 5:17-c, p. 370; Moses 5:56.

612 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 232.

613 Ibid., p. 232.

614 G. A. Anderson, Sin, p. 24. See also N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 34; U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 222; M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 40.

615 G. A. Anderson, Sin, p. 24.

39 Behold thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the Lord, and from thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that he that findeth me will slay me, because of mine iniquities, for these things are not hid from the Lord.

40 And I the Lord said unto him: Whosoever slayeth thee, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And I the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

39 a thou has driven me out this day from the face of the Lord, and from thy face shall I be hid.

Andrus observes that: “To be shut out from the presence of the Lord means that Cain was deprived of the blessings of the priesthood. In their fall from their state of paradisiacal glory, Adam and Eve had been shut out from the presence of the Lord. But the Holy Priesthood which Adam received gave him ‘the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven.’⁶¹⁶ Those who are ordained to that priesthood may ‘have the heavens opened unto them... and... enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the mediator of the new covenant.’”⁶¹⁷

Explains Nibley: “The worst penalty you can possibly have is to be driven from the face of the Lord. You will no longer be facing in that direction. You will no longer have much to look forward to if you are driven from the face of the Lord. God will be an alien to him. He has alienated himself. He has cut himself off. Remember that verse where [Cain] turns on his heel and walks out. “And Cain was wroth, and listened not any more to the voice of the [Lord;⁶¹⁸]... He carries that all the way through... He has become an outlaw now... A person who was outlawed had no law to protect him, so anyone who found him was perfectly free to kill him. He had no protection. To whom could he flee? Who was his protector? He had no lord to champion him. He couldn’t go to the courts because he was outlawed. He had [no] protection. He had nothing.”⁶¹⁹

The current edition of the book of Moses is consistent with OT2.⁶²⁰ OT1 reads: “thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the Earth.”⁶²¹

b he that findeth me will slay me, because of mine iniquities. “He who turned on one of his relatives now must watch out for any of his relatives,”⁶²² lest a family member “feel free to exact blood vengeance.”⁶²³

The text here follows OT2.⁶²⁴ OT1 reads: “everyone that finds me will slay me because of mine oath,”⁶²⁵ presumably referring to the pact he had made with Satan.

40 a Whosoever slayeth thee. Sarna is impressed with this phrase as a solemn legal declaration by the Lord, declaring that even a murderer such as Cain will still be under God’s protection: “I promise, if anyone kills Cain.”⁶²⁶ The Lord’s promise of protection for Cain makes it clear that “blood-revenge is not pleasing in the sight of the Lord.”⁶²⁷ As Nibley notes: “In making an example of Cain, God absolutely forbade the use of Cain’s own methods against him.”⁶²⁸

616 D&C 107:19.

617 H. L. Andrus, Doctrinal, pp. 391-392 and D&C 107:19.

618 Moses 5:26.

619 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 246.

620 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 606.

621 Ibid., p. 95.

622 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 233.

623 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 35.

624 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 606.

625 Ibid., p. 95.

626 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 35.

627 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 185.

628 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, p. 16.

40 And I the Lord said unto him: Whosoever slayeth thee, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And I the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

Kass concludes: “As a result of this solicitous speech, Cain may at this moment glimpse the difference between a god to whom one sacrifices vegetables and the God who takes notice of, and who is outraged by, bloodshed (and who, at least for now, provides even for murderers).”⁶²⁹

- b sevenfold. Cassuto argues that a penalty based on a commonsense reading of this verse would not be in accord with justice. Rather, observing that seven is the number of perfection, he argues that seven times “connotes in perfect measure, with the full stringency of the law...”⁶³⁰ He who slays Cain will... be guilty of a dual offence: the crime of shedding blood, and the sin of contemning⁶³¹ the Lord’s judgment by augmenting the Divine punishment.”⁶³²

In an alternate interpretation with a long rabbinic history, Zlotowitz follows Rashi and Ibn Ezra in translating the phrase as; “Therefore, whoever slays Cain before seven generations have passed will be punished.”⁶³³ This idea was connected with the tradition that Cain was later killed by his descendant Lamech⁶³⁴—and perhaps also with the eventual destruction of the Flood. The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan sees God granting a temporary reprieve of seven generations of life to Cain to enable him the possibility of repentance.⁶³⁵

- c I the Lord set a mark upon Cain. Draper et al. note that: “The mark is not the same as the curse, which carried multiple penalties,”⁶³⁶ the most serious being “shut out from the presence of the Lord.”⁶³⁷ Indeed, in the case of Cain, the mark was a sign of divine protection⁶³⁸ and also, as Nibley observes, “a warning to all the rest of us—hands off! If Cain must be punished, God does not solicit our services for the job: ‘Behold, the judgments of God will overtake the wicked; and it is by the wicked that the wicked are punished.’”⁶³⁹

Hamilton notes that the function of the mark or sign is paralleled in “Exodus 12:13 (the blood on the doors at Passover which identifies the occupants); Genesis 1:14 (the heavenly lights which identify time periods); Numbers 2:2 (the banners in the Israelite camp which identify the various families); Joshua 2:12 (the sign which identifies Rahab’s house).”⁶⁴⁰ As Adam and Eve are clothed with coats of skins before being driven from the Garden⁶⁴¹ and as God “announces the post-Flood covenant even before the Flood commences,”⁶⁴² so “Cain is marked before he is exiled.”⁶⁴³ However, while Adam and Eve’s clothing provided a comforting sign of God’s unfailing solicitude, Cain’s mark will serve “as a constant reminder of [his] banishment, his isolation from other people.”⁶⁴⁴

629 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 144.

630 Cf. Psalm 12:6, 129:12.

631 I.e., treating with contempt.

632 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 226.

633 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 155.

634 See Commentary 5:48-a, p. 396 and 5:50-a, p. 397.

635 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:79, pp. 102-103.

636 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 73. See Moses 5:36-37, 41.

637 Moses 5:41; cf. 2 Nephi 5:20.

638 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 35.

639 H. W. Nibley, Test, pp. 537-538 and Mormon 4:5. See also H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 352-353; T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 154.

640 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 235.

641 Moses 4:27.

642 JST Genesis 8:23.

643 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 207.

644 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 110.

40 And I the Lord said unto him: Whosoever slayeth thee, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And I the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

Though readers have often assumed that the mark was a dark skin, the text of the verse itself fails to give warrant for any particular conclusion about the nature of the mark given to Cain. Nor is the verse explicit about whether the mark was passed on to his descendants.⁶⁴⁵ Of possible relevance to this question is Moses 7:22 which states that “the seed of Cain were black.”⁶⁴⁶ Allred, however, finds even this statement inconclusive, arguing that it could be a figurative expression referring to “those who followed Cain in his wicked practices,” referring to them “in the same manner that the Jews were called the children of the Devil.”⁶⁴⁷ Similarly, Goldenberg has argued that, as with the four horsemen of Revelation 6:1-8, the blackness of individuals depicted in 1 Enoch and in other ancient Near Eastern sources is used in a purely symbolic fashion to represent evil and exclusion from the covenant community.⁶⁴⁸ He conjectures that beliefs about Cain’s skin becoming black were the result of textual misunderstandings.⁶⁴⁹

Consistent with this view is Al-Kisa’i’s report of a tradition that Lamech (the son of the Sethite Methuselah—not to be confused with the Cainite Lamech of Moses 5:43-54) married Methuselcha, a descendant of Cain. Though mentioning the fact that there was “enmity that existed between the children of Seth and the children of Cain,” the story implies that there was nothing in their outward appearance that would identify them as being of different lineages, since Lamech had to tell her his parentage explicitly. Described in wholly positive terms, Methuselcha was said in this tradition to have become the mother of Noah.⁶⁵⁰

Ancient sources give a variety of alternative conjectures about the “distinctive mark on the body” of Cain, including a mark⁶⁵¹ on the hand, arm, or brow or a horn on the forehead.⁶⁵² Some traditions say that Abel’s dog, member of a species “outstanding in its loyalty to a master who has done it a good turn,” was assigned to go with Cain on his travels to forever remind him of his own evil deed to his brother.⁶⁵³ Of relevance to the argument by some that the mark may have been voluntarily perpetuated after the time of Cain for purposes of tribal identification is the Book of Mormon precedent for a self-imposed “mark of red” upon the forehead adopted by a group of Nephites who aligned themselves with the Lamanites.⁶⁵⁴ Moreover, Speiser discusses several Old Testament examples of a mark on the forehead.⁶⁵⁵ These examples can be compared to the contrasting idea of a protective sign of holiness on the forehead.⁶⁵⁶

645 For arguments to the that it was not passed on, see, e.g., U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 227-228; C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 312-313.

646 Cf. J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 25 January 1842, 4:501. Note also the statement that a “blackness came upon all the children of Canaan,” seemingly in direct consequence of a notable act of genocide (Moses 7:7-8; M. H. Martins, Blacks, pp. 10-11).

647 A. Allred, Traditions, p. 49. See John 8:44.

648 D. M. Goldenberg, Curse, pp. 152-154; cf. G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 85:3-88:3, p. 364. See also manuscript versions of Moses 1:15, as well as Commentary 1:15-a, p. 55.

649 D. M. Goldenberg, Curse, pp. 178-182. For similar conclusions relating to the mark imposed upon the Lamanites in the Book of Mormon (e.g., 1 Nephi 12:23, 2 Nephi 5:21-24, Alma 3:6-19, 3 Nephi 2:14-16), see B. Gardner, Second Witness, 2:108-123; J. L. Sorenson, Ancient, p. 90.

650 See M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, pp. 91-93.

651 E.g., God’s name (M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 4:15, p. 34).

652 See H. W. Nibley, Abraham 2000, pp. 584-585; cf. J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 22:12, p. 253; C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 312-314.

653 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 156.

654 Alma 3:13-19.

655 E. A. Speiser, Genesis, p. 31. See Exodus 13:16; Deuteronomy 6:8, 11:18; and Ezekiel 9:4, 6.

656 Exodus 28:36-38; Revelation 7:3, 9:4, 14:1, 22:4; D&C 77:9, 133:18. See also Commentary 5:47-b, p. 396 and Revelation 13:16, 14:9, 20:4.

40 And I the Lord said unto him: Whosoever slayeth thee, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And I the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.

41 And Cain was shut out from the presence of the Lord, and with his wife and many of his brethren dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

Regardless of the exact nature of the mark imposed upon Cain, it seems reasonable to suppose that the separation between the Sethites and the Cainites paralleled the situation of the Nephites and the Lamanites where, even though the original distinction was lineage-based, it is known that each group eventually came to include like-minded associates in addition to actual descendants.⁶⁵⁷

Adopting an entirely different perspective, Sailhamer proposes yet another alternative regarding the nature of the mark. He argues that this narrative should be “read in light of the Deuteronomic legislation of the ‘cities of refuge’... The purpose of the cities of refuge was to insure that ‘innocent blood will not be shed in your land’...”⁶⁵⁸ The narrative may be suggesting not only that Cain’s offense was punishable by death but also that the city Cain built⁶⁵⁹ was an early ‘prototype’ of the cities of refuge⁶⁶⁰—though, of course, later cities afforded asylum only for cases of unpremeditated killing.⁶⁶¹ For these and other reasons, Sailhamer conjectures that “Cain’s city may have been intended as the ‘sign’ that gave divine protection to Cain.”⁶⁶²

41 a was shut out. See Commentary 5:4-c, p. 357 and 5:34-a, p. 382.

The text is consistent with OT2.⁶⁶³ OT1 reads “went out.”⁶⁶⁴

b in the land of Nod. The Hebrew term nod means “wandering”—thus “He who had been sentenced to be a nad settles in the land of nod. The wanderer ends up in the land of wandering.”⁶⁶⁵ Rashi gave an alternative interpretation of Nod as “trembling”: “Anywhere that [Cain] would go, the earth would tremble beneath him, and the people would say, ‘Keep away from him! This is the one who killed his brother!’”⁶⁶⁶ This reading has an interesting parallel in Moses’ encounter with Satan⁶⁶⁷ and the Septuagint reading of Genesis 4:14 where Cain complains: “I shall be groaning and trembling upon the earth.”⁶⁶⁸

Of the later life of Cain and his posterity, one tradition records that Cain came, after many wanderings, “to a certain place called Cainan, where he committed all manner of crimes, laying wait for wayfaring men and putting them to death, and heaping up wealth untold from his spoils of them.”⁶⁶⁹ In an account that Franxman characterizes as “no brief attack,”⁶⁷⁰ Josephus elaborates: “And when Cain had travelled over many countries, (after God’s sentence upon him) he, with his wife, built a city named Nod, which is a place so called, 657 Cf. Jacob 1:13-14; Alma 3:13-19, 24:29, 43:13, 47:35; Helaman 11:24; 4 Nephi 1:35-38. See Commentary 5:41-b, p. 388.

658 Deuteronomy 19:10.

659 Moses 5:42.

660 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, pp. 62, 64.

661 Z. W. Falk, Law, p. 72.

662 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 67. See also G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, pp. 108-109, Commentary 5:41-b, p. 388; 5:42-c, p. 391.

663 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 606.

664 Ibid., p. 95.

665 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 235.

666 Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 4:16, p. 47; cf. Midrash Tanhuma, Bereshit 9, cited in H. N. Bialik et al., Legends, 101, p. 24.

667 See Commentary 1:21-a, p. 57.

668 R. J. V. Hiebert, Septuagint, p. 4; cf. D. J. Harrington, Pseudo-Philo, 2:1, p. 305; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:79, pp. 102-103; M. E. Stone, Abel, 5:3, pp. 153, 153 n. 5:3; M. E. Stone, Forefathers, 15, pp. 187-188. For additional discussion and parallels, see W. L. Lipscomb, Armenian, pp. 90-91.

669 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, p. 227.

670 T. W. Franxman, Genesis, p. 71.

41 And Cain was shut out from the presence of the Lord, and with his wife and many of his brethren dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

and there he settled his abode; where also he had children. However, he did not accept of his punishment in order to amendment, but to increase his wickedness; for he only aimed to procure everything that was for his own bodily pleasure, though it obliged him to be injurious to his neighbors. He augmented his household substance with much wealth, by rapine and violence; he excited his acquaintance to procure pleasure and spoils by robbery, and became a great leader of men into wicked courses. He also introduced a change in that way of simplicity wherein men lived before; and was the author of measures and weights; and whereas they lived innocently and generously while they knew nothing of such arts, he changed the world into cunning craftiness.... Even while Adam was alive, it came to pass, that the posterity of Cain became exceeding wicked, every one successively dying, one after another, more wicked than the former. They were intolerable in war, and vehement in robberies; and if any one were slow to murder people, yet was he bold in his profligate behavior, in acting unjustly, and doing injuries for gain.”⁶⁷¹

Pirkei Eliezer stresses how the posterity of Cain descended into an animal-like existence: “The generations of Cain walked around in utter nakedness, both men and women, like animals, and they corrupted themselves with all manner of debauchery, a man with his mother or his daughter, or with the wife of his brother or of his neighbor, in public and on the streets, the evil inclination in their thoughts and in their hearts.”⁶⁷²

The book of Moses, texts preserved by the early Christians, and older traditions of exegesis⁶⁷³ all speak of a divinely-mandated separation of the Sethites from the Cainites. For example, Enoch saw a vision of the “residue of the people which were the sons of Adam” and specifically noted that “the seed of Cain... had not place among them.”⁶⁷⁴ In an Armenian text, Seth and his descendants are said to have lived “in the mountains close to the Garden,”⁶⁷⁵ while Cain with his race (dwelt) on the plain, where Cain killed Abel.”⁶⁷⁶ Later, however, having been seduced by the Cainite women, the sons of Seth and Enosh came down from the mountain and “mingled them with themselves promiscuously.”⁶⁷⁷

Comments Nibley: “In every dispensation of the Gospel, the Lord has insisted on segregating his covenant people from the rest of the world: if they were not ready to ‘come out of her, [O] my people’⁶⁷⁸ willingly, he saw to it that the world was more than willing to persecute and expel them.”⁶⁷⁹ “Enoch establishes the first walled city and the first army. And down the line we go. It’s the two civilizations. The pastorals are up in the highlands, out in the mountains. Those are the Sethians. It says they live in the holy places. Their main center is called the Mountain of the Cave of Treasures, being [their equivalent of] the Hill Cumorah where they keep all their records and also their sacred things. When Adam died, he was buried in the cave. When they had to leave, they took him with them.”⁶⁸⁰ They separated then, and the holy ones were left on the mountain and lived after the manner of the righteous with their flocks.

671 F. Josephus, Antiquities, 1:2:2, p. 27. For parallel accounts of the decline of man in Greek and Roman literature, see L. H. Feldman, Hellenization, pp. 347-350.

672 M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 22, pp. 134-135.

673 See examples in, e.g., C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 338.

674 Moses 7:22.

675 Cf. Moses 7:17.

676 M. E. Stone, Sethites, 9, p. 205; cf. Eutychus in S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, p. 227; 2:8, p. 115.

677 M. E. Stone, Sermon Concerning Flood, 4-6, pp. 177-178; cf. M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 88; Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 1:11, pp. 81-82; Ether 7:4. See Endnote 5-58, p. 446.

678 Revelation 18:4.

679 H. W. Nibley, Weep, p. 341.

680 See Excursus 45: Impact of the “Black Death” on Art and Literature, p. 640.

41 And Cain was shut out from the presence of the Lord, and with his wife and many of his brethren dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

42 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare Enoch, and he also begat many sons and daughters. And he builded a city, and he called the name of the city after the name of his son, Enoch.

They gathered fruit it says in ‘the manner of Paradise.’ They still gathered any fruit of the Garden they chose to take, and they didn’t toil to acquire.”⁶⁸¹

Though the people of the covenant have sometimes been drawn out from the world, either to reduce the risk of apostasy or to gather a number in one place sufficient to enable temple-building,⁶⁸² such separation was, of course, unnecessary in times where righteousness prevailed among all peoples.⁶⁸³ Moreover, in our time, Church members have been specifically counseled against gathering to a central location, so that the kingdom of God can be built up in every land.⁶⁸⁴ Living during a period when the apostolic commission to “teach all nations”⁶⁸⁵ is at last nearing fulfillment, President Howard W. Hunter specifically warned that there is “no room” in the Gospel “for a contracted, narrow, or prejudicial view” and that our message must strike “squarely against all stifling traditions based on race, language, economic or political standing, educational rank, or cultural background.”⁶⁸⁶

- c on the east of Eden. By the phrase on the east of Eden, we are meant to understand that the place where Cain came to live was even further removed from the presence of God than was the land where his Adam and Eve and their righteous descendants lived after the Fall.⁶⁸⁷ For example, tradition reports that “Cain went off by himself and lived in the land of Nod, a place lower still than that of Sheth and Enosh.”⁶⁸⁸ In the Old Testament, “the eastern region always forms a place of refuge for murderers, for the cities of refuge that Moses later set aside were also to the east ‘the place of the sun-rise.’”⁶⁸⁹

- 42 a Enoch. According to Sarna, the basic meaning “has to do with initiation, dedication, and education. Thus the name may be symbolic, signifying the regeneration of life.”⁶⁹⁰

A linear succession of descendants of Cain—seven first-born sons—is given here, after which the genealogy branches. Sarna observes: “The lineage of Cain is not mentioned again in the Bible. No details are given of his span of life, and even the fact of his death is not noted. The same is true of the list of his descendants. The entire line passes into oblivion.”⁶⁹¹ Some traditions record that he continued his ceaseless wandering until he drowned in the great Flood;⁶⁹² others that he was slain by Lamech.⁶⁹³ Yet another set of accounts frame his death in a context of poetic justice, saying that he “was killed when his house, made of stones, fell upon him, stoning him to death. Thus was Cain killed in the same way he had killed his brother, confirming that a man shall be killed with the weapons with which he kills his fellow man.”⁶⁹⁴ Figuratively comparing the collapse of Cain’s house to the fall of the “great and 681 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 21, p. 259 and S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:11, pp. 118-119. See Commentary 5:40-c, p. 386 and Moses 5 Gleanings, p. 415.

682 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 11 June 1843, pp. 307-308.

683 E.g., 4 Nephi 1:17.

684 H. B. Lee, Strengthen; B. R. McConkie, New Witness, p. 595.

685 Matthew 28:19.

686 H. W. Hunter, Teachings 1997, 5 October 1991, p. 101. See also J. E. Faust, Heirs.

687 G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 110. See also Commentary 3:8-b, p. 161.

688 Ephrem the Syrian, Paradise, 1:11, pp. 81-82.

689 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 158 and Deuteronomy 4:41. See Commentary 5:40-c, p. 386.

690 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 36. See Commentary 6:3-b, p. 477.

691 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 36.

692 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 22:12, p. 253.

693 See Commentary 5:50-a, p. 397.

694 H. Schwartz, Tree, p. 451. See O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 4:31-32, p. 64; Exodus 21:24; Leviticus 24:19;

42 And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare Enoch, and he also begat many sons and daughters. And he builded a city, and he called the name of the city after the name of his son, Enoch.

spacious building” of Lehi’s vision,⁶⁹⁵ Nibley suggests an implied moral of this story: “Cain built the first great house of vanity, and it fell upon him and killed him.”⁶⁹⁶

- b he builded a city. Given the Lord’s prophecy that Cain will become “a fugitive and a vagabond,”⁶⁹⁷ we do not expect to find him building a city. Hamilton suggests: “Perhaps Cain’s act is one of defiance. He has had enough of the life of the nomad. He refuses any longer to abide under God’s terms. The only other reference to building a city in Genesis 1-11 is the incident at Babel: ‘Come, let us build ourselves a city...’⁶⁹⁸ Here the whole city-building, tower-erecting project is one that God condemns...⁶⁹⁹ We suggest that Cain’s act of city building is an attempt to provide security for himself, a security he is not sure God’s mark guarantees. In the words of J. Ellul, Cain ‘wants to find alone the remedy for a situation he created, but which he cannot himself repair because it is a situation dependent on God’s grace.’”⁷⁰⁰ It is as if “Cain said in his heart, ‘If it is decreed upon me to be a wanderer on the earth, the decree shall not apply to my offspring.’”⁷⁰¹

Pseudo-Philo records that Cain founded seven cities.⁷⁰² “The mention of Abel’s murder thus serves primarily to characterize the first city-builder, hinting that this key element of human civilization was tainted from the start,”⁷⁰³ and anticipating a general “antipathy toward cities”⁷⁰⁴ throughout the rest of Genesis.

- c he called the name of the city... Enoch. Hamilton notes that “Hebrew syntax would permit, if not suggest, that the subject of ‘he was a city builder’ and ‘he named the city’ was Enoch...”⁷⁰⁵ To name a city after oneself or after another probably implies that the named individual assumes ownership over and responsibility for the city that bears his name.”⁷⁰⁶

This wicked city of Enoch “was almost certainly founded... in fear of violent death, but first, in fratricide.”⁷⁰⁷ It stands in ironic parallel to the later story of the prophet Enoch who founded a city of righteousness and brotherly love that has become associated with his name.⁷⁰⁸ Indeed, it is no coincidence that the descendants of the Sethites “run in seven lines with almost the same names [as the descendants of Cain]. But,” claims Nibley, “they are read differently as if you were punning on them, like twin names. This is a typical trick. The Egyptians do it all the time.”⁷⁰⁹

Deuteronomy 19:21.

695 1 Nephi 11:36.

696 H. W. Nibley, Rediscovery, p. 223.

697 Moses 5:37.

698 Genesis 11:4.

699 Cf. Helaman 6:28.

700 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 238.

701 Nachamanides, cited in J. H. Hertz, Pentateuch, p. 15. See Commentary 5:40-c, p. 386.

702 D. J. Harrington, Pseudo-Philo, 2:3, p. 305.

703 F. J. Murphy, Pseudo-Philo, pp. 31-32.

704 T. L. Brodie, Dialogue, p. 116.

705 Cf. G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, p. 111. For examples of calling a city after one’s own name, see Deuteronomy 3:14; 2 Samuel 5:9, 12:28; Alma 6:7.

706 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 237. See, e.g., 1 Kings 16:24.

707 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 145.

708 Moses 7:19, 69.

709 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 249; cf. H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 178; G. J. Wenham, Genesis 1-15, pp. 123-124.

43 And unto Enoch was born Irad, and other sons and daughters. And Irad begat Mahujael, and other sons and daughters. And Mahujael begat Methusael, and other sons and daughters. And Methusael begat Lamech.

44 And Lamech took unto himself two wives; the name of one being Adah, and the name of the other, Zillah.

- 43 a unto Enoch was born Irad. Nibley conjectures that the name Irad “means the ‘shy person,’ the person who holds back and is withdrawn, who is unsure of himself.”⁷¹⁰

Of interest is a suggestion by Sarna of a possible connection between Irad and the ancient world: “Curiously, in Sumerian tradition, the first city was Eridu, now Tell abu Shahrain, in southern Mesopotamia, which excavations have revealed to be the oldest site in that part of the world. It has been suggested, therefore, that the statement in verse 17, ‘He founded a city, and named the city after his son,’ really belongs here, so that Enoch, not Cain, built the first city and named it Irad (= Eridu) after his son.”⁷¹¹

- b Mahujael begat Methusael. Note that both names include the ending -el, thus bearing a title of God.⁷¹² Diverse conjectures have been made about the meaning of the name Mehujael: “God makes live,” “blotted out by God,” and “seer of God.”⁷¹³ Sarna conjectures that Methusael could mean “the man of Shael,” with the latter element originally being she’ol, ‘the underworld.’”⁷¹⁴ Nibley suggests: that “Mahijael and Mehujael both mean the same thing. They mean a person who has been smitten by God with a disease of some sort. The basic root meha means to have a chronic disease... That means you have had divine smiting... Uncomplimentary names... Methusael... means ‘the one who has been prayed for’ [or ‘one who prays,’ one who supplicates’]. This is a more complimentary name.”⁷¹⁵

- c Methusael begat Lamech. Many suggestions have been given for the meaning of the name Lamech. It may be related to a similar Arabic word that means “strong young man.”⁷¹⁶ Alternatively, Cassuto argues that the name Lamech may be related to “the Mesopotamian word lumakku, which signifies a certain class of priests.”⁷¹⁷ In a different direction, Nibley concludes that, consistent with his place in the story as one who recapitulates and multiplies the sins of Cain, “Lamech means destruction, loss, perdition. His name shall be perdition.”⁷¹⁸

Several traditions speak of Lamech as being blind.⁷¹⁹

- 44 a took unto himself. The wording “took unto himself” is paralleled in the description of the illicit relationships of the wicked husbands in the days of Noah.⁷²⁰ Wright observes that “there is no indication... that a marriage actually took place, but rather [the phrase] could be translated and understood as ‘Lamech took to himself two women.’”⁷²¹

An Armenian tradition says that Adah and Zillah were taken by Lamech after he killed their husbands, “the two brothers of Enoch.” The text says that he also “wished to kill Enoch, but God transferred [i.e., translated] him.”⁷²² While this account identifies the prophet Enoch as the intended victim, it is also plausible (apart from the reference to translation) that the Enoch mentioned might have been meant, in an earlier version of the text, to refer to Lamech’s second-great-grandfather, for whom the city of Cain was named.⁷²³

710 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 248.

711 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 36. See Commentary 5:49-b, p. 397.

712 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 74.

713 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 36.

714 Ibid., p. 36.

715 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 248.

716 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 36.

717 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 233.

718 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 249.

719 E.g., M. E. Stone, Sethites, 10, p. 205. See Commentary 5:50-a, p. 397.

720 Moses 8:14, 21. See the overview of Moses 5, p. 349.

721 A. T. Wright, Evil Spirits, pp. 135-136.

722 M. E. Stone, Abel, 5:4, pp. 153-154.

723 Moses 5:42-43.

44 And Lamech took unto himself two wives; the name of one being Adah, and the name of the other, Zillah.

45 And Adah bare Jabal; he was the father of such as dwell in tents, and they were keepers of cattle; and his brother's name was Jubal, who was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ.

Josephus paints a picture of Lamech as having been “skilful in matters of divine revelation.”⁷²⁴

b two wives. This mention of Lamech's wives may constitute a “tacit condemnation” of unauthorized polygamy.⁷²⁵ Citing the troubles of even the righteous patriarchs Abraham and Jacob, Hamilton observes that “nearly every polygamous household in the OT suffers most unpleasant and shattering experiences... The domestic struggles that ensue are devastating.”⁷²⁶

c Adah, and... Zillah. Sarna writes that these “names may respectively mean ‘dawn’ and ‘dusk.’”⁷²⁷ Nibley concurs: “There is always the light one and dark one here,” as in the stories of Sarah (“a raving [i.e., ravishing] blonde”) and Hagar (“a dark Egyptian woman”),⁷²⁸ Miriam and Zipporah (Miriam was smitten with leprosy for having mocked the Ethiopian Zipporah⁷²⁹), and the Song of Solomon (“I am black but comely”).⁷³⁰

Adah's descendants are the herdsmen and musicians, whereas Zillah's branch produces the pioneers in technology.⁷³¹

45 a Jabal. Of the name, Nibley writes: “Our word ‘jubilee’ comes from it. It means ‘to sing, to rejoice, to jubilate’ and the like.”⁷³²

“Verses [45-47] describe several components of city life: “animal husbandry (Jabal⁷³³), arts (Jubal⁷³⁴), craftsmanship (Tubal-Cain⁷³⁵), and, it appears, law”⁷³⁶—all in concert with the rise of “secret combinations” (Lamech⁷³⁷).

The similar-sounding names of the three brothers “suggests a closeness of relationship between the pastoral, musical, and metalworking arts... [A] wall painting from the rock tomb of Khnumhotep at Beni Hasan, about 160 miles (257 km.) south of Cairo and dating to ca. 1900 BCE... portrays the arrival of a caravan of Asiatics, and prominently featured among their baggage are livestock, a lyre, and bellows.”⁷³⁸ Cassuto also points out that in the story of each of the three sons is “some allusion to the name of their ancestor, Cain [Qayin]... Of Jabal it is said that he was the father of those who dwell in tents and have cattle [miqne]... Jubal is called the father of all those who play the lyre and the pipe, a description that suggests the idea of qina [dirge]... [A]s for... Tubal-cain, Cain actually forms a part of his name.”⁷³⁹

724 F. Josephus, Genuine Works, 1:2:2, p. 27.

725 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 37; A. T. Wright, Evil Spirits, p. 136 n. 178; M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 18. See also Jacob 2:27-30; Commentary 5:3-b, p. 355.

726 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 238.

727 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 37.

728 Genesis 16.

729 Numbers 12:1, 10.

730 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, pp. 252-253 and Song of Solomon 1:5. See Commentary 5:47-a, p. 395 and Excursus 35: Lamech's "Sword Song", p. 612.

731 C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, p. 332.

732 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 251.

733 Moses 5:45.

734 Ibid.

735 Moses 5:46.

736 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 67.

737 Moses 5:47-55, Commentary 5:47-a, p. 395.

738 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 37. For a reproduction of the image, see A. Feyerick et al., Genesis, p. 68.

739 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 235.

45 And Adah bare Jabal; he was the father of such as dwell in tents, and they were keepers of cattle; and his brother's name was Jubal, who was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ.

46 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal Cain, an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron. And the sister of Tubal Cain was called Naamah.

- b such as dwell in tents. The statement draws a contrast to Adam and Abel, who were not nomadic. “Such people are noted in the later story of Enoch, son of Jared.”⁷⁴⁰ This account assigns the origins of nomadic peoples to Cain’s posterity.⁷⁴¹
- c cattle. All kinds of livestock, including sheep.⁷⁴²
- d harp and organ. Sarna gives this as “the lyre and the pipe,” representing stringed and wind instruments generically.⁷⁴³ The lyre has “a history traceable to ca. 3000 BCE.” Nibley comments: “One thing about the nomads is that they practiced the nomadic arts which are portable. Not architecture or sculpture or painting or even pottery, but what is it? It’s weaving, singing, and musical instruments.”⁷⁴⁴

Extracanonical sources often describe the musical developments reported here in negative terms. For example, The Sethites and the Cainites speaks of these innovators as “evil and disorderly” men who, at the direction of the “Malicious One,” discovered “false music and dances and musical instruments.”⁷⁴⁵ The music which “led them into confusion” is seen to have had a “prominent role... in the seduction of the Sethite men by the Cainite women.”⁷⁴⁶ Rashi cites midrash to argue that Jubal used these instruments “to play music for idolatry.”⁷⁴⁷

- 46 a Tubal Cain. Tubal means “metalworker” and Cain means a “smith.” “Accordingly, the two elements of the name given to the son of Zillah both mean the same thing, and both designate his profession. The second element really explains the first, the meaning of which was probably lost to the Israelite audience.”⁷⁴⁸

Rashi takes the name as “indicating that he ‘improved upon’ [tuval] Cain’s work by preparing the weapons for bloodshed,”⁷⁴⁹ thus making it easier to continue Cain’s murderous precedent.

- b artificer in brass and iron. Pseudo-Philo sees metalwork as having promoted the spread of idolatry: “This is the Tubal who showed men techniques in using lead and tin and iron and bronze and silver and gold. And then those inhabiting the earth began to make statues and to adore them.”⁷⁵⁰
- c the sister... was called Naamah. “This expression... ties to nothing else in the narratives,” suggesting that a story about her might have been lost in the account. “In Hebrew, her name derives from the root meaning ‘to be pleasant’⁷⁵¹ or ‘to sing.’⁷⁵² The latter signification, in conjunction with the weapon-making of Tubal Cain and the musical instruments of Jubal, perhaps suggests a tie between this verse and the poem introduced in the next one.

⁷⁴⁰ See Moses 6:38; 7:5.

⁷⁴¹ R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 74.

⁷⁴² N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 37.

⁷⁴³ Ibid., p. 37. See Job 21:12, 30:31.

⁷⁴⁴ H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 251.

⁷⁴⁵ M. E. Stone, Sethites, 10, p. 205.

⁷⁴⁶ M. E. Stone, Armenian Apocrypha 1996, p. 120 n. 7; cf. M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 88; A. Gileadi, Diatribes, pp. 368-371; D. J. Harrington, Pseudo-Philo, 2:7-8, p. 305; F. J. Murphy, Pseudo-Philo, p. 32.

⁷⁴⁷ Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 4:21, p. 50.

⁷⁴⁸ N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 38.

⁷⁴⁹ Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 161.

⁷⁵⁰ D. J. Harrington, Pseudo-Philo, 2:9, p. 305.

⁷⁵¹ R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 75. See F. Brown et al., Lexicon, p. 653.

⁷⁵² N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 38.

46 And Zillah, she also bare Tubal Cain, an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron. And the sister of Tubal Cain was called Naamah.

47 And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah: Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech; for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt.

Some traditions hold that Naamah became the wife of Noah.⁷⁵³

- 47 a Lamech said unto his wives. Lamech's poetic declaration in verses 47-48 could be taken in one of two ways: either as a protestation of his innocence ("If Cain, who killed his brother with malice, merited a sevenfold degree of protection from vengeance, I, who killed after deliberate provocation, deserve that same protection to a seventy-sevenfold extent") or as an admission of his personal guilt ("If Cain suffered seven times, I, who am guiltier, will suffer seventy-seven times").⁷⁵⁴ The former interpretation clearly is a better fit to context.

The purpose of Lamech's argument, then, was to show his wives that "he had not shed innocent blood... He did not 'hate his neighbor, lie in wait for him, rise up against him, and kill him'⁷⁵⁵ as Cain had done, but rather he based his appeal on a plea of self-defense"—his act of murder having been performed because he had been previously wounded and injured by the one slain. Thus, Sailhamer's translation: "a man for wounding me, a young man for injuring me." In this case the "wound" inflicted by Irad would have been figurative rather than physical—the primary "injury" given to Lamech being the betrayal of the oath.⁷⁵⁶ As Rousseau observed, the consequences of vengeful attitudes spread rapidly through corrupt societies: "[E]veryone punishing the contempt shown him in a manner proportionate to the stock he set by himself, vengeance became terrible, and men bloodthirsty and cruel."⁷⁵⁷

Proud and cynical, Lamech's so-called "sword song"⁷⁵⁸ was not only a statement of self-justification, but also a paean to his own prowess, the sort of "taunts, threats, and boastings, which are of the kind customarily uttered in ancient times by those about to engage in combat"⁷⁵⁹—evil words that compound ill deeds.⁷⁶⁰ One is reminded of Koriath who proudly proclaimed that "every man prospered according to his genius, and that every man conquered according to his strength; and whatsoever a man did was no crime."⁷⁶¹ Songs such as these were regularly sung in bloody contests as part of the new-year rites performed in virtually all ancient cultures.⁷⁶² As in all such hero tales, the skilled poet exercises his craft in order to glorify actions "which, were it not for his poetry, would appear as merely violent."⁷⁶³

Cassuto senses "a kind of antithetic parallelism to the statement at the beginning of the section: 'Eve gloried in the fact that she had formed and given birth to a man';⁷⁶⁴ here Lamech prides himself on having cut off the life of a man."⁷⁶⁵ The earlier vaunt was with the Lord; the later, against the Lord."⁷⁶⁶

753 J. H. Hertz, Pentateuch, p. 16. See discussion in D. Fohrman, Beast, pp. 195-196.

754 T. W. Franxman, Genesis, pp. 75-76; cf. J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 67.

755 Cf. Deuteronomy 19:11.

756 See Commentary 5:50-a, p. 397.

757 J.-J. Rousseau, Inequality, 2:16, p. 176. See discussion in L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 146; cf. pp. 138-139.

758 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 240.

759 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 39. See also C. Westermann, Genesis 1-11, pp. 336-337; 1 Samuel 17:10, 36, 43-46.

760 See W. Shakespeare, Errors, 3:2:20, p. 92.

761 Alma 30:17.

762 See Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60; Excursus 35: Lamech's "Sword Song", p. 612; and the overviews of Moses 4 and 6, pp. 221, 458. See Endnote 4-21, p. 304.

763 Robert Sacks, cited in L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 146 n. 32.

764 Moses 5:16.

765 Cf. Commentary 5:33-a, p. 381.

766 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 242-243.

47 And Lamech said unto his wives, Adah and Zillah: Hear my voice, ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech; for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt.

48 If Cain shall be avenged sevenfold, truly Lamech shall be seventy and seven fold;

The song is constructed as a series of parallel clauses addressed to Adah and Zillah. Nibley points out a similarity with poetic forms typically sung by an antiphonal chorus of competing women in connection with year-rites:⁷⁶⁷

Adah and Zillah	ye wives of Lamech
Hear	hearken
my voice	my speech
a man	a young man
to my wounding	to my hurt
Cain	Lamech
sevenfold	seventy and seven fold

- b wounding... hurt. Nibley comments: “If we look up these words that are used here for killing and slaying, we will find what they mean. This patza for ‘wounding me’... doesn’t mean wound. It means ‘to place a cut or mark upon, to put a ritual mark.’ The other, khatura, we are told, is the mark or stroke of a wound on the skin. There’s a conflict in which ritual wounds are inflicted. We are told that Satan showed Cain the blows of death... He taught them to him before he could have his showdown with Abel.”⁷⁶⁸ The idea of Cain’s having administered the “blows of death” in the manner of Satan may lie behind the rabbinic tradition that “Cain pelted all parts of Abel’s body, inflicting many blows and wounds, until he killed him by striking him on the neck.”⁷⁶⁹ Just as Cain is said to have placed gruesome ritual marks on Abel at his death, so the record has the Lord setting a mark upon Cain to preserve his life—suggesting, perhaps, a sobering instance of “measure for measure.”
- c a young man. Modern commentators typically see “man” and “young man” as referring to a single victim. The problem is that, since Irad was Lamech’s great-grandfather,⁷⁷⁰ he would not have been a young man. The term, however, might be “understood as derogatory: ‘This man, my antagonist, is but a mere child in combat!’”⁷⁷¹

- 48 a sevenfold... seventy and seven fold. Lamech was in effect declaring that the justification for his act of murder was far more compelling than that of Cain’s—as seventy-seven compares to seven in order of degree.⁷⁷² Note that Lamech is of the seventh generation from Cain.

Some Jewish, Christian, and Gnostic interpreters saw the first part of this phrase as meaning that “seven times vengeance has been exacted from Cain.” The related phrase in Moses 5:40 also was sometimes interpreted by readers of the Septuagint as “he who kills Cain will loose seven punishments.” This led to a proliferation of lists describing what the seven punishments were.⁷⁷³ An idea that Cain’s punishment was suspended for seven generations was also connected with the tradition that Lamech—a descendant of the seventh generation—killed Cain.⁷⁷⁴

⁷⁶⁷ See Excursus 35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”, p. 612.

⁷⁶⁸ H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 253. See also H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 253 and the overview of Moses 4, p. 236.

⁷⁶⁹ Talmud, Sanhedrin 37b, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 151, emphasis added; cf. Midrash Tanhuma, Bereshit 9, cited in H. N. Bialik et al., Legends, 101, p. 23; J. L. Kugel, Traditions, p. 153; Commentary 5:29-b, p. 377.

⁷⁷⁰ Moses 5:43.

⁷⁷¹ N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 39.

⁷⁷² Moses 5:40; U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 243. See Commentary 5:47-a, p. 395.

⁷⁷³ W. L. Lipscomb, Armenian, pp. 42-51, 86-91.

⁷⁷⁴ See Commentary 5:40-b, p. 386 and 5:50-a, p. 397.

49 For Lamech having entered into a covenant with Satan, after the manner of Cain, wherein he became Master Mahan, master of that great secret which was administered unto Cain by Satan; and Irada, the son of Enoch, having known their secret, began to reveal it unto the sons of Adam;

50 Wherefore Lamech, being angry, slew him, not like unto Cain, his brother Abel, for the sake of getting gain, but he slew him for the oath's sake.

49 a Master Mahan. See Commentary 5:31-a, p. 379.

b Irada... began to reveal it. Apparently Irada betrayed the oath he had made not to reveal the “great secret... administered to Cain by Satan.”⁷⁷⁵

c sons of Adam. This might be the same Cainite group later referred to as the “sons of men,” since the Hebrew is virtually identical in both cases.⁷⁷⁶ However, more plausibly, Draper et al. see this verse as describing the spread of secret combinations from the posterity of Cain to the covenant sons of Adam,⁷⁷⁷ who are elsewhere referred to as the “sons of God.”⁷⁷⁸

50 a he slew him for the oath's sake. This phrase confirms that the “wounding” and “hurt” that Lamech used to justify his act of murder were not merely the result of a chance brawl with Irada or a scheme to acquire his possessions. The fact that the victim was slain “for the oath's sake” evidences a carefully calculated assassination to protect the interests of the secret combination to which Lamech had pledged his allegiance.⁷⁷⁹

Schwartz sees the song in vv. 47-48 as a “perplexing passage [that] is almost certainly a fragment of a lost myth about Lamech.”⁷⁸⁰ Lacking the details about the name of the victim supplied by the book of Moses, Jewish and early Christian texts often connect the song to a story about accidental killings by Lamech: “According to this legend, Lamech, who was blind, went hunting with his son. Lamech's son saw Cain with a horn growing out of his forehead [the horn is here taken to be the mark of Cain], mistook him for a beast, and directed Lamech to kill him.”⁷⁸¹ After he discovered what had happened, Lamech, clapping his hands in grief, “struck his son and caused his death.”⁷⁸² Thus, Lamech says: “By a wound of mine [i.e., by my blindness] I slew a man [Cain]”—and “by a blow of mine [i.e., by clapping my hands] a child [either Tubal-Cain (Cain's grandson) or Enoch (Cain's son)].”⁷⁸³ Stone translated a variant of the story where the killing of Cain and his son with a stone was done deliberately “in order to lift the ignominy from their own race.”⁷⁸⁴ Nibley calls all these accounts of Lamech something “they made up to explain this garbled thing in which we only have two lines in the whole Old Testament to explain what's going on,” in contrast to the book of Moses where “we get a pretty good picture.”⁷⁸⁵

As a result of the killing, the wives of Lamech are said to have “hated him from that day” and, having “separated from him,” “sought to kill him.” This is taken as the reason that Lamech tried to convince them by his words that he “did this thing unknowingly.”⁷⁸⁶

775 See Commentary 5:49-b, p. 397.

776 See Commentary 5:52-c, p. 398.

777 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 76.

778 Moses 8:13-14. See the overview of Moses 5, p. 348.

779 See Moses 5:29 and Commentary 5:47-b, p. 396.

780 H. Schwartz, Tree, p. 452.

781 W. L. Lipscomb, Armenian, p. 91. See Commentary 5:42-q, p. 390; 5:48-a, p. 396; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 80; W. L. Lipscomb, Abel, 47-51, pp. 167-169; Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 19, pp. 29-30; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 41.

782 H. Schwartz, Tree, p. 451.

783 H. N. Bialik et al., Legends, pp. 24-25.

784 M. E. Stone, Forefathers, 16, p. 188; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:144, pp. 314-315; M. E. Stone, Abel, 5:3, p. 153.

785 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 255.

786 M. M. Noah et al., Jasher, 2:32-36, p. 4.

51 For, from the days of Cain, there was a secret combination, and their works were in the dark, and they knew every man his brother.

52 Wherefore the Lord cursed Lamech, and his house, and all them that had covenanted with Satan; for they kept not the commandments of God, and it displeased God, and he ministered not unto them, and their works were abominations, and began to spread among all the sons of men. And it was among the sons of men.

53 And among the daughters of men these things were not spoken, because that Lamech had spoken the secret unto his wives, and they rebelled against him, and declared these things abroad, and had not compassion;

- 51 a secret combination. In the Book of Mormon, the oaths that were later administered to those who formed secret combinations among the Jaredites were said to have been “handed down even from Cain, who was a murderer from the beginning... And... they are had among all people.”⁷⁸⁷
- 52 a his house. That is, his family.
- b all them that had covenanted. OT1 reads: “all they that had covenanted.”⁷⁸⁸
- c sons of men. In the book of Moses, this term is always used to designate those who reject the Gospel and follow Satan. In this verse, it most likely refers to the male descendants of Cain and his associates.⁷⁸⁹
- 53 a Lamech had spoken the secret unto his wives. The damaging results of Lamech’s wives having “rebelled against him, and declared these things abroad” triggered an absolute clamp-down among the rest of the “sons of men” on speaking to their wives (i.e., “the daughters of men”) about their secret affairs.

Comments Nibley: “Lamech became an outcast like Cain, not because of the murder but because his wives started spreading his secrets—the very ones he had murdered Irad for divulging.”⁷⁹⁰ Elaborating on ancient parallels, he writes: “One of the most widespread themes of myth and legend is the tragedy of the hero who yields up to the charms of a fair maiden or femme fatale and ends up revealing to her hidden mysteries. The story meets us in the oldest Egyptian epic (where the lady Isis wheedles out of Re the fatal knowledge of his true name) and in tales of Samson and Delilah, the daughter of Jared, Lohengrin, and so on, in which the woman is Pandora who must know what is in the box.”⁷⁹¹ On this theme the Gizeh fragments of 1 Enoch offer a significant parallel to the Joseph Smith version, in which the common background of the text and the confusion of the later scribes are equally apparent: ... ‘And now concerning the Watchers, [say to them,] You were in heaven and there you knew every mysterion which had not been made known to you as well as that mystery which God allowed; and that you disclosed to your wives in the hardness of your heart, and it was through this mystery that women and men caused iniquities to abound 787 Ether 8:15, 20. On the history and nature of secret combinations, see M. B. Brown, Girded; B. Gardner, Gadianton; P. Mouritsen, Combinations; H. W. Nibley, Approach, pp. 378-399; H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 363-372; H. W. Nibley, Freemen, pp. 358-369; H. W. Nibley, Forty Years After, pp. 551-563; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 74, 3:213-215; 76, 3:238-248; 77, 3:249-255; N. B. Oman, Combinations; D. C. Peterson, Gadianton Masonry; D. C. Peterson, Gadianton Robbers; D. C. Peterson, Secret Combinations; B. W. Warren, Secret Combinations. See also Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

788 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 96.

789 See Commentary 5:49-c, p. 398; Moses 5:56, 8:19-21.

790 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 177.

791 Cf. H. Schwartz, Tree, pp. 455-457.

53 And among the daughters of men these things were not spoken, because that Lamech had spoken the secret unto his wives, and they rebelled against him, and declared these things abroad, and had not compassion;

54 Wherefore Lamech was despised, and cast out, and came not among the sons of men, lest he should die.

55 And thus the works of darkness began to prevail among all the sons of men.

56 And God cursed the earth with a sore curse, and was angry with the wicked, with all the sons of men whom he had made;

57 For they would not hearken unto his voice, nor believe on his Only Begotten Son, even him whom he declared should come in the meridian of time, who was prepared from before the foundation of the world.

upon the earth.⁷⁹² Similarly, the *Combat of Adam and Eve*⁷⁹³ ... tells you here how Lamech was betrayed by his two wives.⁷⁹⁴ “Lamech’s wives... ‘had not compassion’ and spread the secret things abroad.”⁷⁹⁵

Besides the secrecy enjoined among the wicked members of the conspiracy, the spread of knowledge of these evil practices was a perennial concern to the righteous, as in the case of Moroni, who declined to reveal specifics when discussing the secret combinations of the Jaredites.⁷⁹⁶

- 54 a Wherefore. OT1 has an “X” mark inserted above the beginning of v. 54, and OT2 has a crossed-out heading “Chapter third.”⁷⁹⁷ The mistakenly-placed heading appears again in its rightful place just prior to the portion of the manuscript corresponding to Moses 6:1.⁷⁹⁸
- b Lamech was despised, and cast out. Lamech’s associates did not immediately slay him, as the penalty of the oath allowed, though he was despised and cast out. He went into exile to avoid any future retribution.
- c lest he should die. Lamech’s expectation of immunity from blood vengeance, as expressed in his song, were not fulfilled.
- 56 a God cursed the earth with a sore curse. See Commentary 4:23-b, p. 270 and 5:37-a, p. 384.
- b sons of men. See Commentary 5:52-c, p. 398.
- 57 a they would not hearken unto his voice. Contrast Adam’s obedient hearkening in 6:1.
- b prepared from before the foundation of the world. This refers to the fact that the atoning mission of Jesus Christ was anticipated and planned for in the premortal life before the creation of the world.⁷⁹⁹ The Prophet Joseph Smith said: “I believe that God foreknew everything, but did not foreordain everything; I deny that foreordain and foreknow is the same thing. He foreordained the fall of man; but all merciful as He is, He foreordained at the same time, a plan of Redemption for all mankind. I believe in the Divinity of Jesus Christ, and that He died for the sins of all men, who in Adam had fallen.”⁸⁰⁰

792 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, p. 183; cf. R. H. Charles, Enoch, 16:2-3, p. 294; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 16:2-3, p. 267; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 20, p. 256. See also Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

793 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:13, p. 122.

794 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 21, pp. 258-259.

795 H. W. Nibley, Return, p. 63 and Moses 5:47-48, 53. See Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

796 Ether 8:20-26.

797 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 96, 607.

798 Ibid., p. 608.

799 Alma 13:3; 1 Peter 1:20; Revelation 13:8; Ether 3:14; Moses 4:2.

800 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 6 February 1840, 4:78; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, pp. 57-58.

58 And thus the Gospel began to be preached, from the beginning, being declared by holy angels sent forth from the presence of God, and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost.

59 And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance, and the Gospel preached, and a decree sent forth, that it should be in the world, until the end thereof; and thus it was. Amen.

58 a And thus. In a manner with which readers of the Book of Mormon are well-acquainted, this phrase signals the beginning of the solemn summary contained in the final two verses of Moses 5. The importance of the events of this chapter and the promise that the fulness of the Gospel given to Adam will “be in the world until the end thereof” is highlighted by the threefold repetition of “and thus,” terminating in the concluding phrase: “and thus it was. Amen.”

b Gospel began to be preached, from the beginning. Compare, e.g., John 8:56; Hebrews 1:1-2, 11:13; Jacob 4:4-5, 7:10-11; D&C 29:41-42; Eusebius, Ecclesiastical, 1.2, pp. 15-21.

c being declared by holy angels..., and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost. Mormon taught that the “office of [the] ministry [of angels] is to call men unto repentance, and to fulfill and to do the work of the covenants of the Father, which he hath made unto the children of men, to prepare the way among the children of men, by declaring the word of Christ unto the chosen vessels of the Lord, that they may bear testimony of him.”⁸⁰¹

Because of their perfect “heed and diligence” Adam and Eve had learned the “mysteries of God”⁸⁰² from “holy angels sent forth from the presence of God, and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost.”⁸⁰³ They, in turn, “made all things known unto their sons and daughters.”⁸⁰⁴ Those who “believed it not”⁸⁰⁵ could not be granted additional light and knowledge, though the Lord continued to plead with them to repent through the power of the Holy Ghost.⁸⁰⁶

59 a And thus. The term thus in this verse is subordinate to its prior usage in v. 59. Here it signifies “in this manner” or “by this means,” referring to the fact that it was through the medium of angels,⁸⁰⁷ and of God’s own voice,⁸⁰⁸ and of the gift of the Holy Ghost⁸⁰⁹ that “all things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance.”⁸¹⁰

b all things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance. A contrast is implied between Adam’s having had all things confirmed by an holy ordinance from God, and Cain and Lamech’s having sworn their allegiance to Satan. Details about the holy ordinance referred to are not given,⁸¹¹ though it is probably no coincidence that Moses 6 will focus on Adam’s role as the “first father” in the order of the patriarchal priesthood.⁸¹²

801 Moroni 7:31.

802 Alma 12:9.

803 Moses 5:58.

804 Moses 5:12.

805 Moses 5:13.

806 Moses 5:14. See Moroni 7:32; Alma 12:10-11, Moses 7:27.

807 E.g., Moses 5:6.

808 E.g., Moses 5:4.

809 E.g., Moses 5:9.

810 Moses 5:59.

811 See Commentary 5:9-b, p. 362.

812 See Commentary 6:7-a, p. 480.

59 And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam, by an holy ordinance, and the Gospel preached, and a decree sent forth, that it should be in the world, until the end thereof; and thus it was. Amen.

The text is consistent with OT2.⁸¹³ OT1 does not include the phrase “unto Adam, by an holy ordinance.”⁸¹⁴ all things. Cf. Commentary 5:12-a, p. 364.

- d a decree sent forth, that it should be in the world, until the end thereof; and thus it was. Amen. Just as the decree in v. 15 parallels a passage near the end of the gospel of Mark, so this declaration is echoed by the final words of the Savior in Matthew: “and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.”⁸¹⁵

813 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 607.

814 Ibid., p. 96.

815 Matthew 28:20.

Gleanings

Table of Contents

Gaetano Lettieri: Genesis Parallels in Christ's Baptism and Temptation	403
Hugh W. Nibley: Rites and Ordinances Begin As Acts of Faith	404
Arta R. Ballif: Lamentation (Comments by Elder Bruce C. Hafen)	405
Elder Howard W. Hunter: A Successful Parent Is One Who Has Loved	407
Victor Hugo: Conscience	407
Leon R. Kass: The Maxim of a Would-Be Murderer	409
Hugh W. Nibley: Knowledge Is Not for Power and Gain	409
Hugh W. Nibley: Satan's Great Secret of "Success"	409
Leon R. Kass: The Self-Deception of Self-Sufficiency	411
President Spencer W. Kimball: The False Gods We Worship	411
Elder Neal A. Maxwell: The Painful Sound of Cain-like Glorying	412
Hugh W. Nibley: The Two Ways vs. The Two Parties	413
Alexander Solzhenitsyn: The Line Between Good and Evil	415
Giulio Busi Eden: The Distance Between Gehenna and Eden	415
Hugh W. Nibley: The Cainites and the Sethites	415
President Joseph Smith, Jr.: Sacrifice As a Type of the Redeemer	416
Elder Joseph Fielding Smith: Sacrifice Is to Place All upon the Altar	417
Elder Lorenzo Snow: Through Sacrifice You Are Proven	417
Elder Neal A. Maxwell: Real Sacrifice	418
Elder Bruce C. Hafen: Sacrifice of a Broken Heart and a Contrite Spirit	418
Truman G. Madsen: "Partakers of the Divine Nature"	419
C. S. Lewis: Three Kinds of People	419
C. S. Lewis: No Soul That Constantly Desires Joy Will Miss It	419
Kathleen Flake: Bound for Glory	419
C. S. Lewis: Turning our Natural Loves into Charity	420
Francis M. Gibbons: President Harold B. Lee and Pure Love	421
George F. Gibbs: True Wealth	421
Hugh W. Nibley: The Dramatic and the Pragmatic in the Temple	421
Hugh W. Nibley: What Does the Temple Teach Me?	422
Truman G. Madsen: The Temple Enables Blending Spirit with Flesh	423
Merlin G. Myers: The Efficacy of the Ordinances	423
Hugh W. Nibley: The Law of Consecration	423
C. S. Lewis: We Live in an Age of Campaigns	425
Hugh W. Nibley: The Lesson of the Sixth Century BCE	426
Truman G. Madsen: The Meaning and Power of the Endowment	427
Truman G. Madsen: Giving Our All in Covenant-Making	428
Truman G. Madsen: Begotten Through Christ	428
Elder Bruce C. Hafen: A Disciple's Journey	429
George Herbert: The Call	429

Gaetano Lettieri: Genesis Parallels in Christ's Baptism and Temptation⁸¹⁶

There seem to be systematic analogies between the proto-history of the Genesis Adam and the baptism of Jesus as the origin of the new creation.⁸¹⁷ First, the re-emergence of Jesus... from the waters of life reactualizes the waters of Eden, above all the descent of the Spirit (the same vital breath of [Moses 3:7]) on the waters.⁸¹⁸ The waters of Genesis also figure the symbol of the chrism,⁸¹⁹ the messianic spirit⁸²⁰ and the new alliance between God and man represented by the dove of Noah.⁸²¹ The... re-opening of the heavens and the divine voice which reaffirms the reacquired perfect offspring, the glorious “being in [His] image” of the man Jesus in whom God is pleased recalls Isaiah 42:1 and 63:11-19 and above all Psalm 2:7, where a reference to the creation of Adam seems to be possible, as fulfilling the “it was very good” of [Moses 2:31].

If at first sight these analogies may appear forced or dubious, they gain strength from the analogies, a good deal more evident, concerning the episode of the temptation of Jesus. The temptation is the other inseparable side of the baptism for the synoptic tradition: Jesus is pulled away violently from the Spirit (an analogous and contrary movement to that of the expulsion from Paradise) and placed for forty days in the closed-in and lonely place of Satan's temptation (the desert is the image of Eden turned upside down, the place fit for the punishment capable of taking away the sin of Adam).⁸²² Jesus lives in the peaceful company of the wild animals where the original harmony of creation is recovered, together with Adam's lordship over the beasts.⁸²³ In the desert Jesus is served by (receives nourishment from?) the angels, which corresponds to the information we have in some Judaic apocrypha of the angels as servants and dispensers of food to the prelapsarian⁸²⁴ Adam.⁸²⁵

The paradisaic symbolism and eschatological significance of the scene of the messianic baptism, and of the temptation in the desert, are definitely proved by references to certain passages in Isaiah:⁸²⁶

15 Until the spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest.

16 Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

17 And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever.

18 And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places;

3 For the Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord...

816 G. Lettieri, Ambiguity, pp. 26-28.

817 See Commentary 2:2-c, p. 97.

818 See Moses 2:2 and the river of Paradise in Moses 3:10.

819 = anointing.

820 See Isaiah 61:1-2.

821 See Genesis 8:11: the dove returns with an olive branch.

822 D. H. Akenson, Surpassing Wonder, p. 265 sees here the imagery of the wanderings of the children of Israel in the desert for forty years.

823 See Moses 2:26 and, in an eschatological perspective, Isaiah 11:6-8 and 65:25.

824 = before the Fall.

825 See G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 4:2, p. 5E.

826 Isaiah 32:15-18 and 51:3.

Hugh W. Nibley: Rites and Ordinances Begin As Acts of Faith⁸²⁷

Divinely instituted rites and ordinances have to do in the first instance with things which men do for no other reason than that God has commanded them. They are, first of all, acts of faith and are meritorious as such. They must be hard enough and demanding enough not to become mere acts of dull, automatic repetition, and their immediate practical value may not be so obviously apparent that there is no room left in their performance for a real test of faith. When one goes to train with a master, not merely with the object of serving time for a certificate as in our modern “character factories,” but in order to learn all the master has to teach and to become as far as possible perfect in an art, a science, or a craft, the first and all-important step is to establish a condition of complete trust between the master and the disciple. The candidate must by sure tests show his implicit faith and unhesitating obedience to every command in every situation. Soon enough he will understand why he must take a seemingly absurd position or perform some apparently meaningless operation; but unless and until he does the thing, and does it entirely on faith, and does it with a will, he will never come to that understanding, worlds without end.

There are many things that can only be explained after they are done, and then the explanation of what seemed so arbitrary and mysterious usually turns out to be extremely obvious and natural. We are required, for example, to use oil in some of the ordinances of the Church, and water in others. If you ask me why, I will answer, “I know not, save that the Lord hath commanded.”⁸²⁸ That is reason enough. It does not follow that these things have no real purpose aside from the symbolic and disciplinary: A small child uses soap on faith—a mere act of obedience, we might say, with the soap as a symbol of cleanliness, but actually it goes much further than that; the soap performs a real function which the child does not understand. I doubt not that when we know the reason for some of the things we do now on faith, the practical value of the actions will be so plain that we will wonder how we could have missed it, and then we shall be heartily glad that we did what we were told to do. Meantime the Lord advises us in these things, and it is up to us to trust his judgment. If the primary purpose of our being on earth is to be tested, and the first thing to be tested is our faith and obedience, it is foolish to ask for a full explanation before we will move a muscle. There are many operations in mathematics and the arts that can only be understood after they have been carried out....

One of the most remarkable features of Latter-day Saint ordinances is that they are, or claim to be, pristine. They are the same ordinances that were given in the beginning. That is the way God wants it, and that is the way it must be. The whole validity of such ordinances depends on their having been revealed directly from heaven. No effort is made to give practical or rational explanation of these ordinances; they are not interpreted symbolically, nor are they justified by their aesthetic appeal, which is extremely limited. We do these things on faith for no other reason save that the Lord has commanded us to do them. The importance of a living prophet in such a ritual scheme of things will be at once apparent. Granted that the real business of life is to do what God wants us to, the whole problem is then to determine what that is. Only a prophet can tell us.

827 H. W. Nibley, Ritual, pp. 148-149, 151.

828 Moses 5:6.

Arta R. Ballif: Lamentation (Comments by Elder Bruce C. Hafen)⁸²⁹

Arta Romney Ballif once wrote a poem called “Lamentation,” in which she imagined Eve’s experience as a mother and a wife—her questions, her cries for understanding, her quest to know God...⁸³⁰

And God said, “BE FRUITFUL, AND MULTIPLY—”
 Multiply, multiply—echoes multiply
 God said, “I WILL GREATLY MULTIPLY THY SORROW—”
 Thy sorrow, sorrow, sorrow—

I have gotten a man from the Lord
 I have traded the fruit of the garden for fruit of my body
 For a laughing bundle of humanity.

And now another one who looks like Adam
 We shall call this one “Abel.”
 It is a lovely name, “Abel.”

Cain, Abel, the world is yours.
 God set the sun in the heavens to light your days
 To warm the flocks, to kernel the grain
 He illuminated your nights with stars
 He made the trees and the fruit thereof yielding seed
 He made every living thing, the wheat, the sheep, the cattle
 For your enjoyment
 And, behold, it is very good.

...

Adam? Adam
 Where art thou?
 Where are the boys?
 The sky darkens with clouds.
 Adam, is that you?
 Where is Abel?
 He is long caring for his flocks.
 The sky is black and the rain hammers.
 Are the ewes lambing
 In this storm?

Why your troubled face, Adam?
 Are you ill?
 Why so pale, so agitated?
 The wind will pass
 The lambs will birth
 With Abel’s help.

Dead?
 What is dead?

Merciful God!
 Hurry, bring warm water
 I’ll bathe his wounds

829 B. C. Hafen et al., Belonging, pp. 86-90.

830 See Endnote 5-66, p. 449.

Bring clean clothes
Bring herbs.
I'll heal him.

I am trying to understand.
You said, "Abel is dead."
But I am skilled with herbs
Remember when he was seven
The fever? Remember how—
Herbs will not heal? Dead?

And Cain? Where is Cain?
Listen to that thunder.

Cain cursed?
What has happened to him?
God said, "A fugitive and a vagabond?"

But God can't do that.
They are my sons, too.
I gave them birth
In the valley of pain.

Adam, try to understand
In the valley of pain

I bore them fugitive?
vagabond?

This is his home
This the soil he loved
Where he toiled for golden wheat
For tasseled corn.

To the hill country?
There are rocks in the hill country
Cain can't work in the hill country
The nights are cold
Cold and lonely, and the wind gales.

Quick, we must find him
A basket of bread and his coat
I worry, thinking of him wandering
With no place to lay his head.
Cain cursed?
A wanderer, a roamer?
Who will bake his bread and mend his coat?

Abel, my son dead?
And Cain, my son, a fugitive?
Two sons
Adam, we had two sons
Both—Oh, Adam—multiply sorrow

Dear God, why?
 Tell me again about the fruit
 Why?
 Please, tell me again
 Why?

This poem movingly depicts Eve's anguish—yet it does not tell us why she and Adam lost their sons. They may not have known why. They must have wondered if those losses were their own fault. Had they failed as parents? The poem imagines that in her very uncertainty, Eve felt estranged from God, cut off, not at all “at one” with him. And it is fair to assume that Adam's and Eve's questions and fears in losing Abel and Cain were literally “multiplied” on other dark days throughout their lives. Like Eve, sometimes we do not know—perhaps cannot know—how fully we are at fault for the bitterness we taste. When we taste the bitter, we, like Eve, can only keep trying, and wondering, and asking for understanding. We might then cry out as Joseph Smith did: “O God, where art thou? And where is the pavilion that covereth thy hiding place?”⁸³¹ Does the Atonement speak to such questions? We testify that it does.

Elder Howard W. Hunter: A Successful Parent Is One Who Has Loved⁸³²

A successful parent is one who has loved, one who has sacrificed, and one who has cared for, taught, and ministered to the needs of a child. If you have done all of these and your child is still wayward or worldly, it could well be that you are, nevertheless, a successful parent. Perhaps there are children who have come into the world that would challenge any set of parents under any set of circumstances. Likewise, perhaps there are others who would bless the lives of, and be a joy to, almost any father or mother.

Victor Hugo: Conscience⁸³³

When Cain, dishevelled, angry, in the middle of a storm,
 Fleeting with his children wrapped in hides to keep warm,
 Was running from Jehovah, he arrived at the base
 Of a solitary mountain in the middle of a waste
 As night came down and darkness gave the shadows depth.
 His wife, exhausted, and his children, out of breath,
 Said to him, ‘Let's lie down here and go to sleep.’
 Cain dreamed at the mountain's foot, unable to sleep.
 Lifting his head, he looked up and saw an eye
 Entirely open, in the depths of the sky,
 Which stared at him fixedly from out of the night.
 “I am too close,” he said, shuddering at the sight.
 And so he woke his sleeping sons along with his wife
 And set out again, as if fleeing for his life.
 He marched for thirty nights; he marched for thirty days.
 He traveled, silent, pale, afraid of noises, in a daze,
 Furtively, without looking back or stopping once,
 Without rest, without sleep, until he came after months

831 D&C 121:1. See Endnote 3-57, p. 210.

832 H. W. Hunter, Concern, November 1983, p. 115.

833 V. Hugo, Poetry, pp. 215, 217. See Endnote 5-67, p. 449.

To the coast which would be the Assyrian shore.
 “Let us stop here,” he said, “This refuge is secure.
 We’ve reached the world’s limits. Let us rest—or try to.”
 But as he went to sit, he glanced across the sky’s blue
 And saw the eye hanging in the last place he had looked.
 Fear sent him into convulsions. As he shook
 He shouted “Cover me!” With their fingers on their mouths,
 All of his children watched their father’s trembling hands.
 Cain said to Jab, whose sons would later move about
 As nomads under tasseled tents across the sands,
 “Spread out the canvas of your tent over here.”
 And so they put together a floating barrier.
 In order to secure it, leaden weights were fastened on “You can see nothing now?” asked Zillah, sweet as dawn,
 The blond child, daughter of his daughters and his sons.
 “I still see that eye!” was Cain’s terrified response.
 Then Jubal, father of those men who travel from Market towns blowing horns and banging on their drums,
 Said, “I know how to build a wall.” So he designed it,
 Had it made from bronze, and put Cain behind it.
 But Cain said, “The eye is still out there, hovering.”
 Enoch said, “Let’s build a score of towers in a ring
 So terrifying no one will dare to come close.
 Let’s build a city with a large gate we can close.
 Let’s build a city and we’ll seal him inside.”
 And so the forefather of blacksmiths, Tubalcain,
 Constructed an inhuman city, tall and wide.
 While he was building it, his brothers on the plain
 Were hunting down the children of Enosh and Seth.
 They ripped out the eyes of every person they met.
 And every night they fired their arrows at the stars.
 Granite replaced the canvas walls. And iron bars
 Were used to join the huge blocks of this citadel.
 The city looked as if it were a city from hell:
 Its towers caused a night to fall on outlying fields.
 Its walls were like mountains. For they built them not to yield
 To anything. They scrawled above its gate: “No Gods allowed.”
 And when they had finished walling in and walling out
 They put Cain in the towers’ most secure and guarded wing.
 But he remained listless, and only seemed to stare.
 “Has the eye disappeared?” asked Zillah, trembling.
 Cain answered back to her, “No. It’s still there.”
 And then he said to them, “I want to live underground
 Like a hermit in his tomb—in some place without sound
 Where no one will see me, and I won’t see them as well.”
 And so they dug a ditch, and Cain replied, “You’ve done well.”
 Then he went down into the black crypt alone.
 And when he was sitting in the darkness on his throne,
 And they had sealed the vault in which he would remain,
 The eye was in the tomb there and looked straight at Cain.

Leon R. Kass: The Maxim of a Would-Be Murderer⁸³⁴

Though an analytic philosopher or White House lawyer might try to argue that Cain's speech was true—for where indeed is the soul of Abel now?—Cain, to protect himself, lies to God... Indeed, to keep the inquisitive voice from forcing him to fully confront the meaning of his deed, he answers the question with a question no doubt tinged with indignation and even mocking: Why are you asking me? Am I supposed to be his guardian? You, you who liked his sacrifice, you who made him prosper—aren't you his keeper? Why don't you know where he is? And (implicitly) what kind of a guardian are you?

God... is not deceived. On the contrary, He treats Cain's question, with its blatant disregard for brother Abel's whereabouts, as tantamount to a confession. Fully understood, "Am I my brother's keeper?" turns out, in fact, to be the maxim of a would-be murderer, an expression of fratricidal intent. For to deny responsibility for your brother is, tacitly, to profess indifference to his fate. To care not at all about his existence and welfare is to be tacitly guilty of all harm that befalls him: in short, to say yes even to his death and disappearance.

Hugh W. Nibley: Knowledge Is Not for Power and Gain⁸³⁵

"Knowledge is power" is the slogan of a rascally world. Why else love truth? "Is it because you can discover a beauty in it, because it is congenial to you, or because you think it will make you a ruler or a lord? If you conceive that you will attain to power, upon such a motive, you are much mistaken," says Brigham. "It is a trick of the unseen power that is abroad amongst the inhabitants of the earth, that leads them astray, binds their minds, and subverts their understanding." Then he goes all out: "Suppose that our Father in heaven, our elder brother, the risen Redeemer, the Savior of the world, or any of the Gods of eternity should act on this principle, to love truth, knowledge, and wisdom, because they are all powerful, and by the aid of this power they could send devils to hell, torment the people of the earth, exercise sovereignty over them, and make them miserable at their pleasure; they would cease to be Gods,... the extension of their kingdom would cease, and their God-head come to an end."⁸³⁶ Yet this is the realm we seek and the direction we work toward: Leave the motives out and let the purpose in. Especially there are some things we should never look for—power and gain.

Hugh W. Nibley: Satan's Great Secret of "Success"

The cynical conclusion is that no one can resist Satan's bargain, and in the history of the world very few people have. The first to accept was Cain, who "loved Satan more than God," though at the latter's advice he continued to make offerings to the Lord.⁸³⁷ The "great secret" of success that he learned from his new teacher was that he could get anything in this world by the calculated use of force, with no need to be ashamed since it could all be done in the sacred name of freedom; instead of being appalled at the blood on his hands, "Cain gloried in that which he had done, saying: I am free; surely the flocks [wealth, pecus, Vieh] of my brother falleth into my hands."⁸³⁸ Cain slew Abel not, as we like to think, in a fit of passion but with cold calculation, "for the sake of getting gain."⁸³⁹ He was all business. As for the 834 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 142.

835 H. W. Nibley, Funeral, p. 294.

836 B. Young, 27 February 1853, p. 117.

837 Moses 5:18, 21.

838 Moses 5:31-33.

839 Moses 5:50, 38.

victim, he was quite able to take care of himself, and if he failed, that, by the rules of the new game, it was his hard luck: “Am I my brother’s keeper?”⁸⁴⁰ Significantly enough, when this forthright, no-nonsense economy, unencumbered by enervating sentimentality, worked against Cain, he straightway became a bleeding heart in his own behalf, and appealed for the mercy he would not give. “My punishment is greater than I can bear!”⁸⁴¹ In making an example of Cain, God absolutely forbade the use of Cain’s own methods against him: “Whoever slayeth thee, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold.”⁸⁴²

Because of the Fall, man has become the enemy of his own environment, at odds with the whole creation, allergic to all manner of things good in themselves that afflict and torment him: “The animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms abide the law of their Creator; the whole earth and all things pertaining to it, except man, abide the law of their creation.”⁸⁴³ Conflict is inevitable, with man stubbornly refusing to become subject to the most sensible and self-exalting principles, determined to subdue the earth in his way. “We see all the world trying to lord it over God’s heritage. It is in the spirit that the evil principle and power is trying to overcome and rule over the divine principle planted there. This constantly leads the children of men astray.”⁸⁴⁴ So there is a fundamental conflict here, and it goes back to the beginning. It is said that Satan approached Adam with certain propositions that he later presented to Cain, Noah, Abraham, and Job, in which he set forth his plan for running things: (1) He claimed all of God’s earth, “most glorious and beautiful” from end to end for his own; (2) then he put up everything in it for sale to anyone who had the money; (3) and finally he revealed the source of power and dominion under his system: it all rested on possession of the treasures of the earth, with which one can buy any military and political power necessary to rule, or rather misrule, among the children of men.⁸⁴⁵

In 1540 when Pedro de Tovar came up to Bear Chief, who was standing to greet him on the rise at Old Oraibi, the chief reached out his hand to establish the visitor’s identity by offering him the sacred handclasp, the nachwach—was he really the promised White Brother? Naturally, the Spaniard, who had come looking for gold and nothing else, thought he was asking for money and placed a gold coin in his hand. “Have you any signs or tokens?” asked the chief. “Yes, I have money,” replied the visitor. From that moment the Hopis knew it was not the one they were looking for, and to this day they have never been converted to Christianity. We are most fortunate in possessing Satan’s game-plan, which he gave away in a fit of temper in the Garden of Eden. The perennial source of wealth, the treasures of the earth, are to be controlled by the convenient symbols of a money economy, gold and silver; these are used to buy up kings and presidents, armies and navies, popes and priests. They are controlled by “secret combinations, to get power and gain,”⁸⁴⁶ and the result is rule by violence. Adam rejected the plan, but Cain bought into it, and so became “master of this great secret, that I may murder and get gain”⁸⁴⁷—the great design which at last is nearing fulfillment in our day of converting all living things into marketable commodities.⁸⁴⁸

840 Moses 5:34.

841 Moses 5:38.

842 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, pp. 15-16. See Moses 5:40.

843 B. Young, 23 March 1864, p. 246.

844 B. Young, 5 January 1860, p. 107.

845 H. W. Nibley, Environment, p. 45.

846 Ether 8:22; cf. Ether 8:18-19.

847 Moses 5:31.

848 H. W. Nibley, Promised lands, pp. 98-99.

Leon R. Kass: The Self-Deception of Self-Sufficiency⁸⁴⁹

Concerned with his position as number one, eager to establish himself as lord and master of his domain, Cain (like Romulus, the mythic founder of Rome) commits the paradigmatic crime of the political founder: fratricide. For the aspiration to supremacy and rule entails necessarily the denial and destruction of radical human equality, epitomized in the relationship of brotherhood. To wish to rule, to dominate, to be in command, means—by its very nature—the wish not only to remove all rivals but also to destroy the brotherly relation with those under one's dominion. The ruler, as ruler, has no brothers.

The more that rude and ambitious men have to do with one another, the more they both need to fear and seek to outdo one another. For both reasons—safety and pride—they cultivate prowess in fighting.⁸⁵⁰ They build city walls to protect them from their enemies; but the existence of walls creates new enmities and invites attack. The city begun in fear proudly begets one of heroic ambition. There is a direct line from the plowshare to the sword.⁸⁵¹

As we will see even more clearly later on, when we come to the city and tower of Babel, the Bible in its beginning takes sides in an ancient quarrel about the origin and goodness of the city and civilization. According to the more optimistic view, the city is rooted in need and comes to be by a process of natural growth, beginning with the household, then the tribe, then the village, then the merging of several villages to form the city. According to Aristotle, the city is the first truly self-sufficient community; it comes into being for the sake of life, but it exists for the sake of living well. According to the more pessimistic view, shared by the Bible, the city is rooted in fear, greed, pride, violence, and the desire for domination. These questionable beginnings continue to infect civilization as such. In addition, the city's aspiration to self-sufficiency is highly problematic.⁸⁵² This, too, our story makes plain.

But the context of the story of Cain is not simply political. Cain was jealous over a matter of divine favor... This prototypical human being begets a line leading to civilization, the arts, and the heroes—all manifestations of an impulse toward self-sufficiency... Lamech, the hero, acts as if he has succeeded; but we, readers prepared by what has come before, know that he is self-deceived.

President Spencer W. Kimball: The False Gods We Worship⁸⁵³

[Many] have submitted themselves in one degree or another to the enticings of Satan and his servants and joined with those of “the world” in lives of ever-deepening idolatry...

Few men have ever knowingly and deliberately chosen to reject God and his blessings. Rather, we learn from the scriptures that because the exercise of faith has always appeared to be more difficult than relying on things more immediately at hand, carnal man has tended to transfer his trust in God to material things. Therefore, in all ages when men have fallen under the power of Satan and lost the faith, they have put in its place a hope in the “arm of flesh” and in “gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know”⁸⁵⁴—that is, in idols. This I find to be a dominant theme in the

849 L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 147.

850 See Commentary 5:47-a, p. 395.

851 See Isaiah 2:4; Joel 3:10; Micah 4:3.

852 See Endnote 5-68, p. 450.

853 S. W. Kimball, False Gods, pp. 4-6.

854 Daniel 5:23.

Old Testament. Whatever thing a man sets his heart and his trust in most is his god; and if his god doesn't also happen to be the true and living God of Israel, that man is laboring in idolatry...

The Lord has blessed us as a people with a prosperity unequalled in times past. The resources that have been placed in our power are good, and necessary to our work here on the earth. But I am afraid that many of us have been surfeited with flocks and herds and acres and barns and wealth and have begun to worship them as false gods, and they have power over us. Do we have more of these good things than our faith can stand? Many people spend most of their time working in the service of a self-image that includes sufficient money, stocks, bonds, investment portfolios, property, credit cards, furnishings, automobiles, and the like to guarantee carnal security throughout, it is hoped, a long and happy life. Forgotten is the fact that our assignment is to use these many resources in our families and quorums to build up the kingdom of God—to further the missionary effort and the genealogical and temple work; to raise our children up as fruitful servants unto the Lord; to bless others in every way, that they may also be fruitful. Instead, we expend these blessings on our own desires, and as Moroni said, “Ye adorn yourselves with that which hath no life, and yet suffer the hungry, and the needy, and the naked, and the sick and the afflicted to pass by you, and notice them not”...⁸⁵⁵

In spite of our delight in defining ourselves as modern, and our tendency to think we possess a sophistication that no people in the past ever had—in spite of these things, we are, on the whole, an idolatrous people—a condition most repugnant to the Lord.

We are a warlike people, easily distracted from our assignment of preparing for the coming of the Lord. When enemies rise up, we commit vast resources to the fabrication of gods of stone and steel—ships, planes, missiles, fortifications—and depend on them for protection and deliverance. When threatened, we become anti-enemy instead of pro-kingdom of God; we train a man in the art of war and call him a patriot, thus, in the manner of Satan's counterfeit of true patriotism, perverting the Savior's teaching:

Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.⁸⁵⁶

Elder Neal A. Maxwell: The Painful Sound of Cain-like Glorifying

A confused Cain, a vain Cain, not only murdered his brother while they conversed together in the field, but also gloried in the murder of Abel, when Cain said (probably shouted), “I am free.”

So often violence creates the illusion of freedom or possession. So often sin creates a momentary illusion which those involved are taken in by. I've never been able to erase from my mind the boasting words of army buddies following their night of adultery, which I heard while trying to go back to sleep on an army cot no farther away from here than Camp Williams. I saw the shame of several of those same men in the days and weeks that followed. It seemed to me then, as it does now, that the raucousness and the shouting of sin, the Cain-like glorifying in it, is also the sound of pain trying to erase itself.⁸⁵⁷

⁸⁵⁵ Mormon 8:39.

⁸⁵⁶ Matthew 5:44-45.

⁸⁵⁷ N. A. Maxwell, Insights, p. 50.

Cain’s... erroneous thinking about freedom evokes Peter’s warning words: “Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.”⁸⁵⁸ True, strident souls may even fake laughter amid bondage and sin, but another proverb applies: “Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness.”⁸⁵⁹

Gross sin not only dulls the feelings, it also impairs the intellect. After murdering Abel, Cain ironically boasted, “I am free!”⁸⁶⁰ Did the herd of Gadarene swine similarly console themselves, thinking that they were actually rugged individualists as they raced down the hill to their destruction?⁸⁶¹

Illustrative of poor perspective of another type is the fact that, after jealously slaying Abel, Cain cried out in a pathetic outburst of self-deception, “I am free,”⁸⁶² but he was never less so! Like Pilate’s trying to wash his hands in vain, and like Hitler’s careful efforts to keep his name off certain Holocaust documents, so today many do not really want the consequences of what they want. But in God’s inexorable ecology consequences do come, accompanied by severe individual accountability.⁸⁶³

Hugh W. Nibley: The Two Ways vs. The Two Parties

When the early church began to grow in power and influence and worldliness, the ancient doctrine of the Two Ways⁸⁶⁴ was quickly replaced by that of the Two Parties. The former specified that there lies before every mortal, at every moment of his life, a choice between the Way of Light and the Way of Darkness; but the latter doctrine taught that righteousness consisted in belonging to one party (ours), and wickedness in belonging to the other (theirs)... [W]hen the two ways were identified with the two parties by the churchmen—ours and yours—the doctrine was exploited with inexorable logic: Since there are only two sides, one totally evil and the other absolutely good, and I am not totally evil, I must be on God’s side, and that puts you on the other side... With withering contempt, Isaiah denounces the comfortable logic: It is not for you to say who is on the Lord’s side, says the Lord; that is for me to say, and those who most loudly offer me their support and cry “Lord! Lord!” are those in whom I most disapprove.⁸⁶⁵ “See the foe in countless numbers, marshaled in the ranks of sin,”⁸⁶⁶ we sing, as if we have already chosen sides and know who the bad people are, because we are on the Lord’s side. “Fight for Zion, down with error, flash the sword above the foe, every stroke disarms a foeman,”⁸⁶⁷ and so on. No error on our side? The point of all such hymns is that it is sin and error that we are fighting, not people guilty of sin and error—for we are all such people, and each one can only confront and overcome sin and error in himself. You cannot tell the righteous from the wicked, the Lord told Joseph Smith, you cannot tell your friends from your enemies. Be still and let me decide the issue!...⁸⁶⁸ Mormon died fighting the Lamanites, who were not as wicked as his own people!⁸⁶⁹

858 2 Peter 2:19; see also 2 Nephi 2:26-30.

859 N. A. Maxwell, Seventh, p. 78; see Proverbs 14:13.

860 Moses 5:33.

861 N. A. Maxwell, Enemy, p. 76.

862 Moses 5:33.

863 N. A. Maxwell, Praise, p. 72.

864 See overview of Moses 5, p. 328.

865 See Matthew 7:21.

866 Hymns (1985), #259.

867 Ibid. The hymn actually reads “Strike for Zion” instead of “Fight for Zion.”

868 D&C 10:37.

869 H. W. Nibley, Prophetic, 462-464.

[Fortunately, the] gospel of repentance is a constant reminder that the most righteous are still being tested and may yet fall, and that the most wicked are not yet beyond redemption and may still be saved. And that is what God wants: “Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die?”⁸⁷⁰ There are poles for all to see, but in this life no one has reached and few have ever approached either pole, and no one has any idea at what point between his neighbor stands. Only God knows that.⁸⁷¹

As I listen to our Elders’ quorums [ringing] out [with] militant hymns every Sunday morning, slashing their swords above the foe, conquering at every step, scattering the hosts of darkness, reveling in the victory of the right⁸⁷²— one question keeps recurring to my mind, “Where is the battle?”... The Devil is using diversionary tactics to get us on the wrong battlefield.⁸⁷³

Satan’s masterpiece of counterfeiting is the doctrine that there are only two choices, and he will show us what they are. It is true that there are only two ways, but by pointing us the way he wants us to take and then showing us a fork in that road, he convinces us that we are making the vital choice, when actually we are choosing between branches in his road. Which one we take makes little difference to him, for both lead to destruction. This is the polarization we find in our world today. Thus we have the choice between Shiz and Coriantumr—which all Jaredites were obliged to make.⁸⁷⁴ We have the choice between the wicked Lamanites (and they were that) and the equally wicked (Mormon says “more wicked”⁸⁷⁵) Nephites. Or between the fleshpots of Egypt⁸⁷⁶ and the stews of Babylon,⁸⁷⁷ or between the land pirates and the sea pirates of World War I, or between white supremacy and black supremacy, or between Vietnam and Cambodia, or between Bushwhackers and Jayhawkers, or between China and Russia, or between Catholic and Protestant, or between fundamentalist and atheist, or between right and left—all of which are true rivals, who hate each other. A very clever move of Satan! ...It should be apparent that you take no sides [when you are presented with the Devil’s dilemma].⁸⁷⁸

On the last night of a play the whole cast and stage crew stay in theater until the small or not-so-small hours of the morning striking the old set. If there is to be a new opening soon, as the economy of the theater requires, it is important that the new set should be in place and ready for the opening night; all the while the old set was finishing its usefulness and then being taken down, the new set was rising in splendor to be ready for the drama that would immediately follow. So it is with this world. It is not our business to tear down the old set—the agencies that do that are already hard at work and very efficient—the set is coming down all around us with spectacular effect. Our business is to see to it that the new set is well on the way for what is to come—and that means a different kind of politics, beyond the scope of the tragedy that is now playing its closing night. We are preparing for the establishment of Zion.⁸⁷⁹

870 Ezekiel 18:23.

871 H. W. Nibley, Prophetic, pp. 461-462.

872 See Hymns (1985), #259.

873 H. W. Nibley, Battle.

874 Ether 14:20.

875 Alma 47:36; cf. Helaman 6:31-38.

876 Exodus 16:3.

877 Daniel 1:5.

878 H. W. Nibley, Gifts, pp. 113-114.

879 H. W. Nibley, Beyond Politics, p. 302.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn: The Line Between Good and Evil⁸⁸⁰

If only it were all so simple! If only there were evil people somewhere insidiously committing evil deeds, and it were necessary only to separate them from the rest of us and destroy them. But the line dividing good and evil cuts through the heart of every human being. And who is willing to destroy a piece of his own heart? During the life of any heart this line keeps changing place; sometimes it is squeezed one way by exuberant evil and sometimes it shifts to allow enough space for good to flourish. One and the same human being is, at various ages, under various circumstances, a totally different human being. At times he is close to being a devil, at times to saint-hood. But his name doesn't change, and to that name we ascribe the whole lot, good and evil.⁸⁸¹

Giulio Busi Eden: The Distance Between Gehenna and Eden⁸⁸²

"Gehenna and Eden. What's the distance between them? A hand's breadth..."⁸⁸³ Gehenna and Eden are as close as the distinction between good and evil, which is often so subtle as to be almost imperceptible.⁸⁸⁴

Hugh W. Nibley: The Cainites and the Sethites

From [Seth] comes that line of successors in the priesthood, duly registered in the Book of Life, from which the wicked were excluded.⁸⁸⁵ After Seth came Enos, who decided to make an important move. Since "in those days Satan had great dominion among men, and raged in their hearts," causing "wars and bloodshed... in administering death, because of secret works, seeing for power"⁸⁸⁶—exactly as in the modern world—Enos gathered "the residue of the people of God" and with them migrated out of the country "and dwelt in a land of promise," named Cainan after his son...⁸⁸⁷

In The Combat of Adam and Eve,⁸⁸⁸ as Migne observes, "the author depicts the descendants of Adam as divided into two separate and distinct branches: the Cainites dedicated to following Satan, who lived in a fertile country but very far distant from Eden, and who devoted themselves to all the pleasures of the flesh and all manner of immorality," and the Sethites who "dwelt in the mountains near the Garden,⁸⁸⁹ were faithful to the divine law, and bore the names of the Sons of God."⁸⁹⁰

This is the story they tell between the [Sethites] and the Cainites... Their cultures have different traditions, but the Cainites win hands down [in popularity]... The plains had great attraction for the more simple-living people of the high places. They naturally were enticed. Satan took charge down below. He made a covenant. They talk a lot about the covenant, how he directed them and gave them the jewelry and the beautiful clothes and loud instruments. He specialized in brass bands. This would attract the attention of the young people up on the heights. They'd come and 880 Cited in A. J. Colton, Solzhenitsyn, p. 11.

881 See Endnote 5-74, p. 452.

882 G. B. Eden, Mystical Architecture, p. 19.

883 H. Freedman et al., Midrash, Ecclesiastes, VII.14.3, 8:197.

884 Almost imperceptible, that is, to the natural eye. If the natural eye is the only means by which we can see, we will perceive very little indeed (cf. B. K. Packer, cited in D. A. Bednar, Quick, p. 36; see also Moroni 7:14-16).

885 Moses 6:5-8.

886 Moses 6:15.

887 Moses 6:17.

888 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:11, pp. 118-119.

889 Cf. Moses 7:17. Ri cites several sources that locate the Sethites on Mount Hermon (see A. S-M. Ri, Commentaire de la Caverne, pp. 74, 207).

890 H. W. Nibley, Enoch, pp. 177-178.

look down with some envy at all the fun that was going on down there in the plain—all the lights, the dancing, the carousing, etc. Then we come down the list here. After Cainan and Mahalaleel, then comes Jared. His name means “going down,” because that was the day when they went down from the mountain; they left it. Jared told his sons, if you ever go down there, you’ll never get back. At first they didn’t know the way down, so Satan had to teach them. Satan actually came with a delegation of very important-looking people. He came up and invited Jared, “Come down, Brother Jared, and visit us in the city down below. You’ll see what a nice society we have and you will love to stay with us. You’ll see what it’s like.” He was curious, so he went down with them. They dressed up like angels, and they fooled him. He actually was fooled until he got back home, and the angel came and told him, “Look, this is terrible. You’ve been led astray. Don’t let your people do this.” Satan showed them a way down. There was a gully where a stream went down, and you could get down that way. They started drifting down and joining in the fun. Incidentally, when Jared went there, he was introduced into all the delights of the place. Immediately, they started giving him a real show. It was a session—a real orgy with obscene goings-on, etc. He was horrified because the men who came to get him had convinced him....

They won Jared over, but he saw where it was going. Well, his kids started going down and joining in the fun. They couldn’t find their way back, and they didn’t want to come back either. But they were warned (“if you do”). Pretty soon there was only a small community left up on the hill, the righteous and holy ones.⁸⁹¹

President Joseph Smith, Jr.: Sacrifice As a Type of the Redeemer⁸⁹²

It is reasonable to suppose that man departed from the first teachings, or instructions which he received from heaven in the first age, and refused by his disobedience to be governed by them.

Consequently, he formed such laws as best suited his own mind, or as he supposed, were best adapted to his situation. But that God has influenced man more or less since that time in the formation of law for His benefit we have no hesitancy in believing; for, as before remarked, being the source of all good, every just and equitable law was in a greater or less degree influenced by Him. And though man in his own wisdom would not admit the influence of a power superior to his own, yet for wise and great purposes, for the good and happiness of His creatures, God has instructed man to form wise and wholesome laws, since he had departed from Him and refused to be governed by those laws which God had given by His own voice from on high in the beginning. But notwithstanding the transgression, by which man had cut himself off from an immediate intercourse with his Maker without a Mediator, it appears that the great and glorious plan of His Redemption was previously provided; the sacrifice prepared; the Atonement wrought out in the mind and purpose of God, even in the person of the Son, through whom man was now to look for acceptance and through whose merits he was now taught that he alone could find redemption, since the word had been pronounced, “Unto dust [thou shalt] return.”⁸⁹³

But that man was not able himself to erect a system, or plan with power sufficient to free him from a destruction which awaited him is evident from the fact that God, as before

891 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, p. 261; cf. S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:17, pp. 125-130; 2:20-21, pp. 133-140.

892 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, pp. 58-59.

893 Moses 4:25.

remarked, prepared a sacrifice in the gift of His own Son who should be sent in due time, to prepare a way, or open a door through which man might enter into the Lord's presence, whence he had been cast out for disobedience. From time to time these glad tidings were sounded in the ears of men in different ages of the world down to the time of Messiah's coming. By faith in this Atonement or plan of Redemption, Abel offered to God a sacrifice that was accepted, which was the firstlings of the flock. Cain offered of the fruit of the ground, and was not accepted, because he could not do it in faith, he could have no faith, or could not exercise faith contrary to the plan of heaven. It must be shedding the blood of the Only Begotten to atone for man; for this was the plan of Redemption; and "without [the] shedding of blood [was] no remission",⁸⁹⁴ and as the sacrifice was instituted for a type, by which man was to discern the great Sacrifice which God had prepared; to offer a sacrifice contrary to that, no faith could be exercised, because Redemption was not purchased in that way, nor the power of the Atonement instituted after that order; consequently Cain could have no faith; and whatsoever is not of faith, is sin. But Abel offered an acceptable sacrifice, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God Himself testifying of his gifts. Certainly, the shedding of the blood of a beast could be beneficial to no man, except it was done in imitation, or as a type, or explanation of what was to be offered through the gift of God Himself; and this performance done with an eye looking forward in faith on the power of that great Sacrifice for a remission of sins. But however various may have been, and may be at the present time, the opinions of men respecting the conduct of Abel, and the knowledge which he had on the subject of Atonement, it is evident in our minds, that he was instructed more fully in the plan than what the Bible speaks of, for how could he offer a sacrifice in faith, looking to God for a remission of his sins in the power of the great Atonement, without having been previously instructed in that plan? And further, if he was accepted of God, what were the ordinances performed further than the offering of the firstlings of the flock?

Elder Joseph Fielding Smith: Sacrifice Is to Place All upon the Altar⁸⁹⁵

Sacrifice does not mean that we are to inflict punishment upon ourselves. It does not mean that we are to be persecuted, or to deprive ourselves of comforts and blessings of mortal life, not in the least, but that we are willing to place upon the altar all things, even our lives, for the kingdom of God, and that we will accept in fulness all the principles of the gospel and put them into practice. Sacrifice of the world? Yes, if you want to call it such, and the things of the world, to a concentration of the mind and action upon the things of the kingdom of God.

Elder Lorenzo Snow: Through Sacrifice You Are Proven⁸⁹⁶

The priesthood was bestowed upon you, as upon the Son of God Himself, for no other purpose than that, through sacrifice, you might be proven, that, peradventure, at the last day, you might stand approved before God, and before perfect and holy beings;... it [is] necessary to forget self, and individual aggrandizement, and seek the interest of your brethren.

⁸⁹⁴ Hebrews 9:22.

⁸⁹⁵ J. F. Smith, Jr., Discourse (1925), p. 76.

⁸⁹⁶ L. Snow, 5 April 1877, p. 376.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell: Real Sacrifice⁸⁹⁷

... [R]eal, personal sacrifice never was placing an animal on the altar. Instead, it is a willingness to put the animal in us upon the altar and letting it be consumed! Such is the “sacrifice unto the Lord... of a broken heart and a contrite spirit,”⁸⁹⁸ a prerequisite to taking up the cross, while giving “away all [our] sins” in order to “know God,”⁸⁹⁹ for the denial of self precedes the full acceptance of Him.

Elder Bruce C. Hafen: Sacrifice of a Broken Heart and a Contrite Spirit⁹⁰⁰

To lay claim to the Savior’s sacrifice, we, like Adam and Eve, must also obey and sacrifice. We must bring an offering that in some way approximates his own suffering—the sacrifice of a broken heart and a contrite spirit.⁹⁰¹

The Savior’s completion of His Atonement changed the nature of the law of sacrifice in a way that requires that our hearts be broken. Formerly, the Old Testament’s law of sacrifice required literal animal sacrifices and burnt offerings. But after the Atonement fulfilled the law of Moses, Jesus explained to the Nephites that they should do away with animal sacrifices. Henceforth, He taught that whoever would come unto him with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, He would baptize with fire and with the Holy Ghost.⁹⁰²

Elder James E. Talmage believed that the physiological cause of Christ’s death was, literally, a broken heart.⁹⁰³ This element in our Lord’s sacrifice suggests two differences between animal sacrifices and the sacrifice of a broken heart. First is the difference between offering one of our possessions, such as an animal, and offering our own hearts. Second, one who offers an unblemished animal, the firstling of a flock, acts in similitude of the Father’s sacrifice of his unblemished, firstborn Son. By contrast, one who offers his own broken heart acts in similitude of the Son’s terribly personal sacrifice of Himself. Thus, the figurative breaking of our own hearts, represented by our repentance and our faithful endurance of the mortal crucible—our own taste of a bitter cup—is a self-sacrifice that mirrors the Savior’s own self-sacrifice. He is the Father’s, and we are His. The Father is in Him, and He is in us.⁹⁰⁴ Perhaps, in this sense only, those whose sacrificial attitude resembles His, even if only slightly, are prepared to be endowed with his grace.

In this sacrificial spirit, the righteous Saints who belong to the Holy One of Israel are those who have endured the crosses of the world and despised the shame of it.⁹⁰⁵ These are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God and whose joy shall be full forever.⁹⁰⁶

897 N. A. Maxwell, Deny, p. 68.

898 D&C 59:8.

899 Alma 22:18.

900 B. C. Hafen, Broken, p. 32.

901 See, e.g., D&C 59:8.

902 3 Nephi 9:19-20.

903 J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, ch. 35 n. 8, pp. 620-621. See also W. R. Litchfield, Search.

904 See John 17:21.

905 See Hebrews 12:2, 2 Nephi 9:18.

906 See 2 Nephi 9:18.

Truman G. Madsen: “Partakers of the Divine Nature”⁹⁰⁷

We are taught that by partaking of “things unfit,”⁹⁰⁸ our first parents passed through the doors of mortality and in a measure lost touch with the divine realm. Can we reverse the process by taking of things fit?....

Such progression toward the divine is brought to pass in part through eating—specifically, eating sacramental elements.

One guide to this transformation is clear in Peter’s writings. He speaks of the exceedingly great and precious promises of Christ and says that through the ordinances, we are “partakers of the divine nature”....⁹⁰⁹

Death came to Adam and Eve by eating, we can reverse the blows of death and attain a higher and higher resurrection. Food is not the enemy: food is what we not only need but what we are (“we are what we eat”). And what the Spirit is making of us.

C. S. Lewis: Three Kinds of People⁹¹⁰

There are three kinds of people in the world. The first class is of those who live simply for their own sake and pleasure, regarding Man and Nature as so much raw material to be cut up into whatever shape may serve them... In the second class are those who acknowledge some other claim upon them—the will of God,... or the good of society—and honestly try to pursue their own interests no further than this claim will allow. They try to surrender to the higher claim as much as it demands, like men paying a tax, but hope, like other taxpayers, that what is left over will be enough for them to live on. Their life is divided, like a soldier’s or a schoolboy’s life, into time “on parade” and “off parade,” “in school” and “out of school.” But the third class is of those who can say like St. Paul that for them “to live is Christ.”⁹¹¹ These people have gotten rid of the tiresome business of adjusting the rival claims of Self and God by the simple expedient of rejecting the claims of Self altogether... The will of Christ no longer limits theirs; it is theirs. All their time, in belonging to Him, belongs also to them, for they are His.

C. S. Lewis: No Soul That Constantly Desires Joy Will Miss It⁹¹²

There are only two kinds of people in the end: those who say to God, “Thy will be done,”⁹¹³ and those to whom God says, in the end, “Thy will be done.” All that are in Hell, choose it. Without that self-choice there could be no Hell. No soul that seriously and constantly desires joy will ever miss it. Those who seek find. To those who knock it is opened.⁹¹⁴

Kathleen Flake: Bound for Glory⁹¹⁵

Where I come from, Jesus saves all but those who make a fully-informed choice not to be saved. These few naysayers—so far only one on the record, namely, Judas, who knew 907 T. G. Madsen, Sacrament, p. 147.

908 Cf. J. E. Talmage, Jesus the Christ, 3, p. 18.

909 2 Peter 1:4.

910 C. S. Lewis, Three Kinds, p. 315.

911 Philippians 1:21.

912 C. S. Lewis, Divorce, p. 72; cf. B. Young, 9 November 1856, p. 111; B. Young, 17 February 1861, p. 125.

913 Matthew 6:10, 26:42.

914 See Matthew 7:7.

915 K. Flake, Bound for Glory.

and rejected Jesus⁹¹⁶—go to a place of “outer darkness,”⁹¹⁷ or a habitation without God and, hence, without glory. Everybody else is resurrected to various degrees of glory; their differences measured by the Pauline comparison of sun to moon to stars and all stages of light between.⁹¹⁸ The assignment of a habitation is based not directly on what we’ve done, but on what we want.⁹¹⁹ Or, more accurately, final judgment is based on what we have become through the choices we have made.⁹²⁰ At the moment of judgment, we will have no choice but to be what we most genuinely are.⁹²¹ But, again, the worst that can happen to us in this schema is that we get what we are capable of wanting, though that may not always feel so good, as we know from our earthly experience.

Once one admits a belief in a divine judgment, the question of fairness necessarily arises. Millions never hear of the Christian gospel or are subject to circumstances that give them limited opportunity for moral development. Latter-day Saints believe the playing field is leveled by provision of a two-stage process in the afterlife: the first, called the “spirit world,” allows for further preparation for the second (the degrees of glory), and the demarcation between the two is God’s judgment.⁹²² Those who did not, in mortality, hear of Christ will be taught, and will have the choice of whether to be baptized.⁹²³ In the next world, too, faith is an act of will and is not required for resurrection.⁹²⁴ Once all have had the chance to make an informed decision, they are judged by God and inhabit the degree of glory commensurate with their choice.⁹²⁵

... Final judgment is based on that which humans can never know: the truest desires of the heart as crafted by choice and circumstance, susceptible to healing after death, and always bound for glory.

C. S. Lewis: Turning our Natural Loves into Charity⁹²⁶

The invitation to turn our natural loves into Charity is never lacking. It is provided by those frictions and frustrations that meet us in all of them; unmistakable evidence that (natural) love is not going to be “enough”—unmistakable, unless we are blinded by egotism. When we are, we use them absurdly. “If only I had been more fortunate in my children (that boy gets more like his father every day) I could have loved them perfectly.” But every child is sometimes infuriating; most children are not infrequently odious. “If only my husband were more considerate, less lazy, less extravagant”... “If only my wife had fewer moods and more sense”... “If my father wasn’t so infernally prosy and close-fisted.” But in everyone, and of course in ourselves, there is that which requires forbearance, tolerance, forgiveness. The necessity of practicing these virtues first sets us, forces us, upon the attempt to turn—more strictly, to let God turn—our love into Charity. These frets and rubs are beneficial. It may even be that where there are fewest of them the conversion of natural love is most difficult. When they are plentiful the necessity is as fully satisfied and as little impeded as earthly conditions allow—to see that we must rise when all seems so well already—this may require

916 John 13:21-27, 17:12.

917 Matthew 22:13; D&C 76:43-48; 101:91; 133:76.

918 1 Corinthians 15:40-42; cf. D&C 76:96-98.

919 Alma 41:3; D&C 88:32-33; 137:9.

920 D. H. Oaks, To Become.

921 Alma 12:12-15.

922 Alma 40:11-26.

923 1 Corinthians 15:29; D&C 137:7-10; 138.

924 1 Corinthians 15:22.

925 D&C 88:27-32.

926 C. S. Lewis, Loves, Charity, pp. 186-187.

a subtler conversion and more delicate insight. In this way also it may be hard for “the rich” to enter the Kingdom.

Francis M. Gibbons: President Harold B. Lee and Pure Love⁹²⁷

It was... in Mexico City, at the Sunday morning session, that President Harold B. Lee was first sustained as the president of the Church in a public meeting.... [At] the concluding address of the conference at the end of the Sunday afternoon session...⁹²⁸ he bore a fervent testimony and shared with the audience a sweet experience he had the day after he was ordained as the president of the Church. “As my wife and I kneeled in humble prayer,” he said, “suddenly it seemed as though my mind and heart went out to all three million members throughout the world. I seemed to love every one of them, regardless of their nationality or their color, whether rich or poor or educated or not. I suddenly felt as though they all belonged to me, as though they were all my own brothers and sisters.” In the spirit, the prophet extended his love and blessings to the audience, invoking the Spirit of the Lord to abide with them always.

The depth of feeling this experience and these words evoked are reminiscent of the spirit induced by the remarkable dream President Lee had shortly before the dedication of the Los Angeles Temple. And the overflowing love he felt for all members of the Church, as he kneeled with Sister Lee the morning following his ordination as the president of the Church, seems to have fulfilled the condition for prophetic worthiness defined by President David O. McKay in his prayer dedicating the Los Angeles Temple, which was echoed in President Lee’s vivid dream.⁹²⁹ What [President Lee] did or accomplished during his remarkable career does not define or explain that greatness. It is rather what he was or what he became that does so. That he spearheaded the welfare program, nurtured and shepherded the correlation program, and was the moving force behind the restructuring of the headquarters organizations, are extraordinary achievements, not to be disparaged. But they pale in comparison to the quality of genuine, universal love that at last found lodgement in the mind and heart of this prophet... This quality of love was evident in every aspect of his short tenure as the president of the Church. Those who associated with him, or who heard him speak, were conscious of it and felt its influence.

George F. Gibbs: True Wealth⁹³⁰

How well and truly has it been said, in defining true wealth, that it consisted in the number of things a man loved and blessed, and the number of things that love and bless him... How well it describes the wealth of the Patriarch, the man chosen and ordained of heaven to stand at the head of a numerous family! It was the kind of wealth, because it was the very choicest, that was promised to Abraham after he had been tried and proven. It is the heritage of all good and great men.

Hugh W. Nibley: The Dramatic and the Pragmatic in the Temple⁹³¹

There are two parts to the temple ceremony, the dramatic and the pragmatic... The play is ended by the appearance of heavenly messengers who now bid farewell to the artifice of 927 F. M. Gibbons, Harold B. Lee, pp. 461-463.

928 H. B. Lee, 27 August 1972.

929 See Endnote 5-69, p. 450.

930 E. R. Snow, Lorenzo Snow, p. 473.

931 H. W. Nibley, Drama, pp. 36-37.

the antique theater and engage us in a new type of learning. Everything up to this point has been by way of explaining our position in this world...

But now comes the serious business of our temple. The antique temple drama ends in nothing. The stage lights go out and the house lights go up. Now we must be introduced to the rites and principles that will carry us far beyond this world. We are introduced to special messengers, teachers, and guides and told to pay heed to their counsel, which will continue to lead us on the path of life and salvation. Significantly, those instructions are all in the nature of restrictions and limitations to be set on what could be the exercise of unlimited power through unlimited time. Satan wanted power all for himself: “because that Satan... sought... that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten, I caused that he should be cast down.”⁹³² And so like the Ten Commandments the promises and covenants of the temple seem strangely negative to the vanity and arrogance of men. The first is obedience, the restraint on the individual’s power. The second is restraint on possession of things; the eternal spirit cannot be attached to them—one must be willing to sacrifice. The third puts restraints on personal behavior, it mandates deportment, self-control to make oneself agreeable to all. The fourth is restraint on uncontrolled appetites, desires, and passions, for what could be more crippling on the path of eternal progression than those carnal obsessions which completely take over the mind and body? Finally, the fifth covenant is a limitation on the innate selfishness of the other four—everything you have must be set apart to the everlasting benefit of all.

But we cannot leave it here. Everything about the temple calls for conclusion and a decision; we cannot remain in limbo suspended between the two worlds. Whether we catch a glimpse of the inside of the temple as we approach it from without, or of the outside world once we are inside, they are worlds apart. Latter-day Saint temples have always provided a soothing transition to soften the culture shock, the passing from one existence to another. Gardens of almost unearthly beauty offer an easy and credible passage by sharing the essential qualities of both worlds, “most glorious and beautiful.”

But the wonder is that everything about this experience is real. For seventy-two years I have gone to the temple and listened carefully to everything, and at no time could I say, “There is something wrong here; this is not the way it is!” On the contrary, the lesson is brought home with irresistible force that we do not know everything. There is wonder upon wonder awaiting. What the temple teaches is as real as the temple itself.

Hugh W. Nibley: What Does the Temple Teach Me?⁹³³

When I ask what the temple teaches me, the answer is loud and clear: to control my actions. That is self-discipline and that is what I promise to exercise with every covenant. The law of sacrifice requires me to do things I could more easily not do; the law of the gospel requires self-control in everyday situations, avoiding the same unseemly acts as are condemned in the instructions of the Dead Sea Scrolls, such as laughing too loudly, gossiping, and immodest dress. That chastity is nothing but self-control needs no argument. And the hardest of all, the law of consecration, can only be faced against sore temptation, and still confronts us with unresolved dilemmas. What I promise to do with every covenant is to order my life and, specifically, as it is fully laid out in the book of Moses for all the world to see, to do all that I do in the name of the Son, to “repent and call upon God in the name of the Son

932 Moses 4:3.

933 H. W. Nibley, Sacred, p. 34.

forevermore.”⁹³⁴ Note that the covenant is between me and the Father. I am to order my life, and no one else is to do it for me; the only judge of my behavior is the Father. Only the two of us know how I really qualify in this. We establish our agreement in the temple because it is a house of God. He takes over completely. It is in no sense an ordinary house. This should be borne in mind at all times, even to the forgetting of time and place.

Truman G. Madsen: The Temple Enables Blending of Spirit with Flesh⁹³⁵

The privilege of attending the house of God is in effect to have our physical beings brought into harmony with our spirit personalities... [A] testimony of President Lorenzo Snow [is] to the effect that participating in the temple ceremonies is the only way that the knowledge locked in one’s spirit can become part of this flesh;⁹³⁶ thus occurs that inseparable union, that blending, which makes possible a celestial resurrection. It is as if, if I may mix the figure, we are given in the house of God a patriarchal blessing to every organ and attribute and power of our being, a blessing that is to be fulfilled in this world and the next, keys and insights that can enable us to live a godly life in a very worldly world, protected—yes, even insulated—from the poisons and distortions that are everywhere.

Merlin G. Myers: The Efficacy of the Ordinances⁹³⁷

The efficacy of the ordinances mentioned in [D&C 1:15-23] springs from the fact that they represent eternal realities—the order of heaven. It is in them that the knowledge and power of godliness are manifest to men on earth. They facilitate for man access to these realities and thereby provide divine and sacred paradigms around which man can pattern his life. In the temple there is scarcely a relationship for which a model is not provided—relationships with God, with the earth and its whole web of life, between husband and wife, between parents and children, between siblings, and among men generally. These models or patterns allow us to see the earth, ourselves, and our bodies, with their marvelous creative capacities, as part of a divine order of things transcending the arbitrariness and transience of human arrangements. They allow man to become discretionary about his experiences and to mobilize his capacities with genuine conviction. They also facilitate a sense of community not available otherwise.

Hugh W. Nibley: The Law of Consecration

God has announced that He has a plan to prepare for himself special people and to make His church “independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world.”⁹³⁸ We get as far as the word “independent” and, without reading another syllable farther, declare our resolution to get rich and thereby achieve the independence God wants us all to have.

But if God has a plan, why not let Him tell us what it is, instead of cutting Him off in the middle of a sentence the way Cain did when he saw that God’s plan would interfere with his own plans for getting rich?⁹³⁹

934 Moses 5:8.

935 T. G. Madsen, House, pp. 280-281.

936 See Endnote 5-70, p. 451.

937 M. G. Myers, Kinship, p. 94.

938 D&C 78:14.

939 Moses 5:23-33.

The Lord speaks of the Church's being "independent"—nothing about the individual; and of independence, but only of the powers here below "beneath the celestial world," not of orders from above. He makes it all very clear: It is my plan—not yours!⁹⁴⁰ "It is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine. But it must needs be done in mine own way, . . . that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints."⁹⁴¹ The plan is a heavenly one, given as a special blessing to the elect, God's own people, to set them apart from the rest of the world—there is no human invention about it. But that one word, "independent," is enough to set us off after the way of the world, interposing our own plan right in the middle of the sentence, so that it will look like his, not even bothering to consider what the Lord has in mind. And what do we come up with? Nothing in the world but the old familiar run-of-the-mill capitalism—the world's way after all. Is this what the Lord has been holding in reserve for his people?

"It must needs be done in mine own way," says the Lord, and in the very same sentence gives us as the essence of that plan, "that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low"⁹⁴²—all brought to the same economic level—so that we all have "sufficient for our needs," which is quite enough for anyone. The idea is "that you may be equal in the bonds of heavenly things, yea, and earthly things also. . . . For if ye are not equal in earthly things ye cannot be equal in obtaining heavenly things."⁹⁴³ It is nothing more nor less than a redistribution of the wealth, for "it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another."⁹⁴⁴ As Brigham Young put it, "the underlying principle. . . was that there should be no rich and no poor."⁹⁴⁵

Our difficulty with the law of consecration is a cultural one; since the days of Cain and Abel men have been pulled in two opposite directions, given a choice between two ways, representing what some have called "the mad force of the sun and the wise force of the earth."⁹⁴⁶ The two contrasting cultures may be characterized as stable or stationary on the one hand, and acquisitive or expansive on the other hand—eternal vs. temporary, agrarian vs. hunting, cooperative vs. competitive, contemplative vs. execrated, seeking either wisdom or riches, and so on.⁹⁴⁷ The law of consecration is that of a stable society; the law of the marketplace is that of an expansive, acquisitive, brittle, untrustworthy, predatory society. . . .

But where. . . is the progress [in stable societies], then? Do they progress? It is exciting and marvelous to see progress in the learning experience of each generation. As an unceasing stream of children enter the scene, they must learn it all from the beginning, and for them it is as fresh and new as the world in the Creation, and nothing is more delightful to their elders than to teach them and watch them learn and grow, while the teachers themselves discover wonder upon wonder, more than a lifetime can contain, both in the world around them and in the contemplative depths of their own minds. For these people, who seem to us to be stuck in a rut, the world is always changing, for they move with the miracle of the year and the revolutions of the heavens from one ambience to another. And beauty swallows them up all the time. They revel in it. They have to express themselves in prayer as they go out to their fields or come back. And this is common to all the great civilizations

940 D&C 78:14.

941 D&C 104:15-16.

942 D&C 104:16.

943 D&C 78:5-6.

944 D&C 49:20.

945 H. W. Nibley, Weep, pp. 371-372. I have been unable to find the source for the citation by Brigham Young.

946 See J. Brunhes, Human Geography, p. 7.

947 D&C 6:7.

of the past. To endure long enough to make a contribution, a culture had to be stable. In bad times of world crisis caused by major climatic changes, many were forced to become marauding nomads, the hordes of the steppes, the expansive warriors who made their final camp the capital of the world and sought to spread their empires over all people as their divine calling. Of course, that is the Roman heritage, and our heritage too....

What does every civilization leave behind? What is going to be the net product of our civilization? It's garbage, it's junk. You can see that, and it's mounting. It sounds rhetorical: we have to produce things (expand in producing); then we have to increase consumption, so we have to increase desire for things with advertising flimflam; then we have to consume very fast and discard a great deal, because there is available a new and improved version. So discarding goes on, as Congressman Wright pointed out recently: "The principal exports of the United States today are used packages and scraps." We are impatient of the slow ways of nature. We have to go faster and faster, and the biggest question has become the dumps.

In the last phase of World War II, I was in Heidelberg in the Sixth Army Group, writing up the daily intelligences. I had been there on my mission, and nobody had ever heard of such a thing as a garbage dump in Europe; yet here was a huge garbage dump. You knew the Americans had arrived—the Army. And everywhere the Americans were in occupation were the giant garbage dumps. Since then there have been garbage dumps everywhere; what our civilization leaves behind is garbage. Which is what happens everywhere. Rubble is all we have of any ancient civilization, as far as that goes; it's more sanitary now because it's been oxidized....

What do the other civilizations leave behind, the ones I call the stable ones? The ones after the manner of the old people. They leave themselves behind. Their next generation takes over and carries on. Time means nothing to them. It's an eternal order of the law. The law of consecration is an eternal order. We will just leave ourselves, the culture, behind, without any loss of product. People will have plenty to do and plenty to think of...

Great civilizations like the Egyptian or Greek left magnificent garbage, sometimes great stuff to look at. When Salt Lake City is leveled by a nuclear bomb, what will be left behind? What will future civilizations dig up? What will be worth even looking at or digging up? What will survive? The Lord says, "There is no end to my works or my words."⁹⁴⁸ The civilization survives only on its words. That's what we have from the Greeks, the Egyptians, and the Hebrews. We have the scriptures. We have the Testaments. We have the Book of Mormon. What has survived is a voice from the dust speaking to us; that's all that has survived. We wouldn't even know that that civilization ever existed without the voice from the dust. That which survived is the word.⁹⁴⁹

C. S. Lewis: We Live in an Age of Campaigns⁹⁵⁰

In all previous ages that I can think of, the principal aim of rulers, except at rare and short intervals, was to keep their subjects quiet, to forestall or extinguish widespread excitement and persuade people to attend quietly to their several occupations. And on the whole their subjects agreed with them. They even prayed (in words that sound curiously old-fashioned) to be able to live "a peaceable life in all godliness and honesty" and "pass their time in rest and quietness.” But now the organization of mass excitement seems to be almost the normal organ of political power. We live in an age of “appeals,” “drives,” and “campaigns”....

⁹⁴⁸ Moses 1:4.

⁹⁴⁹ H. W. Nibley, Consecration, pp. 448, 451-452, 483-484.

⁹⁵⁰ C. S. Lewis, Descriptione, pp. 8, 10-11.

[The birth of the machines] lifts us at once into a region of change far above all that we have hitherto considered. For this is parallel to the great changes by which we divide epochs of pre-history. This is on a level with the change from stone to bronze, or from a pastoral to an agricultural economy. It alters Man's place in nature. The theme has been celebrated till we are all sick of it, so I will here say nothing about its economic and social consequences, immeasurable though they are. What concerns us more is its psychological effect. How has it come about that we use the highly emotive word “stagnation,” with all its malodorous and malarial overtones, for what other ages would have called “permanence”? Why does the word “primitive” at once suggest to us clumsiness, inefficiency, barbarity? When our ancestors talked of the primitive church or the primitive purity of our constitution they meant nothing of that sort... Why does “latest” in advertisements mean “best”? ...I submit that what has imposed this climate of opinion so firmly on the human mind is a new archetypal image. It is the image of old machines being superseded by new and better ones. For in the world of machines the new most often really is better and the primitive really is the clumsy. And this image, potent in all our minds, reigns almost without rival in the minds of the uneducated. For to them, after their marriage and the births of their children, the very milestones of life are technical advances. From the old push-bike to the motor-bike and thence to the little car; from gramophone to radio and from radio to television; from the range to the stove; these are the very stages of their pilgrimage. But whether from this cause or from some other, assuredly that approach to life which has left these footprints on our language is the thing that separates us most sharply from our ancestors and whose absence would strike us as most alien if we could return to their world. Conversely, our assumption that everything is provisional and soon to be superseded, that the attainment of goods we have never yet had, rather than the defense and conservation of those we have already, is the cardinal business of life, would most shock and bewilder them if they could visit ours.⁹⁵¹

Hugh W. Nibley: The Lesson of the Sixth Century BCE⁹⁵²

It is not without significance that Lehi counted among his contemporaries not only the greatest first names in science, and art, and politics, and even business—for Croesus belonged to his generation—but the most illustrious religious founders in history. Others are lost in the midst of history, but consider all these: Gautama Buddha, Confucius, Lao Tse, Vardhamana Mahavira (the founder of Jainism), Zarathustra, Pythagoras—all of Lehi's day... The only question has been about Zarathustra...⁹⁵³

... [A]ll these founders and religious men were seekers for light, and whatever degree of success they may have enjoyed, their lives are an eloquent commentary on the unparalleled display of physical, mental, and spiritual energy that renders the century of Lehi unique among all others. It was an unsettled age of big ideas and big projects, and time of individual enterprise and great private fortunes, flourishing precariously under the protection of great rival world powers, everlastingly intriguing and competing for markets and bases. A strange, tense, exciting, and very brief moment of history when everything was with the future. No other moment of history was more favorable for the transplanting of civilizations, so heavily burdened with the heritage of the past, or so rich in promise....

951 See Endnote 5-71, p. 451.

952 H. W. Nibley, Lesson.

953 See Zoroastrian Texts, p. 856.

Here is a lesson for our own times: What would one have said of the future... success [of these efforts]? With so many great men, with such scientific and philosophical brains around, man will have learned all the secrets of nature and brought the Millennium. But let us visit the earth three hundred years later, and what do we find? There have been no great natural calamities, the vast majority of the race have enjoyed almost unbroken peace and security, wars are now being fought by small professional armies, things are pretty safe for other people—but where are the signs of progress we expected? Only in the accumulation of gadgets. There's a marvelous technical development, but it's already showing signs of decline... Gadgets have accumulated but brains have not. The world swarms with PhD's, bright, ambitious men, but there are no great men. For degrees are gadgets, and can be turned-out in any desired amount. Administration has become a fine art by the third century, but thinking has become a lost art. The third century B.C.E. was a world of technicians and educators, but as the educators made their courses easier and easier, the number of competent new technicians being turned-out became less and less. The slogans of "education for living" and "education for success" completely stifled research within two generations of Aristotle, and soon applied research followed suit. Even the modest minimum quota of technicians failed to reproduce itself, and so the amazingly advanced and sophisticated techniques of the ancients, useful and appreciated as they were, were all completely lost. Let that be a lesson for us.

Truman G. Madsen: The Meaning and Power of the Endowment⁹⁵⁴

When I was a graduate student in Los Angeles, California, I attended a meeting presided over by President McKay... [He] gave what I consider one of the greatest discourses ever given on the temple. In shorthand I took down one paragraph that I have quoted over and over. It changed me. This is the summation:

Brothers and sisters, I believe there are few, even temple workers, who comprehend the full meaning and power of the temple endowment. Seen for what it is, it is the step-by-step ascent into the Eternal Presence. If our young people could but glimpse it, it would be the most powerful spiritual motivation of their lives.

I was staying at a cabin a distance away with an aunt who had abandoned the Church. In an earlier conversation, when I asked her how she felt about her previous temple experience, she was disparaging and even hostile.

I approached her with this question, "What do you think of David O. McKay?"

She replied, "I think he's one of the most Christlike men I've ever known of."

I then asked, "Would you be interested in what he said about the temple today?"

She said, "Yes."

And then I quoted the statement... above. After looking at the stars for a while she said to me, "Well maybe if I had listened reverently I might feel the same way."

When people have disparaged the temple ceremony in my hearing, I have often thought of that comment and of President McKay's impressive stature, and I have said to myself, How can anybody believe there is anything evil about temple ordinances when he looks at the prophet? President McKay was a man who had been in the temple every week for fifty years. And it showed.

⁹⁵⁴ T. G. Madsen, Presidents, David O. McKay, pp. 269-270; cf. T. G. Madsen, House, p. 282.

Truman G. Madsen: Giving Our All in Covenant-Making⁹⁵⁵

The temple is a house of covenant-making. I recall in my own earlier days, just before my mission, when I began to understand how deep-reaching and far-reaching these covenants are; I remember shrinking in a way, inwardly, and saying, “I’m not ready... to make that kind of promise.” I am now convinced... that the earlier you can give your whole heart to covenant-making, the greater can be your expectations of the Lord’s blessings. I believe that as long as we say, sometimes dishonestly, “Well, I don’t want to make a promise like that; I’m afraid I couldn’t keep it,” that’s only beginning to get ready to think about anticipating, and it does not bring any strength. It’s when you make a covenant in the presence of witnesses and even in the sense of the presence of God that the heavens begin “to shake for your good”⁹⁵⁶—when you mean it—[that] He promises with absolute conviction and trust in you, “I make the same covenant with you, and I will never break it.”⁹⁵⁷ Ultimately, He asks us to give our all in covenant-making, with the promise that then, and only then, He will give His all in our behalf.⁹⁵⁸ Every blessing that is possible to receive will remain with us and [will continually increase] down the road in greater and greater fulfillment as we live. The... New and Everlasting Covenant centers in His sanctuary, the temple.

Truman G. Madsen: Begotten Through Christ⁹⁵⁹

Today the religious world often speaks of the “twice-born person,” or of being a “born again Christian,” not fully comprehending how complete is His promise to those who come to Him. It is one thing to have faith, and another to have repentance, but in the House of the Lord, His House, He requires of his children an outgoing covenant-making from the heart, and then makes promises, even more inclusive than those that come with the first principles and ordinances. When the Prophet Joseph Smith sent the first Twelve abroad to Britain, one of the instructions he gave is summed up in one sentence. He said, Brethren, “being born again, comes by the Spirit of God through ordinances.”⁹⁶⁰ And all ordinances, therefore, are channels of his Spirit. But the crowning ordinances are those of the Holy Temple. “Being born again, comes by the Spirit of God through ordinances”...

You have all been born as spirit children, and as such have a divine nature. You have now been born of mortal parents, and have been privileged, then, with a body, which is a step forward in your progression, not a step back... We are... to proceed to watch and pray, that it may be developed into the very likeness of our spirits, which are divine, and ultimately, then, to become, as it were, a product of another birth, which is the birth we call Jesus, who becomes, in the process of ordinances, our father. That’s a proper use of the word “father” for Jesus, for he says in [D&C] 93:22, “all those who are begotten through me (through the ordinances) are partakers of the glory of the same (meaning his role as first-born), and are the Church of the Firstborn.” Imagine. He has sacrificed for us in order that we can inherit what He alone could have claimed to be, the first-born. He’s saying, “It will be as if you were [the first-born]; all of the blessings and powers that have been bestowed upon Me are now

955 T. G. Madsen, Foundations, pp. 2-3.

956 D&C 21:6.

957 See D&C 84:40.

958 See D&C 84:38.

959 T. G. Madsen, Foundations, pp. 2, 5-6.

960 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, p. 162; cf. D&C 84:19-22.

transmitted to you, if you are willing to come to Me.” They are “begotten through me” and are “partakers of the glory of the same.”

...[T]here will be another birth ahead of us, and that’s called the resurrection. And then the promise that we can be like him will be literal and complete.

Elder Bruce C. Hafen: A Disciple’s Journey⁹⁶¹

A disciple moves from darkness into light, which increases from the dim light of the stars to the moon and then to the brightness of the sun. Joseph Smith compared these heavenly bodies with the telestial, terrestrial, and celestial kingdoms. As the temple teaches, we can and should move toward that celestial light during mortality. We need not be of the world, even if we must live in the world.

Imagine that two vertical lines separate the stars, moon, and sun into three sections. Each line suggests a major transition as we move from one stage to the next. However, our journey is not rigidly sequential. Our experiences may move us back and forth.

Envision also two circles, each with a center point, located in stage one and in stage three. These circles represent the gravitational pull from the opposing poles of our journey. In the darkness of stage one, he who claims to be the god of this world exerts a constant force to hold us back from moving toward the light. As we cross the first barrier, we will leave the strongest satanic tugging—though he will always try to ensnare us wherever we are in the journey.

Reaching out from the center of light in stage three, Jesus also “entices”⁹⁶² us with a spiritual gravitational pull toward Him. Think of the father of the prodigal son, praying his son home. When the father saw his son coming from afar, the father “had compassion, and ran” to the boy “and fell on his neck, and kissed him.”⁹⁶³

I compare that father to Christ, who is so eager for our return that He comes to meet and strengthen us all along our way. Nephi wrote, “It is by grace that we are saved, after all we can do.”⁹⁶⁴ Christ’s running to us is a vivid symbol of that grace. We talk often in the Church about coming to Christ. Perhaps we should talk more about how Christ also comes to us. No matter where we are on that path, we are never lost to Him. We often sing “Who’s on the Lord’s side? Who?”⁹⁶⁵ Let us also sing “Be still, my soul: The Lord is on thy side.”⁹⁶⁶ We never have more value in the Lord’s sight than when we are feeling completely worthless.

Various terms describe this process. Mormon called a disciple a “true follower” of Christ⁹⁶⁷—one who follows the Son to return to the Father. Moroni said, “Come unto Christ, and be perfected in him.”⁹⁶⁸ Jesus asked, “What manner of men ought ye to be? . . . Even as I am.”⁹⁶⁹

961 B. C. Hafen, Disciple’s Journey, pp. 292-293, 297, 299, 301; cf. B. C. Hafen, Anchored, pp. 10-12, 16-17, 19, 22-23, 30-31.

962 See 2 Nephi 2:16, 9:31; Mosiah 3:19; Helaman 6:26, 7:16; Moroni 7:12-13.

963 Luke 15:20.

964 2 Nephi 25:23.

965 Hymns (1985), #260.

966 Hymns (1985), #124; emphasis added.

967 See Moroni 7:48.

968 Moroni 10:32; cf. v. 33.

969 3 Nephi 27:27.

Our Primary children sing “I’m trying to be like Jesus.”⁹⁷⁰ Whatever we call it, this journey is the gospel’s central concern.

Some non-LDS observers of our Church think we haven’t made this concept very clear. One of them said that while Mormons emphasize “Christ’s dying for humanity,” they don’t go on and “link the Atonement to that part of the [LDS] ‘plan of salvation’ that involves progression toward godhood.”⁹⁷¹ In other words, she thinks we haven’t explained what the Atonement has to do with becoming like Jesus.

Another prominent observer recently chided us for not explaining in a public way what he called our “doctrine of the perfectibility of mankind into divine form.”⁹⁷² In fact, however, the Restoration answers these questions with stunning clarity...

Let’s clarify a point here that we sometimes miss. Some describe the entire spiritual growth process as faith, repentance, baptism, and the Holy Ghost—as if once we’ve received the Holy Ghost, the hard work is done and our exaltation is assured, so long as we don’t do something seriously wrong. “Endure to the end,” we say, as if that means relaxing in some eternal rocking chair.⁹⁷³ God will just reel us in, like a fish hooked on a line. But it’s not quite that simple.

On the contrary, receiving the Holy Ghost marks the beginning of our real spiritual growth, not the end of it.⁹⁷⁴ Baptism and the Holy Ghost only let us enter “in by the gate.”⁹⁷⁵ Then the Holy Ghost leads us along the “strait and narrow path”⁹⁷⁶ of becoming sanctified disciples—not as narrow spectators but by our straining every spiritual muscle, drinking in the power of temple ordinances, and feasting actively on Christ’s words to nourish us in becoming ever more holy.⁹⁷⁷ And the long-term goal of that journey is to become like Him.

Does the Atonement have anything to do with this higher, developmental part of the journey or is it limited to the forgiveness part? Moroni taught that Christ’s grace helps us move well beyond forgiveness toward becoming like Him, or sanctified. He wrote, “Come unto Christ, and be perfected in him.”⁹⁷⁸

So, after weeding out our worldly ways, Christ’s perfecting grace helps us replace those weeds with the divine flowers of Christlike attributes. You might say He wants to plant a garden in us. But we must satisfy certain conditions for this growth to occur, just as we had to satisfy the condition of repentance in order to receive forgiveness....

As we approach the second barrier of sacrifice, we move symbolically from the moon to the sun. All of the moon’s light is reflected from the sun—it is borrowed light.⁹⁷⁹ Heber C. Kimball used to say that when life’s greatest tests come, those who are living on borrowed light—the testimonies of others—will not be able to stand.⁹⁸⁰ We need our own access to the light of the Son.

970 New Songbook, pp. 78-79.

971 J. Shipps, Sojourner, p. 112.

972 N. Feldman, Mormonism.

973 See Endnote 5-72, p. 451.

974 See Endnote 5-73, p. 452.

975 2 Nephi 31:18.

976 2 Nephi 31:19.

977 See 2 Nephi 32:3-6.

978 Moroni 10:32; see also v. 33.

979 See book of Abraham, Facsimile 2, figure 5.

980 O. F. Whitney, Kimball, pp. 446, 450.

Baptism represents the first sacrifice. The temple endowment represents the second sacrifice. The first sacrifice was about breaking out of Satan's orbit. The second one is about breaking fully into Christ's orbit, pulled by His gravitational power. The first sacrifice was mostly about giving up temporal things. The second one is about consecrating ourselves spiritually, holding back nothing. As Elder Maxwell said, the only thing we can give the Lord that He didn't already give us is our own will.⁹⁸¹ Seeking to be meek and lowly, disciples gladly offer God their will. As our children sing, "I feel my Savior's love.... / He knows I will follow him, / Give all my life to him."⁹⁸² And then what happens? In President Benson's words, "When obedience ceases to be an irritant and becomes our quest, in that moment God will endow us with power."⁹⁸³

....[S]anctification is the stage where we are not only with God, but like God—for only those who have become like Him can be with Him. Jesus said, "It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master."⁹⁸⁴ This state of being is the hope, the vision, and the heart of a disciple's journey. Our deepest desire is, in the words of both John and Mormon, that "when he shall appear, we shall be like him."⁹⁸⁵

Being like Him means we possess His divine attributes, such as charity. Do we develop charity by our own power, or is it a gift from God? It is both. In the current BYU vernacular, we must be "fully invested" in Him—as he is fully invested in us. Only then will God "bestow" charity "upon all who are true followers of his Son."⁹⁸⁶ We can't develop a Christlike love by ourselves, but we can do all in our power to become a "true follower"—meek, lowly of heart, and submissive to correction and affliction. Then the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, "filleth" us "with hope and perfect love, which... endureth [forever], when all the saints shall dwell with God."⁹⁸⁷

George Herbert: The Call⁹⁸⁸

Come, my Way, my Truth, my Life:
 Such a Way, as gives us breath:
 Such a Truth, as ends all strife:
 Such a Life, as killeth death.

Come, my Light, my Feast, my Strength:
 Such a Light, as shows a feast:
 Such a Feast, as mends in length:
 Such a Strength, as makes his guest.

Come, my Joy, my Love, my Heart:
 Such a Joy, as none can move:
 Such a Love, as none can part:
 Such a Heart, as joys in love.

981 N. A. Maxwell, Mentor, p. 17.

982 New Songbook, pp. 74-75.

983 Cited in D. L. Staheli, Obedience, p. 82.

984 Matthew 10:25; emphasis added.

985 1 John 3:2; cf. v. 3. See also Moroni 7:48.

986 Moroni 7:48.

987 Moroni 8:26. Elder Hafen's full article includes an extended overview of doctrines relating to man's progress toward perfection.

988 G. Herbert, Temple, 125, p. 163. See Endnote 6-48, p. 507.

Endnotes

5-1 Whitmer had been previously called to assist with the work of translation.⁹⁸⁹

5-2 Reeves elaborates:

Evidence supporting this point can be gathered from both the structural and exegetical scrutiny of the Masoretic text of Genesis. A structural examination swiftly reveals that the stories of Adam and Eve in the Garden and of Cain and Abel form almost perfect mirror-images:

Gen 2:4b-3:24

Adam: 'worker' within Eden
admonished to avoid a type of action
does the action anyway
in association with a woman question/response sequence result: death (mortality) plus curses (including...)
expulsion

Genesis 4:1-16

Cain: 'worker' outside of Eden
admonished to avoid a type of action
does the action anyway possibly over a woman⁹⁹⁰
question/response sequence result: death (murder) plus curses (more than...)
expulsion

While both stories result in the manifestation of death, the deaths depicted are in no way equivalent. The death which results from Adam's disobedience may be a misfortune, but it is presented as a universal, natural, and even inevitable event which will eventually lay claim to all organic life... By contrast, the death introduced by Cain's homicide is a qualitatively different type of demise: it is individually plotted and targeted, and it represents an premature termination of a divinely-ordained determination of lifespan.⁹⁹¹

Gage analyzes parallels between the stories of Adam and Noah and their descendants, seeing "the record of postdiluvian history [being] stylized so as to be essentially a reduplicative chronicle of antediluvian history," with prophetic implications for "general apostasy and cosmic judgment" in the last days.⁹⁹²

5-3 Anderson further explains:

The final editor of the Bible... [links] his account of Creation's beginnings with the end toward which Creation points, although the links are only apparent after the whole story has unfolded. Our own conceptions of Creation are far more scientific in outlook, and we expect Creation stories merely to disclose the rudiments of nature's origins. Not so the ancients. They told Creation stories with the primary purpose of providing a cosmic foundation for the meaning and purpose of human life. Creation of human life could not be understood fully without relating Creation to its appropriate telos or end...⁹⁹³

In between the opening narratives about the creation of human beings and the end toward which this points—the election of Israel at Mt. Sinai—we find a lengthy set of stories about Israel's pre-Sinaitic ancestors. Unlike... myths of origin [from other cultures], the biblical story takes a long time before it discloses its ultimate aim. No doubt this delay is intentional; it allows Israel's appearance in the story—like her election itself—to emerge as a surprise, a completely unexpected event from the perspective of Genesis 1-11....

As scholars have long noted, the building of [the Tabernacle] parallels the creation of the world.... But the point is more profound than that of mere literary parallel. The construction of the Tabernacle is the climax of Creation. At Sinai, God descended to earth and drew Israel to himself. Creation remained unfinished until the day the Tabernacle was completed.⁹⁹⁴

5-4 Sarna notes the recurrence of the heptad as a prominent feature of this chapter: "Tying together these apparently discrete units are notices about the developments in civilization that each contains. These developments number seven in all: agriculture, sheep-breeding, urbanism, pastoralism, music, metallurgy, religion. The symbolic number seven is featured repeatedly: sevenfold vengeance is

989 D&C 26.

990 Ginzburg, accumulates references to this motif in rabbinic, Christian, and Muslim sources (L. Ginzberg, Legends, 5:138-139 n. 17; cf., e.g., E. Isaac, 1 Enoch, 85:3, p. 63; G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 85:3, p. 364; O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 4:1-9, p. 61).

991 J. C. Reeves, Flowing Stream.

992 W. A. Gage, Gospel, pp. 9, 14.

993 Cf. J. E. Faulconer, Incarnation.

994 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 200-202.

invoked;⁹⁹⁵ Lamech is the seventh generation from Adam; his song refers to ‘sevenfold’ and ‘seventy-seven’; the number of souls mentioned in all, from Adam to Lamech’s offspring, is twice seven; and the name Abel appears seven times, as do also the word ‘brother’ and ‘name.’⁹⁹⁶ See also Cassuto’s discussion of numerical symmetries in this chapter which, in addition to other textual arguments, give credence to his view of a “decisive proof of the unity of the section and the completeness of its structure.”⁹⁹⁷

- 5-5 A description of Adam and Eve was given by Zebedee Coltrin who, in company with the Prophet Joseph Smith and others, saw them in vision:

The heavens gradually opened, and they saw a golden throne, on a circular foundation, something like a lighthouse, and on the throne were two aged personages, having white hair, and clothed in white garments. They were the two most beautiful and perfect specimens of mankind he ever saw. Joseph said, “They are our first parents, Adam and Eve.” Adam was a broad-shouldered man, and Eve as a woman, was large in proportion.⁹⁹⁸

In the Apocalypse of Paul, the apostle ascends to heaven where he is introduced to a series of prophets and saints. He also uses the term “beautiful” to describe Adam: “And I looked and saw another who surpassed them all, very beautiful. And I said to the angel: Who is this, my lord? He said to me: This is Adam, the father of you all.”⁹⁹⁹

- 5-6 For summaries of LDS and ancient teachings about Adam, see Bailey, Palmer, and Turner.¹⁰⁰⁰ McConkie and Millet have also published a collection of LDS readings relating to Adam.¹⁰⁰¹

- 5-7 Concerning Genesis 2-3, Brueggemann writes: “It has been assumed that this is a decisive text for the Bible and that it states the premise for all that follows. In fact, this is an exceedingly marginal text. No clear subsequent reference to it is made in the Old Testament, though there are perhaps links in Ezekiel 28.”¹⁰⁰² However, Stordalen rebuts some of the “common scholarly presumptions” that have led to such a view, observing that: “For the unprepared reader..., the apprehension of Genesis 2-3 as a marginal story is bound to be a surprise.”¹⁰⁰³ He cites the many well-documented Old Testament references to themes in these chapters.¹⁰⁰⁴ In addition, he notes long-standing arguments that “motives from the Eden story appear in so-called eschatological passages in prophetic books.”¹⁰⁰⁵ Overall, Stordalen’s exhaustive study provides an impressive refutation of Brueggemann’s thesis.

See Pritchett¹⁰⁰⁶ for a discussion of biblical passages¹⁰⁰⁷ that seem to fit well with Lehi’s preexilic understanding of the Fall. Significantly, three of these four scriptures (Hosea being the exception) “mention the Fall of Adam in close connection with the fall of Satan,” just as 2 Nephi 2, Moses 4, and the Islamic literature do. Pritchett concludes that although “the Old Testament never refers to Adam’s sin by using the word ‘Fall,’ it does teach or reflect the following basic elements of this doctrine in various scriptures: (1) that Adam’s sin resulted in a metamorphosis from immortality to mortality, (2) that mankind inherited its mortal state from Adam, (3) that all mankind has fallen into sin, and (4) that evil and suffering in the world could be for man’s benefit as well as his punishment.”¹⁰⁰⁸

- 5-8 A Coptic text asserts that Satan formerly held this office.¹⁰⁰⁹
- 5-9 Callender cites Job 15:7-9 and 38:4-7 as evidence that Adam was seen anciently as a son of God and a member of the premortal council.¹⁰¹⁰
- 5-10 Roper cites the Book of the Rolls, which “explains that before his fall, ‘Adam was king, priest, and

995 Moses 5:40, 48.

996 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 31.

997 See U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, pp. 190-195.

998 Salt Lake School, p. 45.

999 Apocalypse of Paul, 51, in E. Hennecke et al., NT Apocrypha, 2:795. See descriptions of Seth as “beautiful” in Commentary 6:10-a, p. 482.

1000 A. A. Bailey, LDS Adam; M. J. Palmer, Ancient Adam; R. Turner, Adam.

1001 J. F. McConkie et al., Adam.

1002 W. Brueggemann, Genesis, p. 41.

1003 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 21.

1004 Genesis 13:10; Isaiah 51:3; Ezekiel 28:11-19, 31:1-18, 36:35; Joel 2:3, Proverbs 3:18, 11:30, 13:12, 15:4; and LXX Isaiah 65:22.

1005 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 22.

1006 B. M. Pritchett, Jr., Lehi’s Theology. See 2 Nephi 2.

1007 E.g., Psalm 82:7; Hosea 6:7; Job 31:33; Ezekiel 28:11-19.

1008 B. M. Pritchett, Jr., Lehi’s Theology, p. 77.

1009 See Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575.

1010 D. E. Callender, Adam, pp. 137-160.

prophet.’ After his Fall he is told, ‘Adam! Do not grieve, for I will restore thee to thine inheritance, out of which thy rebellion has brought thee.’ That is, he will be restored as a king and a priest.”¹⁰¹¹ The Clementine Recognitions says that this status was conferred upon Adam through an anointing “from the Tree of Life.”¹⁰¹²

- 5-11 Roper cites a study where “Munoa demonstrates that the enthroned figures of Abel and Adam portrayed in this text are influenced by the descriptions in Daniel chapter 7 and that Adam in the Testament of Abraham should be understood to represent the ancient of days, agreeing with Joseph Smith’s teaching that Adam was the ‘Ancient of Days.’”¹⁰¹³ In addition, Roper notes that Munoa cites “texts which prove that the [exalted] status granted to a figure like Adam could be held by others.”¹⁰¹⁴

- 5-12 See Seaich for an argument that the term “Hebrew” was used as a “code expression” idea of a wanderer on a spiritual journey of “cultic migration” in some strains of Judaism and early Christianity.¹⁰¹⁵

- 5-13 An excellent, though somewhat dated, overview of the extracanonical Adam literature for LDS readers can be found in Robinson.¹⁰¹⁶

- 5-14 Similarly, Stordalen observes:

Within the story world, what happened to Adam and Eve took effect for all their descendants. Not only are these two the ancestors of humankind. They are also typical figures, acting and speaking in ways which disclose human predispositions and character. The Eden story would indeed seem preoccupied with present human existence.¹⁰¹⁷

Speaking more generally about the “timeless unity” of such accounts, Klauck observes that the fact that they are “in principle not bound to any unique historical event makes it easier to conceive of a continual recapitulation of the sequence of events, thereby giving the initiand the possibility of entering into this cyclical sequence.”¹⁰¹⁸

- 5-15 The doctrine of the “Two Ways,” which goes back in its current form at least to the time of the early Christian Didache (ca. 60-150 CE),¹⁰¹⁹ should be distinguished from the metaphysical dualism espoused by, for example, the followers of Mani.¹⁰²⁰

- 5-16 Nibley writes elsewhere:

The test for this life is not for knowledge; it is not for intelligence, or for courage, or for anything like that. That would be a huge joke. None of us knows very much, none of us is very brave, none of us is very strong, none of us is very smart. We would flunk those tests terribly... [There are] two things and the only two things we are good at: we can forgive and we can repent. These are the two things the angels envy us for, as the church fathers said... Of course, that is the whole thing in the Gospel. “Wherefore [the first word to Adam],... thou shalt repent and call upon God in the name of the Son forevermore.”¹⁰²¹ When the Lord came to the Nephites, among his first words to them were these: “This is the gospel, that the Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent.”¹⁰²² This is not a popular doctrine. In my thirty-five years at BYU, I have heard only one sermon (given by Stephen L Richards, incidentally) on repentance. And it was not well-received. “Don’t tell us to repent. Repentance is for the bad guys.” But [all] must repent constantly, each for himself. You can’t repent another person. Ezekiel 38:18-19 defines a righteous man. Who is righteous? Anyone who is repenting. No matter how bad he has been, if he is repenting he is a righteous man. There is hope for him. And no matter how good he has been all his life, if he is not repenting, he is a wicked man. The difference is which way you are facing. The man on the top of the stairs facing down is 1011 M. Roper, Adam; cf. E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 53; Timothy of Alexandria, Abbaton, pp. 198-199.

1012 F. S. Jones, Recognitions, 1.46.1-1.47.1, pp. 77-79.

1013 M. Roper, Adam; cf. P. B. Munoa, Four Powers, ch. 3, pp. 43-81; D&C 27:11, 116:1. See also Commentary 1:34-a, p. 66.

1014 P. B. Munoa, Four Powers, p. 82. See also J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 206-207.

1015 J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 812-817, 870-875.

1016 S. E. Robinson, Book of Adam.

1017 T. Stordalen, Echoes, p. 301.

1018 H.-J. Klauck, Context, p. 89.

1019 B. D. Ehrman, Didache, 1-6, pp. 314-315.

1020 I. Gardner et al., Manichaeism, pp. 182-187; A. Welburn, Mani, pp. 159-168.

1021 Moses 5:8.

1022 3 Nephi 11:32.

much worse off than the man on the bottom step who is facing up. The direction we are facing, that is repentance; and that is what determines whether we are good or bad.¹⁰²³

5-17 “All have fallen,” affirms Nibley, “but how far we fall depends on us.”¹⁰²⁴

5-18 Seaich summarizes literature alluding to the possibility of a temple drama having been presented in the Jerusalem temple.¹⁰²⁵

5-19 Nibley writes elsewhere:

And when Abraham prayed at his altar, “Have mercy, show me, teach me, give to thy servant light and knowledge thou hast promised to send him!” Satan promptly appears on the scene with an insolent “Here I am!” And as he began to teach Abraham, a true messenger from God arrived and cast Satan out and proceeded with the proper instructions.¹⁰²⁶

In Egyptian literature, this same character appears as the “false Horus” “preserved in Spell 312 of the *Coffin Texts*¹⁰²⁷ and the 78th chapter of the Book of the Dead”¹⁰²⁸:

The scene opens with the King as Osiris lying helpless on the lion couch, calling upon the Most High God to deliver him from his plight; in reply to his prayer a Messenger (angel) appears in the form of a hawk¹⁰²⁹ and offers to save him; but the messenger has neither the power nor the authority—he must go up to heaven to get the proper authorization from the Lord of All. While he is away a false Horus—a comic character according to some—appears and boasts of his power and glory, offering to deliver the victim on the couch. A few questions dealing with the mysteries of the veil soon expose him as an ignoramus and a fraud, and the real Horus appears, while a voice from heaven attests his bona fides, and the hero on the bed is delivered.¹⁰³⁰

5-20 Elsewhere Nibley gives the fitting name of “Satan’s Golden Question”¹⁰³¹ to the Devil’s taunting query (“Have you any money?”).

5-21 Nibley notes: “To Moses, [Satan] even claims to be the Son of God;¹⁰³² he speaks only with reverence of the Father as his father.”¹⁰³³

5-22 C. S. Lewis observes:

Milton was right... The choice of every lost soul can be expressed in the words “Better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven.”¹⁰³⁴ There is always something they insist on keeping, even at the price of misery. There is always something they prefer to joy — that is, to reality. [You] see it easily enough in a spoiled child that would sooner miss its play and its supper than say it was sorry and be friends.¹⁰³⁵

5-23 Of Adam’s baptism, Ephrem the Syrian wrote: “In baptism Adam found again / that glory that was among the trees of Eden. / He went down, and received it out of the water; / he put it on, and went up and was adorned therein... Man fell in the midst of Paradise, / and in baptism compassion restored him.... They clothed themselves with leaves of necessity; / but the Merciful had pity on their beauty, / and instead of leaves of trees, / He clothed them with glory in the water.”¹⁰³⁶

Roper cites Mandaean accounts:

1023 H. W. Nibley, Funeral, p. 301.

1024 H. W. Nibley, Patriarchy, p. 93.

1025 J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 809-812.

1026 H. W. Nibley, Prayer Circle, p. 64; see P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 14:9-14, p. 696. About the three messengers, see Figure 5-9, p. 339 and Figure 5-10, p. 340.

1027 R. O. Faulkner, Coffin, Spell 312, pp. 229-233.

1028 R. O. Faulkner et al., Book of the Dead, Spell 78, pp. 74-78.

1029 Cf. book of Abraham Facsimile 1.

1030 H. W. Nibley, The Three Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham, p. 4. See also H. W. Nibley, New Look, August 1969, pp. 76-80; H. W. Nibley, Approach to Abraham, pp. 279-287.

1031 H. W. Nibley, Autobiography, p. xxi.

1032 Moses 1:19.

1033 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, n. 41, p. 21.

1034 Cf. J. Milton, Paradise Lost, 1:261, p. 22.

1035 C. S. Lewis, Divorce, p. 69.

1036 Ephrem the Syrian, Epiphany, 12:1, 4, p. 282.

In Mandaean teaching an Hibil-Ziua,¹⁰³⁷ an uthra or angel was sent from God to teach Adam and baptize him. “This is the baptism wherewith Adam the first man was baptized by Hibil-Ziua.... Any man who has strength thereto and who loveth his soul, let him come and go down into the Jordan, be baptized, receive the pure sign, put on robes of radiant light and set a fresh wreath upon his head.’ And Adam descended into the Jordan and submerged himself thrice.” When Adam came up out of the water the heavenly messenger took him by the right hand. “And he grasped his hand in *kushta*¹⁰³⁸ and seated him before him and recited the sealing prayers.... This is the limit (end) of the baptism which came into this world, the (baptism) wherewith Hibil-Ziua baptized Adam and first man, and it was preserved in the ages for the elect righteous for it was written down in the scroll.”¹⁰³⁹ In Mandaean Book of Adam, called the Ginza, an angel teaches Adam the way back to his heavenly home, “When he [Adam] heard this from him he was overjoyed. He himself had brought him hither and (now) he became his guide to the other world. He undressed him (and) clothed him with his garment, he escorted him, made him ascend, and set him up in the House of the Mighty (Life). He took him by the right hand and put him in charge of his own treasurers.”¹⁰⁴⁰

5-24 The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan recounts the baptisms of Adam and Eve in more specific detail.¹⁰⁴¹ Like earlier accounts, Satan tempts them to leave the water before the required number of days has been accomplished, however the primary thrust of the larger story is that Adam and Eve must stay in the “Cave of Treasures” for forty days.¹⁰⁴²

5-25 In other versions of this story, “the difficulty was darkness: they lost the Paradisiacal light. Outside the Garden, the sun set and when it grew dark, they became afraid. Satan came and promised them that, if they signed a contract... with him, he would bring the light.”¹⁰⁴³

In the Armenian Expulsion of Adam from the Garden text, Adam promises to Satan: “Until the unbegotten is born and the immortal dies, we and all our offspring will be your servants.”¹⁰⁴⁴ These seemingly impossible conditions are, of course, fulfilled in Christ who, in the most common versions of the story, is portrayed at his baptism as treading underfoot the serpents guarding the contract in the Jordan River.¹⁰⁴⁵ In other versions, the cheirograph is torn during Christ’s descent into Hades/Limbo—depictions of the event sometimes show one half of it remaining in Christ’s hand and the other in Satan’s. (Sometimes a scroll is shown in Christ’s hand as he descends—this object perhaps representing a conflation of the cheirograph with the idea of a written gospel that He was to preach to the dead.¹⁰⁴⁶) Not infrequently, the accounts of the Christ’s baptism and his descent into the realm of the dead are combined in some fashion.¹⁰⁴⁷

5-26 The Devil’s assertion that he owns the earth echoes Luke’s account of Satan’s promise to give Jesus the power and kingdoms of the world “for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.”¹⁰⁴⁸ In turn, as Kelly observes,¹⁰⁴⁹ these words seem to be a mocking imitation of the Lord’s statement to Jeremiah about His right to give the Earth to King Nebuchadnezzar: “I have made the earth... by my great power... and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me.”¹⁰⁵⁰

Kass cites Rousseau on the inherently “audacious and self-assertive” nature of any man who presumes ownership of the land:

The first man who, having enclosed a piece of ground, to whom it occurred to say this is mine and found people sufficiently simple to believe him, was the true founder of civil society. How many crimes, wars, murders, how many miseries and horrors Mankind would have been spared by him

1037 Literally, Abel Splendor

1038 I.e., truth—an exchange of right hands in a truthful oath.

1039 E. S. Drower, Prayerbook, pp. 28-32.

1040 M. Roper, Adam. See W. Foerster, Gnosis, GL 18:1, pp. 201-202.

1041 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:1, pp. 1-2; 1:32-33, pp. 34-36.

1042 Ibid., 1:59, pp. 66-67. For an Islamic account of the baptism of Adam and Eve, see M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 61.

1043 M. E. Stone, Legend, p. 150; cf. J. Goldin, Fathers, 1, p. 14; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:11-16, pp. 12-18. See Commentary 5:4-c, p. 357.

1044 W. L. Lipscomb, Expulsion, 19, p. 139.

1045 M. E. Stone, Adam’s Contract, pp. 22-24, 54-57.

1046 1 Peter 4:6.

1047 M. E. Stone, Adam’s Contract, pp. 59-62. See Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

1048 Luke 4:6.

1049 H. A. Kelly, Satan, pp. 96-97.

1050 Jeremiah 27:5; cf. L. C. L. Brenton, Septuagint, Jeremiah 34:5, p. 947.

who, pulling up the stakes or filling in the ditch, had cried out to his kind: Beware of listening to this imposter; you are lost if you forget that the fruits are everyone's and the Earth's no one's...¹⁰⁵¹

See also Rousseau's discussions of the mental prerequisites for agriculture, the connection of farming and metallurgy, and the link between landed property and the first rules of justice, as well as the contributions of property to vanity, inequality, domination, and war.¹⁰⁵²

- 5-27 For a summary of a variant on the legend of the cheirograph where the agreement takes a somewhat different form, see Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

- 5-28 The two events, of course, paralleled each other: Christ's death, descent into the world of spirits, and resurrection were prefigured by His going down into and coming up from the water at His baptism.¹⁰⁵³

- 5-29 The translator comments that the royal purple constitutes "His attribute of mercy. The purple is said to be the place in which the names of martyrs are inscribed."¹⁰⁵⁴

- 5-30 Elder Hafen sees the doctrines of justice and mercy as offering:

... an analogy for the coming together of the masculine and the feminine. In his great discourse on justice and mercy, Alma describes justice as masculine and mercy as feminine: "Justice exerciseth all his demands, and also mercy claimeth all which is her own; and thus, none but the truly penitent are saved."¹⁰⁵⁵ This does not mean that women are not just, nor that men are not merciful. But in the masculine sense of justice and the feminine sense of mercy, we see interdependent principles that are reconciled by the higher unifying power of the Atonement. Here is perhaps a type of the way a husband and wife are unified by the combined male and female elements of a higher divine nature.¹⁰⁵⁶

- 5-31 An old Jewish parable about justice and mercy deftly addresses the dilemma of how to simultaneously combine the attributes of Justice and Mercy:

[A] king had two cups, and pondered that if he poured hot liquid into them they would crack, whereas if he poured cold liquid into them they would contract. Neither solution was just right, and so he determined to mix the two fluids, "and (the cups) stood (firm)." The implication of this parable is then drawn for the case at hand, and a mythic narrative is presented whereby the Holy One ponders at the problem of Creation. "If I create the world with the Attribute of Mercy, sins will multiply; (whereas if I do so) with the Attribute of Judgment, the world will not last. The only thing is for Me to create it with both attributes—and would that it might stand fast!"¹⁰⁵⁷

- 5-32 Widely-varying conceptions of the Atonement have been formulated over the past centuries. However, this parable should not be interpreted as an effort to advance theological arguments about its doctrinal specifics.

- 5-33 For one to become a son of perdition, taught the Prophet Joseph Smith: "He has got to say that the sun does not shine while he sees it; he has got to deny Jesus Christ when the heavens have been opened unto him."¹⁰⁵⁸

Said President Brigham Young: "Cain conversed with his God every day, and knew all about the plan of creating this earth, for his father told him. But, for the want of humility, and through jealousy, and an anxiety to possess the kingdom, and to have the whole of it under his own control, and not allow anybody else the right to say one word, what did he do? He killed his brother. Then the Lord put a mark on him."¹⁰⁵⁹

- 5-34 Of Titian, one source asserts that:

1051 J.-J. Rousseau, Inequality, 2:1, p. 170.

1052 Ibid., 1:22, pp. 151-152; 2:19-29, pp. 177-182; cf. L. R. Kass, Wisdom, p. 130 n. 10; Commentary 5:17-c, p. 370.

1053 See Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42 and 1:24-a, p. 59.

1054 W. G. Braude, Rabbati, p. 784n. 5.

1055 Alma 42:24, emphasis is Elder Hafen's.

1056 B. C. Hafen, Covenant, p. 177.

1057 M. Fishbane, Myth, pp. 100-101; cf. J. Neusner, Genesis Rabbah 1, 12:15, pp. 136-137; 13:3, pp. 133-134.

1058 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 7 April 1844, p. 358. See M. B. Brown, Plan, pp. 38, 50-51 for additional discussion.

1059 B. Young, 3 December 1854, pp. 142-143.

... the general verdict has been that he is the greatest of painters, considered technically... [He] may properly be regarded as the greatest manipulator of paint in relation to color, tone, luminosity, richness, texture, surface and harmony, and with a view to the production of a pictorial whole conveying to the eye a true, dignified and beautiful impression of its general subject matter and of the objects of sense which form its constituent parts. In this sense Titian has never been deposed from his sovereignty in painting, nor can one forecast the time in which he will be deposed... Titian is a painter who by wondrous magic of genius and of art satisfies the eye, and through the eye the feelings — sometimes the mind.¹⁰⁶⁰

- 5-35 In the spring of 1836, Elder David W. Patten is said to have encountered Cain as a wanderer in rural Tennessee.¹⁰⁶¹ Reported secondhand several decades after the fact in a letter by Abraham O. Smoot to President Joseph F. Smith, there are several reasons to question the reliability of the account.¹⁰⁶²

- 5-36 Like the book of Moses—and unlike Genesis—the Qur'an specifically highlights the need for revelation to guide mankind after the Fall. Seeing “the sending of Divine Revelation” as an “act of Divine mercy,”¹⁰⁶³ Qur'an 2:38 reads:

“Get you down hence, all,” We said. “When my guidance is revealed to you, those that follow My guidance shall have nothing to fear or to regret.”¹⁰⁶⁴

Of the closing words of this section, Ali comments that this statement is:

... a general law that Divine Revelation will be granted to the whole of humanity and prophets will appear everywhere from time to time, and that it would be by following the Guidance sent by God through His prophets that men will attain to perfection. This state of perfection is described as a state in which “no fear shall come upon them, nor shall they grieve.” The man who truly follows the Divine Revelation shall have no fear of the Devil misleading him, for he has subjugated his devil, nor shall he grieve that he wasted the opportunity given him in this life, for he turned it to the best use.¹⁰⁶⁵

- 5-37 Nibley discusses the theme of the “three men in white” elsewhere.¹⁰⁶⁶ His endnote cites Widengren¹⁰⁶⁷ and al-Tha’labi.¹⁰⁶⁸ Then he writes: “According to one Mandaean text, these men later lived on the earth as apostles”¹⁰⁶⁹—regrettably without giving details on the Mandaean text to which he is referring. Nibley further alludes to the same theme elsewhere, though the footnotes in some instances are also insufficient:

We read of another team of three men: “When Adam called upon God, the Great Spirit sent them from the land of brightness, those who would belong to the twelve.”¹⁰⁷⁰ So at one time three of the apostles were sent down. These were the three, the pillars of the Church as described later in the New Testament in Galatians 2:9—Peter, James, and John.¹⁰⁷¹ Whenever that expression is used—“The three who belonged to the twelve”—it means Peter, James, and John, who were hidden within the veil of light (Goodenough shows who they were¹⁰⁷²). The three Sent Ones in another account are Michael, Raphael, and Gabriel.¹⁰⁷³ But if you go to the same account in the earlier Greek version, they are the Father, Michael, and the angels, when Jesus says, “I will come, and my Father, and Michael.” So it’s Elohim, Jehovah, and Michael (and all the angels); this is the highest committee.¹⁰⁷⁴

1060 Titian.

1061 L. A. W. Wilson, Patten, p. 50.

1062 A. Allred, Traditions, pp. 38-39.

1063 M. M. Ali, Qur'an, fn. 57, p. 19.

1064 N. J. Dawood, Koran, 2:38, pp. 13-14.

1065 M. M. Ali, Qur'an, p. 21 n. 66a.

1066 E.g., H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 155-156.

1067 G. Widengren, Mandäer, p. 86.

1068 Perhaps corresponding to the reference to three angels accompanying Adam in A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 47.

1069 H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 460-461 n. 47.

1070 Presumably the same Mandaean text referred to above (Ginza Rba?), but again no details allowing an identification of the source are given; cf. p. 308.

1071 Cf. Matthew 17:1.

1072 See, presumably, E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, 9:165-174, 10:95-97, 11:334.

1073 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 29-31, pp. 31-33.

1074 H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 303; cf. H. W. Nibley, Rediscovery, fig. 47, p. 239 which was originally published in E. R. Goodenough, Dura Symbolism, 11:334.

Roper,¹⁰⁷⁵ summarizing the frequently cited Mandaean idea that identifies these messengers with Abel, Seth, and Enos/Enosh, writes as follows:

... three angels are... found in the Mandaean Adam and Eve stories, where Manda d-Hiia, a kind of angelic Redeemer figure, sends three kingly angelic messengers, called uthras to teach Adam and Eve the rituals which are necessary for this life and which will help them to ascend back to the place where God the “Great Life” dwells. Kurt Rudolph notes that the fundamental mission of these messengers of light [is] to “instruct the faithful and redeem their souls.”¹⁰⁷⁶ The leader Manda d-Hiia, whose name means the “Son of the Life” and who personifies redemptive knowledge, oversees the activities of the three, who in Mandaean traditions are called Hibil, Sital, and Anos.¹⁰⁷⁷ These three function under his direction and are said to have appeared to Adam and other notable prophet figures of the past to reveal saving knowledge and sacred Mandaean rituals. “[W]ith a single exception we find no cases in which the messengers of light appear in a historical setting.” “They are,” to quote [Rudolph] “mythological figures who appear in particular generations and merely repeat the ‘primeval revelation’ made to Adam.”¹⁰⁷⁸ They reveal to each generation, what was first and originally revealed to Adam in the beginning.

In the Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan, the Lord sends three angels, Michael, Gabriel, and Raphael to Adam and bestow upon him gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh, which Christ taught them were symbolic of God’s kingship, suffering and death.¹⁰⁷⁹ Later, in one of his many attempts to deceive Adam, Satan and two other devils disguise themselves as angels of God in imitation of the three holy angels who had previously brought Adam these gifts. On this occasion Adam incorrectly believed that these three were the same angels who visited him before. “Because, when they came to Adam the first time, there came upon him from them, peace and joy, through their bringing him good tokens; so Adam thought that they were come a second time to give him other tokens for him to rejoice withal.... So when Adam heard these words he believed them, and said to these angels, ‘Speak the word of God, that I may receive it.’ And Satan said unto him, ‘Swear, and promise me that thou wilt receive it.’ Then Adam said, ‘I know not how to swear and promise.’ And Satan said to him, ‘Hold out thy hand, and put it inside my hand.’” Then Adam held out his hand, and put it into Satan’s hand. In this story, Adam and Eve are not married yet. So when Satan commands Adam to have sexual relations with Eve, Adam realizes that these are not angels from God and says, “But God never spoke the words thou hast told me; and ye are not God’s angels, nor yet sent from Him. But ye are devils, come to me under the false appearance of angels. Away from me; ye cursed of God!” And those devils fled from before Adam.”¹⁰⁸⁰

On several occasions, Wilford Woodruff described three unnamed angelic messengers dressed in white who protected him from the power of the Adversary.¹⁰⁸¹

5-38 Zlotowitz summarizes the teachings of the sages on this point:¹⁰⁸²

Rav Chama¹⁰⁸³ taught that it was the third day after Abraham’s circumcision [the third day after an operation being the most painful for adults...] and God came and inquired after his welfare....¹⁰⁸⁴

1075 M. Roper, Adam.

1076 K. Rudolph, Coptic, p. 136.

1077 Abel, Seth, and Enos/Enosh.

1078 W. Foerster, Gnosis, p. 137.

1079 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 29-31, pp. 31-33. See Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations: The Cave of Treasures, p. 669.

1080 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 70-71, pp. 84-87. See also ibid., p. 211 n. 13: “... three pure Genii—Aebel, Anush, and Shetel [Abel, Enos/Enosh, Seth] were given [Adam] for companions...”

1081 W. Woodruff, Journal, 18 October 1840, 1:532; W. Woodruff, Angels 1889, p. 218; W. Woodruff, Angels 1896, p. 236; W. Woodruff, Moses Thatcher, p. 199; W. Woodruff, Life, 18 October 1840, p. 130. For other discussions of such messengers, see S. K. Brown, Nag Hammadi, p. 260; A. L. Gaskill, Lost, pp. 300-306; G. W. MacRae, Adam 1983, 2:1-2, p. 712; H. W. Nibley, Since, pp. 155-156; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 19, p. 233; S. E. Robinson, Apocalypse of Adam, 65:24-32, pp. 7-8, 11. See also Commentary 3:21-a, p. 180, and 5:6-b, p. 360.

1082 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 18:1-2, p. 624.

1083 Bava Metzia, 86b, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 18:1-2, p. 624.

1084 “The general practice is not to visit the sick until the third day of their illness” (Nachalas Yaakov in Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 18:1, 2:174).

Rashi states in general terms “to visit the sick” rather than more specifically “to visit him,” because..., God meant to establish a general precedent for man to emulate. Had Rashi stated that it was specifically to visit Abraham in his sickness, then people might be misled to construe that only the righteous ill are to be visited.

... God visited the convalescing Abraham to signify Divine approval of his compliance with God’s command; the revelation itself constituting the reward for his obedience.

5-39 On the purported significations of the heat of the sun that day, see Matt and Zlotowitz.¹⁰⁸⁵

5-40 Mizrahi notes: “The sick normally stay indoors. Abraham went outdoors so that he could offer hospitality to passing travelers.”¹⁰⁸⁶

5-41 Zlotowitz cites Ramban’s observation: “In the literal sense, the Torah mentions that Abraham was sitting by the door of his tent to inform us that Abraham had not expected a prophetic vision. He had neither ‘fallen on his face’ [to make himself fit to receive prophecy,] nor was he engaged in prayer; it came upon him unexpectedly as a sign of favor...”¹⁰⁸⁷

Legend further recounts that Abraham was sitting under the paradisiacal oak of Mamre when he received the visit of the three strangers. Sometimes identified with the Tree of Life, the oak was reputed to possess healing properties and powers that ultimately enabled Abraham to “rectify the world” in his day.¹⁰⁸⁸ Traditions speak of a nearby altar where ritual meals, offerings, and the receipt of divine oracles and revelations could take place.¹⁰⁸⁹ Religious devotions performed in such settings were an approved necessity in nomadic times, but were later condemned when they became a distorted substitute for temple worship.¹⁰⁹⁰

Three sites in the vicinity of Hebron have been associated with the location of Abraham’s tree. One of these locations, venerated since the beginning of the Middle Ages and located near the site the church of the Holy Trinity Monastery (Moskabia) built in 1871, is kept by the Russian Orthodox Church. Located about 1 km. west of the bypass road, it was the subject of contention among the Palestinians and two different factions of the Russian Orthodox Church from 1997-2007.¹⁰⁹¹ Israel Abrahams gave the following description of the site in 1912:

Abraham’s Oak¹⁰⁹² is still shown at Hebron, and one can well imagine how it was thought that this magnificent terebinth dated from Bible times. A few years ago it was a fresh, vigorous giant, but now it is quite decayed. The ruin began in 1853, when a large branch was broken off by the weight of the snow. Twelve years ago the Russian Archimandrite of Jerusalem purchased the land on which the tree stands, and naturally he took much care of the relic. In fact, he took too much care, for some people think that the low wall which the Russians erected as a safeguard round the Oak, has been the cause of the rapid decay that has since set in. Year by year the branches have dropped off, the snow and the lightning have had their victims. It is said that only two or three years ago one branch towards the East was still living, but when I saw it, the trunk was bare and bark-less, full of little worm-holes, and quite without a spark of vitality...

Abrahams’ description still fits what I found in a visit to the site in May 2008.

Sites identified with the oak of Mamre at an earlier date include Jebel er-Rumeide and Ramet el-Khalil.¹⁰⁹³ At the latter location, poorly preserved Herodian, Roman, and Byzantine ruins can be seen, as well as signs of towers and walls from the Davidic kingdom and the early monarchy.¹⁰⁹⁴ About the site, Wilkinson writes:

1085 D. C. Matt, Zohar I, Be-Reshit 1:21b, p. 162; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 18:1, pp. 126-127.

1086 Sifsei Chachomim, cited in Rashi, Genesis Commentary, 18:1, 2:174.

1087 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, 18:1, p. 626.

1088 D. E. Callender, Adam, pp. 43ff; L. Ginzberg, Legends, 5:235 n. 137; H. Schwartz, Tree, 519, pp. 404-405. See also Excursus 45: Impact of the “Black Death” on Art and Literature, p. 640.

1089 T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 125-126.

1090 Ibid., pp. 122-136. See, e.g., Deuteronomy 12:2; Isaiah 1:29; Hosea 4:13; cf. D&C 124:30. Other OT mentions of oaks possibly associated with a cultic function include Genesis 35:4; Judges 9:6, 37; 1 Samuel 10:3.

1091 Russian Orthodox Church Outside Russia.

1092 Balut es-Sebat = Oak of Rest.

1093 = Arabic “the high place of the Friend,” i.e., Abraham; cf. Hebrew “Hebron” from haver = friend.

1094 C. Umhau Wolf, cited in Eusebius, Onomasticon, Section A, n. 5; Mamre.

The terebinth was reported by Josephus, to be very large, and to have been planted at the Creation of the world.¹⁰⁹⁵ Eusebius, while saying that it was still to be seen, told how the Gentiles worshipped it, and tells how Eutropia in reaction persuaded her son-in-law Constantine to build a Christian basilica there.¹⁰⁹⁶ The emperor said it was suitable for Christians to honor the place where Abraham entertained “two angels and the Savior.” The existing site was a courtyard and a well, and Constantine added a small church at the eastern end.¹⁰⁹⁷

See a drawing of the general plan of the church in the writings of Egeria.¹⁰⁹⁸ The account of the Bordeaux Pilgrim’s visit is included in Egeria, Travels, 599, pp. 33-34. The site is located about 400 meters from the Glass Junction.¹⁰⁹⁹

- 5-42 Clark adduces evidence that the senior one of these translated beings was Melchizedek, “who now resided in Enoch’s translated city of Zion.”¹¹⁰⁰

- 5-43 It would be impossible to keep the covenant made at baptism without divine help. Thus, as part of confirmation, the newly-baptized are given the Gift of the Holy Ghost. Explains Riddle: “The immediate reward to the covenanter [following baptism]... is that hands are then laid upon the person’s head, he is blessed with the right to the constant companionship of the Holy Spirit, and he is commanded to receive that companionship unto himself. Only with the help received through that constant companionship can any individual keep the promises made in the waters of baptism.”¹¹⁰¹ The purpose of the process of sanctification is to gradually endow the individual with the strength needed to fully resist temptation and to embrace holiness.¹¹⁰²

In his analysis of the use of the word “confirm” in the early days of the Restoration, Underwood reminds us that:

... other translations of the Greek word episterizo, rendered “confirming” in the King James Version, include “strengthening,” “establishing,” and “consolidating.” This hints at a richer understanding of the term “confirm” in the 1830s. To confirm someone was more than to ceremonially affirm their membership in the church. The link with an NT-based Christian discourse suggests that the 1830s usage retained the rich original connotation of confirmation as a means of spiritually strengthening and establishing the Saints through the conferral of the Holy Ghost. What happened when hands were laid on the head of a newly baptized convert was not the bestowal of two separate gifts (formal membership status and the gift of the Holy Ghost), but rather a single gift, which was expected to open the door to spiritual strength and stability.¹¹⁰³

- 5-44 Seeing the “pangs of hunger” of Adam and Eve, the Father is recorded in a Coptic text as saying to the Son:

“If Thou art moved with compassion for the man whom We have created, and who has rejected My commandment, go Thou and give him Thine own flesh and let him eat thereof, for it is Thou Who has made Thyself his advocate.” Then our Lord took a little piece of the flesh of His divine side, and rubbed it down into small pieces, and showed them to His Father. When God saw them He said to His Son, “Wait and I will give Thee some of My own flesh, which is invisible.” Then God took a portion of His own body, and made it into a grain of wheat, and He sealed the grain in the middle with the seal wherewith He sealed the worlds of light, and then gave it to our Lord and told Him to give it to Michael, the archangel,¹¹⁰⁴ who was to give it to Adam and teach him how to sow and reap it. Michael found Adam by the Jordan, who as he had eaten nothing for eight days was crying to God for food, and as soon as Adam received the grain of wheat, he ceased to cry out, and became strong, and his descendants have lived on wheat ever since. Water, wheat and the throne of God “are the equals of the Son of God.”¹¹⁰⁵

1095 F. Josephus, Wars, 4:9:7, p. 542.

1096 Eusebius, Onomasticon, s.v., Arbo and s.v. Drus; Eusebius, Constantine (1890), 3:51-53, pp. 533-534.

1097 J. Wilkinson, in Egeria, Travels, p. 22.

1098 Egeria, Travels, p. 23.

1099 Hebron: Historical background.

1100 E. D. Clark, Blessings, p. 173.

1101 C. C. Riddle, New, p. 231.

1102 See Excursus 26: Justification and Sanctification, p. 596.

1103 G. Underwood, Discourse, p. 33.

1104 Note the theme of delegation from the Father to the Son, then to Michael, and, finally, to His representative on earth.

1105 E. A. W. Budge, Coptic Apocrypha, cited in E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 18-19 n. 1. See also Commentary 3:9-i, p.

An Ethiopian source asserts that the Tree of Life “is the Body of Christ which none of the Seraphim touch without reverent awe.”¹¹⁰⁶ Note that the Egyptian Osiris was thought to have introduced wheat and the vine to mankind, and also saw wheat grains as having been formed from his body.

- 5-45 The book of Moses draws comparisons between natural birth and spiritual rebirth in the context of Enoch’s sermon describing the forgiveness and baptism of Adam. However the later reference to “the words of eternal life”¹¹⁰⁷ implies that additional ordinances were necessary to complete the process of sanctification: “inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water, and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul, even so ye must be born again into the kingdom of heaven of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin, and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, even immortal glory.”¹¹⁰⁸
- 5-46 Vladimir Lossky, an Orthodox theologian, expressed a similar thought when he wrote: “In effect, the revealed truth is not a dead letter but a living Word; it can be attained only in the church, through initiation by the ‘mysteries’ or sacraments into the ‘mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints.’”¹¹⁰⁹
- 5-47 The Prophet Joseph Smith made this remark in the context of his description of giving the fulness of temple ordinances for the first time to a select few in Nauvoo:
- ... instructing them in the principles and order of the Priesthood, attending to washings, anointings, endowments, and the communication of keys pertaining to the Aaronic Priesthood, and so on to the highest order of the Melchizedek Priesthood, setting forth the order pertaining to the Ancient of Days, and all those plans and principles by which any one is enabled to secure the fulness of those blessings which have been prepared for the Church of the First Born, and come up and abide in the presence of the Eloheim in the eternal worlds. In this council was instituted the ancient order of things for the first time in these last days. And the communications I made to this council were of things spiritual, and to be received only by the spiritual minded: and there was nothing made known to these men but what will be made known to all the Saints of the last days, so soon as they are prepared to receive, and a proper place is prepared to communicate them...¹¹¹⁰
- 5-48 An Islamic source describes how the earthly temple, in direct communication with the throne of God, was given to Adam and Eve to restore the access to the presence of God that they had lost upon their expulsion from Eden:

And when Allāh was now about to withdraw his presence for the whole of this life from Adam, the latter uttered so loud a cry, that the whole earth shook to its foundations: the All-merciful there-upon extended his clemency, and said, “Follow yonder cloud; it shall lead thee to the place which lies directly opposite my heavenly throne; build me a temple there, and when thou walkest around it, I shall be as near to thee as to the angels which encompass my throne!”¹¹¹¹

Lundquist explains “the intimate relationship” between “the role of covenant and law in ancient Israel” and the temple:

[O]rder cannot exist, the earth cannot be made cosmic, society cannot function properly, law cannot be decreed, except in a temple established on earth that is the authentic and divinely revealed counterpart of a heavenly prototype.¹¹¹² As J. Z. Smith has written so cogently for the Enuma Elish, it is “not so much a cosmogony as it is the myth of the creation of a temple.” It is the creation of the temple, with its cosmic overtones, that founds and legitimizes the state or the society, which, in turn, makes possible the promulgation of law. Once promulgated in the ritual manner described, the law serves as the text of a covenant process carried out in front of the temple’s pillars [representing “the ubiquitous trees of life that flank temple entrances and that border scenes of temple ritual,”¹¹¹³] accompanied by animal sacrifice and a communal meal. All these features, 168, 4:25-a, p. 272, 5:2-a, p. 354, and Excursus 42: Nebuchadnezzar’s “Fall,” p. 632. Cf. D&C 89:17.

1106 B. Mikael, Book, p. 26.

1107 Cf. John 6:68, 17:8. See also book of Abraham, Facsimile 2, Figure 7.

1108 Moses 6:59.

1109 L. Ouspensky et al., Icons, p. 13; see Colossians 1:26.

1110 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 4 May 1842, p. 237.

1111 G. Weil, Legends, pp. 40-41.

1112 E.g., Isaiah 2:3.

1113 J. M. Lundquist, Temple, Covenant, and Law, p. 300; cf. T. Stordalen, Echoes, pp. 120-122.

so characteristic of ancient Near Eastern temple practice from earliest times, are embedded within the earliest traditions of Late Bronze Age community formation in biblical Israel.¹¹¹⁴

- 5-49 Brown sees traces of ritual instruction in some of the Nag Hammadi texts: “For instance, one notes the strictly dialogue character of the Gospel of Thomas. It is a rather simple step to suggest that the dialogue may well have been memorized by one or more participants and then recited in front of a live audience as a means of teaching. Examples could be multiplied.”¹¹¹⁵

- 5-50 Welch defines as a “temple text”:

... one that contains the most sacred teachings of the plan of salvation that are not to be shared indiscriminately, and that ordains or otherwise conveys divine powers through ceremonial or symbolic means, together with commandments received by sacred oaths that allow the recipient to stand ritually in the presence of God. Several such texts are found in the Book of Mormon. In addition to the text of Ether 1-4 regarding the brother of Jared, the most notable are Jacob’s speech in 2 Nephi 6-10, Benjamin’s speech in Mosiah 1-6, Alma’s words in Alma 12-13, and Jesus’ teachings in 3 Nephi 11-18.¹¹¹⁶

Nibley also analyzed a portion of the Joseph Smith Papyri as a temple text.¹¹¹⁷

- 5-51 The recurrent thread of stories in these chapters of those who “hearkened not” could, of course, serve as a fitting counterpoint to the examples of those who kept their covenants.¹¹¹⁸

- 5-52 Welch sees similar themes:

... in the book of Leviticus, regarded by Jews as the most sacred of the five books of Moses. Its main concerns are implementing the law of sacrifice,¹¹¹⁹ bestowing the priesthood,¹¹²⁰ assuring purity,¹¹²¹ holy living and loving one’s neighbor,¹¹²² defining chastity,¹¹²³ hallowing the sabbath days,¹¹²⁴ eschewing blasphemy,¹¹²⁵ and caring for the poor and consecrating property to the Lord.¹¹²⁶ Not being steeped in the ethical and spiritual dimensions of the law of Moses, modern LDS readers tend to overlook the profound religious legacy of these underlying purposes of the law that have enduring relevance to the temple.¹¹²⁷

Nibley describes the sequence of rites and covenants as follows:

To organize a race of priests in ancient as in modern days, God processed all volunteers by a series of preparatory steps. First, there is an initiatory stage in which one is physically set apart from the world: actually washed, anointed, given a protective garment, and clothed in sanctified robes. This is merely preliminary and qualifies one to proceed, in earnest not of what one has become, but of what one may and wishes to become.

After the initiatory, the candidates are assembled and asked (and this we find in the Dead Sea Scrolls as well as in many other ancient works): “Do you agree and are you resolved to do things His way rather than your way—to follow the law of God?” The candidate is not told at this time what the law of God requires, only whether he is willing to trust God’s judgment and accept it no matter what it is. After that, all argument is out of the question.

Next the candidate is asked, “If so, will you be obedient to him no matter what he asks of you?”—a commitment to obedience before the demand is made.

1114 J. M. Lundquist, Temple, Covenant, and Law, pp. 302-303. See also H. W. Nibley, Hierocentric.

1115 S. K. Brown, Nag Hammadi, pp. 260, 275.

1116 J. W. Welch, Temple in the Book of Mormon, p. 301.

1117 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005.

1118 For references to the theme of hearkening, see Moses 4:4, 23; 5:16, 17, 23, 27, 57; 6:1, 52; 8:13, 15, 20, 21, 23, 24; JST Genesis 11:6; cf. 2 Nephi 9:28-29; Mosiah 3:19.

1119 Leviticus chs. 1-7, 17.

1120 Leviticus chs. 8-10.

1121 Leviticus chs. 11-16.

1122 Leviticus ch. 19.

1123 Leviticus ch. 20.

1124 Leviticus ch. 23.

1125 Leviticus ch. 24.

1126 Leviticus chs. 25-27.

1127 J. W. Welch, Temple in the Book of Mormon, pp. 374-375.

The next step is more specific and more serious: “Will you willingly sacrifice anything he asks for, including your own life?”

Whoever accepts this in the solemnity of the occasion may easily relax his resolve in days that follow, and so the next question is, “Will you at all times behave morally and soberly?”—that is, take all this very seriously, not just now but every day throughout your life. Thus a pattern of life is set to implement this. Your determination must be confirmed by your deportment at all times. This is the law of the gospel.

Finally God says, “Very well, this is what I want you to do.”¹¹²⁸ The next verse begins to describe the Ten Commandments, implemented by a strict and specific regime. It begins with general orders, to be observed all the times. The Ten Commandments are standing orders. What follows are the necessary steps to implement the law and put it into operation. The Book of Moses [i.e., the Pentateuch] is the law, the Torah. The prophets that follow don’t add to the law; they but appeal to the people to observe it, to return to it, because the people, again and again, haven’t been observing it. Whether Isaiah, Jeremiah, or the minor prophets, they decry the conditions of the people. They promise destruction. Why? Because the people have not kept the law. All the prophets promised that things would be wonderful if the people would only keep the law. That’s the message of the prophets: Keep the law. It will be wonderful if you do, and terrible if you don’t. This is the message. This is the one law that Moses gave.¹¹²⁹

- 5-53 Though differing in detail from the schema here described, a number of Jewish sources describe the similar process of the removal of the Shekhinah—representing God’s presence—in seven stages:

... as a result of the sins of subsequent generations. Thus the Shekhinah withdrew to the first heaven when Adam sinned, and withdrew further from this world following the sin of Cain, the generations of Enosh, the generation of the Flood, that of the Dispersion, that of the Sodomites, and that of the Egyptians in the days of Abraham... In Pesikta de-Rav Kahana 1:1, a process of return is also described.¹¹³⁰ Thus, when Abraham arose, the Shekhinah came back from the seventh heaven to the sixth; likewise, the merits of Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Kehat, Amram, and Moses each brought the Shekhinah closer to the earth. So the erection of the Tabernacle was the final stage in a process of return that had begun in the time of Abraham.¹¹³¹

Gileadi likewise finds a governing literary structure for the whole of the Book of Isaiah based on a view of Israel’s past and future in relation to “the law of opposites, how one course of action leads to exaltation and another leads to damnation”.¹¹³²

Humiliation and exaltation are... represented as two alternative conditions that humanity may attain, the other categories of the Bifid Structure being incidental to or supportive of these two. The antithetical nature of each pair of themes reflects the principle of opposites or of “the two ways”—a kind of dualism found commonly in apocalyptic literature. These opposite human conditions originate as cursings and blessings promised by God in his covenant with his people Israel: the Lord’s people may experience either benediction (exaltation, etc.) or malediction (humiliation, etc.), depending on their observance or transgression of the laws of the covenant.¹¹³³

Although people throughout the earth’s history have always chosen one path or the other, in the last days all peoples, Israelite and non-Israelite, will divide into these two categories... Thus, in the end, a separation occurs so that the righteous may be delivered when the wicked are destroyed.¹¹³⁴

- 5-54 Note that Adam and Eve were provided with coats of skin before they left the Garden of Eden.¹¹³⁵

- 5-55 In this connection, Nibley elsewhere cites the literature of the Greeks and Romans:

A transitional figure between the ritual and the literary is Pluto of Hades, the god of wealth: “All the riches of gems and precious metals hidden beneath the earth are his, but he owns no property above ground.” So he brutally kidnaps the fair Proserpine, who represents all the beauty and

1128 See Deuteronomy 5:6.

1129 H. W. Nibley, Consecration, pp. 424-425.

1130 W. G. Braude et al., Kahana, pp. 5-8.

1131 H. Schwartz, Tree, p. 51; cf. pp. 55-56.

1132 A. Gileadi, Literary, p. 32.

1133 Ibid., pp. 38-39.

1134 Ibid., p. 250.

1135 Moses 4:27.

harmony of nature, to establish his claim over the earth; but the marriage is barren—Pluto can intimidate and coerce, but like his Egyptian counterpart Seth he can neither beget nor create; what he buys with the treasures of the earth is nothing but a rule of blood and horror. But Greek comedy and Roman satire depict with agonizing frankness the irresistible success of Pluto's program in a decadent world. In Aristophanes' last play, The Pluto,¹¹³⁶ Hermes the messenger of Zeus comes to earth as a prophet to denounce mankind for having turned from the worship of heaven to the worship of wealth or Pluto: "You have all committed a great sin," he says, "and must be destroyed." But seeing how well the people are living, he soon decides to change sides and asks for a job with the establishment.¹¹³⁷ Next, the high priest of Zeus, finding himself unemployed, is forced to apply to Pluto for a job; what is his surprise when he finds none other than Zeus himself now working in the front office of Pluto, Inc. The cynical conclusion is that no one can resist Satan's bargain, and in the history of the world very few people have.¹¹³⁸

- 5-56 In writing about the Savior's Sermon at the Temple in 3 Nephi, Welch discusses similar prohibitions "against anger, ill-speaking, and ridicule of brethren":

... Jesus upgraded the old law against murder into a higher prohibition against becoming angry or speaking derisively or critically about one's brother: "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, and it is also written before you, that thou shalt not kill, and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment of God; but I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother shall be in danger of his judgment. And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council; and whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire."¹¹³⁹

In the brotherhood of a priesthood setting, I interpret this as amounting especially to a prohibition against speaking evil against any other priesthood brother, let alone against God. In effect, it prohibits all manner of evil or unholy speaking against any brother, and thus all the more so against the Lord's anointed leaders. According to the Sermon at the Temple, anyone who is angry with a brother is said to be in danger of his judgment (the implication is that the offended person is a "brother" who has power to render judgment). Anyone who calls his brother "Raca" is in danger of being brought before "the council," that is, the elders in charge of administering the kingdom. Those who persist in such misconduct are in danger of hell fire. Since the word "Raca" means "empty-head," the thrust of this injunction is that laughing at a brother's foolishness (that is, what to a lay member may seem to be foolishness) is prohibited.

Such provisions and disciplinary procedures are especially pertinent to a community of covenanters, as the evidence that Manfred Weise and others have marshalled regarding rules of discipline at Qumran and in the earliest Christian community tends to show. According to one of the rules of the Dead Sea community found in the Manual of Discipline 7:8, "anger against a fellow-member of the society could not be tolerated under any circumstances" and they applied a punishment "in any case of a member harbouring angry feelings."¹¹⁴⁰ Indeed, the Manual of Discipline 1:16-2:18 concludes its covenant-making ceremony by subjecting those who enter into the covenant unworthily to judgments of the community council and to punishments similar to those mentioned in Matthew 5:21-22.¹¹⁴¹ Weise argues that comparable councils were also convened in the early Church, as evidenced in 1 Corinthians 5:4-5, 1 Timothy 1:20, and the writings of Ignatius, specifically for the purpose of disciplining those who affronted Christ by insulting those people in whom Christ's spirit dwelt. Such deprecations are "not merely chidings in a banal sense, rather they insult to the core the community of God, viz., the covenant-community (Verbundenheit) of God. Therein lies their seriousness."¹¹⁴²

- 5-57 Welch further elaborates on the penalty for violation of this covenant:¹¹⁴³

1136 Aristophanes, Plutus.

1137 Cf. Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

1138 H. W. Nibley, Dominion, pp. 14-15.

1139 3 Nephi 12:21-22.

1140 See F. G. Martinez, DSS Translated, p. 11; G. Vermes, Complete, p. 107.

1141 see F. G. Martinez, DSS Translated, pp. 3-5; G. Vermes, Complete, pp. 99-100.

1142 J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 49; cf. J. W. Welch, Light, pp. 83-86.

1143 J. W. Welch, Sermon, p. 52; cf. J. W. Welch, Light, pp. 96-98.

In committing to live by this law, the righteous bear a heavy responsibility and are symbolically crucified themselves—“wherein ye will take up your cross”...¹¹⁴⁴ All references to plucking out the eye or to cutting off the hand that offends are absent in the Book of Mormon text, suggesting that this problematic verse in the Sermon on the Mount, on its face, does not fully reflect Jesus’ original intent. Instead, the Sermon at the Temple speaks at this point of a total commitment—of the disciple taking up a symbolic cross, a symbol of capital punishment. This demands that the righteous strictly exercise the virtue of self-control, and it also reflects a warning that, if a person violates the law of chastity, the penalty will involve serious consequences. In particular, the disciple must be willing to deny himself these things and, in so doing, “cross” himself¹¹⁴⁵ or, in Jesus’ words, “take up your cross.”¹¹⁴⁶ The image this may bring to mind is that of a covenanter taking this obligation very seriously, for hanging or exposing a body on a tree or on a cross was part of the standard punishment under the law of Moses for any person who committed a sin worthy of death. This form of punishment was apparently known to the Nephites through the Brass Plates and the writings of the prophet Zenos.¹¹⁴⁷ Deuteronomy 21:22 speaks of exposing the body of the culprit “on a tree,” a practice observed by the Nephites,¹¹⁴⁸ which Peter connected with the death of Jesus on the cross.¹¹⁴⁹ Thus, with this teaching in the Sermon at the Temple, one possibly confronts the idea that the disciple must be willing to take upon himself the very form of mortal punishment that Jesus himself suffered. As a practical matter in early Christianity, the punishment of those violating this covenant of chastity probably took the form of excommunication, understanding being “cut off” in Matthew 5:30 as “a communal parable.”

5-58 An Armenian text reports:

Satan’s goal was to destroy humankind. When he saw that Adam did not die on account of the sin and that God did not get angry and destroy everybody because of Cain’s deed, then he turned to other means. By means of the fault [of] lust[ing] after women, he inflamed the sons of Seth, and twenty men would die over one woman, killing one another.¹¹⁵⁰

Another source emphasizes the lures that the daughters of Cain invented in order to seduce the Sethites:

The daughters of Cain made sinful inventions, braids, coiffures, antimony and rouge. And they made various sorts of musical instruments, and they adorned themselves and their daughters, and they went to Mount Ahermon [where the sons of Seth and Enosh dwelled]. And after two hundred years of their asceticism [strict self-discipline], they (i.e., the Cainite women), having seduced them, caused them to descend from the mountain, and they mingled them with themselves promiscuously.¹¹⁵¹

An Islamic account blames the musical innovations of Jubal and Tubal-Cain:

After five hundred years of the life of Yarad [Jared] had passed, the descendants of Shīth [Seth] violated the oaths and covenants which they had taken upon themselves, and they began to descend to the land wherein the descendants of Qābīl [Cain] dwelt. Their initial fall was occasioned by Satan taking the form of two “human Satans”: the name of one was Yūbal [Jubal], and the other was named Tūbal-qīn [Tubal-Cain]. He taught them different sorts of melodies and music. Yūbal made flutes, mandolins, lutes, and horns, while Tūbal-qīn made drums, tambourines, and cymbals. The progeny of Qābīl had no work with which to busy themselves or to talk about except for (what) Satan (wanted). They began practicing forbidden acts and committing sins, and they would gather together to engage collectively in acts of moral depravity. Those of their men and women who were older were worse offenders in this than their younger ones. They would assemble together, play their instruments, beat the drums and tambourines, (strum) the lutes, (strike) the cymbals, shout, and laugh. (This ruckus continued) until a few of the descendants of Shīth [Seth]—the people of the mountain—heard their voices. One hundred men from among them came together for the purpose of descending to the progeny of Qābīl and determining the reason for the noise. When

1144 3 Nephi 12:30.

1145 Alma 39:9.

1146 3 Nephi 12:30.

1147 See 1 Nephi 19:13.

1148 See 3 Nephi 4:28.

1149 See Acts 10:39.

1150 M. E. Stone, Abel, 6:1-6:2, pp. 154-155.

1151 M. E. Stone, Sermon Concerning Flood, 4-6, pp. 177-178.

this news reached Yarad [Jared], he came to them and implored them—invoking God—to recall the injunction of their forefathers; he (also) adjured them by the blood of Hâbîl [Abel]. Akhnûkh bin Yarad [Enoch, son of Jared] then stood up before them and said, “Know that those of you who defy our father Yarad and violate the oath of our ancestors by descending from our mountain will never again re-ascend (it)!” But they insisted on descending, and after they had descended, they consorted with the daughters of Qâbîl and as a result committed shameless perversions.¹¹⁵²

- 5-59 With respect to the passage that says that the wicked husbands “took themselves wives,”¹¹⁵³ Wright observes: “The idea that the bene elohim married the daughters of humanity... has been the consensus of scholarship for some time, but an examination of early Jewish sources seems to leave room for a different interpretation of the verse, one that reveals relationships outside the boundaries of matrimony.”¹¹⁵⁴

- 5-60 Bushman sees the story of Enoch as being important to Joseph Smith because:

... like the vision of Moses, it bears on [his] prophetic identity. Later, when Joseph disguised his identity to elude his enemies, he took the name of Enoch as a pseudonym.¹¹⁵⁵ As he was a modern Moses, so was he a modern Enoch. Enoch’s call comes not on a high mountain like Moses’, but in a voice from heaven... In a response that echoes Smith’s unease about his own prophethood, Enoch protests, ‘Why is it that I have found favour in thy Sight, and Am but a lad, & all the people hate me, for I am slow of speech: Wherefore am I thy Servent?’¹¹⁵⁶ Joseph had been a boy, with no desire to preach, when he received his call....

The Enoch narrative created a deep history for the young church. The revelation came while Oliver Cowdery and the missionaries to the Lamanites headed west to find a site for the City of Zion. The writings gave the little flock a pattern for their own city-building. Enoch’s people dwelt in a city called Zion “because they were of one heart and of one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them,” a city so righteous, it “was taken up into heaven.”¹¹⁵⁷ Though modeled after Enoch’s Zion, Joseph’s New Jerusalem was not to follow Enoch’s “City of Holiness”¹¹⁵⁸ into heaven. Quite the reverse. In Enoch’s vision, latter-day people gather from all over the earth into a holy city, “called Zion, a New Jerusalem.”¹¹⁵⁹ Rather than rising, this city stays put, and Enoch’s city descends from heaven to meet the people of the New Jerusalem on earth...¹¹⁶⁰ The Millennium begins in a happy union of two holy peoples on a cleansed earth.¹¹⁶¹

- 5-61 Elder Orson Pratt stated that: “No equality can be brought about by dividing property; the Lord never intended such an order of things. It is not a division of property that is going to bring about a oneness among the Latter-day Saints in temporal things, but it is a union of property, that all the property may be united, and considered belonging to the Lord, and to every individual in the whole Church, as joint heirs with Him, or as His stewards.”¹¹⁶²
- 5-62 The weeping of the heavens parallels an earlier mention of God’s weeping,¹¹⁶³ a motif that has been explored elsewhere.¹¹⁶⁴ Note, however, that in contrast to what has been concluded in previous LDS analyses of the passage, the text of OT2 depicts Enoch, rather than God, as the one who wept.¹¹⁶⁵ In 1152 J. C. Reeves, al-Yaqubi. See also W. L. Lipscomb, Seth, 18-23, pp. 193-196. Cf. Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

1153 Moses 8:14; cf. 8:21.

1154 See A. T. Wright, Evil Spirits, pp. 133-136). See also Commentary 5:44-a, p. 392.

1155 D. J. Whittaker, Substituted Names.

1156 Moses 6:31, original spelling and punctuation retained.

1157 Moses 7:18, 21.

1158 Moses 7:19.

1159 Moses 7:62.

1160 Moses 7:63.

1161 R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 138-139, 141.

1162 O. Pratt, 10 September 1854, p. 100.

1163 Moses 7:28.

1164 E.g., E. England, Weeping; D. C. Peterson, Weeping God. For more on the motif of weeping in the LDS story of Enoch and in ancient accounts, see J. M. Bradshaw et al., God’s Image 2, pp. 106-115; J. M. Bradshaw et al., Revisiting.

1165 “Enoch looked upon the residue of the people and wept. And he beheld and lo the heavens wept also and shed forth their tears as the rain upon the mountains. And Enoch said to the heavens...” (S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 618; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 25) vs. “the God of heaven looked upon the residue of the people, and he wept; and Enoch bore record of it, saying: How is it that the heavens weep, and shed forth their tears as rain upon the mountains. And Enoch said unto the Lord...” (Moses 7:28). Moses 7:28 follows OT1 except in the following instance: “And Enoch said unto the heavens” (S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 106).

both versions, it is God who replies to Enoch's lament.¹¹⁶⁶

Corroborating the OT2 manuscript, a Manichaean text also describes a weeping Enoch:

“I am Enoch the righteous. My sorrow was great, and a torrent of tears [streamed] from my eyes because I heard the insult which the wicked ones uttered.”¹¹⁶⁷

We find such insulting words, of course, in the mouths of the antediluvians in Moses 8:21. Elsewhere, Enoch himself prophesied a future judgment upon the “ungodly sinners” who have “uttered hard speeches... against [the Lord].”¹¹⁶⁸ Perhaps the most telling reference, however, is an ancient exegetical tradition cited by Reeves¹¹⁶⁹ that associates the speech of Job in 21:7-15 “to events transpiring during the final years of the antediluvian era.”¹¹⁷⁰ Indeed, in one source these verses are directly linked to Enoch himself.¹¹⁷¹ In defiance of the Lord’s entreaty to “love one another, and... choose me, their Father,”¹¹⁷² the wicked are depicted as “say[ing] unto God”:

14 ... Depart from us: for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

15 What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? And what profit should we have if we pray unto him?¹¹⁷³

5-63 Robinson and Garrett elaborate:

One’s call is merely God’s invitation to serve in his kingdom, however, one’s election, or being chosen, is God’s confirmation that one has responded worthily to that calling, has magnified it and used its power correctly, and is therefore worthy to continue exercising its powers and prerogatives in time and in eternity.

It will be seen, then, that the time between one’s calling and one’s finally being chosen or elected is one’s time of probation, or testing. In the furnace of persecution, many who have once been called to be Saints and even to help lead the Church have not endured. They had been called, but they “washed out” and so were not ultimately chosen. Without subsequent repentance... they could not be the Lord’s elect or part of his chosen people. It will also be seen that one’s election by God being made as sure and certain as one’s calling amounts to the effective end of that person’s individual probation, though it may not be the end of some pains and sorrows of mortality. For most Saints, this occurs after a lifetime of faithful endurance, though some receive this blessing while still in the flesh.¹¹⁷⁴

In his carefully-worded paraphrase of Paul’s description of charity¹¹⁷⁵ within the thirteenth Article of Faith,¹¹⁷⁶ Joseph Smith pointedly distinguished between the Saints’ previous attainments with respect to faith (“We believe all things”) and hope (“we hope all things”), and their as yet unfulfilled aspirations with respect to charity. In their current state, their strivings for charity could accurately be characterized only in terms of a partial attainment and a yearning for the necessary strength to realize its perfection: “we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things.”

5-64 Speaking of the supreme virtues and temptations, Nibley writes:¹¹⁷⁷

If the law of consecration is the supreme test of virtue—the final one—money is to be the supreme temptation to vice; sex runs a poor second, but on both counts, this is the time and place for us to meet the challenge of the flesh. It is the weakness of the flesh in both cases to prove our spirits stronger than the pull of matter, to assert our command over the new medium of physical bodies before proceeding onward to another state of existence. As Brigham Young often repeats,

1166 Moses 7:32.

1167 Cologne Mani Codex 58:6f., cited in J. C. Reeves, Heralds, p. 183.

1168 Jude 1:15; cf. E. Isaac, 1 Enoch, 1:9, pp. 13-14. See also 2 Peter 2:5, which also labels this generation as “ungodly.”

1169 E.g., M.-A. Ouaknin et al., Rabbi Éliézer, 22, pp. 134, 136. See J. C. Reeves, Heralds, p. 200 n. 17.

1170 J. C. Reeves, Heralds, p. 187.

1171 P. Alexander, 3 Enoch, 4:3, p. 258.

1172 Moses 7:33.

1173 Cf. Exodus 5:2, Malachi 3:13-15, Mosiah 11:27, Moses 5:16.

1174 S. E. Robinson et al., De&C Commentary, 4:160; see 2 Peter 1:10, 18-19.

1175 1 Corinthians 13:7.

1176 Articles of Faith 1:13.

1177 H. W. Nibley, Consecration, pp. 434-435.

“God has given us the things of this world to see what we will do with them.”¹¹⁷⁸ The test will be whether we will set our hearts on the four things that lead to destruction. Whoever seeks for (1) wealth, (2) power, (3) popularity, and (4) the pleasures of the flesh—anyone who seeks those will be destroyed, says the Book of Mormon.¹¹⁷⁹ Need we point out that those four things compose the whole substance of success in the present-day world. They are the things that money will get you.

5-65 Commenting on the orans gesture, Emminghaus writes:

From the point of view of religious history, the lifting of the hands... is an expressive gesture of prayer to the “gods above”¹¹⁸⁰ ... General anthropology has... shown us that among all peoples, the offering and showing of the open palms, which therefore cannot hold weapons or anything dangerous, is a sign of peaceful intent... Thus open hands uplifted are a universal gesture of peace, confidence, and petition; in contrast, a clenched fist means threat and challenge to battle. In the Old Testament, lifting the hands to God,¹¹⁸¹ or toward the Temple¹¹⁸² was a universal custom.

This Jewish gesture of prayer was apparently adopted by Christians for private as well as communal prayer. Tertullian refers to it:¹¹⁸³ The Jews, because of their feelings of guilt, do not dare to lift their hands to Christ. “But we not only lift them, but even extend them, imitating the Lord’s passion, as we also confess Christ in prayer.” The oldest depiction of the crucifixion of Christ (still very muted, because otherwise so scandalous to Romans), on the wooden portals of Santa Sabina on the Aventine in Rome (6th c.) shows the crucified Lord with slightly bent arms and open, nailed hands, but without an express depiction of the cross—almost as if he were standing in front of the framework of a house. This is precisely the form of the orans posture as Tertullian pictures it: In the Christians who are praying in this way, the Father also sees the dying son on the cross. Naturally, this interpretation of the orans posture is secondary and allegorizing, but it is still interesting and revealing.¹¹⁸⁴

In the art of the catacombs, the orans gesture was specifically associated with prayer offered by or in behalf of deceased souls. Explains Hassett:

Numerous biblical figures, for instance, depicted in the catacombs — Noah, Abraham, Isaac, the Three Children in the Fiery Furnace, Daniel in the lions’ den—are pictured asking the Lord to deliver the soul of the person on whose tombs they are depicted as He once delivered the particular personage represented. But besides these biblical Orans figures there exist in the catacombs many ideal figures (153 in all) in the ancient attitude of prayer, which, according to Wilpert, are to be regarded as symbols of the deceased’s soul in heaven, praying for its friends on earth. This symbolic meaning accounts for the fact that the great majority of the figures are female, even when depicted on the tombs of men. One of the most convincing proofs that the Orans was regarded as a symbol of the soul is an ancient lead medal in the Vatican Museum showing the martyr, St. Lawrence, under torture, while his soul, in the form of a female Orans, is just leaving the body.¹¹⁸⁵

5-66 1 Enoch says that when Abel disappeared, Eve “lamented bitterly... and searched for [him].”¹¹⁸⁶

5-67 The only recorded encounter between Victor Hugo and Mormonism is that of a visit by the indefatigable French missionary Louis Bertrand, during the period that Hugo and other refugees were living in exile in Jersey. Likely, Bertrand, who had been highly involved in political and social reform movements in France before joining the Church, “was closely connected to Hugo or some other revolutionary then on the island, and it was because of this association that the group [was willing to listen to him].”¹¹⁸⁷ Elder John Oakley, a missionary familiar with Bertrand’s work, wrote a letter to Brigham Young saying that they “granted [Bertrand] a hearing; they listened with attention at the time, but their 1178 No source given.

1179 1 Nephi 22:23; 3 Nephi 6:15.

1180 See R. H. Wilkinson, Art, pp. 28-29 for a discussion of the gesture in Egyptian worship; cf. Figure 3-8, p. 145. See Endnote 6-30, p. 499.

1181 E.g., Exodus 9:29, 33; Psalm 28:2, 63:5, 88:10.

1182 E.g., 1 Kings 8:38.

1183 See Tertullian, Prayer, 14, p. 685.

1184 J. H. Emminghaus, Eucharist, p. 133.

1185 M. M. Hassett, Orans, p. 269.

1186 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 85:6, p. 364.

1187 R. D. McClellan, Bertrand, p. 11.

heads were too full of revolution to think much about the gospel of Jesus Christ.”¹¹⁸⁸ Brief references to Mormonism appear in two places in Hugo’s later writings. In one of the religious poems collected in his Contemplations, La Fin de Satan et Dieu (= The End of Satan and God), his “contact with the Mormons left a trace, specifically in his poem on God where, listing the conceptions of God that he finds unacceptable, he writes: ‘... Is it the God that one sees at Versailles... Or do you speak of the judging God?... Is it the Mormon God that you must have? Or the God that tortured Labarre?’”¹¹⁸⁹ Later, in a passage describing some of the reasons he was so little loved by the inhabitants of Jersey, he writes: “For the English, I am shocking, eccentric, improper. I do not adjust my tie correctly. I get my shaves at the barber shop on the corner, which... brands me as a workman (something most despised in England); I offend their prudery; I attack the death penalty, which is unrespectable. I say ‘Sir’ to a lord, which is impious; I am neither Catholic, nor Anglican, nor Lutheran, nor Calvinist, nor Jewish, nor Methodist, nor Wesleyan, nor Mormon: therefore atheist. Moreover, I am French, which is odious; republican, which is abominable; outlawed, which is repulsive; vanquished, which is disgraceful—and, as the crowning dishonor, a poet. Because of all that, not very popular.”¹¹⁹⁰

A remembrance of a letter that Victor Hugo wrote to a French Swiss convert is also preserved. Having been impressed with Les Misérables, Josephine de la Harpe Suder wrote to Hugo “and gave him the first principles of the restored gospel of Jesus Christ in its fulness as a panacea” to the problems outlined in his novel. Hugo “promptly answered, not by the hand of his secretary, but under his own veritable hand,” saying: “Madame: You are a very noble woman, but, permit me to say, I think you are in error. I herewith send you another of my works, and I lay my portrait at your feet. Very respectfully yours, Victor Hugo.” The author of the account, Hannah T. King, observing that “both these great, grand spirits have passed away,” pictures “the nobly enthusiastic Latter-day Saint Josephine,” if permitted, seeking Hugo out and again “laying the gospel before his enfranchised soul; enfranchised from the trammels of earth life, and the light of immortality beaming around him, and a small still voice whispers to me he will gladly embrace it.”¹¹⁹¹

5-68 In contrast to the idea of self-sufficiency, modern Church leaders have stressed the principle of self-reliance, acknowledging the hand of God as the giver of all, and retaining the principle of generosity and service to others.¹¹⁹²

5-69 Gibbons describes this experience as follows:

Toward the end of summer [of 1955], Elder Lee was assigned by President McKay to lead out in making and executing final plans for the dedication of the Los Angeles Temple. This brought them into frequent contact as the arrangements were finalized. In late February 1956, Elder Lee had a vivid dream about President McKay in which the prophet gave instructions about the love of God and its relationship to the command that we love our neighbors as ourselves. When President McKay offered the prayer dedicating the Los Angeles Temple on March 11, 1956, Elder Lee was startled that the prayer’s ending essentially repeated what he had seen and heard in the dream. “I was deeply moved as the dedicatory prayer was read,” he explained in his diary under that date,¹¹⁹³ “because of a dream I had two weeks ago, in which President McKay was impressing me with the meaning of the love of God, as it relates to the love of our fellowmen and of His service. The dedicatory prayer closed with similar instructions to those I had heard in my dream two weeks before.” The impact of this dream upon Elder Lee, and the dedicatory prayer that followed it, seems to have been profound and lasting.¹¹⁹⁴

Elder Lee seems to have been referring to thoughts inspired by the last paragraph of the dedicatory prayer, which makes a reference linking love of God and of fellow men: “Now, dear Lord, our Eternal Father, through love for thee and their fellow men, faithful members of thy Church and others who believe in thee, by tithes and other generous contributions, have made possible the erection and 1188 Manuscript History of Brigham Young (1853), p. 133, cited in R. D. McClellan, Bertrand, p. 10. See also J. Oakley, 2 February 1854, cited in C. Euvrard, Bertrand, p. 197.

1189 C. Euvrard, Bertrand, p. 199.

1190 Cited in C. Euvrard, Bertrand, p. 200. For more on the religious views of Victor Hugo during this period, see C. Euvrard, Bertrand, pp. 197-203.

1191 H. T. King, Victor Hugo.

1192 B. K. Packer, Self-Reliance; B. K. Packer, Emotional Problems; M. G. Romney, Self-Reliance; M. R. Ballard, Self-Reliant.

1193 H. B. Lee, 11 March 1956.

1194 F. M. Gibbons, Harold B. Lee, p. 331. See also L. B. Goates, Harold B. Lee, p. 324.

completion of this holy house.”¹¹⁹⁵

- 5-70 I have been unable to find the source for the statement of President Snow. However, he is remembered in one place to have said:

We were selected, ordained, and set apart there [i.e., in premortal life] according to our worthiness and preparation and training to come forth when our preparation fitted clearly into the great plan of our Father. And as we live worthy the Holy Spirit brings this knowledge to this body, and that is the only way we become acquainted with the knowledge of our spiritual understanding. This body must get acquainted with former pre-existent experiences through being revealed to, and made a part of, this flesh.¹¹⁹⁶

President Joseph Fielding Smith has written the following:

The Spirit of God speaking to the spirit of man has power to impart truth with greater effect and understanding than the truth can be imparted by personal contact even with heavenly beings. Through the Holy Ghost the truth is woven into the very fiber and sinews of the body so that it cannot be forgotten. So positive and powerful are the teachings of the Spirit that when a man receives this knowledge and partakes of this power of God, which can only come after receiving the covenants and obligations belonging to the New and Everlasting Covenant, and he then turns away from this knowledge and these covenants, he sins knowingly.¹¹⁹⁷

- 5-71 The idea of “planned obsolescence,” industrial designer Brooks Stevens’ “major lasting contribution to design theory” sparked the popular imagination following a talk he gave to a local advertising club in Minneapolis, Minnesota. His definition of the concept was “instilling in the buyer the desire to own something a little newer, a little better, a little sooner than is necessary.”¹¹⁹⁸ The practical effect of this concept is magnified by the fact that in American culture, as recent research and everyday experience confirms, “happiness is a relative state... determined mainly by how we view our lives and accomplishments relative to those of our peers”¹¹⁹⁹—Veblen’s “invidious comparison.”¹²⁰⁰ Hence, the successful appeal of advertisers to the companion idea of “conspicuous consumption,” i.e., the “consumption of valuable goods [as] a means of reputability to the gentleman of leisure.”¹²⁰¹ In order to secure its intended effect, not only should such consumption be very obvious, but “it must be wasteful” as well.¹²⁰²

Revelation 3:17 well describes the illusory nature of such wealth when viewed from the Lord’s perspective: “... thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.”

- 5-72 President Hugh B. Brown said the following:¹²⁰³

[S]ometimes ...some of us seem to indicate that having been baptized, received the Holy Ghost, having done the things preliminary thereto such as having faith and repentance, and then having gone to church, and the men having received the priesthood, that we’ve done all that we ever need to do, that we’ve “arrived.” Then the older ones among us rest our hands comfortably on the shelf that nature gradually prepares for us, and we lean back and enjoy the ecstasy of thinking we’re going to be transported into heaven immediately. It is to me something like a man who learned of electricity, that is, learned that there was such a thing, and he paid the necessary price and made the necessary preparations and had a conduit wire connected to his house. And he bought him a little ten-watt bulb and installed it in the back room of his house and then sat down, put on his slippers, and took his pipe, and sat in the rocking chair and, “I’ve got electricity. I’m the happiest man in the world. Nobody else can boast of more than I, because they too have electricity. And I

1195 D. O. McKay, 11 March 1956. See Improvement Era, April 1956, p. 227; reprinted in C. A. Orton, Faith, p. 195.

1196 L. Snow, 6 April 1894, as reported in Journal of John Whitaker (1884-1912), cited in T. G. Madsen, How We Know, p. 25.

1197 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 1935, 1:47-48. See also J. F. Smith, Jr., Seek Ye, 18 June 1958, pp. 213-214.

1198 Industrial Strength Design; cf. Greenspan’s related idea of “creative destruction” (A. Greenspan, Turbulence, pp. 48-51).

1199 A. Greenspan, Turbulence, p. 269. For a rich characterization of the many ways that the class system reveals itself in American culture, see P. Fussell, Class.

1200 T. Veblen, Leisure, pp. 21-22.

1201 Ibid., p. 47.

1202 Ibid., p. 60.

1203 H. B. Brown, Education.

have electricity.” Not knowing, not realizing that what he had was a little ten-watt bulb and that he was in semi-darkness. Not realizing that if he would he could have had ten-thousand times that illumination. He could have had a bulb in every room, and one over the reading lamp, and on the piano, and all around him and then he could have been utilizing the power of electricity by installing those gadgets which are so expensive, and yet seemingly in this age so necessary. He could have done all his work with electricity. But there he sits, placidly rocking, “Thank God I’ve got electricity.”

Sometimes Latter-day Saints say, “Thank God I’ve got the Gospel. I’ve joined the Church. I’m going to heaven as soon as I die.” There’s an awful shock coming to some people because “the glory of God is intelligence.”¹²⁰⁴ And there are some Latter-day Saints who have only a ten-watt bulb of spiritual insight and knowledge. And that ten-watt bulb will take them only where they use ten-watt bulbs. And they wouldn’t be able to endure the glory of anything brighter. And that’s the reason men can’t enjoy the glory of God and endure it: they’re not prepared for it.

- 5-73 Describing the affirmative nature of the process of sanctification, Chesterton writes:¹²⁰⁵

[T]hose who are acquainted with all the philosophy (nay, religion) which is typified in the art of drawing on brown paper, know that white is positive and essential. I cannot avoid remarking here upon a moral significance. One of the wise and awful truths which this brown-paper art reveals is this: that white is a color. It is not a mere absence of color; it is a shining and affirmative thing, as fierce as red, as definite as black. When, so to speak, your pencil grows red-hot, it draws roses; when it grows white-hot, it draws stars. And one of the two or three defiant verities of the best religious morality—of real Christianity, for example—is exactly this same thing. The chief assertion of religious morality is that white is a color. Virtue is not the absence of vices or the avoidance of moral dangers; virtue is a vivid and separate thing, like pain or a particular smell. Mercy does not mean not being cruel or sparing people revenge or punishment: it means a plain and positive thing like the sun, which one has either seen or not seen. Chastity does not mean abstention from sexual wrong; it means something flaming like Joan of Arc. In a word, God paints in many colors, but He never paints so gorgeously—I had almost said so gaudily—as when He paints in white.

- 5-74 Taking this idea a step further, Chesterton writes:¹²⁰⁶

When Diogenes went about with a lantern looking for an honest man, I am afraid he had very little time to be honest himself... The error of Diogenes lay in the fact that he omitted to notice that every man is both an honest man and a dishonest man. Diogenes looked for his honest man inside every crypt and cavern, but he never thought of looking inside the thief. And that is where the Founder of Christianity found the honest man; He found him on a gibbet and promised him Paradise. Just as Christianity looked for the honest man inside the thief, democracy looked for the wise man inside the fool. It encouraged the fool to be wise. We can call this thing sometimes optimism, sometimes equality; the nearest name for it is encouragement. It had its exaggeration—failure to understand original sin, notions that education would make all men good, the childlike yet pedantic philosophies of human perfectibility. But the whole was full of faith in the infinity of human souls, which is in itself not only Christian but orthodox; and this we have lost amid the limitations of pessimistic science. Christianity said that any man could be a saint if he chose; democracy, that every man could be a citizen if he chose.

1204 D&C 93:36.

1205 G. K. Chesterton, Piece of Chalk, pp. 17-18.

1206 G. K. Chesterton, Charles Dickens, pp. 45-46.

FIGURE 6-1. Adam and His Children, ca. 1447-1466
Piero della Francesca, ca. 1420-1492

And a book of remembrance was kept... in the language of Adam... and... their children were taught (Moses 6:5-6). Pictured on his deathbed, Adam is supported by Eve and surrounded by a daughter and two sons. In the background, Seth converses with an angel. The scene of the Death of Adam is part of a cycle of frescoes in the church of San Francesco in Arezzo, Italy illustrating the Legend of the True Cross. In this cycle, the classical forms of the quattrocento appear against a “sparse, often surrealist landscape—the pictorial equivalent of silence. To the modern eye, Piero’s paintings show a subdued emotion, where rational theory appears to have overwhelmed naturalism” (Piero della Francesca). For a more detailed description of the scenes depicted in the series of frescoes, see Excursus 36: The Legend of the True Cross, p. 614 and Excursus 45: Impact of the “Black Death” on Art and Literature, p. 640.

MOSES 6:1-12

Adam the Patriarch

Overview	455
The Patriarchal Priesthood and the Line of Seth.....	456
The Great Council at Adam-ondi-Ahman	457
Seth's Quest for the Oil of Mercy	460
"The Whole Meaning of the Law	463
Moses 6:1-12: Text and Commentary.....	474
Gleanings	485
Endnotes	491

Overview

FOLLOWING a hiatus on the work of Bible translation of a little more than a month, John Whitmer served as scribe for Moses 5:52-6:18 on November 30, 1830.¹ By December 10, with the assistance of Emma Smith and John Whitmer, the Prophet had completed the manuscript through the end of Moses 6.

From the story of Lamech in Moses 5, Cassuto draws the lesson:

... that material progress did not go hand in hand with moral advancement. Not only did violence prevail in the world, but it was precisely in deeds of violence that these generations gloried. The very qualities that are ethically reprehensible, and are hateful in the sight of the Lord, were esteemed in the eyes of men. In such circumstances, the Judge of the whole earth could not but execute judgment. All the achievements of material civilization are not worth anything without moral virtues, and cannot protect man from retribution. We have here a kind of prelude to the decree of the Flood.²

Mercifully postponing judgment, however, God first launched successive waves of what Nibley calls a "crash program" to gather any that would hearken to the call of repentance—first to Adam-ondi-Ahman, and later to Enoch's city.³ The absolute failure of the final ministry of the long-suffering Noah definitively confirmed that there were none but his immediate family who would listen, and demonstrated the inevitability of the sweeping destruction of the Flood.

The first twelve verses of Moses 6 describe the final events in the life of Adam as a patriarch to the righteous branch of his posterity.⁴ The focus of the account is on the birth of the righteous Seth and the beginning of the patriarchal line that will culminate, in the seventh generation from Adam, with the call of Enoch.

¹ S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 57.

² U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 244.

³ H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 21, pp. 262, 263.

⁴ Cf. Abraham 1:26.

The Patriarchal Priesthood and the Line of Seth

Verse 2 announces the first theme of the chapter: despite the death of Abel, a righteous posterity to Adam will be raised up through Seth, ensuring the continuity of a covenant people. Joseph Fielding McConkie writes:

Seth means “the appointed” or “substitute,” he being effectually the second Abel. As such he becomes a natural type for Christ, who like Abel was first a martyr, and then like the second Abel, Seth, ruled in glory with his father.⁵

In the Greek Life of Adam and Eve, as Tromp notes, Seth not only “continues humanity” but is also the one who “hands on the primeval mysteries.”⁶ Similarly, D&C 107 records that the “evangelical [or patriarchal⁷] order of the priesthood was confirmed to be handed down from father to son, and rightly belongs to the literal descendants of the chosen seed, to whom the promises were made.”⁸ The revelation goes on to say that Seth was “ordained by Adam at the age of sixty-nine years, and was blessed by him three years previous to his (Adam’s) death, and received the promise of God by his father, that his posterity should be the chosen of the Lord, and that they should be preserved unto the end of the earth.”⁹ Regarding the description of Seth’s role in Gnostic texts, S. Kent Brown writes:

While Adam was the founder of the covenant race, it was Seth and his successors who perpetuated the covenant people and who came to be known as “the seed of the great Seth” or “the great, incorruptible, immovable race of the great, mighty men of the great Seth”¹⁰... In his earthly function, ...Seth came to reveal secrets about the heavens and the future which he had learned both from his father and from revelation...¹¹ In fact, he authored a book which was hidden in order to come forth in the latter days, a work reportedly containing the secrets of the universe which Seth and the covenant people had known and revered from the beginning.¹²

Just as the Book of Mormon, as a history of those who were Nephites by lineage or “adoption,” does not record the story of the Lamanites and their associates,¹³ so the book of Moses story tells us very little about the history of the Cainites or of the children of Adam that were born before Cain and Abel¹⁴ who “followed Satan by choice and were disqualified as sons of God.”¹⁵ The account instead focuses on the inauguration of temple ordinances among the righteous, which began, as Nibley indicates, “when God set them apart, gave them a blessing, gave them a new name, [and] registered them in the new Book of the Generations of Adam.”¹⁶

5 J. F. McConkie, Symbolism, p. 181 and Moses 6:3-4. See Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

6 J. Tromp, Cain, p. 295.

7 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 27 June 1839, p. 151.

8 D&C 107:39-40.

9 D&C 107:42. See Endnote 6-1, p. 491.

10 A. Böhlig et al., Egyptians, III, 51.19-20, 54.9-10, 59.13-15, 60.25-61.1, pp. 212-213, 215.

11 Cf. G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, 85.19-31, p. 286.

12 S. K. Brown, Nag Hammadi, pp. 262-263 and A. Böhlig et al., Egyptians, III, 68.1-69.5, p. 218. See Endnote 6-2, p. 491.

13 J. L. Sorenson, Ancient, pp. 50-56.

14 Moses 5:12, 16.

15 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 78 and Moses 7:33, 37. See also D. J. Meldrum et al., Children JBMS; D. J. Meldrum et al., Children 2007, pp. 7-13; T. D. Stephens, Tree of Life; Commentary 6:8-c, p. 481.

16 H. W. Nibley, Return, pp. 62-63 and Moses 5:5-9; cf. Revelation 20:12.

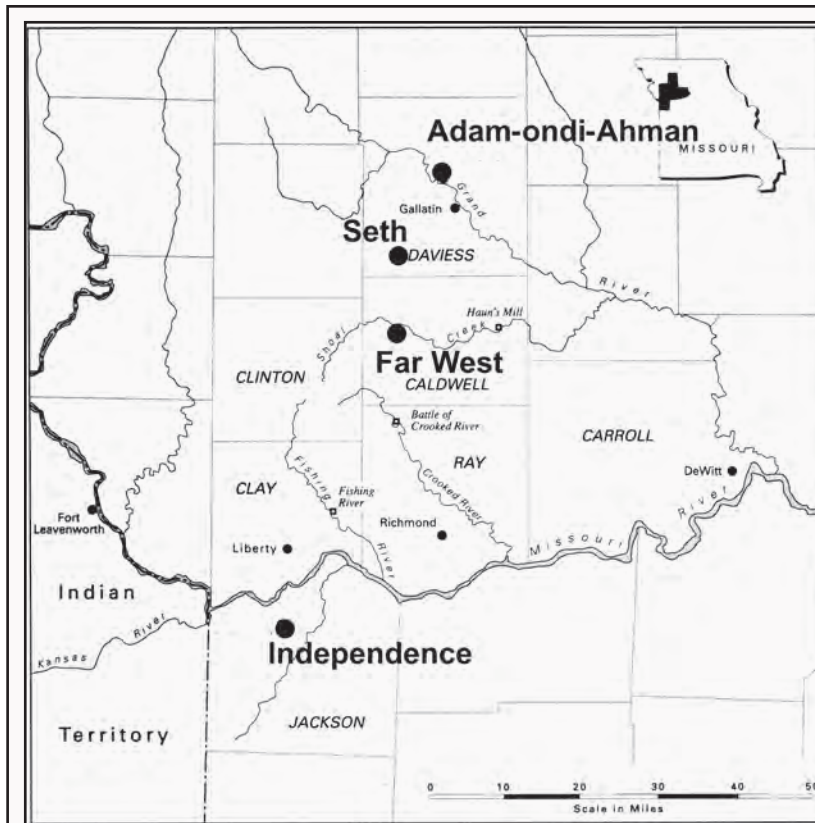

FIGURE 6-2. Church History Sites in Western Missouri, 1831-1839

*This earth was once a garden place, With all her glories common; And men did live a holy race, And worship Jesus face to face, In Adam-ondi-Ahman.*¹ Although “neither biblical records nor secular history and archaeological research” are likely to ever “identify the dimensions or the location of the Garden [of Eden] in terms of the present-day surface of the earth,”² statements attributed to the Prophet Joseph Smith might be read as implying indications of Adam and Eve’s step-by-step migration after the Fall, paralleling the general direction of the movement of the Saints in Missouri after their expulsion from Jackson County.³ North of Independence, in Caldwell County, is an area that the Saints named Far West. It was near that place, according to the Prophet, that Cain killed Abel.⁴ Continuing about twelve miles further in that same general direction is a location where the Prophet proposed building a stake and city that was to be named Seth, in memory of the son who consoled Adam and Eve after their loss of Abel.⁵ About 13 miles north of Seth and 70 miles north of Independence is Adam-ondi-Ahman, where Adam gave a final blessing to his posterity.⁶

1 Hymns (1985), #49.

2 G. W. Doxey, Eden, p. 534. See the overview of Moses 3, p. 141.

3 See Excursus 39: The Location of Adam-ondi-Ahman, p. 623.

4 See statements and discussion in L. C. Berrett et al., Missouri, pp. 322-323. See also Moses 5:32.

5 Ibid., p. 371-372; J. Smith, Jr. Papers 2008-, Journals 1:392. See Moses 6:2.

6 D&C 107:53-56

The Great Council at Adam-ondi-Ahman

Joseph Smith revealed the name of the location where Adam gave his final blessing to be Adam-ondi-Ahman, which Nibley takes as meaning “Adam (or “man”) in the presence of God.”¹⁷ In this place, Adam gathered his posterity three years prior to his death, and “predicted whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation.”¹⁸

The Prophet said that the purpose of Adam’s blessing was to “bring [his posterity] into the presence of God.”¹⁹ Andrus explained that “Adam... realized his desire to a degree, for ‘the Lord appeared unto them.’²⁰ But even this blessing was short of the ultimate purpose of the Gospel, which was to bring all those of Adam’s descendants who would obey its divine truths back into the presence of God and to endow them with celestial glory.”²¹

17 Excursus 38: The Meaning of “Adam-ondi-Ahman”, p. 622. See Endnote 6-3, p. 491.

18 L. C. Berrett et al., Missouri, pp. 377-456, D&C 107:53-56. See Endnote 6-4, p. 492.

19 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, p. 159.

20 D&C 107:54. See also E. A. Whitney, Leaf, “He [Adam] sealed them for eternal life.”

21 H. L. Andrus, Perfection, p. 411.

A description of a gathering like the one described in D&C 107 is given in the Life of Adam and Eve. Descriptions of the number present vary widely: while most versions of the tradition mention thirty sons and thirty daughters, the Latin recension uniquely pictures a surprisingly large assembly of “15,000 men, not counting women and children.”²² The Georgian version recounts the story as follows:

For all the years of Adam were 930 years. And [those who were descended] from him multiplied over the earth and settled it. And when the 930 years were completed, Adam fell ill and cried out in a loud voice and said, “Gather to me all my descendants and I will see them before my death.”

And all his progeny gathered to him who had settled, and he divided the three parts of the earth among his descendants. And all Adam’s descendants assembled by him, for they had taken a position before his doors, in the place which Adam had made, and into which he would enter and address his prayers to God.²³

Another extrabiblical source purporting to give an account of this event is the Apocalypse of Adam, which Robinson describes as:

... an account of Adam’s final instructions to his son Seth. Since the 700th year²⁴ should be understood as the 700th year of Seth’s life, it is also, according to the Septuagint chronology, the last year of Adam’s life. This would indicate that the document is not an apocalypse, but rather a testament in the pattern of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs,²⁵ where the fathers also call their sons together just before their deaths for a last word of instruction and exhortation.²⁶

The Conflict of Adam and Eve with Satan recounts that “Adam let his blessing descend upon Seth, and upon his children, and upon all his children’s children.”²⁷ Nibley argues that this “great assembly” was “the original model” for the widespread tradition of annual year-rites thereafter performed throughout the world.²⁸

Beyond their obvious value as part of the scriptural record, revelations about the council at Adam-ondi-Ahman seem to have provided the Prophet with a prototype for church governance,²⁹ a model whose importance persists to the present time.³⁰ His revelation appears to have been based on a vision, since he speaks of seeing the event.³¹ Connections between this vision, the translation of the early chapters of the book of Moses, and the organization of church councils are seen by Matthews to be “reasonable and possible—even probable.”³² Moreover, Dahl cites close affinities with D&C “sections 68, 84, 88, 102, and 107, which speak of priesthood matters in terms of ancient councils, priesthood genealogies, keys and powers.”³³

22 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 30:3, p. 34E. See Endnote 6-6, p. 493.

23 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 30(5):1-30(5):3, pp. 33E-34E; cf. E. A. W. Budge, Cave, pp. 71-73; M. D. Gibson, Rolls 1901, pp. 115-118; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:8, pp. 114-116. See Endnote 6-7, p. 493. See A. S.-M. Ri, Commentaire de la Caverne, pp. 179 for a discussion of Adam’s “house of prayer” as a temple.

24 G. W. MacRae, Adam 1983, 64, 1:1, p. 712; G. W. MacRae et al., Adam 1990, Pl. 64:4, p. 279; S. E. Robinson, Apocalypse of Adam, Pl. 64:4, p. 10.

25 H. C. Kee, Testaments.

26 S. E. Robinson, Apocalypse of Adam, p. 6.

27 S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:8, p. 115. See Endnote 6-8, p. 493.

28 H. W. Nibley, Eternal Round, p. 383. See Commentary 1:25-e, p. 60; 5:47-a, p. 395; Excursus 35: Lamech’s “Sword Song”, p. 612; the overview of Moses 4, pp. 221. See Endnote 4-21, p. 304.

29 R. L. Bushman, Councils; R. L. Bushman, Rough Stone, pp. 251-269.

30 M. R. Ballard, Counseling. See Endnote 6-9, p. 493.

31 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, before 8 August 1839, p. 158. See Excursus 40: Dating Joseph Smith’s Vision of Adam-ondi-Ahman, p. 625.

32 R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 260.

33 L. E. Dahl, Plain, p. 126. See Endnote 6-10, p. 493.

The Prophet Joseph Smith was concerned about maintaining a proper spirit in the meetings of the early Church. He had seen by revelation the manner in which ancient assemblies were conducted, and was pained by the offensive behavior that he had sometimes witnessed:

How vain and trifling have been our spirits, our conferences, our councils, our meetings, our private as well as public conversations—too low, too mean, too vulgar, too condescending for the dignified characters of the called and chosen of God.³⁴

Having spoken for the first time about the correct order of councils in the Church at a conference in Hiram, Ohio, on October 11, 1831, the Prophet reported: “The Elders were instructed in the ancient manner of conducting meetings, of which knowledge most of them were ignorant.”³⁵ Beginning on that day, the Prophet called and set apart six brethren to visit the several branches of the Church and teach them “the ancient manner of conducting meetings as they were led by the Holy Ghost.”³⁶ The minutes do not give additional detail about the specifics that they were to teach,³⁷ however one week after the final selection of brethren for this assignment had been completed, Orson Hyde, one of the six called to teach the branches, requested a revelation from the Prophet. The Lord’s response reads in part:³⁸

1 My servant, Orson Hyde, was called by his ordination to proclaim the everlasting gospel, by the Spirit of the living God, from people to people, and from land to land, in the congregations of the wicked, in their synagogues, reasoning with and expounding all scriptures unto them.

2 And, behold, and lo, this is an ensample unto all those who were ordained unto this priesthood, whose mission is appointed unto them to go forth—

3 And this is the ensample unto them, that they shall speak as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost.

4 And whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost shall be scripture, shall be the will of the Lord, shall be the mind of the Lord, shall be the word of the Lord, shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation.

5 Behold, this is the promise of the Lord unto you, O ye my servants.

Although the passage certainly can be applied more generally, Elder Hyde no doubt saw its relevance to his recent assignment to teach the branches to conduct meetings “as they were led by the Holy Ghost.”³⁹ While it was the duty of the presiding authority to provide adequate opportunity for discussion of all matters laid before a council, all present at the meeting had an equally binding responsibility to refrain from speaking impetuously.⁴⁰ On the contrary, each council member was charged to “speak [only] as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost,”⁴¹ thus following the example of Adam’s posterity, who “rose up and blessed Adam,”⁴² and of the patriarch himself, who prophesied “being full of the Holy Ghost.”⁴³ Joseph Smith explained: “Each should speak in his turn and in his place, and in his time and ³⁴ J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 25 March 1839, p. 137. See Endnote 6-11, p. 493.

³⁵ J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 11 October 1831, 1:219.

³⁶ D. Q. Cannon et al., Far West, p. 17, spelling, grammar, and punctuation modernized; cf. Moroni 6:9; D&C 46:2. See Endnote 6-12, p. 493.

³⁷ See Endnote 6-13, p. 494.

³⁸ D&C 68. See J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 1 November 1831, 1:227-229.

³⁹ D. Q. Cannon et al., Far West, p. 17, spelling, grammar, and punctuation modernized; cf. D&C 46:2.

⁴⁰ See Endnote 6-14, p. 494.

⁴¹ D&C 68:3. See Endnote 6-15, p. 494.

⁴² D&C 107:54.

⁴³ D&C 107:56.

season, that there may be perfect order in all things; and that every man, before he makes an objection to any item that is brought before a council for consideration, should be sure that he can throw light upon the subject rather than spread darkness, and that his objection be founded in righteousness.”⁴⁴

That the Saints will have ample opportunity in the future to experience firsthand “the ancient manner of conducting meetings” is attested by Elder Joseph Fielding Smith, who wrote:⁴⁵

Not many years hence there shall be another gathering of high priests and righteous souls in this same valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman. At this gathering Adam, the Ancient of Days, will again be present. At this time the vision which Daniel saw will be enacted.⁴⁶ The Ancient of Days will sit. There will stand before him those who have held the keys of all dispensations, who shall render up their stewardships to the first Patriarch of the race, who holds the keys of salvation....⁴⁷ This council in the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman is to be of the greatest importance to the world. At that time there will be a transfer of authority from the usurper and imposter, Lucifer, to the rightful King, Jesus Christ... Our Lord will then assume the reins of government; directions will be given to the Priesthood; and He, whose right it is to rule, will be installed officially by the voice of the Priesthood there assembled. This grand council of Priesthood will be composed, not only of those who are faithful who now dwell on this earth, but also of the prophets and apostles of old, who have had directing authority. Others may also be there, but if so they will be there by appointment, for this is to be an official council called to attend to the most momentous matters concerning the destiny of the earth.

When this gathering is held, the world will not know of it; the members of the Church at large will not know of it, yet it shall be preparatory to the coming in the clouds of glory of our Savior Jesus Christ as the Prophet Joseph Smith has said.

Seth's Quest for the Oil of Mercy

Tradition records that after recounting the story of the Fall to his posterity at the gathering before his death, Adam asked Eve and Seth to retrieve oil from the Tree of Life so he could receive a healing ordinance of anointing.⁴⁸ Nibley summarizes:

[W]hen at the end of his life Adam felt the accumulating effect of these mortal blows upon him and sensed the approach of death, he implored Eve, “Go with my son Seth near to Paradise... and pray God to... send his angel to Paradise, and give me of the tree out of which the oil floweth, and bring it me, and I shall anoint myself and shall have rest from my complaint.”⁴⁹ He was asking for the “oil of mercy,” which alone could reverse the seven “blows of death” inflicted as a result of the Fall.⁵⁰ For the ultimate healing of the oil of mercy was not to be given to men until the coming of the Messiah, as Eve and Seth were informed by an angel who met them on the way back to the Garden to fetch the oil for Adam.⁵¹ When the Messiah did come, according to the Clementine Recognitions,⁵² he provided that all who come to his kingdom should be anointed with the oil of the Tree of Life, the very oil with which the Father had anointed him

44 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 15 January 1836, pp. 93-94. See Endnote 6-16, p. 494.

45 J. F. Smith, Jr., Way 1945, 1931, pp. 289, 291. See also B. R. McConkie, Millennial Messiah, pp. 578-588.

46 Daniel 7:9-14; cf. D&C 116.

47 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, pp. 157-159.

48 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, pp. 34E-45E; cf. M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 16. See also Commentary 3:9-g, p. 163 and the overview of Moses 4, p. 239. For Islamic versions of this story, see M.al-Kisa'i, Tales, pp. 78, 82-83; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, pp. 60-62; B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 33. See also J. E. Hanauer, Folklore, pp. 39-41.

49 See G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Greek 9:3-9:4, pp. 39E-40E. See Endnote 6-17, p. 495.

50 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Greek 40:1, p. 44E. See the overview of Moses 4, p. 237; Commentary 5:29-b, p. 377; 5:47-b, p. 396.

51 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Greek 40:1-43:3, pp. 44E-46E.

52 Pseudo-Clement, Recognitions, 1:45:5, p. 89; cf. F. S. Jones, Recognitions 1995, 1:45:5, p. 77.

FIGURE 6-3. The Quest of Seth for the Oil of Mercy, 1351-1360. Photo: Assaf Pinkus.

And Adam told Eve, “Arise and go with Seth, my son, to the Garden... And (God) will send his angel to the Garden where the Tree of Life is, from which the oil flows out, so that he may give you a little of that oil... and I will anoint myself and I will be healed of my sufferings.”¹ Echoing the themes of this story, Revelation 22:2 speaks of “the leaves of the tree [that] were for the healing of the nations” and early Christians wrote of being anointed with oil from the Tree of Life in imitation of Adam.

In this sculpture preserved at the Heilig-Kreuz-Münster (Holy Cross Minster) in Schwäbisch Gmünd, Germany, “Adam lies on the ground, on his sickbed, supporting his head in his hands. Eve sits behind him. Her right hand grasps his shoulder while her left is held to her breast, exhibiting her storm of emotions. Behind them one can see a sprouting tree. To their right Seth receives a branch from an angel standing at the entrance to a Gothic structure symbolizing Paradise. Inside the canopy is a tree. Seth points toward his parents. The scenes depict Eve’s mourning over the death of Adam and Seth’s journey to Paradise, prefigurations of the Pieta and Crucifixion.”²

1 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Georgian 36(9):3-4, p. 39E, 40E.

2 A. Pinkus, Impact, pp. 167-168. For more on the background of these sculptures, see Excursus 45: Impact of the “Black Death” on Art and Literature, p. 640.

to be the initium omnium.⁵³ The final culmination of the whole plan of salvation, according to a very old Judeo-Christian writing, will be when Michael opens the gates and bestows the healing oil on the righteous as “the hundred-fold reward of those who have worked and toiled diligently.”⁵⁴

The story of Adam’s quest to have the gates of Paradise reopened and to obtain the healing oil of the Tree of Life once again underscores the fact that:

... this story of Adam and Eve was never narrated as a simple, objective account of human beginnings, as a story that could take its place alongside modern theories of the “big bang” or evolution. Instead, the story of Adam and Eve has always been subject to liturgical enactment.

53 I.e., the first of all. See Pseudo-Clement, Recognitions, 1:45:4-5, p. 89; cf. F. S. Jones, Recognitions 1995, 1:45:4-5, pp. 76-77.

54 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 174 and H. E. Gaylord, 3 Baruch, 15:1-2, p. 676. See Endnote 6-18, p. 495.

FIGURE 6-4. Ampulla 11, with inscription "Oil from the Tree of Life," 5th-6th century

*To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.*¹ In the early church, oil from ampullae (flasks) of this sort was used in rites of anointing accompanying baptism. The Armenian liturgy includes two anointings—"one with unperfumed oil before the baptism and the other, after it, with the myron or perfumed oil."² Likewise, in the Life of Adam and Eve, Adam asked Seth to retrieve oil from the Tree of Life to heal him from the effects of the Fall, with clear allusions to washing and anointing.³

Filled with holy oil, ampullae such as this one from a collection in the treasury of the Basilica di S. Giovanni Battista in Monza, Italy, were carried home as relics of the True Cross by Byzantine pilgrims to the Holy Land.⁴ One such pilgrim wrote: "The Cross is brought out of this small room for veneration... and they offer oil to be blessed in little flasks. When the mouth of one of the little flasks touches the Wood of the Cross, the oil instantly bubbles over, and unless it is closed very quickly it all spills out."⁵ About the image on the ampulla, Anderson writes: "Notice that Christ is crucified on a cross that looks like a tree⁶—the actions of the first Adam are undone by the second. And those who benefit are the recently baptized, who enjoy the healing oils that were denied Adam once he was evicted from Paradise."⁷ The two crucified thieves flank the Savior, and two kneeling suppliants, representing the pilgrims themselves, reach out to touch the cross in veneration.⁸ Careful inspection also reveals that waters representing the rivers of paradise are flowing from the base of the cross/Tree of Life: "from these rivers, as from the side of Christ, flowed life for men and for angels."⁹

- 1 Revelation 2:7. On the themes of the Book of Life and the Tree of Life in the book of Revelation, see K. L. Barney, A Book or a Tree.
- 2 M. E. Stone, Angelic Prediction, p. 125.
- 3 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, p. 40; G. A. Anderson, Penitence, pp. 49-53.
- 4 See Excursus 36: The Legend of the True Cross, p. 614.
- 5 Cited in G. Vikan, Byzantine, p. 22.
- 6 Cf. H. Maguire, Paradise, p. 30.
- 7 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 133.
- 8 G. Vikan, Byzantine, pp. 23-24.
- 9 Ibid., p. 22; cf. H. Maguire, Paradise, p. 29. See also Excursus 45: Impact of the "Black Death" on Art and Literature, p. 640.

It derives its meaning from the world of penitence and restoration. A more pertinent parallel than Darwinian evolution is the parable of the Prodigal Son,⁵⁵ a favorite Gospel reading in the Lenten season.

The story of the Fall had value in the early church because every Christian was called to situate his or her life in between the contours of Adam and Christ as well as Eve and Mary. The arc that extends from Adam to Christ defines a horizon of mercy.⁵⁶

⁵⁵ Luke 15:11-32.

⁵⁶ G. A. Anderson, Perfection, p. 187.

FIGURE 6-5. Toward Immortality and Eternal Youth, 1907
Albert-Dominique Roze, 1861-1952
Photo: Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, 1956-

SEE COLOR PLATE 6-5.

*O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?*¹ The quest for immortality has been a part of countless myths and stories, including one from 1889 entitled In the Year 2889. Published under Jules Verne's name but written by his son Michel,² it contains an account of a Dr. Faithburn, "a firm believer in human hibernation," who had his vital functions "suspended" and was carefully placed in a coffin, with instructions about the proper way for him to be awakened one hundred years to the day later. As the whole world awaited the news, the casket was opened. Dr. Faithburn, "a veritable mummy," was taken out, and efforts were made to revive him. "Dead!" proclaims Dr. Wilkins. 'And how long has he been dead?' Dr. Wilkins makes another examination. 'A hundred years,' he replies.³

More than a century after his death, Jules Verne (1828-1905) is still reputed by some to be "the most read, the most published, and the most translated" author on earth.⁴ Fittingly, it was Michel Verne who commissioned Albert Roze, a pupil of Rodin, to create this unusual tomb in the Cimetière de la Madeleine, Amiens, France, attesting his father's hope in the resurrection—an unattainable feat for the science of 2889 but certainly not impossible to God.⁵ The monument, entitled "Vers l'Immortalité et l'Éternelle Jeunesse" (Toward Immortality and Eternal Youth), features a sculpture of Jules Verne raising the broken tombstone. With his right arm extended, he looks steadily upward at the heavens. The head is modeled on Verne's death mask. In 1984, the Czech astronomer, Zdenek Kopal, then at the University of Manchester, England, visited the grave and there buried a pinch of moon dust he had obtained from NASA in tribute to the man who had famously imagined such a voyage.⁶

1 1 Corinthians 15:55.

2 W. Butcher, Verne, p. 250.

3 J. Verne, 2889 (English); cf. J. Verne, 2889 (French), pp. 38, 44.

4 W. Butcher, Verne, p. 331 n. 1.

5 See Endnote 6-19, p. 495.

6 Letter to Professor Miroslav Štátný.

"The Whole Meaning of the Law"

The story of Adam and Eve's expulsion from and return to the Garden parallels a common three-part literary pattern in ancient Near Eastern literature: trouble at home, exile abroad, and happy homecoming.⁵⁷ The pattern is as old as the Egyptian story of Sinuhe from 1800 BCE⁵⁸ and is replicated in scriptural accounts of Israel's apostasy and return⁵⁹ as well as in the lives of biblical characters such as Jacob.⁶⁰ The theme is as ubiquitous in modern literature as it was in those times.⁶¹

To the ancients, however, this pattern was more than a mere storytelling convention, since it reflected a sequence of events common in widespread ritual practices for priests and kings.⁶² Barker describes how the thinking of early Christians applied this pattern to the story of Adam and Eve, and how it may have reflected their own hopes for a return to the original faith, the authentic priesthood, and the true temple:

The Christian vision reverses the story in Genesis 1-3, and has humans restored to Eden... Adam was remembered as the first high priest, and Jesus was described as the new Adam. The 57 A. Gileadi, Literary, p. 12. See Endnote 6-20, p. 496.

58 J. B. Pritchard, ANET, pp. 18-22. The pattern of "return" in this story is discussed in J. Assman, Death, pp. 164-185.

59 J. E. Coleson, Life Cycle; A. Gileadi, Literary; A. Gileadi, Decoded; S. D. Ricks, Prophetic.

60 Genesis 27-33.

61 N. Frye, Secular Scripture. See Endnote 6-21, p. 496.

62 See, e.g., D. E. Callender, Adam, pp. 211-218.

FIGURE 6-6. The Forgiving Father, ca. 1954-1958
Frank Wesley, 1923-2002

SEE COLOR PLATE 6-6.

*But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.*¹ Raised a Methodist in North India, Frank Wesley expressed familiar biblical themes in art using the vernacular of his native land. This famous picture shows a “Brahmin father, pale skinned and pure, embracing his exhausted, sun-scorched son who would so obviously fall to the ground from exhaustion without his father’s supportive embrace.”² “The color contrast is very strong at the top to emphasize the difference between purity and sin. But the loving embrace of the father, with the son’s face covered against his chest, begins to merge at the base of the two figures until their clothing is blended.”³ During the springtime Holi (= fire) festival, celebrated most enthusiastically in North India, revelers throw colored powders and liquids on each other to celebrate the triumph of good over evil—yellow, blue, and pink being among the most popular colors. As the father sustains his faltering son, the fabric of the son’s robe becomes imbued with these colors, symbols of divine purity.

The picture was originally painted for the Chapel of a Social Center in Japan. Sadly, the Center was destroyed by the bombing of Hiroshima, however it was later rebuilt “to serve a former outcast group.” “[O]ne of the most powerful effects of the painting is that neither face is shown. One can move quite readily—or perhaps with some hesitancy—to either figure. After all, it is not easy to repent, or in many instances, to forgive.”⁴

- 1 Luke 15:20.
- 2 G. Wheeler et al., Wesley.
- 3 N. Wray, Wesley, p. 44.
- 4 N. Wray, Background.

Christians remembered and hoped for the earlier Eden—the true temple—and saw themselves returning to the place and the priesthood from which they had been driven. This was their world view... [T]he “Moses” religion with the Ten Commandments and the Aaron priesthood did not finally replace the Abrahamic faith and the Melchizedek priesthood [as the dominant strain of Judaism] until just before the first temple was destroyed.⁶³

True to the archetype of Adam and Eve, the parable of the Prodigal Son also concerns the outbound journey of the transgressor, his “coming to himself”⁶⁴ in the remembrance of the bounty of his former home, and his return to the embrace of a loving father.⁶⁵ “However large his family a father cannot spare [even] one.”⁶⁶ He watches and waits until his lost child returns,⁶⁷ and when he sees him, “he disregards the deference due him,”⁶⁸ throws aside any notion of propriety,⁶⁹ and runs to greet his wayward son. “There is no holding back on the father’s part, no waiting for his [son] to make the first move.”⁷⁰ The father reaches out eagerly in tender embrace, bestows a kiss as a token of pardon,⁷¹ and joyfully prepares the emblems of investiture: a robe, a ring, a pair of shoes, and a fatted calf.⁷²

63 M. Barker, Temple Theology, pp. 4, 7. See also M. Barker, Revelation, pp. 20, 327.

64 Luke 15:17. See Endnote 6-22, p. 496.

65 Luke 15:11-32. See W. Barclay, Parables, p. 187; A. J. Hultgren, Parables, p. 72; R. L. Millet, Lost. See Endnote 6-23, p. 496.

66 W. Barclay, Parables, p. 183.

67 See Endnote 6-24, p. 496.

68 See Endnote 6-25, p. 496.

69 See Endnote 6-26, p. 496.

70 D. Packard et al., Feasting, p. 47.

71 J. Jeremias, Parables, p. 102.

72 See Endnote 6-27, p. 497.

FIGURE 6-7. The Return of the Prodigal Son, 1773
Pompeo Batoni, 1708-1787

SEE COLOR PLATE 6-7.

*O Lord, wilt thou encircle me around in the robe of thy righteousness!*¹
In the words of his plea for deliverance, Nephi draws on the culture of the desert. Fleeing to the tent of a sheikh who will defend him against his enemies, the weary fugitive humbly kneels and says, “I am your suppliant.” Honor impels the sheikh to put the hem of his great hooded robe over the suppliant’s shoulder with a comforting promise of protection, “This is your tent, this is your family. We’ll make a place for you.”²

1 2 Nephi 4:33.

2 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:199.

With equal poignancy, Nephi explores this theme in an anguished psalm of danger and deliverance.⁷³ Packard describes the setting:

This passage occurs at a crucial point in the Book of Mormon. Lehi has just died, leaving his sons without his guidance. Under Lehi’s authority, Nephi had become his brothers’ “ruler” and “teacher.”⁷⁴ But with Lehi gone, Laman and Lemuel are angry with Nephi, saying, “We will not have him to be our ruler; for it belongs unto us, who are the elder brethren, to rule over this people.”⁷⁵ Just after Nephi’s psalm, we find Laman and Lemuel becoming increasingly angry with Nephi, “insomuch that they did seek to take away [his] life.”⁷⁶ The Lord warns Nephi to flee for his life into the wilderness, just as He earlier warned Lehi to escape from those who sought his life.⁷⁷

Nibley explains the significance of the words of Nephi’s psalm for the people of the desert:

When [an Arab is trying to escape his enemies], he runs to the tent of any great sheikh he can find. He goes in and kneels down before the sheikh and says, “I am your suppliant.”⁷⁸ The sheikh is then obligated to put his caftan [—his great hooded robe—] over [the suppliant’s] katef which is the same word as shoulder—to put the hem of his garment over his shoulder and say, “Ahlan wa-sahlan wa-marhaban. This is your tent, this is your family.” The Hebrew word ohel for tent is the same as the Arabic word ahl for family.⁷⁹ He says, “We’ll make a place for you.”⁸⁰ Then the lord or the chief is under obligation to defend you against the enemies that are chasing you. You are now under his protection, and he will protect you.⁸¹

73 2 Nephi 4:15-35.

74 2 Nephi 5:19.

75 2 Nephi 5:3.

76 2 Nephi 5:2.

77 D. Packard et al., Feasting, p. 92; see 2 Nephi 2:1-2.

78 Arabic Ana dakhiluka.

79 “When he says ahlan, that means both family and tent” (H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 18, 1:225).

80 In Arabic, “marhaban means ‘have place’” (ibid.).

81 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:199; cf. Psalm 27:5, H. W. Nibley, Approach, pp. 74-75,

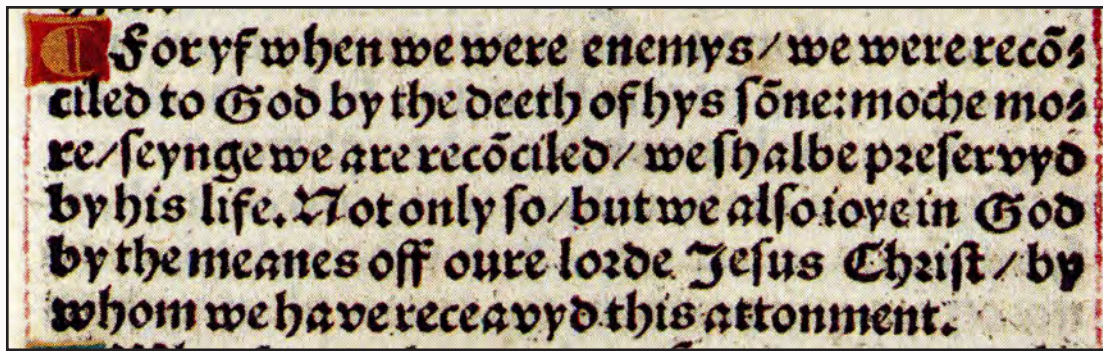

FIGURE 6-8. Romans 5:10-11 in William Tyndale's English Translation of the New Testament, 1526

For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son: much more, seeing we are reconciled, we shall be preserved by his life. Not only so, but we also joy in God by the means of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have received this atonement.¹ Like many others of Tyndale's memorable translations of scriptural phrases, this version became the basis for the historically dominant rendering of the text into English. In the English Bible, "atonement" is "the single word of Anglo-Saxon origin that describes a theological doctrine; other doctrinal words come from Latin, Hebrew, or Greek."²

Harold Bloom not only considers William Tyndale "the greatest of [English] Bible translators," but also "the only true rival of Shakespeare, Chaucer, and Walt Whitman as the richest author in the English language," and an "authentic inventor of an English prose style austere sublime."³ In a paper delivered at the opening reception of a Library of Congress exhibition on Tyndale and the Bible, David Daniell, chair of the Tyndale Society and curator of the event for the British Library, said: "I was recently in the state of Utah [at Brigham Young University], where a student who is a clever man with a computer gave me at last the definitive figure for how dependent the King James [New Testament] is on Tyndale, and I am happy to announce tonight that the definitive figure is 83 percent. Eighty-three percent of the King James Bible is Tyndale exactly."⁴

Elder John A. Widtsoe considered the King James Bible unsurpassed in its "beauty of language and spiritual connotation."⁵ The fact that the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants are both "consistent with the King James tradition"⁶ allows phrases from any one of these books of scripture to more easily suggest associations with like passages in the other two works.⁷ But, questions of literary aesthetics and stylistic consistency aside, how faithful is the kJV translation to the voice of the original? With respect to the Old Testament, Robert Alter, a contemporary expert in the analysis of biblical narrative as literature, has given his opinion as follows: "The language of biblical narrative in its own time was stylized, decorous, dignified, and readily identified by its audiences as a language of literature, in certain ways distinct from the language of quotidian reality. The tricky complication however, is that in most respects it also was not a lofty style, and was certainly neither ornate nor euphemistic.... a plain spoken one, and, moreover one that evinces a strong commitment to using a limited set of terms again and again, making an aesthetic virtue out of repetition... The right direction [for a modern English equivalent to ancient Hebrew style] I think was hit on by the King James Version... There is no good reason to render biblical Hebrew as contemporary English, either lexically or syntactically. This is not to suggest that the Bible should be represented as fussily old-fashioned English, but a limited degree of archaizing coloration is entirely appropriate..."⁸ Summarizing the limitations of current translations of the Bible, Alter concludes that "in the case of the modern versions, the problem is a shaky sense of English, and in the case of the King James Version, a shaky sense of Hebrew.... [That being said] the kJV, as Gerald Hammond, an eminent British authority on Bible translations has convincingly argued,⁹ remains the closest approach for the English reader to the original—despite its frequent and at times embarrassing inaccuracies, despite its archaisms, and despite its insistent substitution of Renaissance English tonalities and rhythms for biblical ones."¹⁰

1 Tyndale's translation of Romans 5:10-11, spelling modernized.

2 S. M. Wilcox, Tyndale, p. 81; but see discussion of Latin precedents in Excursus 46: The Origin and Meaning of the Term "Atonement", p. 642.

3 H. Bloom, Names Divine, pp. 28, 47, 31; cf. D. Daniell, Mind, pp. 7-8; J. Pelikan, Whose Bible, p. 174; N. Shaheen, References, pp. 18-19.

4 G. Fineberg, Let There Be. See also Y. French, Courage.

5 J. A. Widtsoe, Evidences, p. 120.

6 D. Packard et al., Feasting, pp. ix-x.

7 J. F. McConkie, Revelation, p. 126. See also discussion in P. L. Barlow, Bible, pp. 176-177.

8 R. Alter, Genesis, p. xxv. See also G. Hammond, Translations, pp. 664-665. Note, however, that this statement does not apply equally well in the case of the kJV New Testament. See Endnote 6-35, p. 502.

9 G. Hammond, Translations.

10 R. Alter, Genesis, pp. ix-x. Attempting to correct the deficiencies of the kJV while retaining appropriate elements of its style, Alter has produced masterful translations of the Pentateuch, the story of David, and the Psalms (R. Alter, Five Books: R. Alter, David; R. Alter, Psalms).

Nephi relies on the Lord Himself as his Protector. The scriptural imagery has him running toward the place of safety with upraised arms, a sign of distress that can be seen clearly from a distance, from beyond the point where the sound of the voice could be heard.⁸² Above all else, Nephi wants to be encircled with the Lord's robe of righteousness, to be one with Him, to have his sins covered over with the Lord's glory, and to have that glory be eternally upon him. Yet he knows that his deliverance from sin and death will not be a cheap affair that might be effected by a mere declaration of reassuring words. Instead, his Redemption is a possibility that carries a dreadful cost.⁸³ This truth is no mere footnote to the Gospel but rather, as Alma explains: "the whole meaning of the law, every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice; and that great and last sacrifice will be the Son of God, yea, infinite and eternal."⁸⁴

The results of this "great and last sacrifice" have been described in many different ways. For example, there is the term "expiate" which means "to completely satisfy or appease; to make propitious"⁸⁵ and the term "redeem" which can mean to "pay a ransom to deliver a captive"⁸⁶ These two terms address the idea of justification, the aspect of the sacrifice of Christ that enables forgiveness and release from the bondage of sin. But they do not adequately express the concept of sanctification, the complementary process by which we may be "spiritually... born of God," having received a "mighty change in [our] hearts" and "his image" in our countenances.⁸⁷ For, in the end, it is not enough for us to be cleansed from all sin: we must also acquire the divine attributes that qualify us for the society of celestial beings. As Elder Dallin H. Oaks explained: "... the Final Judgment is not just an evaluation of a sum total of good and evil acts—what we have done. It is an acknowledgment of the final effect of our acts and thoughts—what we have become."⁸⁸

Embracing the meaning of each of the more limited descriptions, the term "atonement" describes both the process and the ultimate result of the sacrifice of Jesus Christ.⁸⁹ It focuses attention on the most central and important concept of that sacrifice—namely, the idea of "taking two things that have become separated, estranged, or incompatible... and bringing them together again, thus making the two be 'at one.'"⁹⁰

The significance of the Atonement is both intimately personal on the one hand, and a matter of cosmic scale on the other. The cosmic dimension of the Atonement includes the plan of the Father to bring all of creation into perfect harmony, that His "kingdom come. [His] will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."⁹¹ Just as Creation began with subjecting the unity of unorganized matter to successive stages of division and separation, so, in the end of God's work on this earth, all things are to be brought together in one again.⁹² For example, in Ephesians 1:10, we read that the Lord intends to "gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth."⁹³ Similarly, in D&C 128:18, the Lord says that "it is necessary in the ushering in of the dispensation of the fulness of times... that a whole and complete union, and

82 See Endnote 6-30, p. 499.

83 D. Bonhoeffer, Cost, pp. 45-48. "Surely it is a lighter labor to make a world than to save one. Scripture will call the heavens the work of God's finger (Psalm 8:3), but redemption will be called the labor of His arm (Psalm 77:15) and the travail of His soul (Isaiah 53:11)" (W. A. Gage, Gospel, pp. 83-84).

84 Alma 34:14.

85 See Endnote 6-31, p. 499.

86 See A. Rey, Dictionnaire, s.v. "acheter," 1:15-16; "expier," 1:817. See Endnote 6-32, p. 499.

87 Alma 5:14. See Excursus 26: Justification and Sanctification, p. 596.

88 D. H. Oaks, To Become, p. 32. See also J. E. Faulconer, Self-Image. See Endnote 6-33, p. 501. See also Excursus 22: The Nature of Satan's Premortal Proposal, p. 577.

89 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:199.

90 S. E. Robinson, Believing, p. 7. See Excursus 46: The Origin and Meaning of the Term "Atonement", p. 642.

91 Matthew 6:10; cf. 3 Nephi 13:10; D&C 65:5-6; M. Barker, Earth, pp. 8-9; H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 10, p. 126.

92 See Endnote 6-34, p. 501.

93 See also 1 Corinthians 15:28; Colossians 1:15-17; D&C 27:13.

FIGURE 6-9. Gate to Paradise
Wulf E. Barsch, 1943-

SEE COLOR PLATE 6-9.

*Adam, do not fear. A god you desired to be; a god I will make you... And after a short time my mercy (will be) revealed to you.*¹ Wulf Barsch's depiction of the Gate to Paradise shows the way back to the Garden of Eden. "[T]he palm evokes the wandering tribes of Israel... for it is their hope and succor in the desert."²

Born in Reudnitz, Bohemia, Barsch was a student of printmaking and painting in Hanover and Hamburg. His paintings, typically depicting ideal "landscapes of the mind," are replete with abstract symbols of color and form, yet evidence the sensibilities of the old masters.³ Appraising Barsch's work, Nibley wrote: "there is a sense of deep concern, an ominous and brooding feeling of admonition and warning... The pictures do not tell a story—there is nothing trivial, contrived, clever or cute about them; they seem more like a solemn summing-up, with something of both suspense and finality about them."⁴ In his work, Barsch often relates the Gospel to themes of cosmology, astronomy, and ancient Jewish, Christian, and Egyptian tradition. He said: "I've never gotten over the idea that somehow Egypt is our schoolmaster. Joseph Smith knew that the Egyptians had real archaic wisdom. The ancient order, as he called it, and our temples are full of references to eternal life and its connected cosmology. While everyone else throughout the ages threw up their hands in hopelessness at the terrible questions surrounding the cosmos, the ancient Egyptians never gave up asking and praying for answers."⁵

1 S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam 1983, 3:2, p. 994.

2 H. W. Nibley, From the Earth, p. 554.

3 R. G. Oman et al., Images, pp. 152-153.

4 H. W. Nibley, From the Earth, pp. 552, 554.

5 All Things, p. 10.

welding together of dispensations, and keys, and powers, and glories should take place, and be revealed from the days of Adam even to the present time."

The intimate personal dimension of the Atonement was described by Jesus Christ in His "High Priestly Prayer" on behalf of His disciples. He pleaded that they, and those they later would teach, would be "made perfect in one":

20 Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

21 That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

22 And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one⁹⁴

At a first level of understanding, the Hebrew term for atonement, kippur, can be thought of as roughly approximating the English word "cover."⁹⁵ In the Mosaic temple, the idea of kippur related to the kapporet that formed the lid of the ark of the temple where Jehovah stood to forgive—or cover—the sins of the people. The veil of the temple, also a kapporet, covered the entry of the Holy of Holies. Besides the notion of "covering of sin" implied by the term kippur, however, there appears to have been the additional concept of "union,"

94 John 17:20-23; cf. D&C 38 :27. See B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 420-423.

95 See Endnote 6-36, p. 502.

FIGURE 6-10. Drawing of a Barque Shrine, Karnak, ca. 320 BCE
Michael P. Lyon, 1952-

*I have come into thy presence, Wennefer. I have brought to thee the Osiris Ani, his heart having been found faithful..., having come forth from the testing (balance) devoid of offense to any god or goddess.*¹ “This sequence from a temple at Karnak shows how the royal initiation culminated in ritual embraces. In each scene the words of instruction are written over the heads of the speakers. First comes the washing or baptism, then (in another room) the bestowal of crown and throne; then the candidate is conducted by ministers of ‘life, health, strength, and joy’ to Thoth the [Master of Ceremonies], who introduces him at the last shrine, where he receives the paternal embrace that confirms his ‘appearing in glory on the throne of his father Re.’ Finally the maternal embrace of Innt, who says, ‘I nurse thee with my milk.’ Thus the rites end in the intimate embrace of the primordial family.”²

1 Book of the Dead: Papyrus of Ani 2:374; 3 pl. 4, as cited in H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 448.

2 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 445; cf. H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:201.

a “covering with glory,” in the ancient temple cult.⁹⁶ After the priest and the people had completed all the rituals and ordinances of the atonement, the veil was opened so that the Lord could tell the people that their sins had been forgiven, symbolically welcoming them into His presence.⁹⁷ Following his study of the term kippur, Nibley concluded that:

... the literal meaning of kaphar and kippurim is a close and intimate embrace, which took place at the kapporeth or the front cover or flap of the Tabernacle or tent.⁹⁸ The Book of Mormon instances are quite clear, for example, “Behold, he sendeth an invitation unto all men, for the arms of mercy are extended towards them, and he saith: Repent, and I will receive you.”⁹⁹ “But behold the Lord hath redeemed my soul from hell; I have beheld his glory, and I am encircled eternally in the arms of his love”¹⁰⁰ ... From this it should be clear what kind of oneness is meant by the Atonement—it is being received in a close embrace of the prodigal son, expressing not only forgiveness but oneness of heart and mind that amounts to identity.¹⁰¹

Those who, like Adam and Eve, receive the Gospel become “partakers of the divine nature”¹⁰² and by virtue of this fact participate in Christ’s sufferings as well as His glory.¹⁰³ Nowhere is this fact more apparent than in the temple where, as Madsen points out, “a full-scale covenant relationship, the Atonement of Christ may be written, as it were, in our 96 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 37. Barker associates such ritual imagery with the concept of “cleaving” to God (see A. J. Heschel, Heavenly Torah, pp. 190-193). She notes, however, that “the meaning seems to have shifted from ‘union’ to ‘obedience’ after the demise of the ancient temple.” See Commentary 3:24-a, p. 184 and Excursus 2: Ancient Concepts of Wisdom, p. 516.

97 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:198.

98 See Endnote 6-37, p. 503.

99 Alma 5:33.

100 2 Nephi 1:15.

101 H. W. Nibley, Atonement, pp. 567-568; cf. the ritual embrace in Egyptian temple rites (H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 445-449). See Endnote 6-38, p. 504.

102 2 Peter 1:4. For more on this verse, see J. Starr, Partakers and B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 392-395.

103 Romans 8:17. See Endnote 6-39, p. 504.

FIGURE 6-11. Drawing from the Stela of Tantamani, Karnak, ca. 660 BCE
Michael P. Lyon, 1952-

*I have received thee in an embrace of gold; I enfold thee with permanence, stability, and satisfaction; I endow thee with health and joy of heart, I immerse thee in rejoicing, joy, gladness of heart and delight forever.*¹ “The last king of the 25th Dynasty receives the royal embrace from Amun-Re... The characters on the right are various symbols of embracing.”² “The two arms [of the selkit ideogram here] are embracing, and they are embracing the djed symbol, which represents the marrow in the bones.”³ This is called ‘health and strength.’ He says here, ‘I give thee all life and power.’ This is a picture of the symbol for life—actually the umbilical cord, the navel. The other is [the] was [scepter], which is always rendered as ‘power in the priesthood, authority to speak for the priesthood, etc.’ Also, when he went forth, according to Moet, they embraced him on either side. The kings always had those two fans called the shuit or the khaibit. This is the counterweight which hangs on the breast to impart breath and life.”⁴

1 Ptah the creator to Rameses III, cited in H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 452.

2 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 452.

3 In the Book of the Dead, the symbol specifically denotes the spine of Osiris (I. Shaw et al., Dictionary, p. 98).

4 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:201.

very flesh.”¹⁰⁴ “One is... obliged,” writes Seach, to become not only “one flesh’ with Christ, but [also] one life, one sacrifice, thus participating actively in the eternal act of love which began in the heavens.”¹⁰⁵ Continues Madsen:

Anticipating Christ’s coming, Nephi exhorted the righteous to “[endure] the crosses of the world.”¹⁰⁶ Following his ordeal and resurrection, Christ declared that we must all “take up [our] cross” and “deny [ourselves] of all ungodliness.”¹⁰⁷ For the Master, the cross preceded the crown.¹⁰⁸ So also in our lives. Our afflictions may ultimately be swallowed up in the joy of Christ, but we will have had to come up through our own afflictions to share His throne.¹⁰⁹

As one who held fast to the promises throughout his own trials, the Prophet Joseph Smith boldly assured the Saints: “All your losses will be made up to you in the resurrection provided you continue faithful [to Christ]. By the vision of the Almighty I have seen it.”¹¹⁰ For all those who, in the footsteps of Adam and Eve, strive to serve God to the best of their understanding, the day will come when both the sufferings of life and the pain of death “shall be sweet unto them”¹¹¹ whereas, for the unrepentant, not only the inevitable

104 T. G. Madsen, Suffering, p. 234. See Romans 8:17; 2 Corinthians 4:10; Galatians 2:20, 6:17; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 1:69, pp. 83-84; I. Mikael, son of Bakhayla, Godhead, p. 136, Commentary 5:4-a, p. 355, and Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

105 J. E. Seach, Ancient Texts 1995, p. 550 and Revelation 13:8. Gross notes that “to imitate the ‘passion’ of a hero-savior in order to ensure salvation” is the heart of the mysteries (J. Gross, Divinization, p. 87). Cf. P. E. S. Thompson’s observation that the story of God’s choosing of Abraham—and later of Israel—“was to demonstrate that it was not an election to privilege... but to responsibility for all mankind” (cited in A. LaCocque, Trial, p. 19).

106 2 Nephi 9:18.

107 Moroni 10:32.

108 Cf. C. S. Lewis, Weight, p. 105.

109 T. G. Madsen, Suffering, pp. 240-241. For William Blake’s vision of the struggle to establish the heavenly kingdom on earth, see Excursus 41: William Blake’s “Jerusalem”: A Vision of the Kingdom, p. 627. For Shakespeare’s appropriation of Genesis themes relating to Creation and Redemption, see Excursus 44: Shakespeare Creates a World: “The Tempest”, p. 635.

110 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 16 April 1843, p. 296.

111 D&C 42:46.

FIGURE 6-12.
Descent of Christ into Limbo, 1368
Andrea da Firenze, active 1343-1377

SEE COLOR PLATE 6-12.

Remember that... the keeper of the gate is the Holy One of Israel; and he employeth no servant there; and there is none other way save it be by the gate.¹ This painting illustrates the descent of Jesus Christ, after His death and before His resurrection, into what is called in Roman Catholic tradition “Limbo.”² Limbo was described as a place reserved for the just who died before Jesus Christ came to earth (Limbo of the Patriarchs) and also, in the Augustinian tradition at least, for infants who died before they could receive baptism and be freed from “original sin” (Limbo of Infants).³ Here, in a depiction of an event called “The Harrowing of Hell,”⁴ Jesus Christ is shown carrying a Crusader’s flag into the dominion of Death and Hell, whose broken gates are gaping wide.⁵ Satan, grasping a useless key, peers out from beneath the feet of the advancing Christ. Adam (recognizable here by his long white hair and beard) and Eve (at his arm) are shown as the first ones to be reclaimed by Christ, followed by Abel (carrying a lamb), and other notables including Abraham, David, and Solomon. As they are brought forth, Adam, Eve, and the other just souls are typically shown in depictions of this scene as being taken by the “right hands of fellowship”⁶ or pulled by the wrist from their graves,⁷ emphasizing their utter dependence on the sure and steady strength of the Savior for their escape.⁸ Nibley paraphrases the teaching of the Pistis Sophia, which emphasizes that “[u]ntil Christ came... no soul had gone through the ordinances in their completeness. It was He who opened the gates and the way of life.”⁹

Of the significance of this scene for temple worship, Madsen writes: “As the ‘keeper of the gate,’¹⁰ Jesus the Christ summons us, ‘Come unto me in my holy sanctuary,’¹¹ and he promises, ‘Whoso knocketh, to him will [I] open.’¹² He is in His sanctuary; ‘he employeth no servant there.’¹³ We who put off our shoes to walk on holy ground need not be put off by the fact that mere mortals administer these divine ordinances. They may be familiar and ordinary persons from just around the corner. Yet they represent the Lord Himself. Christ Himself is blessing us, reaching down to us through those ordinances. The Lord Himself is waiting for us beyond the veil. It is He who voices and magnifies and endows the temples with a summation of human experience that is a step-by-step ascent into His presence.”¹⁴

1 2 Nephi 9:41.

2 From Latin limbus, referring to the edge or boundary of hell.

3 R. Giorgi, Anges, pp. 46-49; cf. 1 Peter 3:18-21, 4:6 and Ephesians 4:8-10—paraphrasing Psalm 68:18.

4 Harrowing.

5 The jaws and teeth of the gates shown here are vestiges from imagery connecting the abyss of hell to the stomach of Leviathan or the great fish that swallowed Jonah. In the Harrowing of Hell, “Christ shoves the cross into death’s gullet and forces it to vomit up souls” (C. W. Bynum, Resurrection, p. 148n. 102; cf. ibid., pp. 192-199).

6 Galatians 2:9; M. R. James, Apocryphal, p. 140.

7 R. Giorgi, Anges, pp. 46-48.

8 G. A. Anderson, Perfection, pp. 158, 175. See also T. M. Compton, Handclasp, pp. 620-621; S. D. Ricks, Dexiosis, Mosiah 22:22, Commentary 1:25-c, p. 60., Figure 5-13, p. 351; Figure 6-14, p. 473, Excursus 53: Comparative Explorations, Dexiosis, p. 681; and Figure B-1, p. 872. See Endnote 1-22, p. 79.

9 H. W. Nibley, Apocryphal, p. 310. See C. Schmidt, Pistis, 3:135, pp. 701-705; G. R. S. Mead, Pistis, 4:135, pp. 293-294.

10 2 Nephi 9:41.

11 Matthew 11:28. See 2 Chronicles 30:8; D&C 110:7-9.

12 2 Nephi 9:42.

13 2 Nephi 9:41.

14 T. G. Madsen, Temple and Atonement, pp. 77-78.

encounter with death but also all memory of their illusory pleasures will be tainted with deep sorrow and bitterness.¹¹² C. S. Lewis observed profoundly that:

... both good and evil, when they are full grown, become retrospective. Not only [the Heavenly] valley but all [their] earthly past will have been Heaven to those who are saved. Not only the twilight in [the spirit prison], but all their life on earth too, will then be seen by the damned to have been Hell. That is what mortals misunderstand. They say of some temporal suffering, “No future bliss can make up for 112 D&C 42:47; cf. Luke 16:25.

FIGURE 6-13. Charity with an Anchor, 1876.

Photo: Jeffrey M. Bradshaw, 1956-

Here, then, are two irrevocable acts ...to give powerful encouragement to us, who have claimed his protection by grasping the hope set before us. That hope we hold. It is like an anchor for our lives, an anchor safe and sure. It enters in through the veil, whose Jesus has entered on our behalf as a forerunner, having become a high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek.¹ Alluding to the blessings of the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood,² the author of Hebrews assures the Saints of the firmness and unchangeableness of God's promises. The "two irrevocable acts" are "God's promise and the oath by which He guarantees that promise."³

By this scripture, we are meant to understand that so long as the we hold fast to the Redeemer, who has entered "through the veil on our behalf... as a forerunner," we will remain firmly anchored to our heavenly home, and the eventual realization of the promise "that where I am, there ye may be also."⁴ There is also undoubtedly the sense that "Jesus, the high priest, [stands] behind the veil in the Holy of Holies to assist those who [pass] through."⁵ "The anchor would thus constitute the link that 'extends' or 'reaches' to the safe harbor of the divine realms... providing a means of access by its entry into God's presence."⁶ Comparing the symbol of the anchor to an image in Virgil, Witherington concludes that he was "thinking no doubt of an iron anchor with two wings rather than an ancient stone anchor."⁷ The shape of the anchor recalls both the covenant and the oath by which the former is "made sure."⁸

The symbol of the anchor can be related to the tradition of pounding nails into the Western Wall of the Jerusalem Temple. Rona writes: "Older texts reveal a now-forgotten custom of the 'sure nails.' This was the practice of bringing one's sins, grief, or the tragedies of life to the remains of the temple wall and 'nailing' them in a sure place. The nails are a reminder of Isaiah's prophecy that man's burden will be removed when the nail in the sure place is taken down."⁹

Christian use of anchor imagery goes back to "the first century cemetery of St. Domitilla, the second and third century epitaphs of the catacombs."¹⁰ Although the anchor is frequently depicted in connection with a figure representing the Hope afforded by Jesus Christ, it is, from the perspective of those who aspire to a place in God's presence, an even more appropriate companion to the crowning blessings associated with the requirement of Charity,¹¹ as shown in this stained glass panel by Ward and Hughes from the cathedral in Lichfield, England.

1 S. Sandmel et al., New English Bible, Hebrews 6:18-20. See also Ether 12:4.

2 D&C 84:33-48. See also M. G. Romney, Oath, p. 17 and Excursus 3: Temple Blessings in the Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood, p. 519.

3 K. L. Barney, NT Footnotes, 3:82 n. d. See also M. G. Romney, Oath, p. 17; J. Smith, Jr., Words, 27 June 1839, p. 5; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 1 May 1842, 4:608; 2 Nephi 31:20; Enos 1:27.

4 John 14:3. See also Hebrews 4:14; H. W. Attridge et al., Hebrews, pp. 118-119.

5 M. Barker, Risen, pp. 42-43. See also Gregory Nazianzen, Oration 39, 16, p. 358; Origen, Luke, Homily 24 on Luke 3:15-16, p. 103; 1 Corinthians 3:13; Excursus 11: The Sacred Circle, p. 547.

6 H. W. Attridge et al., Hebrews, p. 184; cf. pp. 185, 222-224. See also L. T. Johnson, Hebrews, pp. 172-173.

7 B. Witherington, III, Letters, p. 225.

8 2 Peter 1:10.

9 D. Rona, Revealed, p. 194. See Isaiah 22:23-25.

10 Christian Symbols.

11 See Figure 5-13, p. 351. In 2 Nephi 31:20, Nephi associates this "love of God and of all men" with the ultimate attainment of both a "perfect brightness of hope" and the sure promise of the Father ("Ye shall have eternal life").

it," not knowing that Heaven, once attained, will work backwards and turn even that agony into a glory. And of some sinful pleasure they say "Let me but have this and I'll take the consequences": little dreaming how damnation will spread back and back into their past and contaminate the pleasure of the sin. Both processes begin even before death. The good man's past begins to change so that his forgiven sins and remembered sorrows take on the quality of Heaven: the bad man's past already conforms to his badness and is filled only with dreariness.¹¹³ And that is why, at the end of all things, when the sun rises [in the place of God's glory] and the twilight turns to blackness down [where Satan reigns], the Blessed will say, 'We have never lived anywhere except in Heaven,' and the Lost, 'We were always in Hell.' And both will speak truly.¹¹⁴

113 See Endnote 6-41, p. 505.

114 C. S. Lewis, Divorce, pp. 67-68.

FIGURE 6-14.

The Woman at the Tomb and the Ascension, ca. 400

Here, then, are two irrevocable acts ...to give powerful encouragement to us, who have claimed his protection by grasping the hope set before us. That hope we hold. It is like an anchor for our lives, an anchor safe and sure. It enters in through the veil, whose Jesus has entered on our behalf as a forerunner, having become a high priest forever after the order of Melchizedek.¹ A fitting metaphor for the mortal lives of Adam and Eve is given in Lehi's dream of the Tree of Life, which included a "rod of iron" to which his sons were urged to cling or hold fast as they advanced on the pathway to eternal life.² It is easy to imagine the perilous journey of Lehi's vision as paralleling accounts of ritual ascent by ropes, handrails, and chains to God's presence at the top of sacred mountains.³ The Islamic mystical text The Mother of Books describes such a scene: "Then all the seven palaces and heavenly far spheres are joined... by chains of light as by a rope or cable. The spirit of speech now commands the human spirits, 'Grasp this holy cord, and by this heavenly journey rise higher.' So God's word is fulfilled: 'He holds on to the firm handhold.'"⁴ Though such an ascent in ancient times required a combination both of man's efforts and the safety provided by the help of the handholds generously provided, the final step into God's presence has always been made only through the grace of the condescending Lord, whose eternally-binding gesture of welcome, fellowship, and safety was required to assure the initiate a permanent place beyond the veil.⁵ Note that the "great and spacious building" of Lehi's vision was, like the mountain of Paradise, also "high above the earth."⁶ Erected in the same spirit as was the Tower of Babel,⁷ it represents all man-made rivals to the sacred Mountain of the Lord.

About this illustration, Nibley comments: "This ancient Christian diptych combines Resurrection and Ascension motifs in a way that recalls Egyptian parallels... Note especially the stretched-forth hand that receives the ascending one⁸ and the document that he holds."⁹ Though most sources see the hand as belonging to God, the Mandaean Ginza describes a scene where the worthy deceased one, interred in his sacral garment, is raised by the hand of Adam.¹⁰ The building is the original form of the Holy Sepulchre or "Edicule," rebuilt in the 19th century within the larger church of the same name.¹¹ "An angel sits in front of the tomb (flanked by sleeping Roman guards) and speaks to the three Marys of the Resurrection."¹² Near the entrance to the heavenly sanctuary are two apostles, most likely Peter and James,¹³ one covering his face and the other praying with uplifted hands.¹⁴ Beside them and immediately adjacent to the sepulchre stands a Tree of Life. Two birds perch in its branches, though only one of them can be said to be definitely eating of its fruit.¹⁵

1 S. Sandmel et al., New English Bible, Hebrews 6:18-20; cf. p. 246. See also Isaiah 42:6, Philippians 3:10-14.

2 1 Nephi 8:20-24, 30; 15:23-24.

3 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 16, p. 195; cf. Figure 3-7, p. 143. See Endnote 6-44, p. 505.

4 W. Barnstone et al., Mother, p. 683 and Qur'an 2:2:256, 31:22. See Endnote 6-45, p. 506.

5 John 14:2-23; D&C 98:18.

6 1 Nephi 8:26; cf. 11:35-36, 12:18.

7 Genesis 11:1-9.

8 Here, of course, the figure represents Jesus Christ (W. J. Hamblin, Temple Motifs, p. 473 n. 99).

9 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 456.

10 K. Rudolph, Coptic, GL 3:43, p. 270; cf. J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 2 July 1839, p. 157; 5 October 1840, p. 168. See Endnote 6-46, p. 506.

11 A. Parrot, Golgotha, p. 82; Z. Vilnay et al., Vilnay Guide, pp. 102-103.

12 W. J. Hamblin et al., Temple, p. 105.

13 In an apocryphal account, only these two, rather than the full set of apostles, receive special instructions from Jesus Christ and witness His Ascension (F. E. Williams, Apocryphon of James, 15:5-16:2, pp. 36-37). See also D. R. Cartlidge et al., Art, p. 133.

14 See Commentary 5:4-a, p. 355.

15 J. O'Reilly, Iconography, p. 176; cf. Commentary 1:1-b, p. 42; 3:9-g, p. 165; 4:5-b, p. 246; Figure 3-8, p. 145; Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654. See Endnote 6-47, p. 506.

Moses 6:1-12: Text and Commentary

CHAPTER 6 (November–December 1830) RIGHTEOUS LINE OF SETH (PP. 475-478) AND ^aAdam hearkened unto the voice of God, and ^bcalled upon his sons to repent. 2 And ^aAdam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and he called his name ^bSeth. And ^cAdam glorified the name of God; for he said: ^dGod hath appointed me another seed, instead of Abel, whom Cain slew. 3 And God revealed himself unto Seth, and ^ahe rebelled not, but offered an acceptable sacrifice, like unto his brother Abel. And to him also was born a son, and he called his name ^bEnos. 4 And ^athen began these men to call upon the name of the Lord, and the Lord blessed them; BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE (PP. 478-483) 5 And a ^abook of remembrance was kept, in the which was recorded, ^bin the language of Adam, for it was given	unto as many as called upon God ^cto write by the spirit of inspiration; 6 And by them their ^achildren were taught to read and write, having a ^blanguage which was pure and undefiled. 7 Now ^athis same Priesthood, ^bwhich was in the beginning, shall be in the end of the world also. 8 Now ^athis prophecy Adam spake, as he was moved upon ^bby the Holy Ghost, and a ^cgenealogy was kept of the children of God. And ^dthis was the book of the generations of Adam, saying: In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him; 9 ^aIn the image of his own body, male and female, created he them, and blessed them, and ^bcalled their name Adam, in the day when they were created and became living souls in the land upon the ^cfootstool of God. 10 And Adam lived one hundred and thirty years, and begat a son ^ain his own likeness, after his own image,	and called his name Seth. 11 And the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were ^aeight hundred years, and he ^bbegat many sons and daughters; 12 And all the days that Adam lived were ^anine hundred and thirty years, and ^bhe died. (Moses 6:13-8:30 follows in the Pearl of Great Price)
---	--	---

1 And Adam hearkened unto the voice of God, and called upon his sons to repent.

2 And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and he called his name Seth. And Adam glorified the name of God; for he said: God hath appointed me another seed, instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

- 1 a Adam hearkened unto the voice of God. This statement about Adam contrasts with 5:57, where we are told that the sons of men “would not hearken unto [God’s] voice.” Consistent with the declaration¹¹⁵ and decree¹¹⁶ of the Lord, Adam preached repentance to his posterity.

As in Moses 5:5, note that only Adam’s name is mentioned, and not Eve’s.¹¹⁷ This omission should not be taken as implying that Eve did not hearken.

- b called upon his sons to repent. Cf. Commentary 5:12-a, p. 364.

- 2 a Adam knew his wife again. Because of his grief at the loss of Abel, some traditions record that Adam “knew his wife again” to conceive Seth only when he was finally commanded to do so by an angel.¹¹⁸

Verse 2 constitutes both a summing up of the previous chapter and an anticipation of the next several verses of this one, consistent with Cassuto’s two principles of biblical exposition: 1. that the “conclusion of a narrative should reflect the opening,” and 2. “that the stories should have happy endings.”¹¹⁹ In both sections, “Adam knew his wife,” the child is named with reference to the Lord/God, Cain and Abel are mentioned, and two births are recorded.¹²⁰ Moreover, just as Adam and Eve “ceased not to call upon God,”¹²¹ Seth and Enos will “call upon the name of the Lord.”¹²²

Despite the death of Abel, a righteous posterity to Adam will be raised up through Seth, ensuring the continuity of a covenant people. Parallels between Abel and Seth are made explicit in vv. 2-3. The shedding of the blood of the righteous and innocent Abel—the beloved son of the Ancient of Days whose story has always been linked with the idea of proper sacrifice¹²³—seems to have given rise to a curious ordinance of sprinkling with blood and “washing” (or “baptism”) for little children that was denounced by the Lord in JST Genesis 17:4-7.¹²⁴

- b Seth. Sarna connects the name Seth “with the stem sh-y-t, ‘to place, put, set’... Since the noun shat means ‘foundation,’ as in Isaiah 19:10 and Psalm 11:3, there may lie behind the name the notion that, as Numbers Rabbah 14:20 has it, ‘With him the world was founded [anew].’”¹²⁵ In this sense, there also may be an allusion to temple-building and seership.¹²⁶

Nibley conjectures that “Seth means ‘second or substitute or equal.’ Shetaa means the same thing as two, double, [or] twin because it tells us in the scriptures that he will take the place of Abel.”¹²⁷ Islamic tradition reports that, in contrast to stories about Adam and Eve’s previous

115 Moses 5:14-15.

116 Moses 5:58-59.

117 See Commentary 5:5-c, p. 359; cf. 5:1-d, p. 354.

118 W. L. Lipscomb, Seth, 1-4, pp. 189-190; cf. Ibn Kathir in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 29. See also Commentary 5:2-a, p. 354.

119 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 190.

120 Ibid., p. 243. See Moses 5:16-17, 6:2-3.

121 Moses 5:16.

122 Moses 6:4.

123 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 22 January 1834, pp. 58-59.

124 Cf. Moroni 8. See also Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

125 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 39; cf. H. Freedman et al., Midrash, 6:618.

126 See Figure 3:10, p. 147 and Commentary 2:9-a, p. 105. See Endnote 4-9, p. 299.

127 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, 21, p. 260.

2 And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and he called his name Seth. And Adam glorified the name of God; for he said: God hath appointed me another seed, instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

children, “Seth was born without a twin,”¹²⁸ perhaps suggesting that he was a “replacement” for Abel.¹²⁹

Gardner suggests a derivation of the name from the Babylonian word for “six,” “as a description, not only evocative of the Babylonian numerical system’s base 60..., but suggestive also of new creation in view of Adam’s being created on the sixth day...”¹³⁰ Seth’s name is theologically evocative of new beginnings:¹³¹ there are six years between sabbath years.”¹³²

c Adam glorified the name of God; for he said. Notably, the book of Moses has Adam rather than Eve giving the child a name. The phrase “for he said” implies that Adam “glorified the name of God” in the very act of naming. Indeed, whereas in the naming of Cain, Eve said “I have gotten,”¹³³ Adam said of Seth “God hath appointed.”¹³⁴ For a discussion of the “two different systems of naming children”—namely, either by the father or by the mother—see Cassuto.¹³⁵

d God hath appointed me another seed, instead of Abel, whom Cain slew. Joseph Fielding McConkie observes that Seth is “effectually the second Abel. As such he becomes a natural type for Christ, who like Abel was first a martyr, and then like the second Abel, Seth, ruled in glory with his father.”¹³⁶ An Armenian text explains: “Seth was given to Adam as a son of consolation, in place of Abel. God pronounced him and his sons, ‘Sons of God.’ And this is the reason that he made writing. He was first called ‘God’... And [his posterity] were called true ‘sons of God’ because God loved them, before they fornicated”¹³⁷—i.e., when later Sethites began to follow the wicked practices of the Cainites.¹³⁸

The story of the families of Cain and Seth introduces a larger theme that will continue throughout the OT: “Though Cain’s sons have prospered and become the founders of the new world after the Fall, the focus of the narrative turns from the line of Cain to that of the new son born ‘in place of Abel’... In such narratives as these, the author clearly betrays his interest in the ‘seed’¹³⁹ (zera) of the woman. The focus is on the ‘seed’ and the one who will crush the head of the snake. A pattern is established in chapter [5] that will remain the thematic center of the book. The one through whom the promised seed will come is not the heir apparent, that is, the eldest son, but the one whom God chooses¹⁴⁰—a motif first introduced in the story of Satan’s jealousy of Michael’s preeminent position in premortality¹⁴¹. Abel, the younger of the two sons, received God’s favor,¹⁴² Seth, still the younger son, replaced Abel.”¹⁴³ This pattern is repeated in the stories of Isaac¹⁴⁴ (replacing

128 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:152, p. 324.

129 See Commentary 6:2-d, p. 476.

130 Moses 2:26-31.

131 Moses 6:2-3.

132 B. K. Gardner, Calendar, p. 195 n. 577.

133 Moses 5:16.

134 Cf. V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 242; R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 164.

135 U. Cassuto, Documentary, pp. 65-66.

136 J. F. McConkie, Symbolism, p. 181. See Moses 6:3-4.

137 M. E. Stone, Abel, 4:2, 4:5, pp. 150, 151.

138 See Moses 5 Gleanings, p. 415.

139 Moses 4:21.

140 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the PGP, p. 238.

141 See Excursus 21: The Power and Premortal Status of Satan, p. 575; cf. Commentary 4:6-a, p. 249.

142 Moses 5:17.

143 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 69.

144 Genesis 17:19,

2 And Adam knew his wife again, and she bare a son, and he called his name Seth. And Adam glorified the name of God; for he said: God hath appointed me another seed, instead of Abel, whom Cain slew.

3 And God revealed himself unto Seth, and he rebelled not, but offered an acceptable sacrifice, like unto his brother Abel. And to him also was born a son, and he called his name Enos.

4 And then began these men to call upon the name of the Lord, and the Lord blessed them;

Ishmael), Jacob¹⁴⁵ (“supplanting” Esau), Ephraim and Manasseh¹⁴⁶ (replacing Reuben and Simeon), and Jacob and Joseph¹⁴⁷ (“first-born... in tribulation” as replacements for Laman and Lemuel).¹⁴⁸ In contrast, “Cain takes his place in the narrative as one who was not to become part of the line of the ‘seed,’ With him throughout the remainder of the Book of Genesis are Japheth,¹⁴⁹ Ham,¹⁵⁰ Nahor,¹⁵¹ Ishmael,¹⁵² Lot,¹⁵³ and Esau.”¹⁵⁴

3 a he rebelled not, but offered an acceptable sacrifice, like unto his brother Abel. Seth’s obedience to the law of sacrifice confirms that he is indeed a fitting replacement for the righteous Abel.¹⁵⁵

b Enos. Like the name “Adam,” Enos (or Enosh) means “man.”¹⁵⁶ While the choice of Cain’s name had revealed Eve’s hope for a child that could be looked on as God himself,¹⁵⁷ the name of Seth’s son “puts the emphasis on the basic frailty of man because the stem ’-n-sh means ‘to be weak.’”¹⁵⁸

Cassuto notes a second parallel between Adam and Enos: “This son would be the founder of the human race belonging to the line of Seth, which was destined to survive upon earth, just as [the Cainite] Enoch was the inaugurator of the branch of mankind descended from Cain, whose days were not prolonged.”¹⁵⁹

4 a then began these men to call upon the name of the Lord. Cassuto points out the “parallelism of both language and theme here: a human being is called by a name suited to him—Enosh; and God is called by a name befitting Him—Lord [YHWH].”¹⁶⁰ Perhaps a stronger parallel is to be found with v. 1: Adam “called upon his sons to repent,” and they in turn “began... to call upon the name of the Lord.” Previously, when Adam and Eve “called upon the name of the Lord,”¹⁶¹ they were answered with commandments and angelic visitations revealing priesthood ordinances. Likely, we are meant to infer that the prayers of Seth and Enos were answered similarly.¹⁶²

145 Genesis 27:36,

146 Genesis 48:5,

147 2 Nephi 2:1-2,

148 J. A. Tvedtnes, First-Born, p. 208.

149 Genesis 10:2-5.

150 Genesis 10:6-20.

151 Genesis 11:29; 22:20-24.

152 Genesis 17:20.

153 Genesis 19:19-38.

154 J. H. Sailhamer, Genesis, p. 69. On Esau, see Genesis 36.

155 Commentary 6:2-b, p. 475.

156 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 246.

157 See Commentary 5:16-e, p. 368.

158 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 39.

159 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 246, cf. p. 229. See Commentary 5:42-a, p. 390.

160 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 246.

161 Moses 5:4.

162 cf. Moses’ experiences—see Commentary 1:17-b, p. 55; 1:18, 20, 25

4 And then began these men to call upon the name of the Lord, and the Lord blessed them;
 5 And a book of remembrance was kept, in the which was recorded, in the language of Adam, for it was given unto as many as called upon God to write by the spirit of inspiration;

A contrasting parallel should also be noted: “And men began from that time forth to be carnal, sensual, and devilish.”¹⁶³ This parallel may account for the idea in the targums that idol worship commenced at this time.¹⁶⁴

While this verse contains the fourth instance in four verses of “call” and “name,” it contains the only instance of “Lord” (= Jehovah, instead of “God”). Cassuto notes the key position that the mention of the name of Jehovah plays with respect to the Genesis account, observing that the corresponding verse occurs “precisely at the seventieth reference” to the Divine name, and that “with these words the section comes to an end. It is inconceivable that all this should be pure coincidence.”¹⁶⁵

- 5 a book of remembrance was kept. Nibley infers from this scripture that “the written records should be as old as the human race itself... According to [the ancients], the king had access to that divine book which was consulted at the time of the creation of the world... A later... Pharaoh recalls, ‘My heart yearned to behold the most ancient books of Atum. Open them before me for diligent searching, that I may know god as he really is!’... In Egypt every step of the founding of a new temple had to follow the prescriptions given in the heavenly book, since such a founding represented and dramatized the creation of the earth itself.”¹⁶⁶

The theme of writing is associated with Adam in the story of the *cheirograph*¹⁶⁷ and in various traditions concerning the testament of Adam.¹⁶⁸ The Zohar also has a tradition of an esoteric Book of Adam that was transmitted to him “after his departure from the Garden of Eden” by the angel Rezial and “three envoys” who accompanied him. The same book was also said to have been given to the righteous Enoch and to the “sons of Elohim, who contemplate and know it.”¹⁶⁹ The book was intended to preserve “the primordial wisdom of paradise for Adam and his generations” and also “the genealogy of the entire human race.” A pseudepigraphal Sefer Rezial was compiled in its present form in the seventeenth century “comprising ancient magical, mystical, and cosmological teachings.”¹⁷⁰

Al-Kis’ai recounts that “on the first night of Ramadan... God revealed to Adam twenty-two leaves, on which were several chapters written in disjointed letters, none of which were joined together. This was the first book God revealed to Adam. It contained a thousand words, comprising duties, traditions, legislation, the foreboding threat, and accounts of the world. In it God showed him the actions of the people of every age... Adam looked upon all of that and knew what his children would do after him. And Adam read it to his children. Then God commanded him to write... with the pen the twenty-eight letters which are in the Torah, the Gospels, the Psalms, and the Qur’an.... When these letters had been revealed, Adam learned them and taught them to his son Seth... until God sent Enoch... to whom He revealed fifty pages... And they passed down the Books of Seth and Enoch and the Book of Adam until the time of Noah and Abraham.”¹⁷¹

163 Moses 5:13.

164 See J. W. Etheridge, Onkelos; M. Maher, Pseudo-Jonathan, 4:26, p. 35.

165 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 192.

166 H. W. Nibley, Written Word, p. 104. See Excursus 16: The Role of Revelation in Temple Building, p. 561.

167 See the overview of Moses 5, p. 332 and Excursus 37: Traditions About the Role of Abel, p. 617.

168 E.g., S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam.

169 D. C. Matt, Zohar I, Be-Reshit 1:37b, pp. 237-238; cf. Be-Reshit 1:55b, pp. 310-313.

170 D. C. Matt, Zohar I, p. 237 n. 1041.

171 M. al-Kis’i, Tales, pp. 75-76; cf. al-Tabari, Creation, 1:151, p. 322.

5 And a book of remembrance was kept, in the which was recorded, in the language of Adam, for it was given unto as many as called upon God to write by the spirit of inspiration;

Consistent with an emphasis on the central role of language and writing in the story of Adam, some Islamic traditions assert that the first thing created by God was a divine pen.¹⁷² No doubt inspired by a relevant verse in the Qur'an,¹⁷³ this story might also “reflect an extension of the Christian notion that the pen is an extension of the Logos or Word.”¹⁷⁴ After having given instructions to his posterity, Adam was said to have written his “will” (= testament) which was then prominently “placed on a ladder (like that used for the ascent and descent of angels and souls),”¹⁷⁵ thus providing a hint as to its contents. The divine pen was also associated with “prophethood,” as in the case of Enoch who, in order to emphasize the nature of this gift, specifically was said to have written with “the pen.”¹⁷⁶

- b in the language of Adam. In similar words, Nephi writes that his record was made “in the language of [his] father.”¹⁷⁷ Verse 6, however, says that the language used by Adam and his children “was pure and undefiled.” Of relevance, as Robertson acknowledges, is the “widely held Mormon belief that the founding members of the Jaredite civilization preserved the Adamic language at their immigration to the New World.”¹⁷⁸ Thus the description by the brother of Jared of his apocalyptic vision was rendered linguistically inaccessible without divine interpretive help, since “the language which ye shall write I [God] have confounded.”¹⁷⁹ Robertson wisely cautions, however, that the “concept of the Adamic language grew among Latter-day Saints out of statements from scripture, comments of early Church leaders, and subsequent tradition. It does not play a central doctrinal role, and there is no official Church position delineating its nature or status.”¹⁸⁰

Widespread Jewish tradition has it that “Hebrew was the original language of mankind until the time of the confusion of languages, and that Eber was the only one who retained it.”¹⁸¹ Jubilees 12:25-27 sees Hebrew as the “tongue of creation,” which had to be revealed anew to Abraham “because it ceased from the mouth of all of the sons of men from the day of the Fall.”¹⁸² Islam includes a “belief in the singular qualities of Arabic,”¹⁸³ however it was not Adam but Ishmael who was said to have been “the first to speak in proper and correct Arabic.”¹⁸⁴

Eco has written an engrossing survey from ancient to modern times of the quest either to recover or to invent the perfect language.¹⁸⁵ McWhorter and Ostler have written accessible “natural histories” of language,¹⁸⁶ and Pennock has argued against both old creationism and “intelligent design,” using linguistic evolution as a test case.¹⁸⁷

172 M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, 1, p. 5; al-Tabari, Creation, pp. 198-203.

173 Qur'an 96:4.

174 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 33.

175 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:161, p. 332; cf. M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 41. See Figures 1-2 and 1-3, p. 34, and Figure 5-13, p. 351.

176 M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 42.

177 1 Nephi 1:2.

178 Ether 1:33-43; 3:24-28.

179 Ether 3:21-28.

180 J. S. Robertson, Adamic Language, p. 18.

181 L. Ginzberg, Legends, 5:205 n. 91.

182 O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, p. 82.

183 F. Leemhuis, Interpretation, p. 155.

184 Ibn Kathir, cited in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 109; cf. Abu Ja'far al-Baqir: “clear Arabic” (cited in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 110; cf. Qur'an 16:103, 26:195).

185 U. Eco, Search.

186 J. McWhorter, Power of Babel; N. Ostler, Empires.

187 R. T. Pennock, Tower, esp. pp. 117-179. See G. Deutsch, Unfolding for an account of linguistic evolution.

5 And a book of remembrance was kept, in the which was recorded, in the language of Adam, for it was given unto as many as called upon God to write by the spirit of inspiration;

6 And by them their children were taught to read and write, having a language which was pure and undefiled.

7 Now this same Priesthood, which was in the beginning, shall be in the end of the world also.

8 Now this prophecy Adam spake, as he was moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and a genealogy was kept of the children of God. And this was the book of the generations of Adam, saying: In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him;

c to write by the spirit of inspiration. OT1 renders this phrase as: “to write with the finger of inspiration.”¹⁸⁸

6 a their children were taught to read and write. See Commentary 6:5-a, p. 478.

b language which was pure and undefiled. See Commentary 6:5-b, p. 479.

7 a this same Priesthood. That is, the patriarchal order of the priesthood.¹⁸⁹

OT1 reads with a slight difference: “Now this was in the beginning that shall be at the end of the world.”¹⁹⁰

b which was in the beginning, shall be in the end of the world also. In D&C 29:30, the Lord declared that “the first shall be last, and that the last shall be first in all things whatsoever I have created by the word of my power.” In the beginning, God established the same patriarchal order on earth that had been known in heaven. “It was a perfect theocratic, patriarchal system with father Adam at the head. This system prevailed among the righteous from Adam to the time of Abraham and beyond.”¹⁹¹ In the last dispensation God has restored the higher priesthood and associated ordinances of the Abrahamic covenant that had been generally withheld from Israel.¹⁹² “Today dedicated husbands and wives enter this order in the temple in a covenant with God. The blessings of this priesthood [are] given only to husbands and wives together.”¹⁹³

This restored order is “the Melchizedek Priesthood organized according to an eternal family order, rather than according to offices, quorums, and councils that comprised the Church as an instrument to build up the divine patriarchal order.”¹⁹⁴ During the Millennium, it will be gradually put into full operation. Elder Joseph Fielding Smith wrote that the celestial family organization will be “one that is complete—an organization linked from father and mother and children of one generation, to the father and mother and children of the next generation, thus expanding and spreading out down to the end of time.”¹⁹⁵

8 a Now this prophecy Adam spake. Evidently referring to the statement recorded in v. 7.

b by the Holy Ghost. This phrase is present in OT2 but not in OT1.¹⁹⁶

188 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 97.

189 H. L. Andrus, Perfection, pp. 299-330.

190 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 97.

191 R. L. Millet et al., Destiny, p. 39.

192 D&C 84:23-25; JST Exodus 34:1-2. See also B. R. McConkie, NT Commentary, 2:503-504.

193 L. A. McKinlay, Patriarchal Order.

194 H. L. Andrus, Doctrines, pp. 159-160.

195 J. F. Smith, Jr., Doctrines, 4 April 1942, 2:175. See Excursus 9: The Premortal Organization of the Human Family, p. 544.

196 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, pp. 97, 608.

8 Now this prophecy Adam spake, as he was moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and a genealogy was kept of the children of God. And this was the book of the generations of Adam, saying: In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him;

9 In the image of his own body, male and female, created he them, and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created and became living souls in the land upon the footstool of God.

- c genealogy was kept of the children of God. The scriptures are mainly a record of the patriarchs and their descendants—the fate of other lines remains more or less a mystery. Highlighting our ignorance of these peoples, Nibley asks: “What about those people who lived before Cain and Abel?¹⁹⁷ What about those who disappeared from sight?¹⁹⁸ What about those who were not even warned of the Flood?¹⁹⁹ What about those many, many who visited the earth as resurrected beings?²⁰⁰ What about the Watchers?²⁰¹ What about the sons of God who should not marry the daughters of men, and vice versa?²⁰² And what about the giants they begot when they did marry?²⁰³ What about the comings and goings of Enoch’s day between the worlds?...²⁰⁴ What about the Cainites?²⁰⁵ What about the nations among whom Noah will have surviving progeny?...²⁰⁶ Methuselah boasted about his line as something special.²⁰⁷ Why special if it included the whole human race? These blessings have no meaning if all the people of the earth and all the nations are the seed of Noah and Enoch.”²⁰⁸
- d this was the book of the generations of Adam. Sarna comments: “This is most likely the title of an ancient genealogical work that served as the source for the data provided in the present chapter, in [Genesis] 11:10-27, and possibly in other genealogical lists as well. Hebrew sefer, here rendered [‘book’], specifically denotes a written document, not an oral composition.”²⁰⁹ Interrupted by restored extracts from the lost book of Enoch,²¹⁰ the account contained in this record is seemingly resumed again in Moses 8:1.²¹¹

Comments Nibley: “Adam becomes Adam, a hominid becomes a man, when he starts keeping a record. What kind of record? A record of his ancestors—the family line that sets him off from all other creatures... That gap between the record keeper and all the other creatures we know anything about is so unimaginably enormous and yet so neat and abrupt that we can only be dealing with another sort of being, a quantum leap from one world to another. Here is something not derivative from anything that has gone before on the local scene, even though they all share the same atoms.”²¹²

- 9 a In the image of his own body. See Commentary 2:26-c, p. 113.
- b called their name Adam. Here “Adam” is used as a name for all mankind, men and women, rather than as the proper name of the first father.²¹³

197 Moses 5:12.

198 Moses 7:21.

199 Moses 7:12, 22.

200 E.g., Genesis 18:2, 19:1, 32:24.

201 J. L. Kugel, Traditions, pp. 179-185, 194-216; H. Schwartz, Tree, pp. 457-458; Excursus 24: The Watchers, p. 585.

202 Moses 8:13-22.

203 Moses 8:18.

204 Moses 7:27.

205 Moses 8:41-42.

206 Moses 7:51-53.

207 Moses 8:2-3.

208 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, p. 79. For a longer version of this statement by Nibley, see Moses 3 Gleanings, p. 195.

209 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 41.

210 Moses 6:26-7:69.

211 See Commentary 6:5-a, p. 478.

212 H. W. Nibley, Before Adam, pp. 82, 83.

213 See Commentary 2:27-a, p. 115.

9 In the image of his own body, male and female, created he them, and blessed them, and called their name Adam, in the day when they were created and became living souls in the land upon the footstool of God.

10 And Adam lived one hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his own image, and called his name Seth.

11 And the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were eight hundred years, and he begat many sons and daughters;

c footstool of God. Draper et al. note that this “is the earliest reference to the earth as God’s footstool. On one level, it links him closely with the earth. On another, it demonstrates that the created or terrestrial order [before the Fall stood] below the celestial order.”²¹⁴

10 a in his own likeness, after his own image. Writes Friedman: “The first man’s similarity to his son is described with the same two nouns that are used to describe the first two humans’ similarity to God.”²¹⁵ It certainly sounds as if it means something physical here... In any case, the significance of this verse is to establish that whatever it is that the first humans acquire from God, it is something that passes by heredity. It is not only the first two humans but the entire species that bears God’s image.”²¹⁶ Sarna concurs: “Each act of procreation is an imitation of God’s original creation of man.”²¹⁷

With respect to Seth, Stone notes that in the scriptural account he “is said to have been created in the image of Adam,”²¹⁸ while various accounts in the Adam literature call him the ‘image of God.’²¹⁹ By way of contrast, “Cain... was not similar to Adam.”²²⁰ The Cave of Treasures records that Seth was called “the Beautiful” and was “a man mighty and perfect like unto Adam.”²²¹ Similarly, in a statement about his brother Alvin, the Prophet said that he “was a very handsome man, surpassed by none but Adam and Seth, and of great strength.”²²² D&C 107:43 records that Seth “was a perfect man, and his likeness was the express likeness of his father, insomuch that he seemed to be like unto his father in all things, and could be distinguished from him only by his age.” Adam has also been described as “beautiful” in both ancient and modern sources.²²³

Hamilton observes that all of this is a fulfillment of a promised blessing: “That Adam reproduces himself through Seth, and Seth through Enosh, etc., demonstrates that God’s blessing has become effective. They are not only created by God but blessed by God. Such blessing is manifested in multiplication. It is appropriate that the creation of man be prefaced to Adam’s descendants through Seth rather than through Cain.”²²⁴

11 a eight hundred years. A change to OT1 in Oliver Cowdery’s handwriting reads “870.” This change was made sometime after his return from his mission to the Lamanites in August 1831 and before July 1832.²²⁵ He also made several other changes to the ages of the patriarchs in OT1, but they do not appear in OT2, which had been transcribed previously. It cannot be definitively confirmed whether these changes were made under the direction of the Prophet,

214 R. D. Draper et al., Commentary, p. 87.

215 Moses 2:26-27.

216 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 30.

217 N. M. Sarna, Genesis, p. 41. See Commentary 2:26-c, p. 113.

218 Moses 6:10.

219 See, e.g., M. E. Stone, Armenian Apocrypha 1996, p. 150 n. 4.2.

220 Targum Jonathan, cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 168.

221 E. A. W. Budge, Cave, p. 71; cf. S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:2, pp. 105-106; Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 18, p. 27.

222 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 9 January 1843, 5:247.

223 See Endnote 5-5, p. 433.

224 V. P. Hamilton, Genesis, p. 255.

225 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 97; K. P. Jackson, Book of Moses, p. 102. See also Excursus 40: Dating Joseph Smith’s Vision of Adam-oni-Ahman, p. 625.

11 And the days of Adam, after he had begotten Seth, were eight hundred years, and he begat many sons and daughters;

12 And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died.

however there is a parallel in one instance between the revised age of the prophet Enoch in Moses 8:1 and his age in D&C 107:49, which was recorded in 1835.²²⁶

About these changes, Jackson and Swift observe: “As we study the ages of the Patriarchs, we find there is always internal consistency for each man. There is never an instance in which the age has been changed for how long a Patriarch lived after the birth of his son without the same number of years being add to the Patriarch’s life.... Although there is internal consistency for each Patriarch, there is no such consistency throughout the changes. No two men have the same number of years added to their lives... Also, there is no discernible pattern among the changes.”²²⁷ Moreover, none of these changes are reflected in the numerous variations found in ancient manuscripts of the Bible.

Although no explanation is provided for the puzzlingly long lives of the patriarchs, the careful attention given to their ages by the Prophet here, in D&C 107:42-53, and in the Lectures on Faith argues for the conclusion that their ages were interpreted literally by him. Note that in view of the “exaggerated traditions current in the ancient East,” Cassuto concludes that the ancient reader would find these numbers “low and modest”!²²⁸ Writes Friedman: “It is clear that this author thought of a year as a normal solar year because that is how long the Flood lasts. The point to note is: life spans are pictured as growing shorter. The ten generations from Adam to Noah approach ages of 1,000. But the last one to live more than 900 years is Noah. The next ten generations start with Shem, who lives 600 years, and life spans decline after him. The last person to live more than 200 years is Terah. Abraham (175), Isaac (180), and Jacob (147) live long lives, but not as long as their ancestors. And Moses lives to be 120, which is understood to have become, at some point, the maximum for human life.”²²⁹

b begat many sons and daughters. 1 Enoch describes the children born to Adam and Eve after Seth as being wicked, in the likeness of Cain.²³⁰

12 a nine hundred and thirty years. A change to OT1 in Oliver Cowdery’s handwriting reads “1000.”²³¹ Edward Stevenson reported a statement by Joseph Smith that Adam “was within six months of a thousand years old, which is one day with the Lord’s time, thus fulfilling the Lord’s decree: In the day thou eatest of the fruit of that tree thou shalt surely die—and he did, six months before the day was out.”²³² The figure of 1000 years for the death of Adam can be found in Islamic traditions.²³³

b he died. Three years prior to his death, Adam gathered his descendants to Adam-ondi-Ahman and “predicted whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation.”²³⁴ Other gatherings of a similar nature are mentioned elsewhere in scripture.²³⁵

226 There are complex dating issues relating to Moses 6 and D&C 107. See Endnote 6-3, p. 491.

227 K. P. Jackson et al., Patriarchs, p. 7.

228 U. Cassuto, Adam to Noah, p. 264.

229 R. E. Friedman, Commentary, p. 31. See Moses 8:17.

230 G. W. E. Nickelsburg, 1 Enoch, 85:8, p. 364.

231 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 97. See Commentary 3:17-c, p. 175; 6:11-a, p. 482.

232 Edward Stevenson, Life, p. 64, spelling and punctuation modernized. See also p. 49. Cited in K. P. Jackson, et al., Patriarchs, p. 8.

233 M. al-Kisa’i, Tales, p. 80; A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, p. 81; al-Tabari, Creation, 1:160, p. 331; Ibn Kathir, cited in B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 34.

234 L. C. Berrett et al., Missouri, pp. 377-456; D&C 107:53-56; the overview of Moses 6, p. 457.

235 E.g., Genesis 49:1ff.; 2 Nephi 1:1ff.; Ether 6:19ff.

12 And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died.

The Life of Adam and Eve recounts God's instructions for the dressing of Adam and Eve in preparation for their burial and in anticipation of the resurrection:²³⁶ "God spoke to Michael and said, 'Go to the Garden of the [third] heaven and bring [me] three linen cloths... and cover Adam's body.'²³⁷ Later, "Michael, the archangel, came and spoke to Seth and taught him how to dress [Eve following her death]... and said 'Thus shall you dress every human being who dies, until the day of the end, through the resurrection.'²³⁸

236 See the overview of Moses 4, p. 239.

237 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 48:1-2, pp. 86E-87E; cf. M. Herbert, Irish Apocrypha, p. 16; A. al-Tha'labi, Lives, p. 81.

238 G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, 51:1-2, p. 94E; cf. M. al-Kisa'i, Tales, p. 82; M. Ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar, Making, p. 41. See also al-Tabari, Creation, 1:161-162, pp. 332-333: "separate layers of shrouds."

Gleanings

Table of Contents

Elder Neal A. Maxwell: The Future Reunion at Adam-ondi-Ahman	485
Elder Bruce R. McConkie: All Things Center in the Family	485
Hugh W. Nibley: The Efficacy of the Atonement	485
M. Catherine Thomas: The Atonement and the Sealing Power	486
Truman G. Madsen: The Fulness of the Atonement	486
Hugh W. Nibley: That They May Grow	487
Arthur Henry King: Atonement—the Healing of the Soul	487
Dietrich Bonhoeffer: The Cost of Discipleship	488
Elder Jeffrey R. Holland: “ Clothed with Purity ”	489
George Herbert: Love	490

Elder Neal A. Maxwell: The Future Reunion at Adam-ondi-Ahman²³⁹

The valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman will ring again—this time with the sounds of dispensational reunion, as it glows with gathering!²⁴⁰ Those of Enoch’s utterly unique city of “one heart” will greet those of the New Zion with holy embraces and holy kisses amid the sounds of sweet sobbing!²⁴¹ The “hills shall tremble” at the presence of the lost tribes, and hearts, as well as ice, will melt, as they come “filled with songs of everlasting joy.”²⁴²

Elder Bruce R. McConkie: All Things Center in the Family²⁴³

All things center in the family, and the family is the center of all things. Salvation itself is a family affair and consists of the continuation of the family unit in eternity. God himself is exalted and omnipotent because he is a Father, and his kingdoms and dominions are composed of his children over whom he rules in equity and justice forever. The whole system of salvation, of revelation, of religion, of worship — all that comes from Deity for the benefit of man — is tied into a divine patriarchal system. If any of us gain the fulness of reward in our Father’s kingdom, it will be because we enter into family relationships that are eternal in nature; it will be because we have perfected our own patriarchal family units. These concepts are part of the very foundation upon which true religion rests.

Hugh W. Nibley: The Efficacy of the Atonement²⁴⁴

But how could a few hours on the cross be effective through infinite time? Even in our limited sphere of action, one can never know how one’s actions affect the lives of others for good or ill. One deed can go on reverberating through the ages; such were certain actions of Adam, Abraham, or Cain. The Atonement was one such act, the greatest, performed only once, Paul tells us. The Catholics think they repeat it literally in the mass. We call it to remembrance in the sacrament. The Atonement is universal and eternal.²⁴⁵ The fifth-century rhetorician Isocrates once observed that if every man in Greece could lift twice as 239 N. A. Maxwell, Yet Reveal, p. 52.

240 See Daniel 7:13-14; D&C 107:53-57; D&C 116:1.

241 See Moses 7:62-63.

242 See D&C 133:26-33.

243 B. R. McConkie, Mortal Messiah, 1:214.

244 H. W. Nibley, Atonement, p. 598.

245 2 Nephi 9:7.

much, run twice as fast, jump twice as far, and so on, the world would be little better off—animals and machinery do the fast and heavy work anyway. But if just one man could think twice as clearly as anyone does now, the whole world could be blessed forever after. Here is a kind of action that has infinite leverage, and what gives it that leverage is faith.

M. Catherine Thomas: The Atonement and the Sealing Power²⁴⁶

The temple is the narrow channel through which one must pass to reenter the Lord's presence. A mighty power pulls us through that channel, and it is the sealing power of the at-one-ment of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Savior's at-one-ment is another word for the sealing power. By the power of the at-one-ment, the Lord draws and seals his children to himself in the holy temples.

Truman G. Madsen: The Fulness of the Atonement²⁴⁷

The Atonement saves us from death, sin, hopeless ignorance, and lasting estrangement from those we have the capacity to love, but it also saves us for an abundance of life, blessings that the scriptures call “the fulness.” He who was described as having an “infinity of fulness”²⁴⁸ promises his fulness to those who come to him. Thus, for example, these fulnesses are associated with temple worship and temple covenants:

- *a fulness of the earth.*²⁴⁹ This earth is to become heaven, a celestial orb. And worship is defined as coming “unto the Father in my name, and in due time receiv[ing] of his fulness.”²⁵⁰ Each time we dedicate a temple, we remove part of the curse on the earth.
- *a fulness of truth.*²⁵¹ The principles of intelligence—of light and truth such that one may be “glorified in truth”—are latent and manifest in the temple. All the functions of intellect are there to be mined: memory, imagination, lucid and coherent reasoning powers, and anticipatory knowledge. Of course, learning can be had from many sources. But the light and truth that “groweth brighter and brighter until the perfect day”²⁵² are in the House of the Lord.
- *a fulness of the Holy Ghost.*²⁵³
- *a fulness of the priesthood.*²⁵⁴
- a fulness of the glory of the Father, “which glory shall be a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever.”²⁵⁵ In the temple the powers of godliness are called down, and we are told they are otherwise not manifest unto men in the flesh.²⁵⁶ Joseph Smith commanded, “Go to and finish the temple, and God will fill it with power, and you will then receive more knowledge concerning this priesthood.”²⁵⁷ Further he said that the Melchizedek Priesthood was “not the power of a Prophet nor Apostle nor Patriarch only but of King and Priest to God, to open the windows of Heaven and pour out the peace and law of endless

²⁴⁶ M. C. Thomas, Brother of Jared, p. 388.

²⁴⁷ T. G. Madsen, Temple and Atonement, pp. 72-74.

²⁴⁸ D&C 109:77.

²⁴⁹ See D&C 59:16.

²⁵⁰ D&C 93:19.

²⁵¹ See D&C 93:26.

²⁵² D&C 50:24.

²⁵³ See D&C 109:15.

²⁵⁴ See D&C 124:28.

²⁵⁵ D&C 132:19; see Abraham 2:9-11.

²⁵⁶ See D&C 84:20-21.

²⁵⁷ J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 27 August 1843, p. 323.

life to man.”²⁵⁸ This is the vital reenactment of the promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, a posterity not only numerous but radiant like unto the stars.

- *a fulness of joy that is related to all of these.*²⁵⁹ Joseph Smith said, “the mighty anchor holds the storm, so let these truths sink down in our hearts, that we may even here begin to enjoy that which shall be in full hereafter.”²⁶⁰ In the midst of a multitude filled with celestial wholeness at the temple in Bountiful, Jesus said, “Now behold, my joy is full. And when he had said these words he wept.”²⁶¹ There, heaven came so close even the children spoke with the tongue of angels. It was an ineffable outpouring. In Hebrew the root word for “joy” is tied to ‘abodah, works, specifically temple service. The word originates with feasting, partaking of the sacrificial meal, in the temple. Here is the foreshadowing of the Messianic feast, the “marriage supper of the Lamb,” the future sacramental partaking of new wine in his kingdom.²⁶² It is the glorious foundation of the reminding, enlivening, and covenant-making process we call the sacrament.

Hugh W. Nibley: That They May Grow²⁶³

[D&C 109:15] is the classic statement of the purpose of education: “And that they may grow.” But here it is a special kind of growth: To “grow up in thee, and receive a fulness of the Holy Ghost, and be organized according to thy laws, and be prepared to obtain every needful thing”—growth, fulness, organization, not organization for organization’s sake, but to expedite “obtain[ing] every needful thing.” To do this we are instructed to stay alert, to pay attention, and to come [to the temple] often. We are not to sit like bags of sand but to receive a fulness—nothing left out, “every needful thing,” in short, all that one is able to receive. The Lord has much to say about fulness. If I could do more than I am doing, or carry more than I am carrying, or learn more than I am learning, etc., I am quite literally rejecting the fulness.

Arthur Henry King: Atonement—the Healing of the Soul²⁶⁴

We have in our own church the ability to understand the particular etymology of atonement better than any other branch of Christianity. That is because we believe in the soul as a central concept. And the soul is not, to us, an alternative word for spirit, as with so many people. The soul is, for us, the union of spirit and body in this world so that the spirit may become flesh (incarnate) in order to gain experience and go a great step forward in eternal progression. Entering the flesh is not a way down and away as with Eastern religions; rather, it is a way on, a way up, because it provides experiences of varying sensation in many directions.

The word “sensation” may, in its turn, be refined into “sensibility,” a word not readily understood because many people think it means “being sensible” in the sense of “common sensibility.” Sensibility, however, is the culture of the soul; this meaning appears clearly in the French sensibilité. (This is a meaning of sensibility that is gradually growing in English. We might substitute it for sensitiveness, but sensitiveness has not the European connotation 258 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 27 August 1843, p. 245, spelling, capitalization, and punctuation modernized.

259 See D&C 93:33-34.

260 J. Smith, Jr., Words, 16 April 1843, p. 196.

261 3 Nephi 17:20-21.

262 See D&C 27:5-14; 133:10.

263 H. W. Nibley, House of Glory, p. 330.

264 A. H. King, Wholeness, pp. 333-334.

of sensibility.) Soul, then is the union, the fusion of spirit (finer matter) with body (coarser matter). We are not to think of the spirit as living in the body like a squirrel in a cage...

Furthermore, once we realize that healing has to do with spirit and body together as soul—healing is healing of the soul—we cannot separate the processes of being healed in the body and being healed in the spirit; they belong together. And that is one of the significances, perhaps the great significance, of the Lord's miracles. We understand the inseparability of these healing processes more intensely when we know how the Doctrine and Covenants speaks of “soul” and “matter.”

Dietrich Bonhoeffer: The Cost of Discipleship²⁶⁵

Cheap grace is the deadly enemy of our Church. We are fighting today for costly grace.

Cheap grace means grace sold on the market like cheapjacks' wares. The sacraments, the forgiveness of sin, and the consolations of religion are thrown away at cut prices... Grace without price; grace without cost! The essence of grace, we suppose, is that the account has been paid in advance; and, because it has been paid, everything can be had for nothing. Since the cost was infinite, the possibilities of using and spending it are infinite. What would grace be if it were not cheap?

Cheap grace means grace as a doctrine, a principle, a system. It means forgiveness of sins proclaimed as a general truth, the love of God taught as the Christian “conception” of God. An intellectual assent to that idea is held to be of itself sufficient to secure remission of sins...

Cheap grace means the justification of sin without the justification of the sinner. Grace alone does everything, they say, and so everything can remain as it was before... Let the Christian rest content with his worldliness and with this renunciation of any higher standard than the world... Let him be comforted and rest assured in his possession of this grace—for grace alone does everything. Instead of following Christ, let the Christian enjoy the consolations of his grace!...

Cheap grace is the preaching of forgiveness without requiring repentance, baptism without church discipline, Communion without confession, absolution without personal confession. Cheap grace is grace without discipleship, grace without the cross, grace without Jesus Christ, living and incarnate.

Costly grace is the treasure hidden in the field; for the sake of it a man will gladly go and sell all that he has.²⁶⁶ It is the pearl of great price which to buy the merchant will sell all his goods.²⁶⁷ It is the kingly rule of Christ, for whose sake a man will pluck out the eye which causes him to stumble,²⁶⁸ it is the call of Jesus Christ at which the disciple leaves his nets and follows him.²⁶⁹

Costly grace is the gospel which must be sought again and again, the gift which must be asked for, the door at which a man must knock.²⁷⁰

²⁶⁵ D. Bonhoeffer, Cost, pp. 45-48.

²⁶⁶ See Matthew 13:44.

²⁶⁷ See Matthew 13:46.

²⁶⁸ See Matthew 5:29.

²⁶⁹ See Matthew 4:19-20.

²⁷⁰ See Matthew 7:7.

Such grace is costly because it calls us to follow, and it is grace because it calls us to follow Jesus Christ. It is costly because it costs a man his life, and it is grace because it gives a man the only true life. It is costly because it condemns sin, and grace because it justifies the sinner. Above all, it is costly because it cost God the life of his Son: “ye were bought [with] a price,”²⁷¹ and what has cost God much cannot be cheap for us. Above all, it is grace because God did not reckon his Son too dear a price to pay for our life, but delivered him up for us.

Elder Jeffrey R. Holland: “Clothed with Purity”²⁷²

In the imagery of the gospel of Jesus Christ, it is always better to be clothed than unclothed, to be robed rather than naked. Jacob taught that the wicked will have a knowledge of guilt and uncleanness that leads them to feel naked before God, whereas the righteous shall have a perfect knowledge of their enjoyment and their righteousness, “being clothed with purity, yea, even with the robe of righteousness.”²⁷³

As a universal gift flowing from the Atonement of Christ, the Resurrection will clothe with a permanent, perfected, restored body every spirit ever born into mortality. Furthermore, for every person who accepts the principles and ordinances of the gospel, that person’s body will be something of a robe of righteousness. Therein is the Redemption of the soul, and therein is a fulness of joy throughout all eternity, including, in its highest order, “a fulness and a continuation of the seeds forever and ever.”²⁷⁴

The royal role and priestly power of celestial kings and queens, including the restored and perfected bodies commensurate with such a station, are among the highest and holiest gifts of the Atonement of Jesus Christ. When we consider that the alternative was to see our bodies decayed and lifeless in the grave while our spirits became “devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the Father of lies, in misery, like unto himself,”²⁷⁵ little wonder we say of the Savior of the world, “O the greatness of the mercy of our God, the Holy One of Israel! For he delivereth his saints from that awful monster the devil, and death, and hell.”²⁷⁶ Little wonder that one stands “all amazed at the love Jesus offers me, confused at the grace that so fully he proffers me.... Oh, it is wonderful, wonderful to me!”²⁷⁷

271 1 Corinthians 6:20; 7:23.

272 J. R. Holland, Christ, pp. 244-245.

273 2 Nephi 9:14.

274 D&C 132:19.

275 2 Nephi 9:9.

276 2 Nephi 9:19.

277 Hymns (1985), #193.

George Herbert: Love²⁷⁸

Love bade me welcome: yet my soul drew back,
 Guilty of dust and sin.
But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack
 From my first entrance in,
Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning,
 If I lack'd anything.

A guest, I answer'd, worthy to be here:
 Love said, you shall be he.
I the unkind, ungrateful? Ah my dear,
 I cannot look on thee.
Love took my hand, and smilingly did reply,
 Who made the eyes but I?

Truth Lord, but I have marr'd them: let my shame
 Go where it doth deserve.
And know you not, says Love, who bore the blame?
 My dear, then I will serve.
You must sit down, says Love, and taste my meat:
 So I did sit and eat.

278 G. Herbert, Temple, 162, p. 200. See Endnote 6-48, p. 507.

Endnotes

- 6-1 Note, however, that while the descent of the patriarchal priesthood is from Adam through Seth, the line of the “Holy Priesthood” is traced from Adam through Abel.²⁷⁹ Elder Alvin R. Dyer explains:

[D&C 84 cites a] particular record of the holy priesthood... with the priesthood lineage of Moses, the great law-giver of ancient Israel. It designates those who held and conferred the priesthood, even to Abraham who received it from Melchizedek, and through the lineage of the fathers to Enoch, and from Enoch to Abel, whom Cain killed seeking to attain the priesthood birthright. Abel was ordained under the hands of his father Adam, the first man. The patriarchal line of priesthood, however, descended from Adam who was the first man through his son Seth.²⁸⁰

It is to be noted from [D&C 107:39-42], that the patriarchal priesthood descent is from Adam through Seth; whereas the line of authority in the “holy priesthood” is from Adam through Abel who was slain by the conspiracy of his brother Cain, but who received the priesthood by the commandments of God, by the hand of his father Adam, who was the first man.²⁸¹ From Noah back to Adam both the “holy priesthood,” and the “patriarchal priesthood” have the same line except for the positions held by Seth in the “patriarchal” and Abel in the “holy” priesthoods. No doubt both priesthoods, as here designated, which are separate to some extent as to office and purpose, are integral in the order of priesthood after the order of the Son of God which is after the holiest order of God the Father.²⁸²

- 6-2 In one of the most well-known of these texts (The Second Treatise of the Great Seth): “Apart from the title, the name Seth never occurs in the text, though perhaps Jesus Christ is meant to be identified with Seth.”²⁸³

Emphasizing the importance of Seth as a prophet, Islamic tradition records that “50 scrolls were revealed to him.”²⁸⁴

- 6-3 Regarding the dating of D&C 107, Marquardt writes:

These instructions are a composite of several documents originally written on different dates... The April date is based on the journal of William E. McLellin who recorded that Joseph Smith and others of the twelve apostles left Kirtland and went to nearby Huntsburg, Ohio, being there on 26-30 March 1835.²⁸⁵ There is no record of Smith or the apostles returning to Kirtland. The traditional date of 28 March 1835 is based on a letter dated 28 March 1836 [sic], recorded in the Kirtland Council Minute Book, LDS archives (198).²⁸⁶ It appears that the March date is in error and that the meeting where the Twelve “had a time of general confession” was held on the afternoon of 28 April 1835.²⁸⁷

Recalling Oliver Cowdery’s role as scribe at the meeting where D&C 107:1-58 was received, Brigham Young later remarked: “You read that Oliver Cowdery was the Second Elder and you remember the Rev[elation] on the Priesthood; and Joseph was two hours laboring with O. C. to get him to write the Rev. in humility.”²⁸⁸

Significantly, the date that D&C 107 was recorded corresponds to a period where Joseph Smith was reviewing the JSr manuscript prior to its intended publication.²⁸⁹ An insertion written above the line in OT1, giving a revised age of Enoch at the time of his translation, parallels the end of D&C 107:49.²⁹⁰

279 See D&C 84:16.

280 A. R. Dyer, Who Am I, p. 276.

281 D&C 84:16.

282 A. R. Dyer, Who Am I, pp. 409-410. See also J. F. Smith, Jr., Answers, 1958, 2:174.

283 J. A. Gibbons et al., Great Seth, p. 362.

284 B. M. Wheeler, Prophets, p. 43.

285 W. E. McLellin, McLellin, IV, p. 153.

286 See F. C. Collier et al., Council, p. 111.

287 H. M. Marquardt, Revelations, p. 267; cf. “A record of the transactions of the Twelve apostles,” 1835, in Patriarchal Blessing Book 1, LDS Archives. See also the earlier discussion in W. E. McLellin, McLellin, pp. 167-168 n. 70. Through work on the Joseph Smith Papers Project, it has been determined that verses 59-100 passim of section 107 were received on November 11, 1831 (R. J. Woodford, Discoveries, p. 31).

288 Minutes of the School of the Prophets, 15 April 1868, Provo, Utah, copy at the Utah State Historical Society, Salt Lake City, UT, cited in L. W. Cook, Revelations, p. 328 n. 5.

289 L. E. Dahl, Plain, p. 126; H. M. Marquardt, Revelations, p. 270. See also R. P. Howard, Restoration 1995, pp. 106-109; R. J. Matthews, Plainer, p. 41.

290 S. H. Faulring et al., Original Manuscripts, p. 110; cf. Moses 8:1.

Other revisions to the ages of the patriarchs were also made during this period.²⁹¹

A seemingly pre-1835 mention of the term “Adam-ondi-Ahman” occurs in D&C 78:15. However, though the revelation is dated March 1832, vv. 15-16 contain significant additions that were probably made in 1835, as the Doctrine and Covenants was being prepared for publication.²⁹² Likewise, in the Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, the name “Adam-ondi-Ahman” is used as part of an account of a blessing given on 18 December 1833.²⁹³ The blessing incorporates phrasing identical to D&C 107:53-55. However, as Matthews reports:

... the source for the quotation in Teachings is not clear. It is given as the Manuscript History of the Church, but the Manuscript History in the Library of the Historical Department of the LDS Church in Salt Lake City does not contain the passage under consideration. An account of the blessing was also printed in History of Joseph Smith,²⁹⁴ but this publication does not contain the information in question. It is possible that the account in the Teachings is an edited version containing information that was not actually given at the time of the 1833 blessing.²⁹⁵

- 6-4 The Talmud, Avodah Zarah 5a records a tradition that Adam saw all that would happen in future generations:

What is the meaning of the verse “this is the book of the generations of Adam”? Did Adam have a book?—What it implies is that God showed to Adam every generation with its expositors, every generation with its Sages, every generation with its leaders.”²⁹⁶

Frequently mentioned (with variation in detail) in ancient Jewish and Christian literature is prophecy of Adam that the world would be destroyed once by water and once by fire.²⁹⁷ Most of the accounts tell about a record (i.e., this prophecy, astronomical information, or music) that was inscribed either on two pillars or else on tablets. To assure the survival of the record, the two pillars were made of different materials, one of which would be preserved in case of flood and the other of which would be impervious to fire. These two modes of destruction are illustrated in the Old Testament accounts of Noah’s flood²⁹⁸ and of the fiery end of Sodom and Gomorrah,²⁹⁹ as well as in non-biblical stories concerning periodic cycles of destruction and renewal of the earth.³⁰⁰

Some sources relate the themes of the pillars or stelae and the Flood to the construction of the Tower of Babel. As related by Schwartz:

Why did they build the tower? Some say they believed that the firmament was in danger of tottering, and the tower they built was to be one of four pillars to support the heavens.³⁰¹ That was the eastern pillar, and others were to be built in the north, in the south, and in the west.

Other say that they built the tower out of fear of another Flood. They hoped to avoid the waters of the Flood by inhabiting the heights of the tower, and they took axes with them to cleave the heavens, so that all the waters stored there would run out before God could cause them to Flood.³⁰²

- 6-5 Of this parallel, Campbell writes:

Adam and Eve were forced out of Paradise... and moved seventy miles to the north into the dreary workaday world. The Saints, perceiving themselves as God’s chosen people, had the opportunity to re-experience these sacred places and even the expulsion process. Their view was that they were 291 Ibid., pp. 97-98; cf. D&C 107:41-52.

292 H. M. Marquardt, Revelations, pp. 197-198.

293 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, pp. 38-39.

294 History of JS 6:12, p. 947.

295 R. J. Matthews, Adam-ondi-Ahman, p. 29.

296 Cited in R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 166.

297 See relevant passages in G. A. Anderson et al., Synopsis, Latin 49:1-50:3, p. 91E; Addendum, p. 96E; L. Ginzberg, Legends, 1:121-122; Jerahmeel ben Solomon, Chronicles, 24:7, 26:16, pp. 51, 56; F. Josephus, Genuine Works, 1:2:3, p. 27; S. C. Malan, Adam and Eve, 2:8, p. 115; M. M. Noah, Jasher, 2:12-13, p. 4; S. E. Robinson, Testament of Adam, Greek 3:5-6, pp. 99, 101; H. Schwartz, Tree, 567, p. 444; Shelemon, Book of the Bee, 18, p. 28; O. S. Wintermute, Jubilees, 8:3, p. 71.

298 Genesis 6:5-9:17.

299 Genesis 19:24-28.

300 J. C. Reeves, Jewish Lore, pp. 87-90.

301 See Excursus 50: Fu Xi and Nü Gua, p. 654.

302 H. Schwartz, Tree, 590, p. 464. See Commentary 1:8-b, p. 50 and Excursus 48: The Nature and Scope of Premortal Covenants, p. 649.

necessarily forced out of Jackson County by disobedience, as was Adam, into other historic biblical sites as God directed them. Just as there was purpose in Adam's expulsion—to begin the endless generation of humanity—the Saints also saw purpose in their travails—to prepare themselves and the land for the second return of Christ.³⁰³

- 6-6 Islamic sources also vary widely in their estimates of Adam's living posterity, some asserting that they were "in number forty, or, according to others, seventy thousand."³⁰⁴
- 6-7 Joseph Smith is said to have identified the location of Adam's altar at Adam-ondi-Ahman.³⁰⁵
- 6-8 Al-Tabari implies that sacred knowledge was contained in the Testament of Adam: "[Adam] made his son Seth his legatee and wrote his last will. Then he handed the document containing his last will to Seth and commanded him to keep it concealed from Cain and his children, because Cain had killed Abel out of envy. That was when Adam singled Abel out for [receiving God's] knowledge. Seth and his children kept concealed the knowledge they possessed, and Cain and his children did not have any knowledge they could use."³⁰⁶
- 6-9 Initial similarities, as well as the growing differences with modes of governance in other religious denominations, are discussed in Flake.³⁰⁷ An intriguing aspect to this study is the observation that the priesthood council organization evidently was not seen as superseding the patriarchal order of fathers and sons, but rather was something that existed side by side with it.³⁰⁸
- 6-10 For discussions of the concept of heavenly councils from an LDS point of view, see Peterson³⁰⁹ and Ostler.³¹⁰
- 6-11 These words were penned by the Prophet as part of a letter from the Liberty Jail in 1839. Just prior to the comment quoted above, the Prophet spoke of the spirit that must animate the minds and hearts of ministers of God:

A fanciful and flowery and heated imagination beware of; because the things of God are of deep import; and time, and experience, and careful and ponderous and solemn thought can only find them out. Thy mind, O man! If thou wilt lead a soul unto salvation, must stretch as high as the utmost heavens, and search into and contemplate the darkest abyss, and the broad expanse of eternity—thou must commune with God. How much more dignified and noble are the thoughts of God, than the vain imaginations of the human heart! None but fools will trifle with the souls of men.... [L]et honesty, and sobriety, and candor, and solemnity, and virtue, and pureness, and meekness, and simplicity crown our heads in every place; and in fine, become as little children, without malice, guile or hypocrisy.³¹¹

- 6-12 The entry of the official minutes of the conference held on October 11, 1831 reads:

Certain points were discussed by Brother Joseph Smith, Jr., who said that the Elders present were to tarry until the morrow and hold a meeting so that the members might understand the ancient manner of conducting meetings as they were led by the Holy Ghost. He also said that this was not perfectly known by many of the Elders of this Church... Brother Oliver Cowdery then made a move that this conference take into consideration the propriety of appointing six Elders to visit the several branches of this church setting them in order... And accordingly Brothers David Whitmer and Reynolds Cahoon were chosen and appointed, the other four remain to be chosen hereafter.³¹²

The four additional brethren chosen were Simeon Carter, Orson Hyde, Hyrum Smith, and Emer Harris. They were set apart for this calling two weeks later on October 25, 1831.³¹³

303 C. S. Campbell, Images, p. 79.

304 G. Weil, Legends, p. 46.

305 L. C. Berrett et al., Missouri, pp. 384-389.

306 al-Tabari, Creation, 1:159-160, p. 331.

307 K. Flake, Councils.

308 Ibid., pp. 6-7.

309 D. C. Peterson, Ye Are Gods, pp. 506-508.

310 B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 41-82, 395-408.

311 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 25 March 1839, p. 137.

312 D. Q. Cannon et al., Far West, p. 17, spelling, grammar, and punctuation modernized.

313 Ibid., pp. 24-25; J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 25 October 1831, 1:219.

- 6-13 The minutes of the meeting of October 25, 1831 are preserved, however, and one imagines in reading them that the Prophet Joseph and the other brethren were doing their best in that meeting to emulate the ancient pattern. At that meeting, in addition to prayer, singing, instruction from Sidney Rigdon and the Prophet, and conducting of a few items of Church business, each of the brethren had an opportunity to express their feelings and testimony about the work in which they were engaged.³¹⁴
- 6-14 Elder Neal A. Maxwell once cited an example of this quality of mind:
- It was said of one able, but comparatively meek, member of a nineteenth-century British cabinet, serving in Parliament: “If it was his duty to speak, he spoke, but he did not want to speak when it was not his duty—silence was no pain and oratory no pleasure to him.”³¹⁵
- 6-15 The Lord was explicit in saying to Hyrum Smith that before he could “declare” His word he must first “obtain” it—only then would he merit the blessing “to have [His] Spirit and [His] word, yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men.”³¹⁶ The prophet Jacob perfectly expressed this principle when he wrote: “Wherefore I, Jacob, gave unto them these words as I taught them in the temple, having first obtained mine errand from the Lord.”³¹⁷ The American Heritage Dictionary clarifies the older meaning of the word “errand” as being “a mission or an embassy” or, more specifically related to this context, “an oral message that has been entrusted to one.”³¹⁸
- 6-16 On 12 February 1834, at a meeting held at the home of the Prophet in Kirtland, the Prophet gave further instructions on the order by which ancient councils were conducted, as they had been shown him in vision. The members of the first High Council were about to be called out of the number of those brethren then present, and the Prophet wanted them to understand the order by which they were to conduct their business so they could obtain the voice of the Lord by revelation on each matter laid before them:

I remarked that I should endeavor to set before the council the dignity of the office which had been conferred on me by the ministering of the angel of God, by his own voice, and by the voice of the Church; that I had never set before any council in all the order in which it ought to be conducted, which, perhaps, has deprived the councils of some or many blessings... In ancient days, councils were conducted with such strict propriety that no one was allowed to whisper, be weary, leave the room, or get uneasy in the least, until the voice of the Lord, by revelation, or the voice of the council by the Spirit, was obtained, which has not been observed in this Church to the present time. It was understood in ancient days, that if one man could stay in council, another could; and if the president could spend his time, the members could also; but in our councils, generally, one will be uneasy, another asleep; one praying, another not; one’s mind on the business of the council, and another thinking on something else.³¹⁹

To complete the organization of the first High Council, the Prophet writes:

... I laid my hands upon the twelve Councilors, and commanded a blessing to rest upon them, that they might have wisdom and power to counsel in righteousness, upon all subjects that might be laid before them. I also prayed that they might be delivered from those evils to which they were most exposed, and that their lives might be prolonged on the earth... I then gave the assistant Presidents a solemn charge to do their duty in righteousness, and in the fear of God; I also charged the twelve Councilors in a similar manner, all in the name of Jesus Christ. We all raised our hands to heaven in token of the everlasting covenant, and the Lord blessed us with His Spirit. I then declared the council organized according to the ancient order, and also according to the mind of the Lord.³²⁰

Andrus has summarized additional instructions of Joseph Smith to his brethren on these matters:

“The way to get along in any important matter is to gather unto yourselves wise men, experienced and aged men, to assist in council,” he said. “Handsome men are not apt to be wise and strong-minded men; but the strength of a strong-minded man will generally create coarse features, like 314 D. Q. Cannon et al., Far West, pp. 19-24.

315 W. Bagehot, Bagehot, cited in N. A. Maxwell, Meekly Drenched, pp. 129-130.

316 D&C 11:21; cf., e.g., D&C 50:13-22.

317 Jacob 1:17, emphasis mine.

318 American Heritage Dictionary, s.v. “errand.”

319 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 12 February 1834, p. 69.

320 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 19 February 1834, 2:32-33.

the rough, strong bough of the oak.”³²¹ But more than a strong mind was necessary. Having organized the first High Council at Kirtland, the Prophet said: “I urge the necessity of prayer, that the Spirit might be given, that the things of the Spirit might be judged thereby, because the carnal mind cannot discern the things of God.”³²² A man had also to purify his heart. “No man is capable of judging a matter, in council, unless his own heart is pure,” he declared on another occasion; “... we are frequently so filled with prejudice, or have a beam in our own eye, that we are not capable of passing right decisions.”³²³

- 6-17 Stories of healing power brought from Paradise have been preserved in Islamic tradition. For example, the special coat made for Joseph was said to have been “woven in Paradise, and it had the smell of Paradise. When it only touched an afflicted or ailing man, that man would be restored to health and be cured... It was that shirt... that had belonged to Abraham.” When the shirt was brought to Joseph’s ailing and blind father, Jacob, he “put it over his face and his eyesight was restored.”³²⁴ Jewish tradition traces this garment through the patriarchs back to Adam.³²⁵ The smell of Jacob’s garment mentioned by Isaac as he pronounced the birthright blessing is understood by some to be the fragrance of the Garden of Eden, and (perhaps synonymously) by others as the “aroma of the fragrant incense which would one day be offered in the temple.”³²⁶
- 6-18 While Seth sought to bring the oil of the Tree of Life from Paradise to Earth, a Mandaean rite for the dying involves the placement of a vial of specially-prepared oil in the pocket of the sacred burial clothing so that it can be conveyed at death from Earth to Heaven. In this context, the oil is seen to represent a “letter” or message.³²⁷
- 6-19 Though Verne remained a devout (though in some respects unorthodox) Catholic throughout his life, it is only with subtlety that religious themes in his works can be detected, apart from the occasional pious insertions required by his publisher.³²⁸ Brandon explains this anomaly as follows:

... the Verne-style of scientific fiction was developed in great measure as a reaction to [Edgar Allan] Poe’s explicitly materialistic scientific romances. Verne liked Poe’s work, but disliked Poe’s tendency to make up science—and what he disliked most about it was that Poe made up the science in order to avoid supernatural explanations. So Verne wrote a different kind of scientific romance, one that respected the natural and moral order established by Providence. The curious resulting paradox, which has often been noted, is that Poe, the materialist, is famous for his stories about the supernatural; and Verne, the Catholic, is famous for stories that have no explicit supernatural intervention at all.³²⁹

See Butcher³³⁰ for a discussion of the role of “Providence” in Verne’s writings. Unfortunately, like other frequently mischaracterized aspects of the life of “one of the most widely distorted, censored, and mistranslated authors of all time,”³³¹ the applying of labels such as “skeptical” “wishy-washy” and “vaguely Catholic” to describe Verne’s faith in his “definitive” biography seems highly inappropriate in light of contemporary documentation.

In Verne’s chapter about the Mormons in Around the World in 80 Days,³³² we are given a small window on his views of this unusual “sect,” though his comic lens was directed here less for the education, and more for the entertainment, of his readers. The story “takes advantage of the opportunity to enliven the crossing of Utah with two comical Mormon elements—the introduction of Elder William Hitch, who tries to convert Passepartout, and the barely successful flight of a Mormon who, even with one wife, had more than he could handle.”³³³ No doubt relying on his habit of voracious reading and 321 J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 14 May 1843, p. 299.

322 J. Smith, Jr., Documentary History, 19 February 1834, 2:31.

323 H. L. Andrus, Doctrines, p. 201. See J. Smith, Jr., Teachings, 12 February 1834, p. 69.

324 A. al-Tha’labi, Lives, pp. 228, 229. See Hauglid for a discussion of previous mistakes in the translation of this verse (B. M. Hauglid, Garment of Joseph).

325 E.g., R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 1063 n. 1 and pp. 1136-1137 n. 27. See H. W. Nibley, Lehi 1988, pp. 168-170; H. W. Nibley, What, p. 366; H. W. Nibley, Vestments, pp. 128-131; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 309.

326 R. M. Zlotowitz et al., Bereishis, p. 1136 n. 27.

327 E. S. Drower, Prayerbook, 73, pp. 61-63; E. Lupieri, Mandaeans, p. 29.

328 W. Butcher, Verne, p. 282.

329 Brandon, Master.

330 W. Butcher, Verne, pp. 281-282.

331 Ibid., p. xv.

332 J. Verne, Around, 27, pp. 167-173.

333 W. Decoo, Image, p. 10. See W. Butcher, Verne, p. 173.

notetaking in preparation for his writing,³³⁴ Verne proves to be better informed than many of his contemporaries in his whirlwind tour of Mormon history and Utah geography. He shows, however, no knowledge of any Mormon activity in his native France. This is understandable since, due to meager results and political troubles, the French mission had closed for the second time in 1864.³³⁵

6-20 Campbell, somewhat controversially, expands this idea to the level of a universal “monomyth.” He characterizes the “adventure of the hero” in general stages of departure, initiation, and return.³³⁶ From a ritual perspective, these three parts correspond to van Gennep’s classic stages of separation (préliminaire), transition (liminaire), and reintegration (postliminaire).³³⁷ Turner generalized and elaborated Van Gennep’s three stages and applied them to the phenomenon of religious pilgrimage.³³⁸

6-21 Somewhat controversially, Northrop Frye asserted the virtual universality of this theme, writing that there are “four primary narrative movements in literature. These are, first, the descent from a higher world; second, the descent to a lower world; third, the ascent from a lower world; and fourth, the ascent to a higher world. All stories in literature are complications of, or metaphorical derivations from, these four narrative radicals... Explicitly for the first eighteen centuries of the Christian era, and implicitly after and long before that, these patterns of ascent and descent have been spread over a mythological universe consisting of four main levels, two above our own, and one below it. The highest level is in heaven, the place of the presence of God... Level two is the earthly paradise or Garden of Eden, where man lived before the fall... Level three is the world of ordinary experience we now live in... Level four is the demonic world or hell, in Christianity not part of the order of nature but an autonomous growth, usually placed below ground.”³³⁹

6-22 About the significance of this phrase, Snodgrass writes:

Although some, on the basis of Semitic evidence, think “when he came to himself” (eis heauton de elthon) means repentance, all it really means is “he came to his senses.” The repentance itself is expressed in the confession in vv. 17b-19 and 21. On the other hand, “came to his senses” must be taken seriously, for it is the prerequisite to or first step of repentance. The parable does not mention repentance; it speaks only of the prodigal’s coming to his senses, his confession, and his return. No doubt for any Jew those were valid aspects of repentance, even if they do not cover everything involved.³⁴⁰

6-23 The life of Jesus Christ followed a similar pattern, though He was without sin: “I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.”³⁴¹

6-24 The parable teaches that “God goes out to seek the sinner, or, that He is actually waiting and watching for the sinner to come home. [Jesus’ contemporaries might in their] gentler moments agree that God would accept a penitent sinner; but [they] never dreamed of a God who went out to look for sinners. The shepherd searched for the sheep; the woman searched for the coin; God searches for men.”³⁴²

6-25 “We would expect the father, being the patriarch, to have summoned his son to him. It seems a great concession for him to go out to the elder son, even more of a concession than his going out to meet the younger one, which occurred under exceptional circumstances.”³⁴³

“Verse 21 = 18f., except for the final words ‘treat... servants,’ which the father does not allow his son to utter; instead he changes the unspoken words to their opposite, and treats the returning one, not as a wage-earner, but as an honored guest.”³⁴⁴

6-26 “‘Ran’—a most unusual and undignified procedure for an aged oriental, even though he is in the 334 W. Butcher, Verne, pp. 248, 285, 287, 349 n. 9.

335 C. Euvarard, Bertrand, p. 285. See also R. D. McClellan, Bertrand, pp. 16-17.

336 J. Campbell, Hero, pp. 49-251.

337 A. van Gennep, Rites, pp. 11. V. Turner, Ritual Process, contributed much to the bringing of van Gennep’s neglected work into greater prominence.

338 V. Turner et al., Pilgrimage, esp. pp. 1-17, 34-39. For a brief summary of later critiques of Turner’s model, especially his notion of communitas, see J. Eade et al., Contesting the Sacred, pp. x-xxiii, 4-5.

339 N. Frye, Secular Scripture, pp. 97-98.

340 K. R. Snodgrass, Stories, p. 138.

341 John 16:28.

342 W. Barclay, Parables, p. 183.

343 D. Packard et al., Feasting, p. 47.

344 J. Jeremias, Parables, p. 102.

greatest haste”:³⁴⁵

However inwardly glad he may have been to see his son again, no older, self-respecting Middle Eastern male head of an estate would have disgraced himself by the undignified action of running to greet his son (v. 20). Nor would he have interrupted the son’s speech before a full display of repentance (cf. v. 21 with vv. 18-19) or instantly commanded such a luxurious outpouring of affection for him (vv. 22-23). All of these details strongly suggest that Jesus wanted to present his audience with more than a simple, realistic picture of family life. Rather he used an extraordinary story to illustrate God’s amazing patience and love for his ungrateful children.³⁴⁶

Even though the father has compassion on his son, a proper response for him would be to let the young man arrive home, fall on his knees, and ask for forgiveness. Then in the best of all circumstances, the father would respond with words of forgiveness and a review of expectations. The son would, in effect, be on probation around home for a time; perhaps he could remain there until he could earn enough to leave as an independent person once again.

But those measures of decorum are not what happen. The father runs to meet the son—an outlandish behavior, as emphasized by many interpreters. According to tradition, the “way” a man walks “shows what he is,”³⁴⁷ and therefore a dignified man does not run. We must imagine here a prominent person wearing a long robe. In order to run, he must pull up the robe, exposing his legs, which would have been considered shameful in a Semitic culture. Even in a gentile Greco-Roman context, a “proud man” makes slow steps.³⁴⁸

A hadith qudsi of Muhammad portrays God as saying: “And if [my servant] draws nearer to Me by a handsbreadth, I draw nearer to him by an arm’s length; and if he draws nearer to Me by an arm’s length, I draw nearer to him by a fathom; and if he comes to Me walking, I come to him running.”³⁴⁹

In *Pesiqta Rabbati*³⁵⁰ is found the following:

Consider the parable of a prince who was far away from his father—a hundred days’ journey away. His friends said to him: “Return to your father.” He replied: “I cannot: I have not the strength.” Thereupon his father sent word, saying to him: “Come back as far as you can according to your strength, and I will go the rest of the way to meet you.” So the Holy One, blessed be He, says to Israel: *Return unto Me, and I will return unto you.*³⁵¹

- 6-27 “The robe stands for honor; it was the first or the best robe; it was not to disgrace but to honor that the son came home. The ring stands for mastery. The ring would be a signet ring; and when a master gave his ring to a servant or a father to his son, it meant that he was handing into his control all his possessions. The shoes stand for the status of a son. Slaves went barefoot but the children of the family went shod.”³⁵²

Jeremias compares the father’s orders with Genesis 41:42.³⁵³

... when Joseph was appointed chief vizier, he received from Pharaoh a ring, a robe of fine linen, and a golden chain: (1) First comes the ceremonial robe, which in the East is a mark of high distinction. There is no bestowal of orders, but when a king wants to honor a deserving official, he presents him with a costly robe; investiture with a new garment is therefore a symbol of the new age. In other words, the son is treated as a guest of honor. (2) The ring and the shoes: excavations have shown that the ring is to be regarded as a signet ring; the gift of a ring signified the bestowal of authority.³⁵⁴ Shoes are a luxury, worn by free men; here they mean that the son is no longer to go about barefoot like a slave. (3) As a rule, meat is rarely eaten. For special occasions a fatted calf is prepared. Its killing means a feast for the family and the servants and the festal reception of the 345 Ibid., p. 102; cf. K. R. Snodgrass, Stories, p. 126.

346 C. L. Blomberg, Parables, p. 176.

347 S. Sandmel et al., Ecclesiasticus, 19:30, p. 136.

348 A. J. Hultgren, Parables, p. 78.

349 W. A. Graham, Divine, p. 127.

350 W. G. Braude, Rabbati, 44:9, 2:779.

351 Malachi 3:7; cf. 2 Nephi 25:23.

352 W. Barclay, Parables, pp. 181-182.

353 J. Jeremias, Parables, pp. 102-103.

354 Cf. S. Sandmel et al., 1 Maccabees, 6:15, p. 208.

returning son to the family table.³⁵⁵ The three orders given by the father are the manifest tokens of forgiveness and reinstatement, evident to all.

The phrase “all that I have is thine,” uttered to the older son, “reminds us of a part of the oath and covenant of the priesthood, in which the Lord says, ‘And he that receiveth my Father receiveth my Father’s kingdom; therefore all that my Father hath shall be given unto him.’³⁵⁶ Apparently, in the heavenly scheme, all can be given to each, without diminishing what each receives.”³⁵⁷

- 6-28 Similarly: “The great [Arab writer] Abu Zaid said there was one prayer that he had learned in a dream which alone was his guarantee of safety in the desert: ‘Preserve me, O God; ... guard me in my person and my property.... Cover me with the curtain of grace.’³⁵⁸ Nibley also explains the inverse of this picture:³⁵⁹

And the opposite of that you will find in Alma 5:7...: “Behold, he changed their hearts. Behold, they were in the midst of darkness; nevertheless, their souls were illuminated by the light of the everlasting word; yea, they were encircled about by the bands of death [that’s the other encircling; Satan can encircle you too], and the chains of hell, and an everlasting destruction did await them.” You get this same negative idea right here in verse 10: “And now I ask of you on what conditions are they saved? Yea, what grounds had they to hope for salvation? What is the cause of their being loosed from the bands of death, yea, and also the chains of hell?”

In the one you are bound tight to one person; in the other you are bound tight to another. And there is nothing ever mentioned about anything in between the two... The opposite of oneness is in Alma 5:25. This is the alternative to being embraced, to being taken into the family. “I say unto you, Nay; except ye make our Creator a liar from the beginning, or suppose that he is a liar from the beginning, ye cannot suppose that such can have place (remember, Nephi said to Zoram, ‘You come down to our father’s tent in the desert and you can have place with us’;³⁶⁰ marhaban means ‘have a place with us,’ and here he uses that term again) in the kingdom of heaven; but they shall be cast out for they are the children of the kingdom of the devil.” The opposite is to be cast out or not included—thrown out of the house. Then notice verse 57 in the same chapter... “Come ye out from the wicked, and be ye separate, and touch not their unclean things. The names of the wicked shall not be mingled with the names of my people.” The idea is being cast out and cut off completely, and that’s what we are talking about here.

In the Zohar is found the following: “if a person comes to purify himself, he is assisted from above; his Lord’s assistance encircles him, and he is protected, called ‘holy.’ If a person comes to defile himself, numerous bands of dazzling demons lie in wait for him; they all hover over him, surrounding him, defiling him, and he is called ‘impure.’”³⁶¹

- 6-29 A relevant picture is painted in the Muslim Hadith al-Kisa (Tradition of the Cloak or Mantle), where Muhammad was said to have thrown his cloak over certain members of his family (Hasan, Husain, Fatima) to affirm their purity,³⁶² and to assert his love for those of his own household (ahl al-bayt).³⁶³ Though the general intent of the story is clear, its specific interpretation has long been a matter of deep division among Islamic groups. While Shi’ites take this incident as conferring a special status for the blood relatives of Muhammad and his wives (identified with the imams), the Sunnis see the story as symbolizing the unity of all pious Muslims as part of ahl al-bayt.³⁶⁴

Peterson further comments on the differences between these groups: “Several nineteenth-century Orientalists saw a similarity between the Shi’ites and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints [now renamed the Community of Christ]. Both groups expected the succession to the founding prophet to remain in the prophet’s family. But the Shi’ites have the more radical theology 355 “Hultgren estimates that the price of a goat was one-tenth that of a cow” (cited in K. R. Snodgrass Stories, p. 126).

356 D&C 84:38.

357 D. Packard et al., Feasting, p. 49.

358 H. W. Nibley, Approach, p. 253.

359 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:200-201.

360 See 1 Nephi 4:34.

361 D. C. Matt, Zohar 2, Hayyei Sarah 1:125b, p. 215.

362 See Qur’an 33:33.

363 I. Muslim, Sahih, 1001:5955, 4:1293-1294; cf. 996:5915, 5920, 5923, 4:1285, 1286-1287.

364 I. Muslim, Sahih, 4:1294 n. 2714; Porch of Wisdom Cultural Institution, Faith and Reason, pp. 313-318; cf. Matthew 12:46-50.

in Islam, whereas the Reorganized Church is far closer to mainstream Protestantism than are the Mormons and is now abandoning the notion of family succession.”³⁶⁵

6-30 Writes Nibley:³⁶⁶

As you approach the camp surrounding the temple, you signify your intent with a reassuring sign, a signum, visible from a distance, calling attention to yourself as Adam does in his prayer and demonstrating your peaceful intent. Upon reaching the gate, you present your token, a tangible object (compare touch, digit, dactyl, or a solid handclasp). All these serve as a tessera hospitalis, admitting one to a closed group or a party, or a club, guild meeting, etc. It is presented to the doorkeeper, a herald trained in such matters: “The Holy One of Israel is the Keeper of the Gate, and he employs no servant there!” Most important, “he cannot be deceived.”³⁶⁷ The token recognized, you pronounce your name to the doorkeeper in a low voice, a whisper, for it is a special name agreed on between you and your host and should not be picked up and used by anyone else.

6-31 “Christ’s sacrifice [may be] understood in terms of expiation,³⁶⁸ the canceling of guilt and cleansing of sin.”³⁶⁹ The term is derived “from L. expiatus, pp. of expiare ‘make amends,’ from ex- ‘completely’ + piare ‘propitiate, appease,’ from pius ‘faithful, loyal, devout.’”³⁷⁰ Unfortunately, the meaning of the term “expiation” in English and Romance languages has shifted quite a distance from its roots, leading French translators of the Septuagint to replace it by apaisement (= English “appeasement”).³⁷¹

6-32 King writes: “We find, for example, in Leviticus 1:4 the sense “expiation” (appeasement by sacrifice); in Romans 3:24, “redemption” (which means “buying back”); and in 1 John 2:2, the word “propitiation” (meaning “making gracious”).”³⁷²

Seach writes:³⁷³

Scripture and popular writings have long been filled with assorted attempts to understand what really took place on Calvary, variously describing the crucified Jesus as a “ransom” for captive men,³⁷⁴ an “advocate” taking man’s case before the Father,³⁷⁵ a sacrificial “victim” whose blood “deterges”³⁷⁶ the wicked from sin,³⁷⁷ a ‘propitiation’ satisfying God’s demand for justice,³⁷⁸ a “Paschal Lamb,”³⁷⁹ a “penal substitute” who is punished in place of the guilty (Luther, Calvin), or even a “commercial transaction” made to “buy” humanity from Satan’s grasp (Ambrose, Gregory of Nyssa).³⁸⁰

The idea of “redeeming” men from the grasp of Satan was probably based on Acts 26:17-18, which depicts man in the Devil’s power, and in need of deliverance. The idea of “ransom” corresponds to the OT koper, the price paid to free someone from bondage.³⁸¹ The “advocate” (parakletos, 1 John 2:1) was the OT go’el, a family member who assumed the responsibility for the welfare of his relatives, i.e., who “took their part.”³⁸² The “deterging” of the Holy of Holies with a victim’s blood is detailed in Leviticus 16-17; thus Paul’s “propitiation” is actually the Mercy Seat (kapporet) where the blood of the victim was sprinkled on the Day of Atonement,³⁸³ and where God agreed to 365 D. C. Peterson, Abraham, p. 110 n. 84.

366 H. W. Nibley, Temples Everywhere, p. 14.

367 2 Nephi 9:41.

368 Greek hiastérion; Romans 3:25.

369 D. N. Freedman et al., Eerdmans, s.v., Atonement, p. 128.

370 D. Harper, Dictionary, s.v., expiation.

371 C. Dogniez et al., Pentateuque, Glossaire, s.v. apaisement, pp. 868-870. See Excursus 46: The Origin and Meaning of the Term “Atonement”, p. 642 and Excursus 47: Islamic Perspectives Relating to Redemption, p. 645.

372 A. H. King, Atonement, p. 318.

373 J. E. Seach, Ancient Texts 1995, p. 554 n. 175.

374 Matthew 20:28; 1 Timothy 2:6.

375 1 John 2:1.

376 I.e., cleanses, from Latin de- “off, away” + tergere “to rub, polish, wipe” (D. Harper, Dictionary).

377 Hebrews 9:13-14.

378 Romans 3:25.

379 John 1:29.

380 J. E. Seach, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 553-554.

381 E.g., Exodus 21:30; Job 33:24, 36:18; Psalm 49:17.

382 Job 19:25; Ruth 2:20, 4:1; Jeremiah 32:6-12.

383 Leviticus 16.

meet with man;³⁸⁴ the Apostle now makes Jesus the Church's new "Mercy Seat" or Mediator. The "Paschal (Passover) Lamb" refers to the sacrificial animal whose blood was scattered on the door posts of the Israelites to protect them from the Destroying Angel.³⁸⁵ All of these ideas... from the old Jewish cult... were retained... to identify Christ's new work with the traditional expectations of Judaism.

Note that Seaich overreachingly saw the metaphors for the Atonement relating to the OT sacrificial rites solely as attempts to relate Christ's mission to Jewish expectation. Hence, for example, his unconvincing and mistaken interpretation of D&C 19:16-17 as not meaning "that his sacrifice was a substitute for our sacrifices, but simply that his suffering on the cross makes it possible for us to escape an 'eternal punishment for sin'³⁸⁶ which would one day be as painful as his."³⁸⁷

Regarding "redemption," Hugh Nibley explains:³⁸⁸

The monetary metaphor is by far the commonest, being the simplest and easiest to understand. Hence, frequently the word "redemption" literally means to buy back, that is, to reacquire something you owned previously. Thus Moses: "But because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh."³⁸⁹ Redemption, or Atonement, restores one to a former, happier condition. "And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to himself, and to make him a name, and to do for you great things and terrible, for thy land, before thy people, which thou redeemest to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods?"³⁹⁰ By redemption, someone has paid a price to get you off, but the frequent use of the commercial analogy is not out of reverence for trade and commerce but the opposite. The redeemed are bought to clear them of all worldly obligation by paying off the world in its own currency, after which it has no further claim on the redeemed: "And the child of eight days shall be circumcised for you, every male through your generations, born of a house or a purchase of silver of any outsider who is not of thy seed. He must certainly be circumcised, born of your house, or bought with your silver; and it shall be my covenant in [among or with] thy flesh for an everlasting covenant."³⁹¹ All the newborn are taken into the family, which is united by an eternal covenant by the token shedding of blood (circumcision) to become the seed of Abraham—this is a real at-one-ment.

The Greek equivalent is lytrosis, a ransoming. Paul tells the saints to prepare for the salvation that has been made available by disengaging from this world—"denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world"³⁹²—so that God "might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people."³⁹³

Elsewhere, Nibley explains redemption as meaning that a:³⁹⁴

... price is paid... and it's got you off, but you don't even have to know the person who paid the price, let alone be one with him. The idea of being one goes beyond having the price paid.

The term "reconciliation," used frequently in the New Testament to translate this concept and deriving from a root that means "to be seated again with someone," is a step closer to the meaning of "atonement" but does not go far enough in conveying the idea of perfect unity.³⁹⁵ About the terms "reconciliation," "return," and "repentance," Nibley writes:

[Just prior to Romans 5:11,] Paul has... told us that the Lord "sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on High," so "reconciliation" is a very good word for atonement there, since it means literally to be seated again with someone (re-con-silio)—so that atonement is to be reunited with 384 Exodus 25:22; Numbers 7:89.

385 Exodus 12:3.

386 D&C 19:11-12.

387 J. E. Seaich, Ancient Texts 1995, p. 562; D&C 19:15.

388 H. W. Nibley, Atonement, pp. 556-557.

389 Deuteronomy 7:8.

390 2 Samuel 7:23.

391 Genesis 17:12-13.

392 Titus 2:12.

393 Titus 2:14.

394 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:198.

395 Cf. John 17:23.

God. The Greek word translated as “reconciliation” is katallagein. That is a business term which the Greek-English Lexicon tells us means “exchange, esp. of money; ... change from enmity to friendship, reconciliation; ... reconciliation of sinners with God.” It is the return to the status ante quo, whether as a making of peace or a settlement of debt.³⁹⁶

[Katallagein] means “changing back again to where you were.” It’s the same thing as teshuvah in Hebrew. Teshuvah is the Hebrew term for “returning, repentance.” But where is the oneness [you find in the term “atonement”]?³⁹⁷

[Teshuvah] means “a return”—you return to where you were.³⁹⁸ But you can never come back; you can’t go home again after you have sinned. That has to be washed away, so there is baptism. The idea is to return, but how can you return to a place if you never were there before? All throughout the doctrine of atonement, a pre-existence is assumed—returning to the presence of the Father, coming home again. The Pearl, the earliest Christian hymn, is beautiful on that particular subject...³⁹⁹ In [the term] reconciliation you have a settlement or an understanding, but that doesn’t make you one...⁴⁰⁰

6-33 John the Apostle wrote: “Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.”⁴⁰¹

6-34 The need for this reunification is not only due to the physical division and separation of creation, but also in order to restore the order of the everlasting covenant that has been continually and repeatedly broken by man.⁴⁰² Barker comments:

Those who entered the Holy of Holies understood how that original unity had become the diversity of the visible creation... The Holy of Holies was the Kingdom, which explains why the heavenly city in the book of Revelation is a giant cube: it was the Holy of Holies. Those who experienced only the visible creation knew that it was divided and separated. Genesis 1 described the process: the firmament separated the waters, the lights of heaven separated light from darkness, and everything was created distinct, according to its kind. Only those who had access to the secrets knew of the underlying unity.⁴⁰³

The Holy of Holies, Day One[, as opposed to the cardinal term “the first day”], was the state of unity outside time and matter, before the world was created by dividing and separating according to their kinds (the theme of Genesis 1), and so all angels must have been in some sense a Unity....

This important concept illuminates the great high priestly prayer of Jesus in John 17. At first He prays to be glorified with the Father in His presence, “With the glory I had with thee before the world was made,”⁴⁰⁴ and He speaks of “my glory which thou has given me... before the foundation of the world,”⁴⁰⁵ clear references to the Holy of Holies/Day One. The major theme of the prayer is unity, “that they may be one even as we are one.”⁴⁰⁶ The perfect unity is a sign of divinity, and proof of Jesus’ origin.⁴⁰⁷ He has come from the One, He is part of the One, and He makes his disciples One. The theme is repeated at the end of the Book of Revelation, where the servants of God-and-the-Lamb (a unity) worship Him in the place where the Lord God is their Light, and they have His Name on their foreheads. In other words, they have been admitted to the Holy of Holies/Day One, and they bear on their foreheads the mark of high priesthood, the Name....

The unity-and-plurality of the angels underlies even familiar texts. The Hebrew word usually translated “God” is a plural form, elohim, and the sense of a passage sometimes demands that the English be “God” and sometimes “angels.” Thus Psalm 82 begins: “elohim has taken his stand in the council of El, in the midst of the elohim he gives judgment.” This is understood to mean “God

396 H. W. Nibley, Atonement, p. 556.

397 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:198.

398 See Commentary 5:4-b, p. 357.

399 J. K. Elliott, Pearl; H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, pp. 487-501.

400 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, 1:198.

401 1 John 3:2; cf. Moroni 7:48. See B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 408-419.

402 Isaiah 24:4-6; D&C 1:11-16; G. W. E. Nickelsburg et al., 1 Enoch, 1 Enoch 69:16-25, pp. 90-91.

403 M. Barker, Temple Theology, p. 25.

404 John 17:5.

405 John 17:24.

406 John 17:22. See B. T. Ostler, God, pp. 420-423.

407 John 17:23.

[thus too in the LXX] has taken His place [singular because of the singular verb] in the council of El [but the LXX has “gods”], in the midst of the gods/angels [where a singular would make no sense] he gives judgment.” The very familiarity of this ambiguity should not allow us to overlook the fact that it is there. The great statement of monotheism is literally a statement that “our elohim” are/is a unity: “The Lord our God/gods is One Lord.”⁴⁰⁸ Origen knew that the angels fell when they broke their unity with God.⁴⁰⁹

John’s concept for the unity of the divine good is exactly counter-balanced by his depiction of the unity of demonic evil;⁴¹⁰ one monster with many heads and horns, permitted to rule but not to triumph.⁴¹¹

- 6-35 What is true of the appropriateness of King James English for rendering the Old Testament does not automatically extend to the text of the New Testament, which was written in common everyday Greek. “As one eminent authority put it, ‘an elaborate, elegant style is unsuited to’ [New Testament] translation, ‘and in proportion as it is rendered in a conscious literary style, it is misrepresented to the modern reader.’”^{412,413}

For a controversial and thought-provoking discussion of differences between Hebrew and Greek thought, see Boman.⁴¹⁴

- 6-36 Of the meaning of kpr, Margaret Barker writes:

Atonement translates the Hebrew kpr, but the meaning of kpr in a ritual context is not known. Investigations have uncovered only what actions were used in the rites of atonement, not what that action was believed to effect. The possibilities for its meaning are “cover” or “smear” or “wipe,” but these reveal no more than the exact meaning of “breaking bread” reveals about the Christian Eucharist....

I should like to quote here from an article by Mary Douglas published... in Jewish Studies Quarterly.⁴¹⁵

Terms derived from cleansing, washing and purging have imported into biblical scholarship distractions which have occluded Leviticus’ own very specific and clear description of atonement. According to the illustrative cases from Leviticus, to atone means to cover or recover, cover again, to repair a hole, cure a sickness, mend a rift, make good a torn or broken covering. As a noun, what is translated atonement, expiation or purgation means integument made good; conversely, the examples in the book indicate that defilement means integument torn. Atonement does not mean covering a sin so as to hide it from the sight of God; it means making good an outer layer which has rotted or been pierced.

This sounds very like the cosmic covenant with its system of bonds maintaining the created order, broken by sin and repaired by “atonement.”⁴¹⁶

Nibley gives the following analysis:

The word... kpr, kippur... [is] cognate with our word cover; it’s pronounced kfr. So we have cover, but that is just the beginning of this very interesting word. It’s the same in Aramaic; it’s “to cover over your sins.” This is the way Jastrow’s big two-volume lexicon explains it: It means “to arch over; to bend over; to cover; to pass over with the hand, especially the palm of the hand.” The word for palm of the hand in all Semitic languages is kap. It means “to cover, hence to grasp by the hand; to wipe over, hence to cleanse, to expiate, to forgive, to renounce, to deny, to be found, to encircle.” All these in one word.⁴¹⁷

408 Deuteronomy 5:4.

409 M. Barker, Angel Priesthood, pp. 108-110. See Origen, De Principiis, 1:8, pp. 264-267.

410 Revelation 12:3, 13:1, and 17:3.

411 M. Barker, Revelation, p. 229.

412 Cited in J. R. Clark, Jr., Why the KJV, p. 355.

413 P. L. Barlow, Bible, p. 170.

414 T. Boman, Hebrew Thought.

415 M. Douglas, Atonement, p. 117. See also M. Douglas, Leviticus, p. 234: “Leviticus actually says less about the need to wash or purge than it says about ‘covering.’”

416 M. Barker, Atonement.

417 H. W. Nibley, Teachings of the Book of Mormon, 16, p. 198.

6-37 The importance of this symbol of the atonement was also emphasized in Egyptian temple rites:

The normal sequence of ordinances as depicted in temple reliefs is, according to Barguet, washing, laying on of hands, leading by the hand, entering the gate, embracing, and crowning. In Egyptian rites, gates or doorways are symbolic of passage and arrival, of the completion of one phase of the operation and the beginning of another; not only is the gate the normal place for the embrace of greeting and farewell, but, as the symbols and inscriptions engraved on the door frames of tombs and temples make clear, the portal itself typifies the performing of such an embrace. A spontaneous and natural gesture, embracing is not only a sign of affection but also one of acceptance, recognition, and reception at every level, from the formal and hypocritical embrace of the diplomat to the “mystical union” of the initiate. The ritual embrace is the “culminating rite of the initiation”; it is “an initiatory gesture weighted with meaning..., the goal of all consecration.”⁴¹⁸

Seach notes the following parallels in Jewish and Christian sources:⁴¹⁹

The embrace itself goes back at least to the Old Testament legends of Elijah and Elisha, who raised widows’ sons by “stretching” themselves upon their dead bodies and placing mouth upon mouth, eyes upon eyes, and hands upon hands.⁴²⁰

The same embrace reappeared in the early Christian Gospel of Thomas, where Jesus tells the disciples that they must “become one” with him by placing eyes in the place of an eye, and a hand in the place of a hand, and a foot in the place of a foot, and an image in the place of an image.⁴²¹

That this was remembered even during the Middle Ages is shown by the fact that the Seder Eliyahu Rabbah (eighth century) also explains how God will resuscitate the dead by lifting them out of the dust, setting them on their feet, and placing them between his knees to embrace them and press them to him....

Compare Acts 20:10, where Paul raises a man from the dead with a sacred embrace. Also the Jewish apocryphon, Joseph and Aseneth, where Joseph gives his bride eternal life with an embrace and a kiss.⁴²² The Seder Eliyahu Rabbah adds specifically that the Messiah will be the very “Son of the Widow” whom Elijah raised from the dead....⁴²³

The concomitant expression, “fellowship,” which has remained so closely associated with this embrace in Masonic lore, likewise had an ancient origin, being identical to the Greek word, koinonia, used to describe the union of Christ and his disciples, who must suffer what the Savior suffered in order to obtain eternal life:

As ye are sharers (koinonoi) of the sufferings (of Christ), so shall you also be of the consolation.⁴²⁴

That I might know him and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings (koinonian tes pathematon autou), being conformed to his death, that if possible I may obtain the resurrection from the dead.⁴²⁵

He has given us precious and very great promises that you might become sharers (koinonoi) of the Divine Nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world.⁴²⁶

Additional embraces depicting this saving “fellowship” have been preserved in the early Jewish-Christian Odes of Solomon:⁴²⁷

Thou hast given us thy fellowship.⁴²⁸

418 H. W. Nibley, Message 2005, p. 427.

419 J. E. Seach, Freemasonry. See also J. E. Seach, Ancient Texts 1995, pp. 826-828.

420 1 Kings 17:21; 2 Kings 4:34.

421 H. Koester et al., Thomas, 22, p. 129.

422 C. Burchard, Joseph, 15:5-6, p. 226; 19:10-11, p. 233.

423 See G. Kittel et al., Dictionary, 9:527, cited in J. E. Seach, Freemasonry.

424 2 Corinthians 1:5-7.

425 Philemon 3:10-11.

426 2 Peter 1:4.

427 J. H. Charlesworth, Odes.

428 Ibid., 4.

I have been united to Him... Indeed, he who is joined to Him who is immortal Truly shall become immortal.⁴²⁹

And Immortal Life embraced me And kissed me. And from that is the Spirit which is within me. And it cannot die because it is life.⁴³⁰

And I put off darkness, And put on light.

And even I myself acquired members... And his everlasting fellowship.⁴³¹

Like the arm of the bridegroom over the bride So is my yoke over those who know me.⁴³²

The Coptic Gospel of Philip similarly retains the Greek word, koinonia, to describe Mary Magdalene's redemptive relationship with Christ,⁴³³ a relationship which apocryphal writers understood to be that of "consort" or "wife."⁴³⁴ This again reflects the wide-spread tradition in the Western Church that Mary was the "fallen" human counterpart of the Church, whom Jesus had come to redeem, even as Hosea's wife, Gomer, had been the counterpart of Yahweh's fallen "Bride," the spiritually "dead" Israel.⁴³⁵ By such fellowship, "the holy united itself to the unholy in order to make it holy,"⁴³⁶ i.e. shared its Divine Nature with its defunct "partner" (koinonos) in order to bring her back to life.

The tradition of the embrace and ceremonial entry into the church and the altar within Catholic liturgy are discussed by von Wellnitz.⁴³⁷

6-38 In support of his conclusions, Nibley cites cognates from both Arabic and Egyptian:

The Arabic kafara puts the emphasis on a tight squeeze, such as tucking in the skirts, drawing a thing close to one's self. Closely related are Aramaic and Arabic kafat, meaning a close embrace, which are certainly related to the Egyptian hpet, the common ritual embrace written with the ideogram of embracing arms.⁴³⁸ This... ritual embrace... consummates the final escape from death in the Egyptian funerary texts and reliefs, where the son Horus is received into the arms of his father Osiris.⁴³⁹

